These facts certainly establish that there is no reliable accuracy in the isolated statements in the New Testament, as it has come down to us; that there is no such thing as a standard copy on earth, and no means of obtaining one short of a direct revelation from God; and that no doctrine can be proved by any single passage of scripture, unless it is also shown to be an essential part of the great body of christian doctrine. If it should be found that any particular doctrine had grown up in the church in a certain age, and that doctrine founded on but one or two texts of scripture, these facts alone would raise a serious presumption that the doctrine originated first, and the texts in its favor were manufactured afterwards.

Now it will be perceived that the doctrine that Christ had no human father is not contained in the apostles' creed, but is strongly stated in that of St. Athanasius; that the New Testament, except this one passage, is barren on the sucject; but the writings of the Catholic Fathers following the establishment of the Christian church by the Roman empire are filled with it. The just conclusion is that this doctrine got footing about the time christianity became a part of the imperial establishment. We want only a motive and means for its adoption at that time, and the array of circumstantial evidence will be stronger by far than any single historic testimony can be.

Constantine, Emperor of Rome, having, in addition to a vast amount of other crimes, murdered his father-in-law Maximian in 310, his brother-in-law Bassianus in 314, his nephew Licinianus, a boy of only 13, in 319, and his wife Fausta in 320, seems to have been struck with horror at the remembrance of such matchless wickedness; and applied to Sopater, a HEATHEN PRIEST and philosopher, to absolve him from his sins. Being told that "there was no kind of purgation sufficient to expiate such enormities," he applied to the christian bishops, who promised him that, "by repentance and baptism, they could cleanse him of all sin." He was accordingly baptized; but whether he repented of his murders or not the reader may judge for himself when we add that, as soon as he was converted, he murdered Sopater, who had refused him absolution, Licinius his brother-in-law in 325, and Crispius his own son in 326, besides some hundred thousand of his subjects; who, perhaps, should not be counted as murdered, but only executed, as they died for the crimes, some of being pagans, and some of being different christians from what he was, such as the Arians.

Every effort that force or fraud could put in use was used to establish the new and abolish the old religions. Besides burning books and writings of the old and dissenting faiths and forging books of his own religion, beheading teachers and followers of the old and setting up those of the new, he resorted universally to that more efficacious mode of converting the heathen by changing their temples into chistian churches, and confiscating the estates of heathen priests to bestow them on christian pastors and bishops.—One thing only was wanting more than this to make the new religion acceptable, and that was a congruity to heathenism. Yes, with all these appliances only one thing more was necessary to convert the Roman empire to christianity, and that one thing was the conversion of christianity to heathenism. Force and fraud can beat no religion into the heart, but they may induce its observance.

The leading trait of the religion of the Roman empire, perhaps, was demi-Godism or the doctrine that Gods begot children on beautiful women, and godesses conceived them of notable men and renowned princes. And as their religions were not exclusive, but like the various christian sects of the present day, each acknowledged all others to be essentialy true; if christanity could be brought into the general scope of heathenism, the obstacles to general conformity to the new religion would be very much diminished. Parisites and hypocrites could easily change the names of their religion, but for the people at large something of the old faith was necessary. Temples were readily transformed to churches for similar Gods. And heathen priests, as christian Bishops, could as well prate of a liason of Jehovah with a Hebrew peasant as Jupiter with a Greek shepherdess. Romans, Greeks and Barbarians all believing that their emperors, princes and heroes were Demi-gods, half heavenly in their parentage, and being in the constant habit of rendering them divine worship after they were dead, it did not require even a change of their faith to worship Jesus Christ as a God; if they were told that the Almighty had begotten him on a woman of matchless charms, among which Catholics reckon personal beauty and perpetual virginity. Such were the inducements to the establishment of demi-godism as a part of the christian faith. It was first authoritatively declared by the council of Nice, and was enforced by the excommunication of more than 100 bishops and their flocks. The church was now in unholy union with the old Roman empire. Literally had left communion with Christ, and taken up bed and board with the Devil. The woman having turned prostitute, seated herself on the scarlet colored beast. Rev. xvii. 4.

(To be continued.)

MINUTES OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD AT VOREE APRIL 6TH, 7TH, 8TH AND 9TH, 1848.

President Strang called the Conference to order, and read a portion of scripture. Singing. Prayer by the President. Singing.

The President called for reports from representatives and traveling Elders. Whereupon Samuel Graham, P. H. P., from Jackson, Mich., James Blakeslee, President of the High Priests Quorum, and Ebenezer Page, one of the Twelve, who had returned from a mission to the Fox River region, John E. Page, President of the Twelve, who had just returned from a mission to Rock and Dane counties, Wis., gave very cheering reports; that many were obeying the gospel; that there was a great call for preaching and the investigation of the principles of "Mormonism."

Pres. Strang then gave a short and concise history of the Church from the commencement of the gathering to this place; spoke of numerous cheering communications he had received of late from the brethren abroad, and of the present prospects of the Church.

Conference adjourned till 2 o'clock. Benediction by J. E. Page.

Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Singing. Prayer by John E. Page. Singing.

Preaching by J. E. Page on the doctrine of election. He showed clearly that the grand foundation stone of this doctrine was the temporal covenant made with Abraham.

Pres. Strang made some remarks relative to signs and wonders, which are sought for by unbelievers to prove the introduction of a new dispensation, and showed clearly from the scriptures that signs and wonders were never wrought to beget faith in unbelievers, but were the omens of speedy destruction.

Adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

Benediction by James Blakeslee.

April 7. Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Opened by singing. Prayer by James Blakeslee. Singing.

Daniel Carpenter, Elder, represented Porter Co., Ia., 22 members in good standing, eight added since the last Conference. Prospect good.

John E. Page preached on the restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets, and the desolations that are coming upon the earth.

Adjourned till 2 o'clock.

Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Opened by singing. Prayer by James Blakeslee. Singing.

Pres. Strang preached on the establishment of the kingdom of God; the time when, and the circumstances connected with its establishment.

Conference adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

Benediction by John E. Page.

April 8. Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by John Porter.

Alden Hale, Elder, made a few remarks on the subject of equality.

Pres. Strang made some remarks in relation to the business of the Conference. He said that Pres. William Marks was appointed one of the building committee of the Temple, but had not acted in that capacity; he therefore suggested the propriety of appointing another in his place.

On motion, resolved unanimously, that Roswell Packard be appointed one of said committee in place of Wm. Marks.

Pres. Strang presented John Porter, P. H. P., as President of the Stake of Voree, whereupon, on motion, the presentation was approved of unanimously.

Pres. Strang remarked that there had been considerable anxiety among the brethren concerning the appointment of a Bishop, and that there had been a desire expressed by a goodly number that one be appointed by revelation; he therefore had inquired of the Lord, and the word of the Lord was that brother Gilbert Watson be appointed to the office of Bishop.

On motion, the appointment was unanimously approved of.

The President then called for remarks relative to sending our Elders to those scattered abroad, whereupon a number expressed their willingness and readiness to go into the field.

Samuel Graham remarked that he had visited the Michigan Central College, and had an intervew with some of the leading men of that instiution; that they expressed a willingness to receive a present of the standard works of our faith, and also made a proposition for a public discussion of our faith and authority.

Whereupon, on motion, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:

Resolved, That this Church present the Michigan Central College with a set of standard works on the origin and faith of the same.

Resolved, That we heartily reciprocate the proposition of the faculty of said College for a public discussion of our faith and authority.

Conference adjourned till 2 o'clock.

Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Opened by singing. Prayer by Alden Hale, Elder.

Preaching by Ebenezer Page, one of the Twelve, on the inconsistency of the religionists of the present age, and the simplicity and order of the gospel revealed in these last days.

John E. Page answered some objections which are frequently presented by the religious world.

Adjourned till tomorrow at 10 o'clock.

Benediction by Ebenezer Page.

April 9. Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Opened by singing. Prayer by John Porter. Singing.

Pres. Strang preached on the necessity of a standard and authorized interpretation of the scriptures.

Adjourned till 2 o'clock.

Benediction by John E. Page.

Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by Samuel Graham.

Six members were received by letter or recomendation; eight confirmed, five of which were baptized during Conference.

The following individuals were ordained to the priesthood, after being acted upon separately by the Conference:

John Porter was ordained President of the Stake of Voree by administration of Pres. Strang.

Benjamin Wright was ordained one of his Counselors by Presidents Strang and Porter.

John Cole, Alden Hale, Roswell Packard and Edward Whitcomb were ordained High Priests unto the Most High God by the administration of James Blakeslee and John Porter.

Gilbert Watson was ordained a High Priest, and anointed, consecrated and set apart Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Pres. Strang.

(To be continued.)

☞ John McDougal, one of the Seventies, is suspended and under admonition for gross misrepresentation of the church, and preaching against the gathering of the saints.

PHINEAS WRIGHT,
WILLIAM SAVAGE,
SAMUEL E. HULL. } Presidents.

Voree, April 10th, 1848.

tiful women, and godesses conceived them of notable men and renowned princes. And as their religions were not exclusive, but like the various christian sects of the present day, each acknowledged all others to be essentialy true; if christanity could be brought into the general scope of heathenism, the obstacles to general conformity to the new religion would be very much diminished. Parisites and hypocrites could easily change the names of their religion, but for the people at large something of the old faith was necessary. Temples were readily transformed to churches for similar Gods. And heathen priests, as christian Bishops, could as well prate of a liason of Jehovah with a Hebrew peasant as Jupiter with a Greek shepherdess. Romans, Greeks and Barbarians all believing that their emperors, princes and heroes were Demi-gods, half heavenly in their parentage, and being in the constant habit of rendering them divine worship after they were dead, it did not require even a change of their faith to worship Jesus Christ as a God; if they were told that the Almighty had begotten him on a woman of matchless charms, among which Catholics reckon personal beauty and perpetual virginity. Such were the inducements to the establishment of demi-godism as a part of the christian faith. It was first authoritatively declared by the council of Nice, and was enforced by the excommunication of more than 100 bishops and their flocks. The church was now in unholy union with the old Roman empire. Literally had left communion with Christ, and taken up bed and board with the Devil. The woman having turned prostitute, seated herself on the scarlet colored beast. Rev. xvii. 4.

(To be continued.)

MINUTES OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD AT VOREE APRIL 6TH, 7TH, 8TH AND 9TH, 1848.

President Strang called the Conference to order, and read a portion of scripture. Singing. Prayer by the President. Singing.

The President called for reports from representatives and traveling Elders. Whereupon Samuel Graham, P. H. P., from Jackson, Mich., James Blakeslee, President of the High Priests Quorum, and Ebenezer Page, one of the Twelve, who had returned from a mission to the Fox River region, John E. Page, President of the Twelve, who had just returned from a mission to Rock and Dane counties, Wis., gave very cheering reports; that many were obeying the gospel; that there was a great call for preaching and the investigation of the principles of "Mormonism."

Pres. Strang then gave a short and concise history of the Church from the commencement of the gathering to this place; spoke of numerous cheering communications he had received of late from the brethren abroad, and of the present prospects of the Church.

Conference adjourned till 2 o'clock. Benediction by J. E. Page.

Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Singing. Prayer by John E. Page. Singing.

Preaching by J. E. Page on the doctrine of election. He showed clearly that the grand foundation stone of this doctrine was the temporal covenant made with Abraham.

Pres. Strang made some remarks relative to signs and wonders, which are sought for by unbelievers to prove the introduction of a new dispensation, and showed clearly from the scriptures that signs and wonders were never wrought to beget faith in unbelievers, but were the omens of speedy destruction.

Adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

Benediction by James Blakeslee.

April 7. Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Opened by singing. Prayer by James Blakeslee. Singing.

Daniel Carpenter, Elder, represented Porter Co., Ia., 22 members in good standing, eight added since the last Conference. Prospect good.

John E. Page preached on the restitution of all things spoken of by all the holy prophets, and the desolations that are coming upon the earth.

Adjourned till 2 o'clock.

Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Opened by singing. Prayer by James Blakeslee. Singing.

Pres. Strang preached on the establishment of the kingdom of God; the time when, and the circumstances connected with its establishment.

Conference adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

Benediction by John E. Page.

April 8. Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by John Porter.

Alden Hale, Elder, made a few remarks on the subject of equality.

Pres. Strang made some remarks in relation to the business of the Conference. He said that Pres. William Marks was appointed one of the building committee of the Temple, but had not acted in that capacity; he therefore suggested the propriety of appointing another in his place.

On motion, resolved unanimously, that Roswell Packard be appointed one of said committee in place of Wm. Marks.

Pres. Strang presented John Porter, P. H. P., as President of the Stake of Voree, whereupon, on motion, the presentation was approved of unanimously.

Pres. Strang remarked that there had been considerable anxiety among the brethren concerning the appointment of a Bishop, and that there had been a desire expressed by a goodly number that one be appointed by revelation; he therefore had inquired of the Lord, and the word of the Lord was that brother Gilbert Watson be appointed to the office of Bishop.

On motion, the appointment was unanimously approved of.

The President then called for remarks relative to sending out Elders to those scattered abroad, whereupon a number expressed their willingness and readiness to go into the field.

Samuel Graham remarked that he had visited the Michigan Central College, and had an interview with some of the leading men of that institution; that they expressed a willingness to receive a present of the standard works of our faith, and also made a proposition for a public discussion of our faith and authority.

Whereupon, on motion, the following resolutions were passed unanimously:

Resolved, That this Church present the Michigan Central College with a set of standard works on the origin and faith of the same.

Resolved, That we heartily reciprocate the proposition of the faculty of said College for a public discussion of our faith and authority.

Conference adjourned till 2 o'clock.

Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Opened by singing. Prayer by Alden Hale, Elder.

Preaching by Ebenezer Page, one of the Twelve, on the inconsistency of the religionists of the present age, and the simplicity and order of the gospel revealed in these last days.

John E. Page answered some objections which are frequently presented by the religious world.

Adjourned till tomorrow at 10 o'clock.

Benediction by Ebenezer Page.

April 9. Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Opened by singing. Prayer by John Porter. Singing.

Pres. Strang preached on the necessity of a standard and authorized interpretation of the scriptures.

Adjourned till 2 o'clock.

Benediction by John E. Page.

Conference assembled pursuant to adjournment.

Prayer by Samuel Graham.

Six members were received by letter or recomendation; eight confirmed, five of which were baptized during Conference.

The following individuals were ordained to the priesthood, after being acted upon separately by the Conference:

John Porter was ordained President of the Stake of Voree by administration of Pres. Strang.

Benjamin Wright was ordained one of his Counselors by Presidents Strang and Porter.

John Cole, Alden Hale, Roswell Packard and Edward Whitcomb were ordained High Priests unto the Most High God by the administration of James Blakeslee and John Porter.

Gilbert Watson was ordained a High Priest, and anointed, consecrated and set apart Bishop of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Pres. Strang.

(To be continued.)

☞ John McDougal, one of the Seventies, is suspended, and under admonition for gross misrepresentation of the church, and preaching against the gathering of the saints.

PHINEAS WRIGHT,
WILLIAM SAVAGE, } Presidents.
SAMUEL E. HULL.

Voree, April 10th, 1848.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 5.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1848. [WHOLE No. 69.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

REMARKS ON THE BRIGHAMITE EPISTLE.

(Concluded.)

The following concluding remarks on the Brighamite epistle were by request furnished the editor by J. E. Page:

It is well known to all the church that are familiar with the organ of the church (the Times and Seasons) that the position the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles assumed was, that they should take the Presidency of the church. By so doing they either overlooked or wickedly disregarded the law containing the revealed purpose of God concerning this matter, as we have inserted above.—D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2. See minutes of Conference Aug. 8th, 1844, inserted above. But now they tell us that they are going to "organize the church according to the original pattern." How, we ask? Why, by rolling perversion on perversion to sustain their rickety anti-Christ kingdom, they will assume to tell us that the "three presiding high priests chosen by the body, (church,) appointed and ordained to that office, (by the church,) and upheld by the confidence, faith and prayer of the church," are the three persons forming the Quorum of the First Presidency to preside over the whole church. Read D. & C. sec. iii. p. 11. This whole section, containing forty-four paragraphs, is a detailed account of the organization of the church, giving an account of the relative duties of one quorum with the other; pre-supposing the two priesthoods, viz. the Melchisedec and Aaronic, to have been previously restored to men on the earth as stated in D. & C. sec. L. p. 2, 3. The third section begins thus: "There ARE in the church TWO priesthoods, namely, the Melchisedec and Aaronic." Par. second tells us that "all other authorities, or officers in the church, are appendages to the Melchisedec priesthood; but there are two divisions or grand heads; one is the Melchisedec priesthood, and the other is the Aaronic or Levitical priesthood.

By reading par. 31 we find that "ONE," not THREE or TWELVE, possesses by the direct gift of God the right of presiding over the high priesthood of the whole church, and from him "comes the administering of ordinances and blessings upon the church by the laying on of the hands." The 42 par. tells us that this "ONE," spoken of above, "is to preside over the WHOLE church, and to be LIKE unto MOSES, to be a Seer, a Revelator, a Translator and a Prophet." And by reading D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2 we find that in the removal of the seer or prophet spoken of above by death or apostacy, the only way his successor is to be "appointed" is through said seer or prophet. Sec. v. p. 6 tells us that the President (seer and prophet) "is appointed by revelation; and so also are his two assistant Presidents," and not by the elective franchise of the body or church.—We return to the 3d sec. p. 11 and consider again the "three high priests" there spoken of. It is true they are presiding officers, but of what grade? Are they the quorum of the First Presidency of the church? NO! Why? Because the three high priests under consideration are chosen by the church to preside, and not by revelation, as the First Presidency were. The revelation given through Joseph Smith the seer and prophet, in A. D. 1841, in which God gave sanction to the then organization of the church in its several quorums, says, par. 39:

"I give unto you my servant Joseph to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer and prophet.—I give unto him for counselors my servant Sidney Rigdon, and my servant William Law, that these may constitute a quorum and first presidency, to receive the oracles for the whole church."

We have found above that these three spoken of in this last quotation were to be appointed by direct revelation of God, and not by the church. The 42 par. tells us that Don C. Smith, Amasa Lyman and Noah Packard were three presiding high priests over the quorum of high priests. These three high priests are no where spoken of as being appointed to their presidency by revelation to preside over the quorum of high priests, but as a presidency growing out of or appointed of the high priests quorum; which priesthood grew out of the Melchisedec priesthood, given of God by direct revelation and the ministering of angels to Joseph and Oliver, when they were constituted high priests of God in the setting up of this church, of which Joseph was the seer and prophet. Then as the three high priests under consideration grew out of a priesthood previously given of God to other men, they cannot possibly be the First Presidents of the whole church, but of an inferior grade of priesthood forming a quorum of priesthood in the church, and not the quorum of the First Presidency of the church.

Then as the Brighamite faction has lived almost four years without a legal organization of the church; and as they say they are about to "organize according to the original pattern," how, pray, are they to effect it? Why, by electing a prophet, revelator, seer and translator from among themselves; they having no prophet among them "appointed" by the prophet Joseph, (martyred.) O humbug! the president of fools and knaves!! long live thou!!!

But let us look at the position assumed by the Brighamite faction. That the three high priests chosen by the body as being the Presidency of the whole church. Why did not the Twelve Apostles of the church set it on foot to elect three high priests to preside over the whole church immediately after Joseph's death, instead of assuming the First Presidency themselves? It certainly stands next in order according to the book of D. & C. O forsooth the book says in the same paragraph that the Twelve Apostles "form a quorum equal in authority to the three high priests previously mentioned." The same paragraph tells us that the quorum of seventies "form a quorum equal in authority to the Twelve Apostles."—In this case we have three quorums equal and alike in the powers of their priesthood. This puts the whole matter beyond successful controversy to the contrary, that the three high priests referred to are not and cannot be the First Presidency of the church, because the priesthood, blessings and oracles of God comes not through those three high priests nor the twelve apostles nor yet the seventies to the church, but from the First President of the church, called and set apart of God by direct revelation, and not by the elective franchise of the body or church.

Again, if the church had elected three high priests to preside over them as the First Presidency of the church, in case of apostacy or death they must have been supplied by the same means. In that case suppose that a majority of the church should become corrupted by any means whatever, still the majority ruling the minority, however virtuous, a veritable incarnate devil might be elected by the body, "to be like unto Moses, yea, to be a seer, revelator, translator and prophet." If such a course of things is the true sense of the law of the church, look out that old Beelzebub does not yet become the prophet of the Brighamite party by the elective franchise of the mass.

Thus we have found by a clear analysis and an unsophisticated comparing of the word of God, that the three presiding high priests mentioned in the iii. sec. 11 par. are not and cannot be the First Presidency of the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that no man on earth can be a President of the whole church only as he is appointed by revelation through his predecessor, there being no other way provided by the word of God, all other means and measures being the cunning speculations of the wicked and crafty, to deceive and gull the unwary and ignorant.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 5.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY, APRIL 20, 1848. [WHOLE No. 69.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

REMARKS ON THE BRIGHAMITE EPISTLE.

(Concluded.)

The following concluding remarks on the Brighamite epistle were by request furnished the editor by J. E. Page:

It is well known to all the church that are familiar with the organ of the church (the Times and Seasons) that the position the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles assumed was, that they should take the Presidency of the church. By so doing they either overlooked or wickedly disregarded the law containing the revealed purpose of God concerning this matter, as we have inserted above.—D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2. See minutes of Conference Aug. 8th, 1844, inserted above. But now they tell us that they are going to "organize the church according to the original pattern." How, we ask? Why, by rolling perversion on perversion to sustain their rickety anti-Christ kingdom, they will assume to tell us that the "three presiding high priests chosen by the body, (church,) appointed and ordained to that office, (by the church,) and upheld by the confidence, faith and prayer of the church," are the three persons forming the Quorum of the First Presidency to preside over the whole church. Read D. & C. sec. iii. p. 11. This whole section, containing forty-four paragraphs, is a detailed account of the organization of the church, giving an account of the relative duties of one quorum with the other; pre-supposing the two priesthoods, viz. the Melchisedec and Aaronic, to have been previously restored to men on the earth as stated in D. & C. sec. L. p. 2, 3. The third section begins thus: "There ARE in the church TWO priesthoods, namely, the Melchisedec and Aaronic." Par. second tells us that "all other authorities, or officers in the church, are appendages to the Melchisedec priesthood; but there are two divisions or grand heads, one is the Melchisedec priesthood, and the other is the Aaronic or Levitical priesthood.

By reading par. 31 we find that "ONE," not THREE or TWELVE, possesses by the direct gift of God the right of presiding over the high priesthood of the whole church, and from him "comes the administering of ordinances and blessings upon the church by the laying on of the hands." The 42 par. tells us that this "ONE," spoken of above, "is to preside over the WHOLE church, and to be LIKE unto MOSES, to be a Seer, a Revelator, a Translator and a Prophet." And by reading D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2 we find that in the removal of the seer or prophet spoken of above by death or apostacy, the only way his successor is to be "appointed" is through said seer or prophet. Sec. v. p. 6 tells us that the President (seer and prophet) "is appointed by revelation, and so also are his two assistant Presidents," and not by the elective franchise of the body or church.—We return to the 3d sec. p. 11 and consider again the "three high priests" there spoken of. It is true they are presiding officers, but of what grade? Are they the quorum of the First Presidency of the church? NO! Why? Because the three high priests under consideration are chosen by the church to preside, and not by revelation, as the First Presidency were. The revelation given through Joseph Smith the seer and prophet, in A. D. 1841, in which God gave sanction to the then organization of the church in its several quorums, says, par. 39:

"I give unto you my servant Joseph to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer and prophet.—I give unto him for counselors my servant Sidney Rigdon, and my servant William Law, that these may constitute a quorum and first presidency, to receive the oracles for the whole church."

We have found above that these three spoken of in this last quotation were to be appointed by direct revelation of God, and not by the church. The 42 par. tells us that Don C. Smith, Amasa Lyman and Noah Packard were three presiding high priests over the quorum of high priests. These three high priests are no where spoken of as being appointed to their presidency by revelation to preside over the quorum of high priests, but as a presidency growing out of or appointed of the high priests quorum; which priesthood grew out of the Melchisedec priesthood, given of God by direct revelation and the ministering of angels to Joseph and Oliver, when they were constituted high priests of God in the setting up of this church, of which Joseph was the seer and prophet. Then as the three high priests under consideration grew out of a priesthood previously given of God to other men, they cannot possibly be the First Presidents of the whole church, but of an inferior grade of priesthood forming a quorum of priesthood in the church, and not the quorum of the First Presidency of the church.

Then as the Brighamite faction has lived almost four years without a legal organization of the church, and as they say they are about to "organize according to the original pattern," how, pray, are they to effect it? Why, by electing a prophet, revelator, seer and translator from among themselves; they having no prophet among them "appointed" by the prophet Joseph, (martyred.) O humbug! the president of fools and knaves!! long live thou!!!

But let us look at the position assumed by the Brighamite faction, that the three high priests chosen by the body as being the Presidency of the whole church. Why did not the Twelve Apostles of the church set it on foot to elect three high priests to preside over the whole church immediately after Joseph's death, instead of assuming the First Presidency themselves? It certainly stands next in order according to the book of D. & C. O forsooth the book says in the same paragraph that the Twelve Apostles "form a quorum equal in authority to the three high priests previously mentioned." The same paragraph tells us that the quorum of seventies "form a quorum equal in authority to the Twelve Apostles."—In this case we have three quorums equal and alike in the powers of their priesthood. This puts the whole matter beyond successful controversy to the contrary, that the three high priests referred to are not and cannot be the First Presidency of the church, because the priesthood, blessings and oracles of God comes not through those three high priests nor the twelve apostles nor yet the seventies to the church, but from the First President of the church, called and set apart of God by direct revelation, and not by the elective franchise of the body or church.

Again, if the church had elected three high priests to preside over them as the First Presidency of the church, in case of apostacy or death they must have been supplied by the same means. In that case suppose that a majority of the church should become corrupted by any means whatever, still the majority ruling the minority, however virtuous, a veritable incarnate devil might be elected by the body, "to be like unto Moses, yea, to be a seer, revelator, translator and prophet." If such a course of things is the true sense of the law of the church, look out that old Beelzebub does not yet become the prophet of the Brighamite party by the elective franchise of the mass.

Thus we have found by a clear analysis and an unsophisticated comparing of the word of God, that the three presiding high priests mentioned in the iii. sec. 11 par. are not and cannot be the First Presidency of the true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that no man on earth can be a President of the whole church only as he is appointed by revelation through his predecessor, there being no other way provided by the word of God, all other means and measures being the cunning speculations of the wicked and crafty, to deceive and gull the unwary and ignorant.

MINUTES OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD AT VOREE APRIL 6TH, 7TH, 8TH AND 9TH, 1848.

(Concluded.)

Edward Whitcomb and Anson Prindle were consecrated and set apart Counselors to the Bishop by Pres. Strang and Gilbert Watson, Bishop.

Samuel E. Hull was ordained one of the Presidents of the Seventies Quorum by Wm. Savage and Phineas Wright, Presidents.—They also ordained Daniel Carpenter, Francis Cooper and Alfred Phin Elders in the Quorums of Seventies.

Ansel Lake, Robert Delong, Daniel Fillmore and James K. Kent were ordained Elders.

The Eucharist was then administered by John E. Page and John Porter.

After singing a hymn Conference adjourned sine die.

Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Thus closed our most interesting session, a memorial of the faith and forbearance of the saints and a pattern to future generations of the servants of God of peace, love, brotherly kindness, harmony, interest, talent, intelligence and devotion to the cause of God.—"TRUTH, DIAMOND TRUTH," prevailed so entirely that all opponents shrunk away. Scarcely an envious spirit was to be seen, and what few were present were so discomfited with our increased numbers, and improved spirit, that they could not remain. The spirit of God gently brooded over the assembly, and seemed to dictate all its deliberations. Universal good health and the most beautiful mild weather prevailed. A more promising and happy season heaven seldom gave, and a large portion of those who came from places distant left with the resolve to gather with the saints to partake of our peace. Truly God is with us, and has begun to be gracious.

GILBERT WATSON Clerk. JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.

Note.—Meetings for worship and instruction were held every evening, at which the attendance was crowded. The last day of the session a copy of the pseudo Ensign of Liberty, published at Kirtland, was received containing a letter from our neighbor J. M. Adams, from which we extract the following:—

"And finally, what few Strangites there are in and about Voree, take them by and large, look like a poor God-forsaken clan, I assure you. Since your discussion with Strang here, there has been one continued scene of confusion and tumult in their ranks, by night and by day, and I hope it will continue until their organization is prostrated in the dust, and all those restless spirits of earth, which cannot be tamed by the sublime and peaceful gospel of Christ, are gathered to their fathers and brethren, and there confined in chains of blackness and darkness forever. Amen to Strangism; it is a stink in the nostrils of all honorable men under the whole heavens. With sentiments of gratitude and heartfelt satisfaction to God, my Father, I subscribe myself your brother in Christ,

JAMES M. ADAMS."

Considering that when this came we were holding the largest and most united Conference ever held in Voree, and that the pseudo meetings had quite failed, and that on this occasion they had gone on the hill of Promise to learn the mysteries of the kingdom of Gladden Bishop, comment was unnecessary.

It may prehaps have escaped the recollection of our readers that we had invited Gladden up here, so we reprint the following from Vol. 2, No. 43:

"A CHANCE FOR IMPOSTORS.—We know of no better place for an impostor who wishes to raise a real flare up than among the pseudoes in this region. They are just about in the right state for a new excitement. All the fire of McLellinism is quenched. Their meetings have died down, and a deathlike apathy has fallen upon them. We think if Gladden Bishop, Rigdon's little Hushi, or Isaac Sheene, or indeed almost any new impostor would come along he could raise a perfect blaze of excitement, and get up as large a society as Aaron Smith first and McLellin afterwards did. A very few who went into McLellinism just as a stepping stone out of the church intending to go to Brighamism or any other standard of loose morals, as soon as they could get certain favorites with them, would doubtless keep back, but others who stood aloof from Mc. could be stirred up by a different individual. These people are like a sucking colt in a crowd of strange horses, running with all their might after every one by turns, and never knowing the right one. It would be a matter of compassion to come and stir them up, and relieve them of their present despondency. And any one who will undertake it may be assured of good success, so he will use plenty of energy and assertion and little or no good sense. Who will come and relieve the pseudoes of ennui?"

Well, Gladden came, and declared that J. J. Strang and Oliver Cowdery were the two witnesses, anointed ones, or olive trees; Zech. iv. 11. Rev. xi. 3; Joseph Smith having formerly been one until Strang was put in his place; that they held only the Aaronic priesthood, and were forerunners to him as John the Baptist was to Christ; and that he is the BRANCH of DAVID so often promised in the Jewish prophets, and generally understood of Christ, but by him applied to the Holy Spirit tabernacled, (incarnate.) He declares the validity of prophet Strang's ministry down till April 9th, at which time the seed of the woman (Gladden) bruised the serpent's head, (a small streaked snake;) bound Satan for a thousand years; in the name of Daniel the prophet proclaimed the kingdom of God, and called on the saints to come and possess it; lifted up an ensign on the top of the "Hill of Promise," and called aloud thrice for prophet Strang to bear it; established the kingdom, proclaimed the rest of God and everlasting righteousness. All this was done with great gravity and formality and an extraordinary earnestness, and we think some of the motherless colts will follow. As prophet Strang will not be his standard bearer, and J. M. Adams now says he never did believe one word of McLellinism, it is not improbable that he may become an anointed one and a witness to Gladden.

P. S. Since the above was written another act of the drama, consisting of several scenes, has come off. Two McLellinites have received baptism and ordination at Gladden's hands. Mrs. Shumway has become a high priest, and was on the Hill of Promise, in the presence of a large concourse of people, enrobed in a white chemese! After this all present were invited to a feast of unleavened bread and old wine. Finally a tin horn was blown long and loud, which seems to be intended as the resurrection trump, for in the evening (April 16th) Gladden came into our meeting and by permission thanked us for the kindness with which he had been treated by us, and announced that Joseph Smith was raised from the dead, with the assurance that we should see him soon. We think his prospects good for the main body of the McLellinites, and commend the change to them as a decided improvement.

THE BRIGHAMITES.

There are two stories going the rounds of the papers, which look strange together. The first, which seems to have originated in Philadelphia, and goes on the credit of the Saturday Courier, is to the effect that the Brighamite camp is in a state of utter destitution and rapidly perishing of mere starvation, and that their agents are in all the large cities begging with some success for the means of relieving them. We have no reason to doubt these statements, but have not the least faith that the contributions thus raised will ever reach those for whom they are intended. They will all be swallowed in fitting out a few favorites from Winter Quarters, who have once had a rich fitting out from Nauvoo. The very food and clothing contributed will be treated as merchandise and sold to the suffering at exhorbitant prices.

The other story is that ten thousand emigrants will come from Europe and go up to Council Bluffs, there to fit out for the Salt

MINUTES OF THE ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD AT VOREE APRIL 6TH, 7TH, 8TH AND 9TH, 1848.

(Concluded.)

Edward Whitcomb and Anson Prindle were consecrated and set apart Counselors to the Bishop by Pres. Strang and Gilbert Watson, Bishop.

Samuel E. Hull was ordained one of the Presidents of the Seventies Quorum by Wm. Savage and Phineas Wright, Presidents.—They also ordained Daniel Carpenter, Francis Cooper and Alfred Phin Elders in the Quorums of Seventies.

Ansel Lake, Robert Delong, Daniel Fillmore and James K. Kent were ordained Elders.

The Eucharist was then administered by John E. Page and John Porter.

After singing a hymn Conference adjourned sine die.

Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Thus closed our most interesting session, a memorial of the faith and forbearance of the saints and a pattern to future generations of the servants of God of peace, love, brotherly kindness, harmony, interest, talent, intelligence and devotion to the cause of God.—"TRUTH, DIAMOND TRUTH," prevailed so entirely that all opponents shrunk away. Scarcely an envious spirit was to be seen, and what few were present were so discomfited with our increased numbers, and improved spirit, that they could not remain. The spirit of God gently brooded over the assembly, and seemed to dictate all its deliberations. Universal good health and the most beautiful mild weather prevailed. A more promising and happy season heaven seldom gave, and a large portion of those who came from places distant left with the resolve to gather with the saints to partake of our peace. Truly God is with us, and has begun to be gracious.

GILBERT WATSON Clerk. JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.

Note.—Meetings for worship and instruction were held every evening, at which the attendance was crowded. The last day of the session a copy of the pseudo Ensign of Liberty, published at Kirtland, was received containing a letter from our neighbor J. M. Adams, from which we extract the following:—

"And finally, what few Strangites there are in and about Voree, take them by and large, look like a poor God-forsaken clan, I assure you. Since your discussion with Strang here, there has been one continued scene of confusion and tumult in their ranks, by night and by day, and I hope it will continue until their organization is prostrated in the dust, and all those restless spirits of earth, which cannot be tamed by the sublime and peaceful gospel of Christ, are gathered to their fathers and brethren, and there confined in chains of blackness and darkness forever. Amen to Strangism; it is a stink in the nostrils of all honorable men under the whole heavens. With sentiments of gratitude and heartfelt satisfaction to God, my Father, I subscribe myself your brother in Christ,

JAMES M. ADAMS."

Considering that when this came we were holding the largest and most united Conference ever held in Voree, and that the pseudo meetings had quite failed, and that on this occasion they had gone on the hill of Promise to learn the mysteries of the kingdom of Gladden Bishop, comment was unnecessary.

It may prehaps have escaped the recollection of our readers that we had invited Gladden up here, so we reprint the following from Vol. 2, No. 43:

"A CHANCE FOR IMPOSTORS.—We know of no better place for an impostor who wishes to raise a real flare up than among the pseudoes in this region. They are just about in the right state for a new excitement. All the fire of McLellinism is quenched. Their meetings have died down, and a deathlike apathy has fallen upon them. We think if Gladden Bishop, Rigdon's little Hushi, or Isaac Sheene, or indeed almost any new impostor would come along he could raise a perfect blaze of excitement, and get up as large a society as Aaron Smith first and McLellin afterwards did. A very few who went into McLellinism just as a stepping stone out of the church intending to go to Brighamism or any other standard of loose morals, as soon as they could get certain favorites with them, would doubtless keep back, but others who stood aloof from Mc. could be stirred up by a different individual. These people are like a sucking colt in a crowd of strange horses, running with all their might after every one by turns, and never knowing the right one. It would be a matter of compassion to come and stir them up, and relieve them of their present despondency. And any one who will undertake it may be assured of good success, so he will use plenty of energy and assertion and little or no good sense. Who will come and relieve the pseudoes of ennui?"

Well, Gladden came, and declared that J. J. Strang and Oliver Cowdery were the two witnesses, anointed ones, or olive trees; Zech. iv. 11. Rev. xi. 3; Joseph Smith having formerly been one until Strang was put in his place; that they held only the Aaronic priesthood, and were forerunners to him as John the Baptist was to Christ; and that he is the BRANCH of DAVID so often promised in the Jewish prophets, and generally understood of Christ, but by him applied to the Holy Spirit tabernacled, (incarnate.) He declares the validity of prophet Strang's ministry down till April 9th, at which time the seed of the woman (Gladden) bruised the serpent's head, (a small streaked snake;) bound Satan for a thousand years; in the name of Daniel the prophet proclaimed the kingdom of God, and called on the saints to come and possess it; lifted up an ensign on the top of the "Hill of Promise," and called aloud thrice for prophet Strang to bear it; established the kingdom, proclaimed the rest of God and everlasting righteousness. All this was done with great gravity and formality and an extraordinary earnestness, and we think some of the motherless colts will follow. As prophet Strang will not be his standard bearer, and J. M. Adams now says he never did believe one word of McLellinism, it is not improbable that he may become an anointed one and a witness to Gladden.

P. S. Since the above was written another act of the drama, consisting of several scenes, has come off. Two McLellinites have received baptism and ordination at Gladden's hands. Mrs. Shumway has become a high priest, and was on the Hill of Promise, in the presence of a large concourse of people, enrobed in a white chemese! After this all present were invited to a feast of unleavened bread and old wine. Finally a tin horn was blown long and loud, which seems to be intended as the resurrection trump, for in the evening (April 16th) Gladden came into our meeting and by permission thanked us for the kindness with which he had been treated by us, and announced that Joseph Smith was raised from the dead, with the assurance that we should see him soon. We think his prospects good for the main body of the McLellinites, and commend the change to them as a decided improvement.

THE BRIGHAMITES.

There are two stories going the rounds of the papers, which look strange together. The first, which seems to have originated in Philadelphia, and goes on the credit of the Saturday Courier, is to the effect that the Brighamite camp is in a state of utter destitution and rapidly perishing of mere starvation, and that their agents are in all the large cities begging with some success for the means of relieving them. We have no reason to doubt these statements, but have not the least faith that the contributions thus raised will ever reach those for whom they are intended. They will all be swallowed in fitting out a few favorites from Winter Quarters, who have once had a rich fitting out from Nauvoo. The very food and clothing contributed will be treated as merchandise and sold to the suffering at exhorbitant prices.

The other story is that ten thousand emigrants will come from Europe and go up to Council Bluffs, there to fit out for the Salt

Valley. This goes on the authority of the St. Louis Republican, and should be regarded merely as an advertisement inserted and paid for by some of Brigham's emissaries for the purpose of giving a new importance to their movements by a little self puffing. There is not the least prospect of 10,000 coming over, though it is not improbable that 1000 may. While on this subject we may as well lay before our readers the following extract of a letter to the prophet from a distinguished citizen and leading politician of the State of New York, showing the view taken of the matter, not only by the writer, but in our opinion by almost every man of compassion and good sense:—

Rochester, March 20th, 1848.

Dear Sir:— ——— I send you the Daily Advertiser of the 18th inst., wherein you will see that large numbers (members of your church) will soon be arriving at New Orleans, New York and Boston bound to the great Salt Lake, &c. Now if you have some able elders send them, one to each of these cities with a true statement of the state of starvation and wretchedness attending those who have gone towards the great Salt Lake. And believe me, you will turn a large portion of them to join you in your new cities on the islands and borders of the western lakes. In short, as a prophet and friend to your people and humanity you cannot see these thousands deluded off and not make an effort to turn them to your cities of refuge, and save them from the horrors that have already thinned the ranks of the followers of Young and his monstrous doctrines of spiritual wifery, a trait in itself sufficient to damn any people. I may also mention to you that several elders of Young's are in our seaboard cities for the purpose of raising money and means to relieve the starving emigrants on their way to California, and probably attend also in directing the new comers in their pilgrimage.— I am well aware that I may be considered as rather officious in this matter, but believe me when I tell you in all sincerity that my object is to save these foreign emigrants from the troubles and dangers to which they are now hastening; knowing also that none but a Mormon could persuade them, I freely bring the matter to your notice, if you have not already prepared yourself to act in the premises, having been apprised of their movements. In this matter you will, I trust, receive it in the same spirit in which it is sent, and treat it with that sincerity that has dictated all my intercourse with you.— It is humanity that prompts me to urge you to use all your power to save the incoming emigrants from the fate that awaits them in the wilderness. ——— Yours truly, ———

James J. Strang.

Voree, April 3d, 1848.

To Pres. James J. Strang:—

Dear and well beloved Brother,—Having just returned to our home, and the home of the saints, from our last mission we take this method of informing you and the Conference of our prosperity in the great work of God, in which we are and have been engaged during the past winter. We left this place about the middle of Dec. last on foot for the south, and the second day after we left we stopped at Fort Hill, where we tarried and preached about a week. The people treated us kindly, and here we found several old members of the church who were not exactly dead, but rather cold, who were begotten again to a lively hope in Christ Jesus through our preaching. We left them in good spirits and traveled on to the neighborhood of Elgin, Ill., and we will just say here by way of respect to some of the people between Fort Hill and Elgin, that notwithstanding they profess to be christians and to believe the Bible, and we were strangers and the weather very cold, (it being the 25th af Dec.,) that we tried for more than an hour from house to house to get lodgings and were nearly perishing with cold and fatigue, before we found a man who was careful to entertain strangers. But thank God, a little after dark we found such an one, and we put up for the night with Mr. Batholomew. Below Elgin we stopped with our old friend Ludlow Hill, who with his family, received us gladly. Here we preached several times to attentive hearers. Stirring up several more members of the church. We next visited Kings Mills and St. Charles, where we also preached, stirring up the old members to a sense of their duty and convincing many others of the truth of the everlasting gospel and of the reality of the dispensation of the fullness of times, which God has committed to his servants in this generation. By this time the calls for preaching became very numerous and pressing on all sides, and we finally visited and preached in Elgin, St. Charles, Black Berry, Sycamore Grove, Pigeon Woods and the intermediate neighborhoods, holding one debate with the Baptists and Methodists, in which Mormonism (so called) was triumphant. And we have another discussion pending which is to come off after Conference, where Mormonism is again called in question, the Bible to be the test. Well, we continued to preach and visit from house to house, teaching the people and bapizing until we immersed twenty-one persons, all new members, and some of whom have moved to Voree already, and many more of that branch will remove the present spring.

The branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Kings Mills and the surrounding country numbers about 70 members, all in good standing, faith and fellowship, and manifest a desire to become equal in all their temporal things according to the law of God. In fact they all go for the fullness of the spirit and celestial glory. They have several efficient official members, men of integrity and of firmness, and the field for labor in that region is large and one or two Elers could be well employed in that region the ensuing summer. Several manifestations of the gift of healing has also been enjoyed, during our stay with that people. Thus we see the promise of the Lord fulfilled as contained in the New Testament, the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and our humble prayer to the Lord is that he will continue to bless with his spirit all pure in heart among all people and nations, that the work of the gathering of his saints may continue until Zion and Jerusalem are built up and prepared to receive the Lord Jesus from heaven, to reign a thousand years on this earth.— Amen.

EBENEZER PAGE, one of the Twelve.
JAMES BLAKESLEE, Pres. of the H. P. Q.

Burlington, Iowa, Feb. 20th, 1848.

Elder Page:—I have not gone to Salt Valley yet, and think I shall not until I know something more what is going on at Voree. I wish you would send me the paper published there, if there is any. I will not send the money now, but if the papers come I will send it forthwith. I wish you would write me a long letter and tell me all about Voree, and how the saints are prospering. I have almost forgot what Mormonism is, and it might do me good to stir up my mind by way of remembrance. I am determined to still be a Mormon as much as ever, but I want the old stamp, that which brings intelligence, liberty and light. Elder Page, humbugery wont do for me. I want reason, common sense and revelation, demonstrated facts from the "law and the testimony." I do not want to be deceived nor trifled with when my eternal salvation is at stake.— Remember me to brother Strang, the prophet. May the intelligence of heaven swell his bosom, and may the great God of Israel bless him.

The beauty of Mormonism is that it has a prophet, and the surest evidence of its truth is that Joseph Smith has left a successor. "A church without a prophet is not the church for me." But have you seen the great epistle of the twelve apostles from the great Salt Valley, where the mountain of the Lord's house is to be established on the tops of the mountains, (in the valley.) Oh sophistry! I never saw so much deception wrapped up in one piece of writing as there is in that very epistle. They talk about virtue. They are strangers to it, for their works are abominable and corrupt, and I know it. Remember me to your wife, as also my wife, says she would like to see her much. If you are acquainted with Benjamin Wright there tell him that brother Downton here, who knew him in Wisconsin, wants him to write a letter. The Brighamites are going ahead. Some have been baptized, and some have been reclaimed. I know of some here who but a few weeks since were wreaking vengeance on the twelve, and said they knew they were

Valley. This goes on the authority of the St. Louis Republican, and should be regarded merely as an advertisement inserted and paid for by some of Brigham's emissaries for the purpose of giving a new importance to their movements by a little self puffing. There is not the least prospect of 10,000 coming over, though it is not improbable that 1000 may. While on this subject we may as well lay before our readers the following extract of a letter to the prophet from a distinguished citizen and leading politician of the State of New York, showing the view taken of the matter, not only by the writer, but in our opinion by almost every man of compassion and good sense:—

Rochester, March 20th, 1848.

Dear Sir:— ——— I send you the Daily Advertiser of the 18th inst., wherein you will see that large numbers (members of your church) will soon be arriving at New Orleans, New York and Boston bound to the great Salt Lake, &c. Now if you have some able elders send them, one to each of these cities with a true statement of the state of starvation and wretchedness attending those who have gone towards the great Salt Lake. And believe me, you will turn a large portion of them to join you in your new cities on the islands and borders of the western lakes. In short, as a prophet and friend to your people and humanity you cannot see these thousands deluded off and not make an effort to turn them to your cities of refuge, and save them from the horrors that have already thinned the ranks of the followers of Young and his monstrous doctrines of spiritual wifery, a trait in itself sufficient to damn any people. I may also mention to you that several elders of Young's are in our seaboard cities for the purpose of raising money and means to relieve the starving emigrants on their way to California, and probably attend also in directing the new comers in their pilgrimage.—I am well aware that I may be considered as rather officious in this matter, but believe me when I tell you in all sincerity that my object is to save these foreign emigrants from the troubles and dangers to which they are now hastening; knowing also that none but a Mormon could persuade them, I freely bring the matter to your notice, if you have not already prepared yourself to act in the premises, having been apprised of their movements. In this matter you will, I trust, receive it in the same spirit in which it is sent, and treat it with that sincerity that has dictated all my intercourse with you.—It is humanity that prompts me to urge you to use all your power to save the incoming emigrants from the fate that awaits them in the wilderness. ——— Yours truly, ——— ———

James J. Strang.

Voree, April 3d, 1848.

To Pres. James J. Strang:—

Dear and well beloved Brother,—Having just returned to our home, and the home of the saints, from our last mission we take this method of informing you and the Conference of our prosperity in the great work of God, in which we are and have been engaged during the past winter. We left this place about the middle of Dec. last on foot for the south, and the second day after we left we stopped at Fort Hill, where we tarried and preached about a week. The people treated us kindly, and here we found several old members of the church who were not exactly dead, but rather cold, who were begotten again to a lively hope in Christ Jesus through our preaching. We left them in good spirits and traveled on to the neighborhood of Elgin, Ill., and we will just say here by way of aspect to some of the people between Fort Hill and Elgin, that notwithstanding they profess to be christians and to believe the Bible, and we were strangers and the weather very cold, (it being the 25th af Dec.,) that we tried for more than an hour from house to house to get lodgings and were nearly perishing with cold and fatigue. before we found a man who was careful to entertain strangers. But thank God, a little after dark we found such an one, and we put up for the night with Mr. Batholomew. Below Elgin we stopped with our old friend Ludlow Hill, who with his family, received us gladly. Here we preached several times to attentive hearers. Stirring up several more members of the church. We next visited Kings Mills and St. Charles, where we also preached, stirring up the old members to a sense of their duty and convincing many others of the truth of the everlasting gospel and of the reality of the dispensation of the fullness of times, which God has committed to his servants in this generation. By this time the calls for preaching became very numerous and pressing on all sides, and we finally visited and preached in Elgin, St. Charles, Black Berry, Sycamore Grove, Pigeon Woods and the intermediate neighborhoods, holding one debate with the Baptists and Methodists, in which Mormonism (so called) was triumphant. And we have another discussion pending which is to come off after Conference, where Mormonism is again called in question, the Bible to be the test. Well, we continued to preach and visit from house to house, teaching the people and bapizing until we immersed twenty-one persons, all new members, and some of whom have moved to Voree already, and many more of that branch will remove the present spring.

The branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Kings Mills and the surrounding country numbers about 70 members, all in good standing, faith and fellowship, and manifest a desire to become equal in all their temporal things according to the law of God. In fact they all go for the fullness of the spirit and celestial glory. They have several efficient official members, men of integrity and of firmness, and the field for labor in that region is large and one or two Elers could be well employed in that region the ensuing summer. Several manifestations of the gift of healing has also been enjoyed, during our stay with that people. Thus we see the promise of the Lord fulfilled as contained in the New Testament, the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and our humble prayer to the Lord is that he will continue to bless with his spirit all pure in heart among all people and nations, that the work of the gathering of his saints may continue until Zion and Jerusalem are built up and prepared to receive the Lord Jesus from heaven. to reign a thousand years on this earth.—Amen. EBENEZER PAGE, one of the Twelve.

JAMES BLAKESLEE, Pres. of the H. P. Q.

Burlington, Iowa, Feb. 20th, 1848.

Elder Page:—I have not gone to Salt Valley yet, and think I shall not until I know something more what is going on at Voree. I wish you would send me the paper published there, if there is any. I will not send the money now, but if the papers come I will send it forthwith. I wish you would write me a long letter and tell me all about Voree, and how the saints are prospering. I have almost forgot what Mormonism is, and it might do me good to stir up my mind by way of remembrance. I am determined to still be a Mormon as much as ever, but I want the old stamp, that which brings intelligence, liberty and light. Elder Page, humbugery wont do for me. I want reason, common sense and revelation, demonstrated facts from the "law and the testimony." I do not want to be deceived nor trifled with when my eternal salvation is at stake.—Remember me to brother Strang, the prophet. May the intelligence of heaven swell his bosom, and may the great God of Israel bless him.

The beauty of Mormonism is that it has a prophet, and the surest evidence of its truth is that Joseph Smith has left a successor. "A church without a prophet is not the church for me." But have you seen the great epistle of the twelve apostles from the great Salt Valley, where the mountain of the Lord's house is to be established on the tops of the mountains, (in the valley.) Oh sophistry! I never saw so much deception wrapped up in one piece of writing as there is in that very epistle. They talk about virtue. They are strangers to it, for their works are abominable and corrupt, and I know it. Remember me to your wife, as also my wife, says she would like to see her much. If you are acquainted with Benjamin Wright there tell him that brother Downton here, who knew him in Wisconsin, wants him to write a letter. The Brighamites are going ahead. Some have been baptized, and some have been reclaimed. I know of some here who but a few weeks since were wreaking vengeance on the twelve, and said they knew they were of the devil, now they are decidedly in their favor, and no arguments, neither reason common sense nor revelation, can possibly persuade them to believe what they once knew. Now, sir, such men as these are not worth a shadow.* But I must close.

Yours, &c., DWIGHT WEBSTER.

* Brighamites all the time, who only denied it while the jails were filling with horse thieves, to save trouble. [Ed.

Porter, March 22d, 1848.

Brother James:—Brother John E. Page is to leave us this morning, and I thought I would scratch down a few lines to you, which I consider to be just towards our brother J. E. Page. God knows, brother Strang, if any man on the footstool of God loves truth I for one do. And if any one belonging to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints loves the honest, intelligent ministers of that church I do. It is with the most profound reluctance this morning I have to bid adieu for a season to my venerable brother in the gospel ministry of the dispensation of the fullness of times. I have constantly been with him since he came to labor among us, and profited by his instructions in the plan of salvation and the work of God in these last days.

Duty calls and he must return home in order that he may prepare to go to the east, to extinguish Brighamism. The brethren feel as sorrowful as if they were taking a last farewell of a friend on the brink of the tomb. But we must part with him, for others stand in need of salvation as well as we. We must be reconciled to the dispensation of the providence of God. The sects have been mightily stirred up in their feelings, and many are inquiring after the truth as it is in Jesus; and some are believing, and as yet have not obeyed the gospel of Christ. As far as I am capable I am determined by the grace of God to preach the gospel to as many as will hear me, and I feel a deep interest in the prayers of the saints, that I may live acceptably before God, and rid my garments of the blood of this ungodly generation. Give my love to all the brethren and sisters with whom I am acquainted, especially sister Strang. Brother Strang, if you have any special instructions to give me relative to this work, write me and they will be thankfully received and duly appreciated. That the kingdom may be borne off triumphantly is my prayer, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

HIRAM P. BROWN.

Binghampton, Feb. 28th, 1848.

Dear Brother James:—I received your package and am much delighted with the matter therein contained. It has stirred up a hornets nest among the craft in this neighborhood. I send two dollars, which you will please pass to my credit for the continuation of your paper. May the Lord bless you with wisdom, and the saints with union. WILLIAM ROSE.

Newcastle, Pennsylvania, March 20th, 1848.

My ever Beloved Brother J. J. Strang:—It becomes a duty incumbent on me to inform you that I expect to leave this part of the country, in order to visit my relatives who reside in Illinois. This being the case, I solicit you to send my paper, that is the Gospel Herald, to La Harpe, Hancock county, Illinois; for truly I esteem the intelligence conveyed to me through that paper as a treasure indeed. My health is not very good at present, yet I have a hope that I shall visit Voree at no very remote period, where I shall again stand on holy ground, to wit: the ground that God has sanctified for a resting place for his saints, where God's children shall receive a full reward for all their well directed toil; they having the promise of all things present and eternal, relative to their happiness. I a short time since visited Beaver and Pittsburgh, places where I found a few saints who I have reason to believe are saints indeed. I preached to them several times, enforcing the correctness of your priesthood, in the very important relation in which it has pleased God in his own peculiar wisdom to elevate you. And I must say, when judging by the signs of the times, it appears evident to me that those whom I addressed were well pleased to hear testimony in confirmation of the truth, and the whole truth as it is in Jesus, in reference to his all desirable kingdom.

[Here follows directions to collect certain properties, which brother Reynolds donated to the Temple. Such liberality he has shown often. God bless him, and give him an everlasting inheritance in Zion. Ed.]

And now, by way of conclusion, I testify unto you and all my dear brothers and sisters in the Church of the first born, that my love is still the same living principle, ever stirring me up to energetic prayer to Almighty God, that he may keep you all in heavenly places, until Jesus comes to make the whole world a heavenly place, the knowledge of the Lord covering the whole earth as the waters cover the deep. HENRY REYNOLDS.

Pittsburgh, Pa., March 14th, 1848.

President Strang:—

Dear Brother,—The few remaining brethren greet you. Your labors are constantly remembered by us. The reward of a righteous prophet attend you always. We inclose ten dollars for four copies of the Herald, directed to Jas. Smith, Pittsburgh, and the balance in hymn books. We are watching with great anxiety the movements in the political world at home and abroad. The death balm is near, but not yet. May God save the saints from its fearful successor. We shall write again soon, and when navigation opens you may expect to hear from us more substantially. God bless you, with all the saints. Amen.

Very Dear Brother,—The above was written for my Pittsburgh brethren, brothers Winders, Prince, Jas. and Matthew Smith and father Spratley. I would add that the branch at Brighton remains much the same as at my last writing. All the former subscribers will doubtless continue their subscriptions for the Herald. I have been so much from home this winter that I have not had an opportunity of doing much for the Herald. I would like to know your plan of association particularly. Have you begun to improve your water power? How would a small steam engine do there or at Beaver Island? Would heavy lathes for iron turning be useful out there? If you have time please write me particularly of these matters. In the covenant and faith of the saints,

I am affectionately yours,
JAMES M. GREIG.

Answer.—The association is in active operations. It possesses about 1000 acres of land of excellent quality, and extensively improved. They will crop about 400 acres this season, and will have 150 acres of meadow. They could occupy more land if they had begun early enough to make a little more fence. There has been scarcely any thing done in improving the water power, but they hope to be about it actively in a short time, and to continue till it is completed. About the plan of the association, we shall publish more particularly soon. Space now forbids. The lathes would be useful here if machinists came with them, but it would be cheapest working them by water. At Beaver steam power is the thing.—The islands are covered heavily with excellent timber, with only one good water power, and that ten miles from the harbor. [Ed.

Pittsburgh, March 11th, 1848.

I wish you would be so kind as to advertise in your paper that I have got Books of Mormon and Books of Doctrine and Covenants for sale. Books of Mormon in the common style, and in the pocket book form with gilt edges. Yours, &c., JAMES SMITH.

☞ Albert W. Smith is suspended and under admonition for denying the authority of the First Presidency, and using his priesthood to destroy the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and to build up the kingdom of the devil.

JAMES BLAKESLEE,
Pres. of the High Priests Quorum.
Voree, April 10th, 1848.

of the devil, now they are decidedly in their favor, and no arguments, neither reason common sense nor revelation, can possibly persuade them to believe what they once knew. Now, sir, such men as these are not worth a shadow.* But I must close.

Yours, &c., DWIGHT WEBSTER.

* Brighamites all the time, who only denied it while the jails were filling with horse thieves, to save trouble. [Ed.

Porter, March 22d, 1848.

Brother James:—Brother John E. Page is to leave us this morning, and I thought I would scratch down a few lines to you, which I consider to be just towards our brother J. E. Page. God knows, brother Strang, if any man on the footstool of God loves truth I for one do. And if any one belonging to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints loves the honest, intelligent ministers of that church I do. It is with the most profound reluctance this morning I have to bid adieu for a season to my venerable brother in the gospel ministry of the dispensation of the fullness of times. I have constantly been with him since he came to labor among us, and profited by his instructions in the plan of salvation and the work of God in these last days.

Duty calls and he must return home in order that he may prepare to go to the east, to extinguish Brighamism. The brethren feel as sorrowful as if they were taking a last farewell of a friend on the brink of the tomb. But we must part with him, for others stand in need of salvation as well as we. We must be reconciled to the dispensation of the providence of God. The sects have been mightily stirred up in their feelings, and many are inquiring after the truth as it is in Jesus; and some are believing, and as yet have not obeyed the gospel of Christ. As far as I am capable I am determined by the grace of God to preach the gospel to as many as will hear me, and I feel a deep interest in the prayers of the saints, that I may live acceptably before God, and rid my garments of the blood of this ungodly generation. Give my love to all the brethren and sisters with whom I am acquainted, especially sister Strang. Brother Strang, if you have any special instructions to give me relative to this work, write me and they will be thankfully received and duly appreciated. That the kingdom may be borne off triumphantly is my prayer, through Jesus Christ. Amen.

HIRAM P. BROWN.

Binghampton, Feb. 28th, 1848.

Dear Brother James:—I received your package and am much delighted with the matter therein contained. It has stirred up a hornets nest among the craft in this neighborhood. I send two dollars, which you will please pass to my credit for the continuation of your paper. May the Lord bless you with wisdom, and the saints with union. WILLIAM ROSE.

Newcastle, Pennsylvania, March 20th, 1848.

My ever Beloved Brother J. J. Strang:—It becomes a duty incumbent on me to inform you that I expect to leave this part of the country, in order to visit my relatives who reside in Illinois. This being the case, I solicit you to send my paper, that is the Gospel Herald, to La Harpe, Hancock county, Illinois; for truly I esteem the intelligence conveyed to me through that paper as a treasure indeed. My health is not very good at present, yet I have a hope that I shall visit Voree at no very remote period, where I shall again stand on holy ground, to wit: the ground that God has sanctified for a resting place for his saints, where God's children shall receive a full reward for all their well directed toil; they having the promise of all things present and eternal, relative to their happiness. I a short time since visited Beaver and Pittsburgh, places where I found a few saints who I have reason to believe are saints indeed. I preached to them several times, enforcing the correctness of your priesthood, in the very important relation in which it has pleased God in his own peculiar wisdom to elevate you. And I must say, when judging by the signs of the times, it appears evident to me that those whom I addressed were well pleased to hear testimony in confirmation of the truth, and the whole truth as it is in Jesus, in reference to his all desirable kingdom.

[Here follows directions to collect certain properties, which brother Reynolds donated to the Temple. Such liberality he has shown often. God bless him, and give him an everlasting inheritance in Zion. Ed.]

And now, by way of conclusion, I testify unto you and all my dear brothers and sisters in the Church of the first born, that my love is still the same living principle, ever stirring me up to energetic prayer to Almighty God, that he may keep you all in heavenly places, until Jesus comes to make the whole world a heavenly place, the knowledge of the Lord covering the whole earth as the waters cover the deep. HENRY REYNOLDS.

Pittsburgh, Pa., March 14th, 1848.

President Strang:—

Dear Brother,—The few remaining brethren greet you. Your labors are constantly remembered by us. The reward of a righteous prophet attend you always. We inclose ten dollars for four copies of the Herald, directed to Jas. Smith, Pittsburgh, and the balance in hymn books. We are watching with great anxiety the movements in the political world at home and abroad. The dear balm is near, but not yet. May God save the saints from its fearful successor. We shall write again soon, and when navigation opens you may expect to hear from us more substantially. God bless you, with all the saints. Amen.

Very Dear Brother,—The above was written for my Pittsburgh brethren, brothers Winders, Prince, Jas. and Matthew Smith and father Spratley. I would add that the branch at Brighton remains much the same as at my last writing. All the former subscribers will doubtless continue their subscriptions for the Herald. I have been so much from home this winter that I have not had an opportunity of doing much for the Herald. I would like to know your plan of association particularly. Have you begun to improve your water power? How would a small steam engine do there or at Beaver Island? Would heavy lathes for iron turning be useful out there? If you have time please write me particularly of these matters. In the covenant and faith of the saints,

I am affectionately yours,

JAMES M. GREIG.

Answer.—The association is in active operations. It possesses about 1000 acres of land of excellent quality, and extensively improved. They will crop about 400 acres this season, and will have 150 acres of meadow. They could occupy more land if they had begun early enough to make a little more fence. There has been scarcely any thing done in improving the water power, but they hope to be about it actively in a short time, and to continue till it is completed. About the plan of the association, we shall publish more particularly soon. Space now forbids. The lathes would be useful here if machinists came with them, but it would be cheaper working them by water. At Beaver steam power is the thing. The islands are covered heavily with excellent timber, with only one good water power, and that ten miles from the harbor. [Ed.

Pittsburgh, March 11th, 1848.

I wish you would be so kind as to advertise in your paper that I have got Books of Mormon and Books of Doctrine and Covenants for sale. Books of Mormon in the common style, and in the pocket book form with gilt edges. Yours, &c., JAMES SMITH.

☞ Albert W. Smith is suspended and under admonition for denying the authority of the First Presidency, and using his priesthood to destroy the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and to build up the kingdom of the devil.

JAMES BLAKESLEE,
Pres. of the High Priests Quorum.

Voree, April 10th, 1848.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 6.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY. APRIL 27, 1848. [WHOLE No. 70.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE INSTITUTION OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY AND THE LAW OF SUCCESSION.

EXTRACTED FROM THE BOOK OF DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

The power and authority of the higher or Melchisedec priesthood is to hold the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church. Sec. iii. p. 9.

Wherefore it must needs be that one be appointed of the high priesthood, to preside over the priesthood, and he shall be called President of the high priesthood of the church, or, in other words, the presiding high priest over the high priesthood of the church, from the same comes the administering of ordinances and blessings upon the church by the laying on of the hands. Sec. iii. p. 31.

And again, the duty of the President of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold here is wisdom—yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator and a prophet—having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church. Sec. iii. p. 42.

I give unto you my servant Joseph, to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer and prophet.—Sec. ciii. p. 39.

Thou (Joseph) shalt be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ, an elder of the church through the will of God the Father, and the grace of your Lord Jesus Christ. Sec. xlvi. p. 1.

The President of the church, who is also the President of the council, is appointed by revelation. Sec. v. p. 6.

The President may inquire and obtain the mind of the Lord by revelation. Sec. v. p. 10.

I have sent forth the fullness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph; and I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me, and if not, another will I plant in his stead. Sec. xi. p. 4.

But, behold, verily I say unto thee no one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church excepting my servant Joseph Smith, jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses. And thou (Oliver Cowdery) shalt not command him who is at thy head, and at the head of the church; for I have given him the keys of the mysteries and the revelations which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead. Sec. li. p. 2.

Verily I say unto you, the keys of this kingdom shall never be taken from you while thou art in this world, neither in the world to come; nevertheless through you shall the oracles be given to another, even unto the church. Sec. lxxxv. p. 2.

And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. Sec. xiv. p. 1.

But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments: and this I give unto you that you may not be deceived; that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the gate, and be ordained as I have told you before. Sec. xiv. p. 2. Given Feb. 1831.

Wherefore marvel not, for the hour cometh that I will drink of the fruit of the vine with you on the earth; ——also with John the son of Zacharias; ——which John (an angel) I have sent unto you, my servants, Joseph Smith, jr., and Oliver Cowdery, to ordain you unto this first priesthood which you have received, that you might be called and ordained even as Aaron: ——and also with Peter, and James, and John, (angels,) whom I have sent unto you, by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles and especial witnesses of my name, and bear the keys of your ministry; and of the same things which I revealed unto them: unto whom I have committed the keys of my kingdom, and a dispensation of the gospel for the last times; and for the fullness of times, in the which I will gather together in one all things, both which are in heaven and which are on earth. Sec. l. p. 2, 3. Given Sept. 1830.

The Twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the Presidency of the church, agreeable to the institution of heaven. Sec. iii. p. 12.

The Twelve being sent out, holding the keys to open the door by the proclamation of the gospel of Jesus Christ; and first unto the Gentiles then to the Jews. Sec. iii. p. 13.

Now I say unto you, and what I say unto you, I say unto all the twelve, arise and gird up your loins, take up your cross, follow me, and feed my sheep. Exalt not yourselves; rebel not against my servant Joseph, for verily I say unto you I am with him, and my hand shall be over him; and the keys which I have given unto him, and also to youward, shall not be taken from him till I come. Sec. civ. p. 6.

Verily I say unto you, my servant Thomas, thou art the man whom I have chosen to hold the keys of my kingdom (as pertaining to the Twelve) abroad among all nations, that thou mayest be my servant to unlock the door of the kingdom in all places where my servant Joseph, and my servant Sidney, and my servant Hyrum, cannot come: for on them have I laid the burden of all the churches for a little season: wherefore, whithersoever they (the First Presidency) shall send you, (the Twelve,) go ye, and I will be with you, and in whatsoever place ye shall proclaim my name, an effectual door shall be opened unto you, that they may receive my words; whosoever receiveth my word receiveth me, and whosoever receiveth me, receiveth those (the First Presidency) whom I have sent, whom I have made counselors for my names' sake unto you, (The Twelve.) Sec. civ. p. 7.

Therefore see to it that ye (the Twelve) trouble not yourselves concerning the affairs of my church in this place, (the seat of the First Presidency,) saith the Lord: but purify your hearts before me, and then go ye into all the world and preach my gospel unto every creature, who have not received it, and he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not and is not baptized shall be damned. Sec. civ. p. 11.

THE APPOINTMENT OF A SUCCESSOR AND A PLACE OF REFUGE.

LETTER OF JOSEPH SMITH TO JAMES J. STRANG.

Nauvoo, June 18th, 1844.

MY DEAR SON:—Your epistle of May 24th, proposing the planting a Stake of Zion in Wisconsin and the gathering of the Saints there, was duly received, and I with most of the brethren whose advice I called in were of opinion that you was deceived by a spirit not of this world, great but not good. Brother Hyrum however thought otherwise, and favored the project, not doubting it was of God. I however determined to return you an unfavorable answer for the present. But Oh the littleness of man in his best earthly state! Not so the will of the Almighty. God hath ruled it otherwise, and a message from the throne of grace directed me as it hath inspired you, and the faith which thou hast in the Shepherd, the Stone of Israel, hath been repaid to thee a thousand fold, and thou shalt be like him; but the flock shall find rest with thee, and God shall reveal to thee his will concerning them.

I have long felt that my present work was almost done, and that I should soon be called to rule a mighty host, but something whispers me it will be in the land of spirits, where the wicked cease from troubling and the bands of the prisoner fall off. My heart yearns for my little ones, but I know God will be a father to them, and I can claim face to face the fulfillment of promises from him who is a covenant keeping God, and who sweareth and performeth and faileth not to the uttermost.

The wolves are upon the scent, and I am waiting to be offered up if such be the will of God, knowing that though my visage be more marred than that of any it will be unscarred and fair when archangels shall place on my brow the double crown of martyr and king in a heavenly world.

In the midst of darkness and boding danger the spirit of Elijah came upon me, and I went away to inquire of God how the Church should be saved.

I was upon the hill of the Temple. The calm father of waters rolled below changeless and eternal. I beheld a light in the heavens above, and streams of bright light illuminated the firmament varied and beautiful as the rainbow, gentle, yet rapid as the fierce lightning.

The Almighty came from his throne of rest. He clothed himself with light as with a garment. He appeared and moon and stars went out. The earth dissolved in space. I trod on air and was borne on wings of Cherubims. The sweetest strains of heavenly music thrilled in my ear, but the notes were low and sad as though they sounded the requiem of martyred Prophets.

I bowed my head to the earth and asked only wisdom and strength for the church. The voice of God answered, My servant Joseph, thou hast been faithful over many things and thy reward is glorious; the crown and sceptre are thine, and they wait thee. But thou hast sinned in some things, and thy punishment is very bitter. The whirlwind goeth before and its clouds are dark, but rest followeth and to its days there shall be no end. Study the words of the vision for it tarrieth not.

And now behold my servant James J. Strang hath come to thee from far for truth when he knew it not, and hath not rejected it but had faith in thee, the Shepherd and Stone of Israel, and to him shall the gathering of the people be, for he shall plant a stake of Zion in Wisconsin and I will establish it; and there shall my people have peace and rest and shall not be moved, for it shall be established on the prairie on White River in the lands of Racine and Walworth, and behold my servants James and Aaron shall plant it for I have given them wisdom, and Daniel shall stand in his lot on the hill beside the river looking down on the prairie, and shall instruct my people and shall plead with them face to face.

Behold my servant James shall lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes of Zion, and my servant Aaron shall be his counselor, for he hath wisdom in the gospel and understandeth the doctrines and erreth not therein.

And I will have a house built unto me there of stone, and there will I show myself to my people by many mighty works, and the name of the city shall be called Voree, which is, being interpreted, garden of peace, for there shall my people have peace and rest and wax fat and pleasant in the presence of their enemies.

But I will again stretch out my arm over the river of waters, and on the banks thereof shall the house of my choice be. But now the city of Voree shall be a strong hold of safety to my people, and they that are faithful and obey me I will there give them great prosperity and such as they have not had before, and unto Voree shall be the gathering of my people, and there shall the oppressed flee for safety and none shall hurt or molest them.

And by this shall they know that I have spoken it: the people there and the owners of the land shall show kindness to them, for great calamites are coming on the church and such as have not been, and if they scatter the ungodly of the world shall swallow them up, but if they gather to my city of Voree there will I keep them under the shadow of my wings, and the cities from whence my people have been driven shall be purged with a high hand for I will do it, and my people shall be again restored to their possession, but dark clouds are gathering, for the church is not yet wholly purged.

And now I command my servants, the Apostles and Priests and Elders of the Church of the Saints, that they communicate and proclaim this my word to all the saints of God in all the world, that they may be gathered unto and round about my city of Voree and be saved from their enemies, for I will have a people to serve me.

And I command my servant Moses Smith that he go unto the saints with whom he is acquainted and unto many people, and command them in my name to go unto my city of Voree and gain inheritances therein, and he shall have an inheritance therein for he hath left all for my sake, and I will add unto him many fold if he is faithful; for he knows the land and can testify unto them that it is very good.

So spake the Almighty God of heaven. Thy duty is made plain, and if thou lackest wisdom ask of God in whose hands I trust thee, and he shall give thee unsparingly, for if evil befall me thou shalt lead the flock to pleasant pastures. God sustain thee.

JAMES J. STRANG. JOSEPH SMITH.

This letter was received at Burlington by regular course of mail, coming through the distributing office at Chicago, and bears the Nauvoo post mark of June 19, the day following its date. It arrived at Burlington July 9th, and was immediately taken from the office by C. P. Barnes, Esq., a distinguished lawyer at that place, who, in consequence of the rumors of persecution and civil war against the Mormons, and a general anxiety to hear the latest news, immediately carried it to Mr. Strang with the request to be informed of any news of public interest which it might contain. It therefore became public the same evening.

As much pains has been taken to belie this document and to derogate from its authority, it is proper to add that from the day of its reception to this (April 1848) it has always been kept open to public inspection, and not an iota of evidence has yet been produced derogatory to its authenticity. The Brighamites and other apostates have reported far and near that it had a black post mark, and that such were not used in the office at Nauvoo. This report is a falsehood. The post mark is red. They also started a story that no proper entry of the mailing of such a letter could be found in the register of "mails sent" from Nauvoo. But Mr. Strang caused the register to be examined, and under date of June 19th, 1844, the proper entry was found of such a letter to the distributing P. O. at Chicago, and the register at Burlington of "mails received" contains the proper entry from Chicago. In the winter of 1845–6 these facts were publicly proclaimed in the Temple at Nauvoo by Moses Smith, Samuel Shaw and others, & an examination of the registers called for. The next day crowds were at the P. O. to inspect the register. But though the register of every other quarter from the establishment of that P. O. was safely there, that particular quarter was no where to be found. It has never since been produced.—Comment is unnecessary.

Mrs. Emma Smith recollects well of her husband receiving a letter from Mr. Strang, and holding a council on the subject, and names Hyrum Smith, Willard Richards and John P. Green as present at that council, and also that a letter was sent to Mr. Strang in answer, but of the import of the answer she was not informed.

Immediately after the martyrdom of Joseph, John Taylor, Willard Richards and William W. Phelps took a kind of temporary direction of the affairs of the church, instructing the saints to wait patiently the hand of the Lord; assuring them that he had not left them without a shepherd, and that all things would be made known in due season. To every question of the saints, who is the prophet? replies were made in substance that the saints would know in due season, but that nothing could be done till the Twelve got home, because the appointment of a prophet and the directions for salvation of the church from the perils they were in was contained in sealed packages directed to them. Orson Hyde and others of the Twelve who were then in the east stated in public congregations in New York, Philadelphia and other cities that Willard Richards had written to them that the appointment of a prophet was left with him under seal, to be opened on the return of the Twelve. This assertion was so often made that the whole church were daily expecting to hear a new prophet proclaimed. On the eighth of August, 1844, when Sidney Rigdon endeavored to obtain authority to lead the church, John P. Green, marshal of the city of Nauvoo, told them "they need not trouble themselves about it for Joseph had appointed one James J. Strang, who lived up north, to stand in his stead." The sudden death of John P. Green immediately after this declaration (under very extraordinary circumstances) left Willard Richards and John Taylor sole repositors of all documents on this subject except this letter. They had simply to suppress documents in their hands to set themselves up in power, or overthrow themselves and their pretensions by publishing them. These and many other facts, which we have not room to state, make an array of testimony of the strongest kind in favor of this letter. It is worthy of consideration that no one fact has been relied on against it, but that in various quarters different false tales have been told to disparage it, which a mere inspection of the letter or of public records would prove false. The only reason which can be given for this continual resort to falsehood is that there is no truth against it.

THE ORDINATION.

FROM THE CHURCH RECORDS.

1. On the twenty-seventh day of June, 1844, at five and a half o'clock, in the afternoon, James J. Strang was in the Spirit, and the Angel of God came unto him and saluted him, saying:

2. Fear God and be strengthened and obey him, for great is the work which he hath required at thy hand. Go on in hope and strength, and falter not, and he will sustain thee, and thou shalt triumph, for the voice of the Lord, by the mouth of Joseph, will be fulfill.

3. And the Angel of the Lord stretched forth his hand unto him and touched his head, and put oil upon him and said, Grace is poured upon thy lips, and God blesseth thee with the greatness of the Everlasting Priesthood. He putteth might, and glory, and majesty upon thee, and in meekness, and truth, and righteousness will he prosper thee.

4. Thou shalt save his people from their enemies when there is no arm to deliver, and shall bring salvation when destruction walketh in the house of thy God. Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore thy God hath anointed thee with oil and set thee above all thy fellows.

5. Thy words shall be like sharp arrows in the hearts of the wicked. Thou shalt rebuke those who pervert the word of thy God. Thou shalt preach righteousness and the sublime mysteries in the ears of many people, and shall bring the gospel to many who have not known it, and to the nations afar off.

6. Thou shalt drive backward and put to shame those that do evil, and the workers of iniquity shall fall. They shall be cast down and shall not be able to rise. With purity will the Lord thy God arm thee, and purity and truth shalt thou teach.

7. Keep the law of the Lord thy God in thy heart, and none of thy steps shall slide. With thee is the fountain of truth. In thy light shall the people of thy God see, for thou shalt speak his word unto them, and from thy lips shall they receive it.

8. The blessing of their God shalt thou put upon them, and his curse upon evil doers, if, after being oft rebuked, they repent not, and before my people shalt thou go to lead them into my ways, for unto thee has the Lord thy God given salvation.

9. In righteousness shalt thou rule. Thou shalt redeem the poor and the needy from suffering and violence, and to thee God giveth judgment for them. Thou shalt deliver the prey from the spoiler, for God, thy God, hath put them in thy hand.

10. And in weakness will he make thee strong. Thou shalt rule among his people. Thou shalt break in pieces the rod of the oppressor and the yoke of the unjust ruler. They shall flee away, but the way of peace shall they not find.

11. While the day of the wicked abideth, shalt thou prepare a refuge for the oppressed, and for the poor and needy. Unto thee shall they come, and their brethren who are scattered shall come with them, and the destruction of the ungodly shall quickly follow, for it already worketh. Go thy way and be strong.

FIRST PASTORAL LETTER OF JAMES THE PROPHET.

JAMES J. STRANG a Prophet of the most High God and an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, unto the Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

I am in continual remembrance of your past works in the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God and of the evils done at the hands of Ungodly men, and I would that you remain no longer ignorant of the refuge that God has appointed you, and follow not after any who usurp the authority of God in the Holy City.

Be not unmindful of the flock who know not the true Shepherd, but are following hirelings among whom are grievous wolves and they bleat like sheep by day and devour by night. God be praised that some of you have escaped them. I would that none of you go astray but that you all unitedly might follow after the true Shepherd: lest coming short after escaping the first perils you enter not into your rest.

I beseech you brethren that you be not unmindful of the words of the Lord by the mouth of the prophet Joseph: that you be not deceived, that you receive not the teachings of any that come before you as revelations and commandments, except they come in at the gate and be ordained according to the command of God. (D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2.)

I wist ye are not ignorant of the office and place of the prophet Joseph, that he was an Elder and an Apostle, (D. & C. sec. xlvi. p. 1,) Prophet, Seer, Revelator and Translator called to go before the church as Moses went before Israel. (D. & C. sec. iii. p. 42.)

Suffer me in all patience to remind you of the law of the Lord which he revealed unto us aforetime that the place of the prophet Joseph should be filled by another; (D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2. sec. xi. p. 4, last clause; sec. li. p. 2, last clause; sec. lxxxv. p. 2;) that the appointment of his successor is by revelation from God: (D. & C. sec. v. p. 6. sec. xi. p. 4:) and that through Joseph only could that appointment be made. (D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2. sec. lxxxv. p. 2.)

For it is said in one place that if his gift be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead; and in another place it is said, if he abide not in me another will I plant in his stead. And at the organization of the High Council of the church it was written, that the President of the church who is also President of the council is appointed by revelation. Finally it is said I have given unto him the keys of the mysteries and revelations which are sealed until I appoint unto them (the church) another in his stead.

By these testimonies and by many more it doth clearly appear that it was the duty of the prophet Joseph before his martyrdom to appoint another to fill his place when he should be removed. If he has not done so then have we no evidence that he was a prophet for what he hath spoken has not come to pass.

The only rational conclusion which any man can arrive at in view of these testimonies is that in the order of this church the Presidency with its several gifts, officers and duties, is perpetual. God having thus organized the church and the power of the devil having accomplished the martyrdom of two of the chief officers will any saint teach that satan has changed the order of the church and abolished those officers which God instituted, and by the martyrdom of prophets established a new and better order? I trust not.

I am well aware that Sidney Rigdon claimed his place above the Twelve, and that he sought to do some acts by virtue of his office as one of the First Presidency, which were generally very much disapproved of, but though he had a perfect right to officiate in his place he had no right to place himself at the head of the church.

His office as an associate or member of the First Presidency does not constitute him a regular successor to Joseph Smith, the claim in his favor to succeed as the highest surviving officer of the church, not being a claim of an appointment of God by revelation through Joseph Smith to fill his place, which is the only form of appointment known to the law of God.

I am aware also that the Twelve claim in their first Apostolic letter after the death of Joseph (Letter of Brigham Young, Aug. 15, 1844, in the Times and Seasons of that date) to preside over and dictate all the affairs of the church in all the world. And they emphatically charge us, let no man presume for a moment that his place (Joseph's) will be filled by another. Thus they assumed to abolish the First Presidency of the church and usurp its duties to themselves.

This claim however is not only utterly unsupported by any one testimony, but is in many points directly contrary to the word of God. The Twelve are a traveling and not a local or general high council, and though they are required to build up the church and regulate all the affairs thereof in all nations, they are to do so expressly under the direction of the Presidency of the church agreeable to the institution of Heaven. (D. & C. sec. iii. p. 12.) They hold the keys of the opening of the gospel to the nations, (D. & C. sec. iii. p. 13,) but the keys of mysteries and revelations belong to Joseph as First President, prophet, Seer, and so forth and to his successors regularly appointed by revelation through him. (D. & C. sec v. p. 10. sec. xi. p. 4. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2.) The keys of the kingdom belong to Joseph, for time and eternity, but still with a regular succession as to the oracles or gift of receiving revelation for the church. (D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 2.) The Melchisedec priesthood by its presidency holds the keys of ordinances and spiritual blessings.—(D. & C. sec. iii. p. 9, 31.) And in all these things the Twelve are without power, their duties being to open the preaching of the gospel.

Moreover it cannot be that the Twelve should dictate all the affairs of the church in all the world, because they not only are under the direction of the First Presidency but the high council is above them and they are amenable to it. "The most important buisness of the church and the most difficult cases of the church in as much as there is not satisfaction upon the decision of the Bishop or Judges it shall be handed over and carried up to the council of the church before the Presidency of the high priesthood; and the Presidency of the council of the high priesthood shall have power to call other high priests even twelve to assist as counselors; and thus the Presidency of the high priesthood shall have power to decide upon testimony according to the laws of the church. And after this decision it shall be had in remembrance no more before the Lord, for this is the highest council of the church of God and a final decision upon spiritual matters. There is not any person belonging to the church who is exempt from this council of the church."—(D. & C. sec. iii. p. 35, 36. also sec. v. p. 13.)

Upon what pretense is this claim of the Twelve founded? Upon the trial of Sidney Rigdon they took pains to state it as strongly as possible, and they make out no more than this, that when Joseph Smith was candidate for President of the United States, and knew by the Spirit that some great thing was to happen, but did not know what it was, he gave them an endowment of ordinances, (not the oracles,) and told them that on their shoulders would rest the responsibility. (See trial of S. Rigdon, Times and Seasons Sept. 15, 1844, page 611, remarks of Orson Hyde.) These ordinances are intended for the whole church, men, women and children. Will they all have power to dictate all the affairs of the church in all the world then? If not, how do these ordinances give the Apostles that power now? If these ordinances gave certain power to some men why not to others?

All the Twelve were not present and did not receive these ordinances. Whence their claim of power? Several persons not of the Twelve were present and received all these ordinances with such of the Twelve as were there. Why are not they included in the favored number? Joseph survived this meeting some months. Why did not they find out that he had resigned his office and devolved its duties on them till after he was dead? If his giving an endowment of ordinances and rolling the responsibility of giving counsel, &c., upon some twenty-five men with their wives, as he commenced a political career, vacated his office and those of his counselors and superseded the First Presidency and an entire quorum of the church it is certainly most extaordinary. A very moderate share of common sense or any acquaintance whatever with the laws of the church, accompanied with integrity of heart, will reject so preposterous a claim at first blush. The responsibility of leading the church by good counsels in proper order would devolve on a few of its most influential members necessarily whenever Joseph's attention was turned from them, by any means whatever, not in virtue of any offices they might hold but as leading men. Since the death of Joseph they have used that responsibility to lead the church from the rock of revelation; out of the true order, and from the place of refuge God has appointed unto them. Thus have a few led, sanctioned by the votes of Conferences instead of the voice of God, till the destruction which not only lurks in midnight darkness but stalks boldly at noonday is upon them.

The Twelve have never in any known publication claimed either for themselves or any one of their number to be First President of the church or President of the high priesthood. Their claim is to supersede the First Presidency, put the high council which God has made the highest council of the church, (D. & C. sec. iii. p. 35,) below themselves, and put a bishop over it where God placed a President, (D. & C. sec. iii. p. 9,) and finally, that ex-officio as Apostles and not as Presidents of the high priesthood they are to hold the keys and powers which devolved on the First Presidency and its counselors, and to discontinue the offices of Seer, Revelator and Translator in the church.

Nothing is more certain than that no law was made at the death of Joseph or for some years previous changing the order of the church or abolishing any of its offices or quorums. Down to the time of his death it was properly understood by the whole of the church that he alone received revelations from God to be taught by way of commandment in the church; that he and his two associates in the Presidency had the chief administration of the affairs of the church, and that they with the twelve high counselors were a court or judicatory of final resort, in all important cases, and that the Twelve Apostles were the chief traveling elders and under the direction of the Presidency. And the man who during the lifetime of Joseph had said that the Twelve were at the head of the church, would have been looked upon either as a reckless and hair-brained liar or utterly insane. To have held this then was unblushing apostacy. To hold now that they are not so, is equally apostacy with the leaders in Nauvoo. Whence is the change? In God or man? Does truth thus belie itself?

Why should not the place of Joseph be filled by another? Says Brigham Young, because he stands in his own place and always will. (Apostolic letter Aug. 15, 1844.) But in the same paragraph he also says the Twelve Apostles of this dispensation stand in their own places and always will. Brother Young, will not their places be filled by others when they fill the measure of their days? Then why was brother Patten's place filled? Again: Who will be at the head of the church when the Twelve are all fallen asleep? Will not the High Priests and the Seventies all hold their own places? If so, shall any one succeed them? Then where will the priesthood be when the present genereation is dead?

But, says some one, God promised Joseph that the keys of the kingdom should never be taken from him in this world, neither in the world to come. Very well. They were never taken from Christ, but his holding them did not prevent Joseph, and in the eternal worlds all who are joint heirs with Jesus Christ will hold them at one and the same time.

Brethren, I exhort you as you look for the coming of the Lord Jesus, follow not after these blinding fables. Set up no more the work of men's hands against the voice of God. Trust not in your own wisdom to improve or alter the law of God. You that have gone astray return to the order of God's house. Let all the quorums take their proper order as God has established them. Let the President who has wandered in darkness return to his proper place which God gave, nor avert that which men may offer. Let the Twelve take their place as a traveling high council with the keys of the opening of the gospel to the nations. Let the high counselors give counsel and assistance to the Presidency, which has been called to the high and responsible calling of leading the church to peace and happiness and preparing a people for the coming of the Son of God. Let the high priests teach the law of God unto the people. Let all the elders learn not to put their faith in some great man and say all is well, but let them buckle on the whole armor of God and stand up bold defenders of truth rather than men.

Now in my weakness and in the infancy of my ministry I call upon you to assist me. It hath pleased God to put it into the heart of Joseph to appoint me to receive mysteries and revelations unto this church. And he has been faithful unto the vision and voice of God by sending me his epistle containing the revelation which God gave him, the Lord God confirming the same by sending his angels unto me to charge me with this ministry in the same hour that Joseph was taken away, and by witnessing the same to the brethren in those wonderful works which the brethren here are ready to testify unto you. (To be continued.)

☞ "Murder, though it hath no tongue, will speak with most miraculous organ." But generally it has a tongue, and consequently it "will out." Gladden Bishop came here as one of the super par excellent; the prudish moral, who hold the least appearance of evil in horror; and that priests and prophets ceased to be such the moment they transcended the bounds of the most exalted virtue.—It is doubtless known to most of our readers that Gladden has a lawful wife, a virtuous lady, whom he does not live with. Still holding that it is not good for man to be alone, he has contrived to bewitch an amiable widow lady to stand espoused to him under some kind of hocus pocus arrangement of his administration, as king of all the earth. So such false hearted rascals all run. They live on the ruin of their victims.

YET THEY COME.—A man, we believe, by the name of Oatman, near Fulton, Ill., has set up as prophet. So look for more sanctimonious pollution.

☞ The printing of a large quantity of tracts has made it necessary to make up this No. of the Herald of the same matter. A few subscribers for tracts, we discover by the books, have been neglected. Next week we shall fill all subscriptions and be ready for further orders.

CUT AND POLISHED STONE,

Of superior quality and finish, and of various sorts, constantly on hand and for sale at the Voree quarry. Caps, Sills, Tombstones, Doorsteps, Imposing stones, &c., made to order on short notice.

Voree, April 27th, 1848.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 7.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY. MAY 4, 1848. [WHOLE No. 71.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

FIRST PASTORAL LETTER OF JAMES THE PROPHET.

(Concluded.)

JAMES J. STRANG a Prophet of the most High God and an Apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, unto the Elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Let not my call to you be vain. The destroyer has gone forth among you and has prevailed. You are preparing to resign country and houses and lands to him. Many of you are about to leave the haunts of civilization and of men to go into an unexplored wilderness among savages, and in trackless deserts, to seek a home in the wilds where the foot print of the white man is not found. The voice of God has not called you to this. His promise has not gone before to prepare a habitation for you. The hearts of the Lamanites are not turned unto you, and they will not regard you. When the herd comes the savages shall pursue. The cloud which surrounds by day shall bewilder, and the pillar of fire by night shall consume and reveal you to the destroyer, and the men in whom you trusted when you rejected the promises of God shall leave you early and not be found of you in your greatest need.

Let the oppressed flee for safety unto Voree, and let the gathering of the people be there. Let the evil who have gone to the holy city be rejected and given to the law. Let the Twelve go out and preach the gospel to the nations according to the command of God, instead of staying at home as a prominent mark to bring cruel enemies on their brethren. Let the filth of Zion be cleansed and her garments of peace put on. Let neither gun nor sword be lifted in defiance, nor rest be taken upon arm of flesh, and the city of our God shall be saved and the Temple of his holiness be unpolluted by the hand of the Gentile.

Causeless the curse has not come, and causeless it shall not fall.—They that ask justice let them do it. They that cry out against mobs let them abstain from violence. Those who hate persecution let them regard the rights of others. They that preach God and the gospel let them remember the law and forget not the order which he has revealed, and their own mouths have proclaimed. Let them not buffet others for changing the ordinances and breaking the everlasting covenant, unless they themselves will abide the word of God.

Voree, December 25th, 1845. JAMES J. STRANG.

THE TRUE SHEPHERD TO THE SAINTS EMIGRATING FROM GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND TO AMERICA—GREETING:—

God, who in days of old spoke on divers occasions and in many ways to the house of Israel by the prophets, and afterwards to all the earth by his son, whom he made ruler over all things, last of all in these days restored the gospel to the earth by the ministry of angels, and the priesthood which he conferred on the prophet Joseph by their hands; and has thereby established a church by an everlasting and an unchanging order; conferring upon that priesthood the keys of the kingdom of God, and of the rest which he has reserved to the saints, and of everlasting righteousness.

Apostles, High Priests and Elders have received from the highest authority of this priesthood mission and commandments to visit you, and in the name of the God of all the earth to preach the gospel unto you; and have, in virtue of the jurisdiction thus obtained, taught you the law of the gospel, and inducted you into the household of faith. From the first proclamation of the gospel in Great Britain you were taught that God spoke now, as in days of old, by the mouth of prophets; and that a priesthood elected and chosen by KINGS, MAGISTRATES OR PEOPLE was unauthorized, and its administrations would not avail to salvation. Truly have they cried out to you that all your administrations by a man-made priesthood, whether they be Catholics, Episcopalians or Protestants, were vain, and but a mockery of God's ordinances. And that unless men are truly called by revelation of God and set apart to the ministry by the hands of those who were thus called and set apart, they cannot act as ministers and priests of the true church.

I rejoice that so many of you have received these truths, and laid hold on salvation. And it would be serious cause of grief, if, after all the buffetings and persecutions you have endured for receiving the faith, and the perils you have passed through in coming to this country, you should still throw yourselves under the authority of a mere MAN-MADE priesthood, and trust your salvation to the administrations of men merely elected by the people. Joseph, our martyred prophet, became a prophet and the first presiding elder of the church of God by revelation of God and the ordination of angels.—(D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2. sec. l. p. 3.) And what authority and ceremonies it took to make him a prophet and the first and presiding elder, the same authority and ceremonies it would also take to confer the same office and priesthood on any one to stand in his place.

As much has been said on this subject, and little to the purpose, I beg leave to call to your minds particularly the principles involved in the ordination of a prophet to stand at the head of a dispensation. When Moses received the dispensation of Israel, Jethro, and probably many others, were priests of the true God. But as Moses was called to a higher authority than any of them possessed, the Lord himself spoke to Moses to give him the authority; and though we are not expressly told that he was ordained by the hand of angels, yet we are plainly told that the angel of the Lord appeared to him, and are left to infer that he appeared for some rational purpose. (Ex. iii. 2.)

When Christ received the dispensation of the gospel, though he found John the Baptist, a priest after the order of Aaron, yet he could not receive the priesthood from him, but had a dispensation and a higher priesthood immediately from God, who made him a high priest by his oath. For when John baptized him, the voice of God was heard, saying, "This is my Son, hear ye him;" and a messenger from heaven descended on his head and designated him as the Messiah. So likewise when the dispensation of the fullness of times was committed to Joseph, God not only spoke to him and gave him commandments by his voice, and sent also his angels to ordain him to the priesthood which they also had before held. (D. & C. sec. l. p. 2, 3.)

When Moses failed to make Israel a nation of priests unto God, and brought them in under the law of curse, making one tribe only priests to all the rest, and God saw fit to take away the most holy priesthood, Moses, by revelation of God, ordained Joshua to an inferior species of priesthood. So Christ, when he was rejected as the Messiah, the king of the Jews, and the offer of deliverance to Israel was withdrawn, conferred on Peter the keys of the dispensation, with the power of binding and loosing both on earth and in heaven, and of remitting and retaining sins. In each of these cases the authority conferred was less than that of him who conferred it. Two persons could not stand at the same time holding the authority which God conferred on Moses. Consequently Moses could not ordain any one to it. But he put part of his honor on Joshua.—Two persons could not stand at the same time having the authority of Christ, as king of Israel and head of the gospel dispensation.—Consequently Christ did not ordain Peter to the same authority which he held, but to a less. (John xxi. 15, 16 17.)

Likewise two persons cannot stand at the head of the dispensation of the fullness of times holding the keys of mysteries revelations and commandments, and consequently Joseph could not in any way ordain or bring any one into his authority; but the act of God is necessary to consummate such priesthood. In other words it requires the same power and the same ordinances to confer that priesthood on the successor of Joseph as it required to confer it on Joseph. And as Joseph was called by revelation and ordained by angels, so must his successor be. (D. & C. sec. v. p. 6. sec. xi. p. 4. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2. sec. l. p. 2, 3. sec. li. p. 2.) And as Joseph was established as the Prophet, Seer and Revelator, it was necessary that the revelation appointing his successor should come through him; because the church are forbidden to receive revelations and commandments from others. And as this is established as a positive law, no instances are necessary to justify it; but if any were wanting they might be found in the case of Samuel and Elisha.—Samuel succeeded Eli who fell by wickedness, and the Lord revealed to Eli and then to Samuel that Samuel should stand as prophet in his stead. (1 Samuel iii.) Elisha succeeded Elijah as a prophet. Elijah abode faithful to God in all things, but many years before he was translated God had, through him, chosen Elisha to be his successor. (1 Kings xix. 16.) Yet after he was translated to the chariot of the Lord, and ceased to be of the earth, he conferred that priesthood on Elisha, which he alone held while he ministered among men. (2 Kings ii. 9 to 15.)

Joseph, if he had abided in God in all things, would have stood on the earth and at the head of the dispensation at the coming of Christ. When Christ sent forth the fullness of the gospel by him it was with promise that if Joseph abided in him, the keys of mysteries and revelations (which pertain to earth and not to heaven) should not be taken from him till Christ came. In February, 1831, a new promise was made that if Joseph did not stand, whether taken away or being rejected, he should appoint another in his stead; but with this distinction: that if his priesthood was taken from him he should only have power to appoint another; but if God took him (which he did June 27th, 1844) there was no limit or cutting short of his priesthood while he remained. In 1833, as Joseph had not abided in Christ perfectly, but had committed sin, God said he should give the oracles to another, to the end that they might remain in the church as before. But as Joseph had repented of his sins God also accepted his offering, and sealed him up to everlasting life by promising him the keys of the kingdom in this world and the world to come. (D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 1, 2.) This promise was sure and unconditional; but it was less than the former promise, which was of life everlasting without seeing death. For if he held the keys of mysteries and revelations until Christ came, he would at the head of all the saints ascend on high to dwell with him.

So likewise no one can be elected to the place which Joseph held, for that would both be contrary to first principles, which require as much authority to place any other in that priesthood as it took to confer it on Joseph, but also contrary to the law which says his gift shall not be conferred on any other except it be through him, (Joseph.) But even conceding that one might be elected to stand as First President and prophet, the question returns, by whom shall he be ordained? Not by Apostles, High Priests or Elders, for all are below him in priesthood, and none can confer higher authority than he possesses. None can ordain to a higher priesthood than he holds. Elders cannot confer the high priesthood, and apostles cannot make prophets with the keys of the dispensation; because though the priesthood is of the same order it is higher.

The question returns, who can ordain? God has answered it.—In Feb., 1831, God said "he that is ordained of me (God) shall come in at the gate, (be appointed by revelation, for that is the gate or lawful place of coming in,) and BE ORDAINED AS I HAVE TOLD YOU (Joseph) BEFORE." (D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2.) So if we can learn what God told Joseph before on this subject the answer is perfect. In Sept., 1830, five months before, and only five months after the organization of the church, God said: "I have sent unto you Peter, James and John, (angels,) BY WHOM I HAVE ORDAINED YOU," &c. (D. & C. sec. l. p. 3.) Most clear and true therefore is it that a prophet of this dispensation cannot be either elected or ordained of man, but must be chosen by revelation and ordained by angels.

Against this rule those who wish to pervert the word of God sometimes quote the law concerning the three presiding high priests. (D. & C. sec. iii. p. 11.) It will be observed, however, that that is not a revelation, but only a law of the church, and cannot change the interpretation of a revelation. 2d. That those three are not the Presidents of the church, but the Presidents of the high priests.—For we are told expressly that their necessity grows not out of the organization of the church, but of the priesthood. (D. & C. sec. iii. p. 1, 11.) Whereas the Presidency of the church existed of necessity, before the priesthood was organized at all. 3d. That they are inferior to the First Presidency in power, for they are only equal with the twelve, either seventy or a high council of a stake, all of which councils and quorums are inferior to the First Presidency and subject to it. 4th. These three presiding high priests are chosen by the body and ordained by the church. Whereas we have shown both by the letter of the law and the force of fundamental principles that the First Presidency cannot be thus chosen and ordained. To say that this law relates to the First Presidency is equivalent to saying that all the revelations concerning the appointment, ordination and power of the prophet are false.

It should not be forgotten that for nearly four years past the church has suffered continual perils, and such calamities as never before fell on it. If God has all that time left them without a prophet, there is no hope that he will give them one. And if the power existed in the church to make one, (which I have shown does not,) it was the last degree of folly not to exercise it. Most truly do I say to you that the only reason why usurpers and apostates are now promising you to organize the church according to the ORIGINAL PATTERN with a First Presidency is because so many have appealed to the law and said, "a church without a prophet is not the church for me." Having no God-made prophet, they are about to offer you one made by themselves. Since you have rejected man-made parsons, bishops and arch-bishops, will you accept a man-made prophet?

Brethren, in this appeal to you I have spoken upon principles and not men. Those who say they are apostles but are not have gone beforehand to you with terrible accusations against me. I shall not retaliate on them by so much as naming their real errors. If they have the authority to lead the church, in spite of all their faults, their authority is good till regularly taken away. On the other hand, if I have not the authority, no matter what the sanctity of my life, I have no right to assume it till it is regularly conferred. I am ready to test these matters by the word of God. Fully persuaded that no man can do me any real or lasting injury but myself, I am content to leave both accusation and defense to others.

As your true Shepherd I invite you to the fold and refuge God has prepared for you. Both at Voree and Beaver Island God has provided for the saints peace, abundance and safety. The saints are gathering in a church with a God-made prophet, and an authorized priesthood, and keeping the law of God, having all their goods and possessions common and wanting nothing. We do not claim authority in virtue of numbers. We have never yet subscribed to the doctrine that the voice of the people is the voice of God, or that men are made prophets by the will of man. We know very well that Christ was rejected by the voice of the people. Truly did he say to the Israel of his day, ye are the children of those that slew the prophets. Moreover the prophet Joseph has given us a full test of those who say they are apostles and are not. Though we will not accuse them, yet we believe the word of God by his prophet will stand, and by that they must fall.

After the saints had gathered to Nauvoo God gave them the following promise:—

D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 13. "If ye labor with all your mights, I will consecrate that spot, that it shall be made holy; and if my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place. But if they will not hearken to my voice, nor unto the voice of these men whom I have appointed, they shall not be blest, because they pollute mine holy grounds, and mine holy ordinances, and charters, and my holy words, which I give unto them.

14. "And it shall come to pass, that if you build a house unto my name, and do not do the things that I say, I will not perform the oath which I make unto you, neither fulfill the promises which ye expect at my hands, saith the Lord; for instead of blessings, ye, by your own works, bring cursings, wrath, indignation, and judgments, upon your own heads, by your follies, and by all your abominations, which you practice before me, saith the Lord."

That the saints in Nauvoo obeyed faithfully the words of Brigham Young and his associates from the death of Joseph till their final expulsion from that place, and the laws which they gave as the law of God, they themselves have abundantly proved. Heber C. Kimball and others of the twelve at the April Conference, 1845, and at other times, said they were the most obedient people that ever existed. Why were they removed out of their place? Was it because the arm of God is shortened that he connot save? or was it because they obeyed the voice of men whom God did NOT appoint to be their leaders? The promise is express, that if they will obey they shall not be removed, and if they will not obey they shall be cursed. They were removed and bitterly have they been cursed, for they are plundered, exiled, scattered, and vast numbers of them have perished of exposure and want. The only conclusion to which any one can arrive, who believes in Joseph, is that they have not followed the leaders whom God appointed, but only such as are appointed by men.

Brethren, will you run the same race? Will you drag the same curses on your heads which have fallen so heavily on them? Will you expose not only yourselves but wives and children to all the perils of wicked men in a waste, desolate wilderness a thousand miles from the utmost verge of civilization, for the sake of having your trust in the arm of flesh, or in a man-made priesthood, departing from the Lord and dwelling in the heath of the desert, and inhabiting the parched places of the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited? (Jer. xvii. 5, 6.) Rather see good, for it has come, and flee from the evil while there is refuge.

Voree, May 1st, 1848. JAMES J. STRANG.

REVELATION GIVEN SEPTEMBER, 1845.

The Angel of the Lord came unto me James, on the first day of September, in the year eighteen hundred and forty-five, and the light shined about him above the brightness of the sun, and he shewed unto me the plates of the sealed record and he gave into my hands the Urim and Thummim. And out of the light came the voice of the Lord saying: My Servant James, in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thee, because I have tried thee and found thee faithful. Behold my servant James I am about to bless thee with a great blessing which shall be to those who love me an immutable testimony; to those who know me not a stumbling block; but to those who have known me and have turned their hearts from me a rock of offence. Yea let them beware, for shame and destruction walk in their tracks and their time abideth, but not long.

A work shall come forth and the secrets of the past shalt thou reveal. Yea by little and little shalt thou reveal it, according to the ability and faithfulness of my church and of my servant whom I have placed above them. Behold the record which was sealed from my servant Joseph. Unto thee it is reserved. Take heed that thou count it not a light thing nor exalt thyself lest thou be stricken, for by myself I swear that as thou servest me faithfully and comest not short, thou shalt unlock the mysteries thereof which I have kept hid from the world. Yea as my servants serve me, so shalt thou translate unto them.

But in their weakness I have not forgotten them. Go to the place which the Angel of the presence shall show thee and there shalt thou dig for the record of my people in whose possession thou dwellest. Take with thee faithful witnesses, for in evil will the unfaithful speak of thee, but the faithful and true shall know that they are liars and shall not stumble for their words.

Speak thou unto the Elders of my church and say unto them hear my voice and hearken to my words for they are true and faithful.—Testify, testify unto all the saints. Testify, testify in all the world. He that rejecteth you him will I reject in the day that I come in my kingdom. Testify, testify unto him who has received my word and turned away. Let him now return unto me and obey and serve his God lest he be smitten with a curse and his children curse him and his name be blotted out of the Book of Life.

Yea those to whom I have revealed myself, let them hearken unto me now lest they be cast off in the day of my indignation, lest the consuming fire of the day of trial burn them up. Yea, lest the second death make them his prey, and they be cast into the Lake that burns with fire and brimstone.

Rejoice, ye holy for the day of your deliverance is near and the time of your exaltation is at hand. Faithful and true are my words dividing the marrow from the bones and truth from rottenness.—He that rejecteth them will I reject when I come in my Kingdom.—And while I was yet in the Spirit the Angel of the Lord took me away to the hill in the East of Walworth against White River in Voree, and there he shewed unto me the record buried under an oak tree as large as the body of a large man, it was inclosed in an earthen casement and buried in the ground as deep as to a man's waist, and I beheld it as a man can see a light stone in clear water, for I saw it by Urim and Thummim, and I returned the Urim and Thummim to the Angel of the Lord and he departed out of sight.

TESTIMONY OF FOUR WITNESSES.

On the thirteenth day of September, 1845, we, Aaron Smith, Jirah B. Wheelan, James M. Van Nostrand and Edward Whitcomb, assembled at the call of James J. Strang, who is by us and many others approved as a Prophet and Seer of God. He proceeded to inform us that it had been revealed to him in a vision that an account of an ancient people was buried in a hill south of White river bridge near the east line of Walworth county, and leading us to an oak tree about one foot in diameter told us that we should find it inclosed in a case of rude earthen ware under that tree at the depth of about three feet; requested us to dig it up, and charged us to so examine the ground that we should know we were not imposed upon, and that it had not been buried there since the tree grew. The tree was surrounded by a sward of deeply rooted grass, such as is usually found in the openings, and upon the most critical examination we could not discover any indication that it had ever been cut through or disturbed.

We then dug up the tree and continued to dig to the depth of about three feet, where we found a case of slightly baked clay containing three plates of brass. On one side of one is a landscape view of the south end of Gardner's prairie and the range of hills where they were dug. On another is a man with a crown on his head and a sceptre in his hand, above is an eye before an upright line, below the sun and moon surrounded with twelve stars, at the bottom are twelve large stars from three of which pillars arise, and closely interspersed with them are seventy very small stars. The other four sides are very closely covered with what appear to be alphabetic characters, but in a language of which we have no knowledge.

The case was found imbedded in indurated clay so closely fitting it that it broke in taking out, and the earth below the soil was so hard as to be dug with difficulty even with a pickaxe. Over the case was found a flat stone about one foot wide each way and three inches thick, which appeared to have undergone the action of fire, and fell in pieces after a few minutes exposure to the air. The digging extended in the clay about eighteen inches, there being two kinds of earth of different color and appearance above it.

We examined as we dug all the way with the utmost care, and we say, with utmost confidence, that no part of the earth through which we dug exhibited any sign or indication that it had been moved or disturbed at any time previous. The roots of the tree stuck down on every side very closely extending below the case, and closely interwoven with roots from other trees. None of them had been broken or cut away. No clay is found in the country like that of which the case is made.

In fine, we found an alphabetic and pictorial record, carefully cased up, buried deep in the earth, covered with a flat stone, with an oak tree one foot in diameter growing over it, with every evidence that the sense can give that it has lain there as long as that tree has been growing. Strang took no part in the digging, but kept entirely away from before the first blow was struck till after the plates were taken out of the case; and the sole inducement to our digging was our faith in his statement as a prophet of the Lord that a record would thus and there be found.

AARON SMITH,
JIRA B. WHEELAN,
J. M. VAN NOSTRAND,
EDWARD WHITCOMB.

For the Gospel Herald

BROTHER J. J. STRANG:—Permit me, through the Herald, to make a few remarks on the following: "But in the last days it shall come to pass that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it." (Micah iv. 1. Isa. ii. 2.) The terms mount, mountain, mountains and hills are evidently used by the prophets figuratively signifying nation or nations, kingdom or kingdoms, and lesser or minor governments. (Jer. xxxii. 24. Isa. xxix. 3.) The Chaldea nation is called a mount.—(Obadiah 8 to 21.) The people or descendants of Esau are called a mount, distinguishing them from the nation or mountain of Israel, God's covenant people. There are scores of texts in the prophets to show the truth of our position, but the following may suffice for the present:—

Isaiah lv. 12. "For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands."

Ezekiel vi. 2. "Son of man, set thy face toward the mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them,

3. And say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains and to the hills, to the rivers, and to the valleys, Behold, I, even I, will bring a sword upon you, and I will destroy your high places."

Isaiah xli. 15. "Behold, I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth: thou shalt thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and shalt make the hills as chaff."

The day or age in which we live is "big with events." We look for the fulfillment of the above prediction, and very many of the church have their eyes turned towards the Rocky Mountains as the place of its fulfillment. Why is this the case? Because a large body of the church have emigrated in that direction, teaching as a fact that mountain and mountains in the above passage mean literal elevations of land. The idea has been sown broadcast in the church, and the Twelve in the western camp are reaping the benefit of it in the shape of continual accessions to their numbers. O, my brethren in the church, pause and ponder well the paths of your feet before you go in the wake of the Twelve. I have felt deeply interested on the subject, so have all the brethren in the States who love the cause of truth and feel an interest in Zion.

In times past we have loved the Twelve; we esteemed them highly for their works' sake, but we are not bound to follow them only as they follow the law of Christ. They have led the church on from camp to camp, telling them soon we will organize the church upon celestial law: and now have they issued a manifesto to the world to come up and help them to build a house to the Lord, to the end that Zion may be established. They say "the kingdom of God consists in correct principles, and it mattereth not what a man's religious faith is." So all are invited to come. For what? What is going to be done there? "And WE now having it in contemplation soon to re-organize the church according to the original pattern, with a First Presidency and Patriarch." Now let consistency blush. The Twelve seek a location, and then make a President. Cardinals may make Popes, but I much scruple the Twelve's being able to make a First Presidency. Has the church wandered from the death of Joseph until now without a President and without an organization, when the Twelve had power to locate a stake and re-organize the church with a First Presidency? Oh! it has taken all this time to seek the location. Now they have found it, they will re-organize the church with a First President and Patriarch.

The stream can now rise higher than its fountain. An effect can be produced without a cause. A superior power be created by an inferior, subject to it. Brethren, do not let us deceive ourselves.—The Twelve have not power to even organize a stake unless under the direction of the First Presidency, to which they are subject as a traveling high council. They have no power to dedicate a stake or designate one for the gathering. The stone of the mountain is not in hands. God has reserved to himself to set apart unto the First Presidency, and reserved unto the First Presidency the power of setting apart, consecrating and dedicating the places of gathering or stakes of Zion. In a letter in my possession, written from Far West Sept. 17th, 1838, by the diction of the prophet Joseph, occurs the following: "Other stakes have been appointed, but not by a committee appointed as you supposed; for the Lord has said that no stake shall be considered a stake of Zion unless appointed, dedicated and set apart by the First Presidency." Now how will the Twelve look establishing stakes, organizing the church and making Presidents on the top of the Rocky Mountains among the perpetual snows. Their glory is in their shame; they were and are not.—They are shorn of their power. They are rejected of God, and reprobates concerning the faith, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. God never varies from what he hath said. He redeemed this land by the shedding of blood; he inspired men with wisdom to frame our constitution; he commands the church to obey the constitutional laws of the land; he hath said, he that keepeth my laws hath no need to break the laws of the land.

God hath exalted this mountain (government) above all other mountains (governments) and hills, (lesser powers,) and under our admirable constitution the mountain (government) of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, (the height and exaltation of governments,) and exalted above the hills, and people shall flow unto it. We might as well believe the church would be established on the Allegany, Cattskill or Green Mountains, as the Rocky Mountains or any of their spurs. The word mountain in the text evidently means government, and is used as a figure, as much so as the stone and mountain of Nebuchadnezzar's dream. Jeremiah says: "Truly in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains; truly in the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel;" (Jer. iii. 23;) for "he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths, for out of Zion shall go forth the law." I will also quote another place where mountain signifies government. (Rev. xvii. 9.) "The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth, and there are seven kings; five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come."

Here mountain cannot be understood as literal elevations of land; the beast like those mentioned in Daniel represents a great nation, and its heads or mountains, governments under which the nation has existed. Rome, the fourth great power of the earth, existed in the days of John, but five distinct forms of its government had passed away. 1st. The Regal government which descended from Romulus its founder, and continued some 428 years. The Dictatorship, which continued some 88 years. The Praetors ruled 300 years.—The Consuls 280 years. The Triumvirate some considerable time. And the Imperial government was in existence under the Cæsars at the time the revelations were written; then five heads, kings or mountains (governments) had passed away, one existed and the other had not come.

Brethren, the stone will become a great mountain and fill the whole earth. It is not in hands. When God took Joseph he consecrated James; if not who has he consecrated, and whom has Joseph appointed as his successor? God has not called us to leave this nation. He will have his church organized in the midst of this government which he has inspired the constitution of, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood; commanding the church to keep his laws, and break not the laws of the land.

STEPHEN POST.

☞ We have several communications on hand which will appear soon.

Just published at this office, "The Diamond," a valuable work on the First Presidency and the calling of Prophets—20 pages—price $3,00 per hundred, 5 cents for a single copy.

The Diamond cuts all things, and is destructive of the pretensions of all false prophets.

The first part of the Catholic Discussion is out—56 pages—price $1,00 per dozen, 13 cents single copies.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 8.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1848. [WHOLE No. 72.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

CHRISTIAN INFIDELITY—PARKERISM.

The following article we take from the Advent Herald, an able Millerite paper published at Boston. The least we can say of it is, that Parkerism or Atheism (for we know no difference) is the inevitable result of Protestantism any way you can fix it.

What Parker says of Protestant preachers is doubtless true; that in the pulpit they treat the Bible as all inspiration and the word of God, and in their studios hold it precisely as he does; simply on a par with the works of heathen writers. The whole Protestant system is based on this: that such gifts and powers as did exist in the times when the Bible was written do not exist now, and every reasoning man will say, if not now, never. Ancient philosophers asserted wrong things in natural philosophy, which time has proved false; that is they are not found to exist now.—Consequently no man believes they ever did. The assertions of the past are judged by the experience of the present. Nothing can prevent religion being also tried by this test. As religious teachers chose to put the claims of their faith upon the history of ages long past, and pretend that faith does not produce any such effects as formerly, every philosopher naturally concludes that the history of its effects in spiritual gifts and miracles is fabulous.

We give the Millerites credit for coming nearer the ancient faith than any other Protestant church. But rejecting, as they do, one half of the prophecies of scripture, the whole doctrine of the priesthood and the very fundamental principles of the gospel, they too are holding the flood gates of infidelity wide open to all men of reason. Until they can come up to the standard, and allow their faith to be tried on its present results, infidelity will prevail over them. This general growth of infidelity prevails in all Protestant countries.—So much has it taken root in Europe that throughout Germany a majority of the pastors are infidel; and the chair of theology in the university of Geneva, formerly filled by John Calvin, is now filled by a celebrated infidel writer. Even in this country many preachers do not believe in the literal existence of the devil, but hold him merely as a hyperbolical personification of evil. In a few years they will in like manner deny the literal existence of God, and hold him merely as a fabulous personification of good. [ED.

There is a kind of religion preached in Boston, by Theodore Parker, to crowded audiences, which should cause every believer in revelation to shudder. It is more dangerous than Atheism; for Atheism avows its opposition to God; but Parkerism professes to walk in obedience to the teachings of christianity.

Parkerism is the natural and unavoidable result of that looseness of christian doctrine which began to prevail extensively in this neighborhood about the commencement of the present century.—There is no surer development of an anti-christian state of heart than that manifested in opposition to the character and claims of the Savior of sinners. Satan regards with peculiar hatred the Captain of our salvation, knowing that by Him his head will be bruised.—It has therefore ever been his aim to detract from the high honor and exalted dignity of Him who left the glory of the Father and came down into this world to suffer and die for the sins of men, so that God might be just, and justify all who would come to Him through Christ. The idea of atonement is unpalatable to the carnal heart. It is foolishness to the self-righteous, and a stumbling-block to those who would save themselves. Therefore we find men continually rising up who are not afraid to wage war against the Son of God—who deny that Christ was the Emanuel sent from God to be God with us—who deny that the Word was in the beginning with God, was God, was made flesh, and dwelt with us, so that we were witnesses of his glory, as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. Such men hesitate not to refuse Him that homage and obedience which he claims as his due; and when his claims are advocated, and his attributes vindicated, they find a spirit of hatred and opposition arising in their hearts towards Him who will be their final Judge, from whose decisions there is no appeal.

Such opposition to Christ has been a weed of rapid growth in this portion of the field: the result of the tares sown while men slept.—It first manifested itself in a loose interpretation of Scripture—self-styled "liberal opinions." It was claimed that christians should have no profession of faith—that an assent to the Bible should be alone required as a test of christian fellowship,—without inquiring whether the assenter put a construction on the Scriptures subversive of their teachings. In addition to this loose bond of union, they demanded that fellowship should be extended towards those who did not believe in Christ—in the light the Scriptures present him. Under this loose self-styled liberal course, the faith of those who have been trained under it has gradually deteriorated, until the largest Protestant congregation in this city sit under the teachings of Mr. Parker—a sad illustration of the danger of the first divergence from the faith once delivered to the saints.

Some may inquire, What are the teachings of Mr. Parker?—that his case should be instanced as illustrative of the danger of Socinian tendencies. We cannot answer this question better than by quotations from a late work from his pen, entitled "A Discourse of Matters pertaining to Religion." Published by Little & Brown.

He represents Jacob, in that solemn covenant transaction at Bethel, Gen. xxviii. 10, 20, as "driving a trade with Elohim. The God receives a human service, as an adequate return for his own divine service. The promise of each is for value received." He says:—

"We are never to forget that there is no monopoly of religion, by any nation or age. Religion is one and the same. He that worships truly, by whatever form, worships the only God. And he hears the prayer, whether called Bramha, Jehovah, Pan, or Lord, or called by no name at all. Each people has its prophets and its saints; and many a swarthy Indian, who bowed down to wood and stone; many a grim-faced Calmuck, who worshipped the great god of storms; many a Grecian peasant, who did homage to Phœbus Apollo; yes, many a savage, his hands smeared all over with human sacrifice, shall come from the east, and the west, and sit down in the kingdom of God, with Moses and Zoraster, with Socrates and Jesus,—while men who called daily on the only living God, who paid their tribute, and bowed at the name of Christ, shall be cast out because they did no more." Again:—

"All nature is but an exhibition of God to the senses. The sun is but a sparkle of his splendor. Endless and without beginning flows forth the stream of divine influence, that encircles and possesses the all of things." "The material world with its objects sublimely great, or meanly little; its atoms of dust, its orbs of fire, the rock that stands by the sea shore, and the water that wears it away; the worm which we trample under foot; the streets of constellations that gleam perennial over head; the aspiring palm tree, fixed to one spot, and the lions that are sent out free;—these incarnate and make visible all of God that their natures will admit. If man were not spiritual, and could yet conceive of the aggregate of visible things, he

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 8.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY, MAY 11, 1848. [WHOLE No. 72.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

CHRISTIAN INFIDELITY—PARKERISM.

The following article we take from the Advent Herald, an able Millerite paper published at Boston. The least we can say of it is, that Parkerism or Atheism (for we know no difference) is the inevitable result of Protestantism any way you can fix it.

What Parker says of Protestant preachers is doubtless true; that in the pulpit they treat the Bible as all inspiration and the word of God, and in their studios hold it precisely as he does; simply on a par with the works of heathen writers. The whole Protestant system is based on this: that such gifts and powers as did exist in the times when the Bible was written do not exist now, and every reasoning man will say, if not now, never. Ancient philosophers asserted wrong things in natural philosophy, which time has proved false; that is they are not found to exist now.—Consequently no man believes they ever did. The assertions of the past are judged by the experience of the present. Nothing can prevent religion being also tried by this test. As religious teachers chose to put the claims of their faith upon the history of ages long past, and pretend that faith does not produce any such effects as formerly, every philosopher naturally concludes that the history of its effects in spiritual gifts and miracles is fabulous.

We give the Millerites credit for coming nearer the ancient faith than any other Protestant church. But rejecting, as they do, one half of the prophecies of scripture, the whole doctrine of the priesthood and the very fundamental principles of the gospel, they too are holding the flood gates of infidelity wide open to all men of reason. Until they can come up to the standard, and allow their faith to be tried on its present results, infidelity will prevail over them. This general growth of infidelity prevails in all Protestant countries.—So much has it taken root in Europe that throughout Germany a majority of the pastors are infidel; and the chair of theology in the university of Geneva, formerly filled by John Calvin, is now filled by a celebrated infidel writer. Even in this country many preachers do not believe in the literal existence of the devil, but hold him merely as a hyperbolical personification of evil. In a few years they will in like manner deny the literal existence of God, and hold him merely as a fabulous personification of good. [ED.

There is a kind of religion preached in Boston, by Theodore Parker, to crowded audiences, which should cause every believer in revelation to shudder. It is more dangerous than Atheism; for Atheism avows its opposition to God; but Parkerism professes to walk in obedience to the teachings of christianity.

Parkerism is the natural and unavoidable result of that looseness of christian doctrine which began to prevail extensively in this neighborhood about the commencement of the present century.—There is no surer development of an anti-christian state of heart than that manifested in opposition to the character and claims of the Savior of sinners. Satan regards with peculiar hatred the Captain of our salvation, knowing that by Him his head will be bruised.—It has therefore ever been his aim to detract from the high honor and exalted dignity of Him who left the glory of the Father and came down into this world to suffer and die for the sins of men, so that God might be just, and justify all who would come to Him through Christ. The idea of atonement is unpalatable to the carnal heart. It is foolishness to the self-righteous, and a stumbling-block to those who would save themselves. Therefore we find men continually rising up who are not afraid to wage war against the Son of God—who deny that Christ was the Emanuel sent from God to be God with us—who deny that the Word was in the beginning with God, was God, was made flesh, and dwelt with us, so that we were witnesses of his glory, as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth. Such men hesitate not to refuse Him that homage and obedience which he claims as his due; and when his claims are advocated, and his attributes vindicated, they find a spirit of hatred and opposition arising in their hearts towards Him who will be their final Judge, from whose decisions there is no appeal.

Such opposition to Christ has been a weed of rapid growth in this portion of the field: the result of the tares sown while men slept.—It first manifested itself in a loose interpretation of Scripture—self-styled "liberal opinions." It was claimed that christians should have no profession of faith—that an assent to the Bible should be alone required as a test of christian fellowship,—without inquiring whether the assenter put a construction on the Scriptures subversive of their teachings. In addition to this loose bond of union, they demanded that fellowship should be extended towards those who did not believe in Christ—in the light the Scriptures present him. Under this loose self-styled liberal course, the faith of those who have been trained under it has gradually deteriorated, until the largest Protestant congregation in this city sit under the teachings of Mr. Parker,—a sad illustration of the danger of the first divergence from the faith once delivered to the saints.

Some may inquire, What are the teachings of Mr. Parker?—that his case should be instanced as illustrative of the danger of Socinian tendencies. We cannot answer this question better than by quotations from a late work from his pen, entitled "A Discourse of Matters pertaining to Religion." Published by Little & Brown.

He represents Jacob, in that solemn covenant transaction at Bethel, Gen. xxviii. 10, 20, as "driving a trade with Elohim. The God receives a human service, as an adequate return for his own divine service. The promise of each is for value received." He says:—

"We are never to forget that there is no monopoly of religion, by any nation or age. Religion is one and the same. He that worships truly, by whatever form, worships the only God. And he hears the prayer, whether called Bramha, Jehovah, Pan, or Lord, or called by no name at all. Each people has its prophets and its saints; and many a swarthy Indian, who bowed down to wood and stone; many a grim-faced Calmuck, who worshipped the great god of storms; many a Grecian peasant, who did homage to Phœbus Apollo; yes, many a savage, his hands smeared all over with human sacrifice, shall come from the east, and the west, and sit down in the kingdom of God, with Moses and Zoraster, with Socrates and Jesus,—while men who called daily on the only living God, who paid their tribute, and bowed at the name of Christ, shall be cast out because they did no more." Again:—

"All nature is but an exhibition of God to the senses. The sun is but a sparkle of his splendor. Endless and without beginning flows forth the stream of divine influence, that encircles and possesses the all of things." "The material world with its objects sublimely great, or meanly little; its atoms of dust, its orbs of fire, the rock that stands by the sea shore, and the water that wears it away; the worm which we trample under foot; the streets of constellations that gleam perennial over head; the aspiring palm tree, fixed to one spot, and the lions that are sent out free;—these incarnate and make visible all of God that their natures will admit. If man were not spiritual, and could yet conceive of the aggregate of visible things, he might call it God; for he could go no farther."

Speaking of prayer, he says:—

"For all theological purposes, God might have been buried, after the ascension of Jesus. We dare not approach him face to face. We whine and whimper in our brother's name, (in the name of Christ,) as if we could only appear before the Omnipresent by attorney."

Again, speaking of that form of christianity which represents the divine being as a sovereign, our author says:—

"Its God is diabolical. It puts an intercessor between God and man, and relies on the advocate. Cannot the infinite love his frail children without teasing? Needs he a chancellor to advise him to use forgiveness and mercy? Can men approach the every-where-present only by attorney, as a beggar comes to a Turkish king?—Away with such folly!" Of inspiration, he says:—

"Inspiration, like God's omnipresence, is not limited to the few writers claimed by the Jews, Christians, or Mohammedans, but is co-extensive with the race." "Minos and Moses were inspired to make laws; David to pour out his soul in pious strains, deep and sweet as an angel's psaltry; Pindar to celebrate virtuous deeds in high heroic song; John the Baptist to denounce sin; Gerson, and Luther, and Boemhe, and Fenelon, and Fox, to do each his peculiar work, and stir the world's heart deep, very deep. Plato, and Newton, Milton, and Isaiah, Leibnitz, and Paul, Mozart, Raphael, Phidias, Praxiteles, and Orpheus, receive into their various forms the one spirit from God most high. It appears in action, not less than speech. It inspires Dorcas to make coats and garments for the poor, no less than Paul to preach the gospel."

Of the Bible, he says:—

"The legendary and mythological writings of the Hebrews have no more authority in the premises than the similar narratives of the Phœnicians, the Persians, and Chinese."

He speaks of Abraham's attempt to sacrifice his son, not as an act of faith and obedience, but as a "means to coax and wheedle the Deity, and bribe the All-Powerful"—as "rebellion against conscience, reason, and affection, and treason against God."

The account of "the creation of the woman; the story of the garden, and the temptation and fall of man; the appearances of God in human shape, eating and drinking with his favorite, and making covenants; the story of the flood and of the ark; the miraculous birth of Isaac; the promise to the patriarchs; the great age of mankind; the tower of Babel, the confusion of tongues; the sacrifice of Isaac, the history of Joseph, and of Moses; the ten plagues, miraculously sent; the wonderful passage of the Red Sea; the support of the Hebrews in the wilderness on manna; the miraculous supply of food, water, and clothing; and the deliverance of the law at Mount Sinai," he insists, are fictitious. They "are at variance with facts." Of the "early prophets," as he calls them, he says:

"No one knows the date or the author of any one of these books. They all contain historical matter of a doubtful character: such as the miraculous passage of the Jordan; the destruction of Jericho; the standing still of the sun and moon, at the command of Joshua; the story of Samson; the destruction of the Benjaminites; the birth and calling of Samuel; the wonders wrought by the ark; the story of Saul, David, and Goliah; of the miraculous pestilence, of Solomon, Elijah, Elisha, and others."

He denies that "any one of the prophets ever uttered a distinct, definite, and unambiguous prediction of any future event that has since taken place, which a man, without a miracle, could not equally well predict."

He says "the book of Daniel is a perfect unique in the Old Testament. It contains accounts of surprising miracles, dreams, visions; men cast into a den of lions and a furnace of fire, and escaping unhurt; a man transformed to a beast, and eating grass like an ox for some years, and then restored to human shape; a miraculous and spectral hand writing on the palace wall; grotesque fancies, that remind us of the Arabian Nights and the Talmud."

Of the Evangelists, he says:—

"They relate much from hearsay; they mingle their own personal prejudices in their work; their testimony was not reduced to writing, so far as we know, till long after the event; we see they were often mistaken, and did not understand the words of their teacher; they contradict one another, and even themselves; they mingle with their story puerile notions and tales, which it is charitable to call absurd. Such testimony could not be received in a court of justice, where only a few dollars were at stake, without great caution." Again:—

"The Evangelists differ widely from the Apostles; the Synoptics (i. e., Matthew, Mark, and Luke) give us, in Jesus, a very different being from the Christ whom John describes; and all four make such contradictory statements, as to show that they were by no means infallibly inspired. . . . The most careless observer sees inconsistencies and absurd narrations; finds actions attributed to Jesus, and words put into his mouth, which are directly at variance with his great principles, and the general tone of his character."

The writers of the Epistles were rude and ignorant men. "They could not even interpret the Psalms, without making the most obvious mistakes. . . . They had incorrect notions on many points, which both they and we deem vital."

He characterizes the Bible, in general, as "the apocryphal, ambiguous, imperfect, and often erroneous Scripture of the word."—He calls it "the tyrant of the soul." He says:—

"On the authority of the written word, man has been taught to believe impossible legends, and conflicting assertions; to take fiction for fact; a dream for a miraculous revelation from God; an oriental poem for a grave history of miraculous events; a collection of amatory idyls for a serious discourse, touching the mutual love of Christ and the church. They have been taught to accept a picture, sketched by some glowing eastern imagination, as proof that the infinite God spoke in human words, or appeared in the shape of a cloud, a flaming bush, or a man, who ate, drank, and vanished into smoke; that he gave counsels to-day, and the opposite to-morrow; that he violated his own laws; was angry, and was only dissuaded by a mortal man from destroying at once a whole nation, who, in a moment of anguish, rebelled against their leader. . . . But modern criticism is fast breaking to pieces this idol, which men have made out of the Scriptures." On the whole, he says:—

"Facts force the conclusion upon us, that the Bible is a human work, as much so as the Principia of Newton or Descartes. Some things are beautiful and true, but others, no man, in his reason, can accept. Here are the works of various writers, thrown capriciously together, and united by no common tie but the lids of the bookbinder." Again:—

"If we look at the Bible, as a whole, we find numerous contradictions; conflicting histories, which no skill can reconcile with themselves, or with facts; poems, which Christians have agreed to take as histories; prophecies, which have never been fulfilled, and from the nature of things never can be. We find stories of miracles which could not have happened; accounts which represent the laws of nature completely transformed, as in fairy land; stories that make God a man of war, cruel, capricious, revengeful, hateful, and not to be trusted. We find amatory songs, selfish proverbs, sceptical discourses, and the most awful imprecations that human fancy ever clothed in speech." He says:—

"We shall not believe in ghosts, though Isaiah did; nor in devils, though Jesus teach there are such. We shall see the excellence of Paul in his manly character, not in the miracles wrought by his apron; and the nobleness of Jesus in the doctrine he taught, and the life he lived, not in the walk on the water, or the miraculous draughts of fish. We shall care little about the endless genealogies and old wives' fables, but much for being good and doing good." "We may throw obstacles in the way of religion and morality, and tie the mill-stone of the Old and New Testament about the neck of piety, as before." Of CHRIST he says:—

"It is easy to show, if we have the exact words of Jesus, that he was mistaken on some points; in the interpretation of the Old Testament, in the doctrine of demons, and in the celebrated prediction of his second coming, and the end of the world, within a few years. If Christanity rests on his authority, and that alone, it falls when the foundation falls; and that stands at the mercy of a school-boy."

Again:—

"If we may take the word of the gospels, Jesus was mistaken in his interpretation of the Old Testament. But if he did suppose that the writers of the Pentateuch, the Psalms, and the prophets, spoke of him; if he applied their poetic figures to himself; it is yet but a trifling mistake, affecting a man's head, not his heart."—"Sometimes Christ is said to be an enthusiast, who hoped that he should be a king on the earth, and that his disciples should sit on twelve thrones, and judge the restored tribes. Certainly a strong case, very strong, may be made out from the Evangelists, to favor this charge. But what then? Even if the facts were admitted, and the dull Evangelists have not thrust their own fancies into his mouth it does not militate with his morality and religion. How many a saint has been mistaken in such matters?"

Again he says: "Christ bears his own sins! not another's."—"He needed to work out his own salvation, as we also must do."—

might call it God; for he could go no farther."

Speaking of prayer, he says:—

"For all theological purposes, God might have been buried, after the ascension of Jesus. We dare not approach him face to face. We whine and whimper in our brother's name, (in the name of Christ,) as if we could only appear before the Omnipresent by attorney."

Again, speaking of that form of christianity which represents the divine being as a sovereign, our author says:—

"Its God is diabolical. It puts an intercessor between God and man, and relies on the advocate. Cannot the infinite love his frail children without teasing? Needs he a chancellor to advise him to use forgiveness and mercy? Can men approach the every-where-present only by attorney, as a beggar comes to a Turkish king?—Away with such folly!" Of inspiration, he says:—

"Inspiration, like God's omnipresence, is not limited to the few writers claimed by the Jews, Christians, or Mohammedans, but is co-extensive with the race." "Minos and Moses were inspired to make laws; David to pour out his soul in pious strains, deep and sweet as an angel's psaltry; Pindar to celebrate virtuous deeds in high heroic song; John the Baptist to denounce sin; Gerson, and Luther, and Boemhe, and Fenelon, and Fox, to do each his peculiar work, and stir the world's heart deep, very deep. Plato, and Newton, Milton, and Isaiah, Leibnitz, and Paul, Mozart, Raphael, Phidias, Praxiteles, and Orpheus, receive into their various forms the one spirit from God most high. It appears in action, not less than speech. It inspires Dorcas to make coats and garments for the poor, no less than Paul to preach the gospel."

Of the Bible, he says:—

"The legendary and mythological writings of the Hebrews have no more authority in the premises than the similar narratives of the Phœnicians, the Persians, and Chinese."

He speaks of Abraham's attempt to sacrifice his son, not as an act of faith and obedience, but as a "means to coax and wheedle the Deity, and bribe the All-Powerful"—as "rebellion against conscience, reason, and affection, and treason against God."

The account of "the creation of the woman; the story of the garden, and the temptation and fall of man; the appearances of God in human shape, eating and drinking with his favorite, and making covenants; the story of the flood and of the ark; the miraculous birth of Isaac; the promise to the patriarchs; the great age of mankind; the tower of Babel, the confusion of tongues; the sacrifice of Isaac, the history of Joseph, and of Moses; the ten plagues, miraculously sent; the wonderful passage of the Red Sea; the support of the Hebrews in the wilderness on manna; the miraculous supply of food, water, and clothing; and the deliverance of the law at Mount Sinai," he insists, are fictitious. They "are at variance with facts." Of the "early prophets," as he calls them, he says:

"No one knows the date or the author of any one of these books. They all contain historical matter of a doubtful character: such as the miraculous passage of the Jordan; the destruction of Jericho; the standing still of the sun and moon, at the command of Joshua; the story of Samson; the destruction of the Benjaminites; the birth and calling of Samuel; the wonders wrought by the ark; the story of Saul, David, and Goliah; of the miraculous pestilence, of Solomon, Elijah, Elisha, and others."

He denies that "any one of the prophets ever uttered a distinct, definite, and unambiguous prediction of any future event that has since taken place, which a man, without a miracle, could not equally well predict."

He says "the book of Daniel is a perfect unique in the Old Testament. It contains accounts of surprising miracles, dreams, visions; men cast into a den of lions and a furnace of fire, and escaping unhurt; a man transformed to a beast, and eating grass like an ox for some years, and then restored to human shape; a miraculous and spectral hand writing on the palace wall; grotesque fancies, that remind us of the Arabian Nights and the Talmud."

Of the Evangelists, he says:—

"They relate much from hearsay; they mingle their own personal prejudices in their work; their testimony was not reduced to writing, so far as we know, till long after the event; we see they were often mistaken, and did not understand the words of their teacher; they contradict one another, and even themselves; they mingle with their story puerile notions and tales, which it is charitable to call absurd. Such testimony could not be received in a court of justice, where only a few dollars were at stake, without great caution." Again:—

"The Evangelists differ widely from the Apostles; the Synoptics (i. e., Matthew, Mark, and Luke) give us, in Jesus, a very different being from the Christ whom John describes; and all four make such contradictory statements, as to show that they were by no means infallibly inspired. . . . The most careless observer sees inconsistencies and absurd narrations; finds actions attributed to Jesus, and words put into his mouth, which are directly at variance with his great principles, and the general tone of his character."

The writers of the Epistles were rude and ignorant men. "They could not even interpret the Psalms, without making the most obvious mistakes. . . . They had incorrect notions on many points, which both they and we deem vital."

He characterizes the Bible, in general, as "the apocryphal, ambiguous, imperfect, and often erroneous Scripture of the word."—He calls it "the tyrant of the soul." He says:—

"On the authority of the written word, man has been taught to believe impossible legends, and conflicting assertions; to take fiction for fact; a dream for a miraculous revelation from God; an oriental poem for a grave history of miraculous events; a collection of amatory idyls for a serious discourse, touching the mutual love of Christ and the church. They have been taught to accept a picture, sketched by some glowing eastern imagination, as proof that the infinite God spoke in human words, or appeared in the shape of a cloud, a flaming bush, or a man, who ate, drank, and vanished into smoke; that he gave counsels to-day, and the opposite to-morrow; that he violated his own laws; was angry, and was only dissuaded by a mortal man from destroying at once a whole nation, who, in a moment of anguish, rebelled against their leader. . . . But modern criticism is fast breaking to pieces this idol, which men have made out of the Scriptures." On the whole, he says:—

"Facts force the conclusion upon us, that the Bible is a human work, as much so as the Principia of Newton or Descartes. Some things are beautiful and true, but others, no man, in his reason, can accept. Here are the works of various writers, thrown capriciously together, and united by no common tie but the lids of the bookbinder." Again:—

"If we look at the Bible, as a whole, we find numerous contradictions; conflicting histories, which no skill can reconcile with themselves, or with facts; poems, which Christians have agreed to take as histories; prophecies, which have never been fulfilled, and from the nature of things never can be. We find stories of miracles which could not have happened; accounts which represent the laws of nature completely transformed, as in fairy land; stories that make God a man of war, cruel, capricious, revengeful, hateful, and not to be trusted. We find amatory songs, selfish proverbs, sceptical discourses, and the most awful imprecations that human fancy ever clothed in speech." He says:—

"We shall not believe in ghosts, though Isaiah did; nor in devils, though Jesus teach there are such. We shall see the excellence of Paul in his manly character, not in the miracles wrought by his apron; and the nobleness of Jesus in the doctrine he taught, and the life he lived, not in the walk on the water, or the miraculous draughts of fish. We shall care little about the endless genealogies and old wives' fables, but much for being good and doing good." "We may throw obstacles in the way of religion and morality, and tie the mill-stone of the Old and New Testament about the neck of piety, as before." Of CHRIST he says:—

"It is easy to show, if we have the exact words of Jesus, that he was mistaken on some points; in the interpretation of the Old Testament, in the doctrine of demons, and in the celebrated prediction of his second coming, and the end of the world, within a few years. If Christianity rests on his authority, and that alone, it falls when the foundation falls; and that stands at the mercy of a school-boy."

Again:—

"If we may take the word of the gospels, Jesus was mistaken in his interpretation of the Old Testament. But if he did suppose that the writers of the Pentateuch, the Psalms, and the prophets, spoke of him; if he applied their poetic figures to himself; it is yet but a trifling mistake, affecting a man's head, not his heart."—"Sometimes Christ is said to be an enthusiast, who hoped that he should be a king on the earth, and that his disciples should sit on twelve thrones, and judge the restored tribes. Certainly a strong case, very strong, may be made out from the Evangelists, to favor this charge. But what then? Even if the facts were admitted, and the dull Evangelists have not thrust their own fancies into his mouth it does not militate with his morality and religion. How many a saint has been mistaken in such matters?"

Again he says: "Christ bears his own sins! not another's."—"He needed to work out his own salvation, as we also must do."—

"Moses and Jesus, and John, and Paul, having gained their salvation, by being real men."

Again: "He was not the Messiah of the prophets' foretelling. The farthest from it possible. The Jews are right, when they say that their predicted Messiah has not come."

Again he says: "The time will come, when each one of us shall have more mind, and heart, and soul, than Christ on earth."

Of the sect in which he was educated, he says:—

"There is an Old School, and a New School, with a chasm between them, not wide as yet, but very deep. The Old School differs, theoretically, from the Orthodox in exegesis, and that alone.—It creeps behind texts and usages, is ready to believe anything which has a Thus saith the Lord before it, and does not look facts in the face. It censures the traditionary sects, yet sits itself among the tombs. It would believe nothing not reasonable, and yet all things Scriptural; and so, with perfect good faith, it explains away what is offensive. To such a proficiency has this art of explaining away been carried, that the Scripture is a piece of wax in Unitarian hands and takes any shape. The devil, with them, is an oriental figure of speech; Paul believed in him, no more than Peter Bayle; Moses and Isaiah never speak of Jesus in their writings; yet Jesus is right when he says they did. David in the Psalm, is a sick man, speaking only of himself; but when Simon Peter quotes that Psalm, the inspired king is predicting Jesus of Nazareth. These things," says Mr. Parker, still speaking of his Unitarian brethren, "are notorious facts. If the Athanasian creed, the thirty-nine Articles, or the Pope's bull Unigenitus, could be found in a Greek manuscript, and proved to be the work of an inspired apostle, no doubt Unitarianism would, in good faith, explain all three, and deny that they taught the doctrine of the Trinity, or the fall of man." "They think one thing," he says, "in their study, and preach a very different thing in their pulpit. In the one place, they are free as water; in the other, conservative as ice. They think it necessary to use a little deceit in the world; and so use not a little. These men speak in public of the Bible, as if it were all inspired with equal infallibility; but what do they think at home? In the study, the Testament is a collection of legendary tales; in the pulpit, it is the everlasting gospel, to which, if a man add, the seven last plagues shall be added to him; and from which, if he takes aught, his name shall be taken from the book of life."

The above quotations are a sufficient answer to the question, as to what Parkerism is. If they are not enough to cause any man who reveres the religion of the Bible to shudder, such a person would be unmoved by any blasphemous denial of Christ. The foregoing quotations exhibit the sentiments of a professed minister of the gospel—of the acknowledged leader of the New School of Unitarian theology.

STATE OF EUROPE.

The revolutions which have taken place in Europe since the 20th Feb. are more than equal to all the events of that kind which have occurred at any time previous within a half century. The whole political aspect of Europe is changed, and the entire system of government and balance of power established by the Congress of Vienna and by the holy alliance since 1814 has been blotted out of existence as if by magic. The whole fabric has disappeared like a summer frost. As usual, revolution began at Paris, but of the over seventy States into which Europe is divided only eight have escaped the overthrow or very serious modification of their government, and in all those the elements of revolution are active. France is a republic, with the bloody scenes of the former republic in perspective. Throughout Italy the forms of ancient institutions are crumbling to dust. The king of Sardinia is endeavoring to ride out the storm, and guide the whirlwind. Hopeless task! All other authorities are rapidly melting before it. Austrian Italy is every where in successful revolt, and rapidly falling into the hands of the king of Sardinia.

The German States of the house of Austria have effected a revolution in their constitution inconsistent with the existence of the empire. Hungary has obtained practical independence of the Emperor, and a domestic administration. Throughout Germany, all the despots are for practical purposes overthrown, retaining a name to reign without the power to govern. The king of Prussia is here endeavoring to ride out the storm, and is filled with the ambition of reuniting all Germany as one great empire, with himself as emperor. At the same time many of the leading Germans are endeavoring to form a vast German republic, and every where the disposition is strongly expressed to centralize all Germany as one nation.

Poland is in the greatest ferment, if not in open insurrection, and the emperor of Prussia is rapidly concentrating his immense and constantly increasing military force in Poland and on the German frontier. Disturbance is rife in Sweeden, Denmark, Greece, indeed every where; and in Ireland arming and training for forcible resistance of British power is as publicly avowed and practiced as though it was no part of the empire. Leading men, formerly reputed for moderation and prudence, avow high treason and a determination to overthrow British power in the immediate presence of crown officers as frankly as though it were not an offence, and the indications are strong that the British troops will refuse to fight the Irish. An agitation for the repeal of the Scottish union is also on foot. The more virulent factions in England are taking courage, and the prospect is that the empire will rapidly crumble to pieces. All this is the result of systematic Gentile oppression. And in most cases the remedies proposed cannot but fail entirely.

The universal poverty and suffering which prevails and has been rapidly increasing in Europe for some years, is the fruitful cause of all these revolutions. But the remedies proposed, the change of national constitutions, confederations and alliances will not remedy it; probably will not even palliate the evil. The fester lies deeper than the mere forms of government, or the organization of States; it is in the order of social society. All order among men is founded on supreme selfishness. This they do not propose to change.—Consequently relief will fail.

True, kings, princes and despots are being overthrown. But the dollar remains almighty. That can exert its oppression hereafter as well in the hands of a merchant, a banker or broker, or country landlord, or a common farmer, or manufacturer, as in the hands of kings or ministers of state. It is money that rules in all Europe, in all North America, and if new and popular governments do not exercise tyranny over so many, their tyranny is severer when it is felt.

In France the cry of liberty, equality and fraternity has been raised. Indeed the oppressed of all nations are seeking for it. But their new tyrants are offering it to them in the shape of public workshops and men at wages, when, of course, capital will oppress labor as it always has. The cry of the poor has ascended up to God, and he will avenge them on their oppressors; but their refuge is only in God's everlasting kingdom, when he will reign and his priests rule.

New Britain, April 24th, 1848.

Brother Strang:—I here inclose two dollars for the Herald, which comes tolerably regular. Seeing in one of your papers that you gave a challenge to discuss certain doctrines of the day as taught in the sectarian churches, I often told my neighbors of it and wished them to furnish a man to discuss some of the questions in dispute, but all without effect, until being invited one evening to attend the Baptist church to hear a sermon on the two witnesses, (Rev. xi.,) by a minister from Hartford by the name of John Hunter. He spoke very daring, and seemed to challenge the whole world to rebut his statements. He went on to prove that the doctrine he advanced was handed down from the Apostles without coming through the Roman Catholics. And to sum up the whole, the Old and New Testaments were the two witnesses, and that the prophets were not yet to come. While leaving the church my neighbor said,

"Moses and Jesus, and John, and Paul, having gained their salvation, by being real men."

Again: "He was not the Messiah of the prophets' foretelling. The farthest from it possible. The Jews are right, when they say that their predicted Messiah has not come."

Again he says: "The time will come, when each one of us shall have more mind, and heart, and soul, than Christ on earth."

Of the sect in which he was educated, he says:—

"There is an Old School, and a New School, with a chasm between them, not wide as yet, but very deep. The Old School differs, theoretically, from the Orthodox in exegesis, and that alone.—It creeps behind texts and usages, is ready to believe anything which has a Thus saith the Lord before it, and does not look facts in the face. It censures the traditionary sects, yet sits itself among the tombs. It would believe nothing not reasonable, and yet all things Scriptural; and so, with perfect good faith, it explains away what is offensive. To such a proficiency has this art of explaining away been carried, that the Scripture is a piece of wax in Unitarian hands and takes any shape. The devil, with them, is an oriental figure of speech; Paul believed in him, no more than Peter Bayle; Moses and Isaiah never speak of Jesus in their writings; yet Jesus is right when he says they did. David in the Psalm, is a sick man, speaking only of himself; but when Simon Peter quotes that Psalm, the inspired king is predicting Jesus of Nazareth. These things," says Mr. Parker, still speaking of his Unitarian brethren, "are notorious facts. If the Athanasian creed, the thirty-nine Articles, or the Pope's bull Unigenitus, could be found in a Greek manuscript, and proved to be the work of an inspired apostle, no doubt Unitarianism would, in good faith, explain all three, and deny that they taught the doctrine of the Trinity, or the fall of man." "They think one thing," he says, "in their study, and preach a very different thing in their pulpit. In the one place, they are free as water; in the other, conservative as ice. They think it necessary to use a little deceit in the world; and so use not a little. These men speak in public of the Bible, as if it were all inspired with equal infallibility; but what do they think at home? In the study, the Testament is a collection of legendary tales; in the pulpit, it is the everlasting gospel, to which, if a man add, the sev last plagues shall be added to him; and from which, if he takes aught, his name shall be taken from the book of life."

The above quotations are a sufficient answer to the question, as to what Parkerism is. If they are not enough to cause any man who reveres the religion of the Bible to shudder, such a person would be unmoved by any blasphemous denial of Christ. The foregoing quotations exhibit the sentiments of a professed minister of the gospel—of the acknowledged leader of the New School of Unitarian theology.

STATE OF EUROPE.

The revolutions which have taken place in Europe since the 20th Feb. are more than equal to all the events of that kind which have occurred at any time previous within a half century. The whole political aspect of Europe is changed, and the entire system of government and balance of power established by the Congress of Vienna and by the holy alliance since 1814 has been blotted out of existence as if by magic. The whole fabric has disappeared like a summer frost. As usual, revolution began at Paris, but of the over seventy States into which Europe is divided only eight have escaped the overthrow or very serious modification of their government, and in all those the elements of revolution are active. France is a republic, with the bloody scenes of the former republic in perspective. Throughout Italy the forms of ancient institutions are crumbling to dust. The king of Sardinia is endeavoring to ride out the storm, and guide the whirlwind. Hopeless task! All other authorities are rapidly melting before it. Austrian Italy is every where in successful revolt, and rapidly falling into the hands of the king of Sardinia.

The German States of the house of Austria have effected a revolution in their constitution inconsistent with the existence of the empire. Hungary has obtained practical independence of the Emperor, and a domestic administration. Throughout Germany, all the despots are for practical purposes overthrown, retaining a name to reign without the power to govern. The king of Prussia is here endeavoring to ride out the storm, and is filled with the ambition of reuniting all Germany as one great empire, with himself as emperor. At the same time many of the leading Germans are endeavoring to form a vast German republic, and every where the disposition is strongly expressed to centralize all Germany as one nation.

Poland is in the greatest ferment, if not in open insurrection, and the emperor of Prussia is rapidly concentrating his immense and constantly increasing military force in Poland and on the German frontier. Disturbance is rife in Sweeden, Denmark, Greece, indeed every where; and in Ireland arming and training for forcible resistance of British power is as publicly avowed and practiced as though it was no part of the empire. Leading men, formerly reputed for moderation and prudence, avow high treason and a determination to overthrow British power in the immediate presence of crown officers as frankly as though it were not an offence, and the indications are strong that the British troops will refuse to fight the Irish. An agitation for the repeal of the Scottish union is also on foot. The more virulent factions in England are taking courage, and the prospect is that the empire will rapidly crumble to pieces. All this is the result of systematic Gentile oppression. And in most cases the remedies proposed cannot but fail entirely.

The universal poverty and suffering which prevails and has been rapidly increasing in Europe for some years, is the fruitful cause of all these revolutions. But the remedies proposed, the change of national constitutions, confederations and alliances will not remedy it; probably will not even palliate the evil. The fester lies deeper than the mere forms of government, or the organization of States; it is in the order of social society. All order among men is founded on supreme selfishness. This they do not propose to change.—Consequently relief will fail.

True, kings, princes and despots are being overthrown. But the dollar remains almighty. That can exert its oppression hereafter as well in the hands of a merchant, a banker or broker, or country landlord, or a common farmer, or manufacturer, as in the hands of kings or ministers of state. It is money that rules in all Europe, in all North America, and if new and popular governments do not exercise tyranny over so many, their tyranny is severer when it is felt.

In France the cry of liberty, equality and fraternity has been raised. Indeed the oppressed of all nations are seeking for it. But their new tyrants are offering it to them in the shape of public workshops and men at wages, when, of course, capital will oppress labor as it always has. The cry of the poor has ascended up to God, and he will avenge them on their oppressors; but their refuge is only in God's everlasting kingdom, when he will reign and his priests rule.

New Britain, April 24th, 1848.

Brother Strang:—I here inclose two dollars for the Herald, which comes tolerably regular. Seeing in one of your papers that you gave a challenge to discuss certain doctrines of the day as taught in the sectarian churches, I often told my neighbors of it and wished them to furnish a man to discuss some of the questions in dispute, but all without effect, until being invited one evening to attend the Baptist church to hear a sermon on the two witnesses, (Rev. xi.,) by a minister from Hartford by the name of John Hunter. He spoke very daring, and seemed to challenge the whole world to rebut his statements. He went on to prove that the doctrine he advanced was handed down from the Apostles without coming through the Roman Catholics. And to sum up the whole, the Old and New Testaments were the two witnesses, and that the prophets were not yet to come. While leaving the church my neighbor said, how do you like the sermon? I gave my opinion, and offered to find a man to discuss the question with him if he would; but suffering it to drop there I left the church. Our conversation was communicated to him. He said he would accept, and that I might bring on the man. I told my friend that I could not bring you here in person, but that I had no doubt you would discuss that or any other question of difference between the two denominations; and that I would write you on the subject and get an answer from you. He wished you to write to Mr. Hunter at Hartford and see what he would do. If you think proper I will send the paper containing your challenge to Mr. Hunter, or you can write me and say what I shall do. I am anxious to see the eleventh chapter of Revelations discussed before the public, provided it could be published in the Baptist papers as well as the Voree Herald. You might write him through the Herald and we should both be acquainted with it.—Please answer it in some way, and oblige your lonely brother,

THOMAS R. HICKS.

☞ We publish this to say that we accept Mr. Hunter's challenge. The point is not clearly stated, but that there may be no difficulty in making up the issue we send Mr. Hunter the Reveille Vol. ii. No. 16 containing a general challenge to all denominations. Mr. Hunter will understand that we are ready to take almost any issue which requires us to show that the Baptist church is not the church of God, and that it is one of the daughters of Mystery Babylon the MOTHER OF HARLOTS, and has no priesthood but what she got out of the Roman church; and that the two witnesses spoken of in the eleventh chapter of Revelations are two prophets yet to come. We will open our paper to him, and shall expect him to insert the same with our answer in some Baptist paper. [ED.

Beaver Island, April 23d, 1848.

PRESIDENT STRANG:—This being the first opportunity to send direct since the opening of navigation, therefore I sit down to write a few lines to you. I am happy to say we are all well and in good spirits. We have had a fine winter, and I must say that I have not spent so agreeable a winter, so far as climate is concerned, since I have been in the west. We have had just snow enough for business. We have had a plenty to do and to eat. The most of us have done first rate. We want to hear from you. You must forward the paper forthwith to myself and Brown, and when you come on here we will pay. I have many things that I want to talk about, therefore I want to see you face to face. You must come and see us as soon as you can. I have built on section 23 at the head of the bay. We have raised the mission house, so you may publish it abroad now. I hope there will be every effort made to settle the island this season. I hope you have prospered in Voree this winter. Yours, SAMUEL SHAW.

Buffalo, April 16th, 1848.

BROTHER STRANG—SIR:—I have received your letter, in which you ask me if my feelings are worn out in the cause of God. I answer, they are not. I feel as lively an interest in the truth as I ever did. I have no other idea than again trying to preach as soon as my circumstances will admit. The principle that you have adopted for temporal salvation is the true one. I was glad to learn that it was the case. I intend visiting your place probably in the course of the season. You say it would not make me happy to know what the church has passed through. I have received letters stating many things from those who have become your enemies. The things they write do not make me happy by any means; neither does the past history of the church from the commencement, but still I hope for a good result. You must know that my attachment to you is very strong, consequently not easily broken off. You said you had sent me a file of papers, and that I would know what you were doing. I have been to the post office almost every day since I got your letter. The papers have not come and probably will not. I know not as much as you do about the camp at the west, neither any other ites that have grown out of the church.

Yours respectfully, LESTER BROOKS.

Cotton Township, Indiana, April 18th, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—I herein inclose three dollars, two dollars for the Voree paper and one dollar for the Temple, hoping that the widow's mite may not be forgotten on that day when the just shall receive the reward of their doings. The few saints here can scarcely be called a branch, yet charitably hope we may be considered worth an instructor, that in our weakness we may be strengthened.

Yours in the bonds of christian love,

MARY LEATHERBURY.

☞ The following is a postscript to a letter just received from Kirtland. Probably we shall publish the letter hereafter.

Since writing the foregoing McLellin's church have received a letter from David Whitmer, the contents of which, though it is as far as possible kept from the public, yet enough has been learned to enable us to say unequivocally that Mc. and David are at loggerheads, and that Wm. has either apostatized from David or David has from Wm. It is on the existence of the office of high priests in the church. David (it appears) denies any powers of priesthood in Joseph save the power of translating the Book of Mormon, consequently his own ordination as the successor of the prophet Joseph. Brother Gaylord and brother Adams, and all the members of McLellin's church of Christ, must give up David and hurrah for Mc. Long live the prophet Wm. E. McLellin! Mc. will not again write that David is the Lord's Seer, since he does not see with the doctor. AUSTIN COWLES.

☞ There will be a Conference at Cooperstown, N. Y., June 10th and 11th. We have been requested to announce Conferences the previous week at Jamestown and Alexander, N. Y., and that Pres. Strang should attend. Circumstances render this impossible, but it may be expected that he will visit those places later in the season, of which the earliest possible notice will be given through the Herald. Elders Page and Hale will the brethren at Cooperstown.

Elder G. Brownson writes that he is on his way to Beaver with a company of upwards of fifty Saints. They may expect a deputation from here soon.

For the Gospel Herald.

REFLECTION AT NIGHT.

At the close of the day when the twilight departs,
And the grand king of day disappears,
The darkness of night still illumines our hearts,
For the great king of glory is near.

When our senses are lock'd in their balmy repose,
Unconscious of all that is near,
The angel unseen still his blessing bestows,
Till the glories of mornlight appear.

When the sun in his beauty again climbs the hill,
Enlightening all nature around,
Then our bosoms with gratitude heaven shall fill,
As the light of the noontide surrounds.

Voree, May 10th, 1848. R. P.

how do you like the sermon? I gave my opinion, and offered to find a man to discuss the question with him if he would; but suffering it to drop there I left the church. Our conversation was communicated to him. He said he would accept, and that I might bring on the man. I told my friend that I could not bring you here in person, but that I had no doubt you would discuss that or any other question of difference between the two denominations; and that I would write you on the subject and get an answer from you. He wished you to write to Mr. Hunter at Hartford and see what he would do. If you think proper I will send the paper containing your challenge to Mr. Hunter, or you can write me and say what I shall do. I am anxious to see the eleventh chapter of Revelations discussed before the public, provided it could be published in the Baptist papers as well as the Voree Herald. You might write him through the Herald and we should both be acquainted with it.—Please answer it in some way, and oblige your lonely brother,

THOMAS R. HICKS.

☞ We publish this to say that we accept Mr. Hunter's challenge. The point is not clearly stated, but that there may be no difficulty in making up the issue we send Mr. Hunter the Reveille Vol. ii. No. 16 containing a general challenge to all denominations. Mr. Hunter will understand that we are ready to take almost any issue which requires us to show that the Baptist church is not the church of God, and that it is one of the daughters of Mystery Babylon the MOTHER OF HARLOTS, and has no priesthood but what she got out of the Roman church; and that the two witnesses spoken of in the eleventh chapter of Revelations are two prophets yet to come. We will open our paper to him, and shall expect him to insert the same with our answer in some Baptist paper. [ED.

Beaver Island, April 23d, 1848.

PRESIDENT STRANG:—This being the first opportunity to send direct since the opening of navigation, therefore I sit down to write a few lines to you. I am happy to say we are all well and in good spirits. We have had a fine winter, and I must say that I have not spent so agreeable a winter, so far as climate is concerned, since I have been in the west. We have had just snow enough for business. We have had a plenty to do and to eat. The most of us have done first rate. We want to hear from you. You must forward the paper forthwith to myself and Brown, and when you come on here we will pay. I have many things that I want to talk about, therefore I want to see you face to face. You must come and see us as soon as you can. I have built on section 23 at the head of the bay. We have raised the mission house, so you may publish it abroad now. I hope there will be every effort made to settle the island this season. I hope you have prospered in Voree this winter.

Yours, SAMUEL SHAW.

Buffalo, April 16th, 1848.

BROTHER STRANG—SIR:—I have received your letter, in which you ask me if my feelings are worn out in the cause of God. I answer, they are not. I feel as lively an interest in the truth as I ever did. I have no other idea than again trying to preach as soon as my circumstances will admit. The principle that you have adopted for temporal salvation is the true one. I was glad to learn that it was the case. I intend visiting your place probably in the course of the season. You say it would not make me happy to know what the church has passed through. I have received letters stating many things from those who have become your enemies. The things they write do not make me happy by any means; neither does the past history of the church from the commencement, but still I hope for a good result. You must know that my attachment to you is very strong, consequently not easily broken off. You said you had sent me a file of papers, and that I would know what you were doing. I have been to the post office almost every day since I got your letter. The papers have not come and probably will not. I know not as much as you do about the camp at the west, neither any other ites that have grown out of the church.

Yours respectfully, LESTER BROOKS.

Cotton Township, Indiana, April 18th, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—I herein inclose three dollars, two dollars for the Voree paper and one dollar for the Temple, hoping that the widow's mite may not be forgotten on that day when the just shall receive the reward of their doings. The few saints here can scarcely be called a branch, yet charitably hope we may be considered worth an instructor, that in our weakness we may be strengthened.

Yours in the bonds of christian love,

MARY LEATHERBURY.

☞ The following is a postscript to a letter just received from Kirtland. Probably we shall publish the letter hereafter.

Since writing the foregoing McLellin's church have received a letter from David Whitmer, the contents of which, though it is as far as possible kept from the public, yet enough has been learned to enable us to say unequivocally that Mc. and David are as log-gerheads, and that Wm. has either apostatized from David or David has from Wm. It is on the existence of the office of high priests in the church. David (it appears) denies any powers of priesthood in Joseph save the power of translating the Book of Mormon, consequently his own ordination as the successor of the prophet Joseph. Brother Gaylord and brother Adams, and all the members of McLellin's church of Christ, must give up David and hurrah for Mc. Long live the prophet Wm. E. McLellin! Mc. will not again write that David is the Lord's Seer, since he does not see with the doctor.

AUSTIN COWLES.

☞ There will be a Conference at Cooperstown, N. Y., June 10th and 11th. We have been requested to announce Conferences the previous week at Jamestown and Alexander, N. Y., and that Pres. Strang should attend. Circumstances render this impossible, but it may be expected that he will visit those places later in the season, of which the earliest possible notice will be given through the Herald. Elders Page and Hale will meet the brethren at Cooperstown.

Elder G. Brownson writes that he is on his way to Beaver with a company of upwards of fifty Saints. They may expect a deputation from here soon.

For the Gospel Herald.

REFLECTION AT NIGHT.

At the close of the day when the twilight departs,
And the grand king of day disappears,
The darkness of night still illumines our hearts,
For the great king of glory is near.

When our senses are lock'd in their balmy repose,
Unconscious of all that is near,
The angel unseen still his blessing bestows,
Till the glories of mornlight appear.

When the sun in his beauty again climbs the hill,
Enlightening all nature around,
Then our bosoms with gratitude heaven shall fill,
As the light of the noontide surrounds.

Voree, May 10th, 1848. R. P.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 9.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY, MAY 18, 1848. [WHOLE No. 73.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Kirtland, Ohio, March, 1848.

PRESIDENT J. J. STRANG:—

DEAR SIR,—As Dr. Wm. E. McLellin, in the 4th No. of his Ensign of Liberty, page 54, giving an account of things in Kirtland, in which he says the church in this place numbers forty-two, and in 1846, more than one year ago, in his letter to David Whitmer, said the church of Christ here numbers at present about one hundred, the lover of the church is led to inquire the cause of so great a diminution in the short space of one year, and if there was no other means to ascertain the cause than the mere fact that such is the case, the inquirer would be led to impute the change to one of four principal causes. Either that there had been a great mortality among the saints; or, 2d, that many had emigrated; or, 3d, that there had been a great falling away; or, 4th, that some wolf had entered in, not sparing the flock. Now as Dr. McLellin intimates that much inquiry is made abroad of the position of his church in this place, as one acquainted with all the important movements of the doctor here I will assume the responsibility of giving the history of those measures that have in a great measure blighted the fair prospects that appeared to dawn on Kirtland. I need not remind you, sir, of the unanimity of feeling and harmony of action that marked all the movements of your administration in organizing a stake in this place. In Oct. following Dr. Wm. E. McLellin moved to this place with the ostensible purpose of leaving his family here and going to Voree to edit the paper.

During the winter he professed to have a revelation that saints living in the vicinity of Kirtland and frequenting the meeting should be under condemnation before God, save they united with the church. But no sooner than reports came from Voree of which the doctor could make capital to his own use, than he bolted from you, and prays thus: "O Lord! thou knowest that Zion must bleed till thy servants David and Oliver take their places in thy church."—His importunate letter to David Whitmer bears date Dec. 2d, 1846, in which he says: "The church of Christ here numbers at present about one hnndred." He continues, page 18th, "I have scores of good honest warm hearted saints around me, and the Lord is abundantly good." On the second day of Jan., 1847, the doctor having assembled the church in the house of the Lord to hold a solemn fast, arranged all its quorums in order according to your organization, he then attempted, in an argument of five hours, to nullify all the authority of priesthood in the whole church after Joseph had ordained David Whitmer. All having polluted the priesthood save himself. After having asserted the disability of the Twelve, of Sidney and Law, he says: "Lastly, J. J. Strang never was a member of the church, Joseph not having the authority to administer the ordinance of baptism to him."

Yet, sir, at the close of this meeting he received the votes of all the quorums of this stake to restore him to the apostolic office he held under Joseph. Thus Wm. E. McLellin, not then a member of the church of Christ, by his own confession, by the vote of a stake who are without any priesthood, organized by a mere Gentile, is made an apostle of the last days. But his clear understanding could readily perceive that though he was made an apostle, yet in this stake he had not any power above any other high priest; that in this place he was subordinate to the powers that be. Hence the only alternative for him (in order to carry out his ambitious purposes) was to deny all the official powers of the whole church of Christ, together with his own membership therein, and to obtain a new dispensation or revelation from heaven and by it receive the pattern to build up the church anew unto the Lord and not unto man. Hence, on the tenth day of Feb. he says: "Seven individuals assembled in our office in the evening. We freely talked over our (then) present standing before the Lord. We were settled in our minds that the time had come for the church to come forth the second time out of obscurity and out of darkness. We asked ourselves this question: are we in the house (church) or out of doors, and as honest individuals we were bound to answer, we are not now legal members of the body (church) of Christ. We wanted to know the mind of the Lord Jesus Christ. Consequently we humbled ourselves before him in mighty prayer, each one present calling upon God vocally the one after the other; all being agreed to inquire of the Lord as touching our priesthood, our baptism and the establishing and building up of the church of Christ. We thank and magnify the name of the Lord God who revealed himself to all holy men since the world began who called upon him in faith as we did, for he heard our united solemn prayer of faith, and the pattern was given to us by which we could go forward and act and thus build up the church unto the Lord and not unto man."

Here let me pause and ask the grave and all important question, whether Wm. E. McLellin and his six coadjutors are found false witnesses before God, or the Lord has falsified his word which he said he had given for a law unto his church that they may not be deceived, and given (through Wm. E. McLellin and six others, not even any of them members of his church) another and contrary rule, by reason of which all saints that adhere to his first law must be deceived? D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2: "But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead: and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments; and this I give unto you that you may not be deceived; that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before." Dr. McLellin says, Ensign No. 4, page 56: "The Lord has given us seven men (Gentiles) the pattern by which we could go forward and act and to build up the church unto the Lord and not unto man."

Leaving the doctor to reconcile his contradiction with the Lord, who has said, "he is not to be mocked in these last days," I will give some items of the manner and circumstances in receiving the notable revelation on which he has built his church. On Wednesday the 1st the pattern is given. On Thursday evening, in public, the doctor says the brethren all centered their faith on him as the organ through whom the Lord should make known his will; that in receiving the revelation he says, "Lord I have written to David. The Lord says, I am well pleased with that. I replied, but what if David does not come? The Lord says, then go forward and act yourselves." Another of the revelators, J. B., gave to a friend the account thus: after prayer Mc. arose and said, "I will tell you what we can do, brother Martin; we will go and be baptized of each other and so go on." One word on the great intelligence manifest in the pretended revelation, and I have done with that rock on which Mc. builded his church. They had all agreed that they were Gentiles out of the kingdom of God, and that the church or kingdom of Christ was not on the earth, and now did not know what was necessary to establish and build it up until the pattern was given them. O how thankful ought these men to be that the Lord did then and there reveal to them the true principles (or rules) by which they could build up the kingdom of God! O astonishing!—What intelligence! What a mercy! Wm. E. McLellin, an apostle, Martin Harris, witness of the Book of Mormon, Aaron Smith, that understandeth the doctrine, Leonard Rich, a president of seventies, Jeremiah Knight, an high priest, Jacob Bumb, perpetually

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 9.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY. MAY 18, 1848. [WHOLE No. 73.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Kirtland, Ohio, March, 1848.

PRESIDENT J. J. STRANG:—

DEAR SIR,—As Dr. Wm. E. McLellin, in the 4th No. of his Ensign of Liberty, page 54, giving an account of things in Kirtland, in which he says the church in this place numbers forty-two, and in 1846, more than one year ago, in his letter to David Whitmer, said the church of Christ here numbers at present about one hundred, the lover of the church is led to inquire the cause of so great a diminution in the short space of one year, and if there was no other means to ascertain the cause than the mere fact that such is the case, the inquirer would be led to impute the change to one of four principal causes. Either that there had been a great mortality among the saints; or, 2d, that many had emigrated; or, 3d, that there had been a great falling away; or, 4th, that some wolf had entered in, not sparing the flock. Now as Dr. McLellin intimates that much inquiry is made abroad of the position of his church in this place, as one acquainted with all the important movements of the doctor here I will assume the responsibility of giving the history of those measures that have in a great measure blighted the fair prospects that appeared to dawn on Kirtland. I need not remind you, sir, of the unanimity of feeling and harmony of action that marked all the movements of your administration in organizing a stake in this place. In Oct. following Dr. Wm. E. McLellin moved to this place with the ostensible purpose of leaving his family here and going to Voree to edit the paper.

During the winter he professed to have a revelation that saints living in the vicinity of Kirtland and frequenting the meeting should be under condemnation before God, save they united with the church. But no sooner than reports came from Voree of which the doctor could make capital to his own use, than he bolted from you, and prays thus: "O Lord! thou knowest that Zion must bleed till thy servants David and Oliver take their places in thy church."—His importunate letter to David Whitmer bears date Dec. 2d, 1846, in which he says: "The church of Christ here numbers at present about one hundred." He continues, page 18th, "I have scores of good honest warm hearted saints around me, and the Lord is abundantly good." On the second day of Jan., 1847, the doctor having assembled the church in the house of the Lord to hold a solemn fast, arranged all its quorums in order according to your organization, he then attempted, in an argument of five hours, to nullify all the authority of priesthood in the whole church after Joseph had ordained David Whitmer. All having polluted the priesthood save himself. After having asserted the disability of the Twelve, of Sidney and Law, he says: "Lastly, J. J. Strang never was a member of the church, Joseph not having the authority to administer the ordinance of baptism to him."

Yet, sir, at the close of this meeting he received the votes of all the quorums of this stake to restore him to the apostolic office he held under Joseph. Thus Wm. E. McLellin, not then a member of the church of Christ by his own confession, by the vote of a stake who are without any priesthood, organized by a mere Gentile, is made an apostle of the last days. But his clear understanding could readily perceive that though he was made an apostle, yet in this stake he had not any power above any other high priest; that in this place he was subordinate to the powers that be. Hence the only alternative for him (in order to carry out his ambitious purposes) was to deny all the official powers of the whole church of Christ, together with his own membership therein, and to obtain a new dispensation or revelation from heaven and by it receive the pattern to build up the church anew unto the Lord and not unto man. Hence, on the tenth day of Feb. he says: "Seven individuals assembled in our office in the evening. We freely talked over our (then) present standing before the Lord. We were settled in our minds that the time had come for the church to come forth the second time out of obscurity and out of darkness. We asked ourselves this question: are we in the house (church) or out of doors, and as honest individuals we were bound to answer, we are not now legal members of the body (church) of Christ. We wanted to know the mind of the Lord Jesus Christ. Consequently we humbled ourselves before him in mighty prayer, each one present calling upon God vocally the one after the other; all being agreed to inquire of the Lord as touching our priesthood, our baptism and the establishing and building up of the church of Christ. We thank and magnify the name of the Lord God who revealed himself to all holy men since the world began who called upon him in faith as we did, for he heard our united solemn prayer of faith, and the pattern was given to us by which we could go forward and act and thus build up the church unto the Lord and not unto man."

Here let me pause and ask the grave and all important question, whether Wm. E. McLellin and his six coadjutors are found false witnesses before God, or the Lord has falsified his word which he said he had given for a law unto his church that they may not be deceived, and given (through Wm. E. McLellin and six others, not even any of them members of his church) another and contrary rule, by reason of which all saints that adhere to his first law must be deceived? D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2: "But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead, and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come unto you as revelations or commandments; and this I give unto you that you may not be deceived; that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before." Dr. McLellin says, Ensign No. 4, page 56: "The Lord has given us seven men (Gentiles) the pattern by which we could go forward and act and to build up the church unto the Lord and not unto man."

Leaving the doctor to reconcile his contradiction with the Lord, who has said, "he is not to be mocked in these last days," I will give some items of the manner and circumstances in receiving the notable revelation on which he has built his church. On Wednesday the 1st the pattern is given. On Thursday evening, in public, the doctor says the brethren all centered their faith on him as the organ through whom the Lord should make known his will; that in receiving the revelation he says, "Lord I have written to David. The Lord says, I am well pleased with that. I replied, but what if David does not come? The Lord says, then go forward and act yourselves." Another of the revelators, J. B., gave to a friend the account thus: after prayer Mc. arose and said, "I will tell you what we can do, brother Martin; we will go and be baptized of each other and so go on." One word on the great intelligence manifest in the pretended revelation, and I have done with that rock on which Mc. builded his church. They had all agreed that they were Gentiles out of the kingdom of God, and that the church or kingdom of Christ was not on the earth, and now did not know what was necessary to establish and build it up until the pattern was given them. O how thankful ought these men to be that the Lord did then and there reveal to them the true principles (or rules) by which they could build up the kingdom of God! O astonishing!—What intelligence! What a mercy! Wm. E. McLellin, an apostle, Martin Harris, witness of the Book of Mormon, Aaron Smith, that understandeth the doctrine, Leonard Rich, a president of seventies, Jeremiah Knight, an high priest, Jacob Bumb, perpetually for years under the teaching of the order of establishing the kingdom of God,—these men who have taught for years that when the church of God is not on the earth (as they say it was not at the time they received the notable revelation) that it requires a revelation of priesthood and the administration of the ordinances of baptism, confirmation and ordination to re-establish the church anew. Now having taught these principles for years, these same men, together with one or two women—hear it all ye saints—these men, on the 10th day of Feb., 1847, get the intelligence to discern the true principles how to build up the church as at the beginning.

Query.—Did these gentlemen understand how the church was built up at the beginning? And if they did, could they expect the Lord would build it on different principles anew? or does he change, and finding that he did not work by the right rule try a new one? Now as I profess to be in some measure a discerner of spirits, as well as a "would be prophet," I will illustrate the spirit and future history of Wm. E. McLellin, and if I fail in my reasoning then know that I am wanting in ability in my profession. Failing of a seat in the First Presidency in your organization, he (the Dr.) turns to David Whitmer as his last resort to obtain the pre-eminence.—He saw clearly that he could not place David in the chair of state without denying the whole authority of the church. This he could not do, but by denying his own and all the priesthood of all the witnesses of the Book of Mormon, all having membership in and acknowledging its authority after it was called the Church of Latter Day Saints. Hence the necessity of a new dispensation, which the Dr. and his associates obtained on the 10th of Feb., 1847, in the lying revelation to build the church or kingdom of God anew. And what is worse, if David is the Lord's seer referred to, Ensign No. 4 page 56, then has Wm. made David endorse a falsehood, when he says: "Therefore he shall continue to do all things according to the pattern I have shown to him."

But enough for the present to show that Wm. E. McLellin is doomed to shame and everlasting contempt in the minds of all the saints. But of things at present in Kirtland I guess that brother —— —— wrote the piece stating that in Kirtland the doctor's church did not number 42. This is true, the doctor to the contrary notwithstanding. His 42 members embraces not only Kirtland but other counties, and at least one other stake. "And they are all at peace and fellowship among themselves." Not exactly. Brother H. Aldrich, brother Crompton, brother A. Smith, brother Torrence, too honest to submit to his dictatorial and ambitious spirit,—we speak advisedly when we say they are not with him in spirit. The Dr., in one of his councils, was heard to say: "Brethren, we cannot build up Kirtland." At another council, "we cannot do anything with them." We guess he referred to some of his members, as he has to call meetings to discipline Martin and Aaron. Brother Aldrich and Crompton will pay no attention to him in his call to order, as they believe his order is not of God.

In short, we have no idea that the doctor believes that David or Oliver or John Whitmer will attend his conference. And as a "would be prophet" I have long since prophesied that he would fall like Luciter, (though not so far,) and that his future life is to procure his sustenance with the use of his profession as a physician, rather than the use of his lungs or the pushing of his quill for the use of the church. And to conclude, the Dr. has built his church on seven pillars, thus: 1st. The church changed its name. 2d. Lost its priesthood or authority to act as the church of Christ. 3d. Refused the name of the church of Christ. 4th. Joseph lost his authority, but the ordination of David was valid. 5th. The right of David to lead the church a true position. 6th. That the foregoing propositions are true doctrines. 7th. That it is the prerogative of Wm. E. McLellin to get a revelation by way of pattern for the church. I take the negative of the foregoing propositions, and invite Dr. Wm. E. McLellin or any of his disciples to respond in public with me in the affirmative. AUSTIN COWLES.

P. S. Since writing the above the doctor's fifth Ensign has made its appearance, and such a catalogue of absurdities and contradictions as his Ensign contains, even over his own signature, may no longer remain without exposure. I will give the pages in his Ensign where a few of them may be found. Page 5, "Christ takes his name out of the church, and consequently his authority to act in the church, otherwise called priesthood." Page 68, "ministers in the church of Christ, when it changed its character and name, destroy their authority only by their own transgressions."—Same page, "in process of time all turned away from the Lord (or polluted their priesthood) and built up themselves." Same page, "all those who have been ministers in the church and have not defiled their holy authority (or priesthood) who may unite with us will have the privilege of an equal or superior priesthood than they held before." Page 48, "our voice to all the true hearted who have not defiled themselves or their priesthood, come go with us." Page 50, "all laws for regulating the body or church to be given through the president—the head—the seer. Hence a law for the action or regulation of the body coming through any other officer or minister is not to be received or acted upon by the church." Page 54, "we were settled in our minds that the time had come for the church to come forth the second time out of obscurity." Page 55, "we were out of the church of Christ—we were out of the church of God." Page 56, "we thank and magnify the name of the Lord God who revealed himself to all holy men since the world began, who called upon him in faith as we did, and he gave to us (seven Gentiles) the pattern by which we could go forward and act, and thus build up the church unto the Lord and not to man."

And in order that the saints may believe that lying revelation the Dr., it seems, has persuaded David, the Lord's seer, to endorse it thus: Same page, "therefore he shall continue to do all things according to the pattern I have shown to him." Sec. xiv. p. 2. No revelations or commandments to be received for the church through any save they are legally appointed and ordained. We ask David whether the Lord was mistaken in that saying, or himself and Wm. E. McLellin are found false witnesses before God? One more of David's false positions and I leave him for the present. Page 78, David is made to say, Verily, verily, thus saith the Lord, It was for my purpose, yea a wise purpose, that the world and my church should not know, speaking after your manner of language, for my church for a time did not do well on earth, speaking of the righteousness of the church of Christ.

Contrast this revelation with the one given by Moroni to Joseph, in the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Messenger and Advocate of the Church of Latter Day Saints, Vol. ii. No. 1, page 199. "When they (the plates) are interpreted the Lord will give the holy priesthood to some, and they shall begin to proclaim this gospel and baptize by water, and after that they shall have power to give the Holy Ghost by the laying on of their hands. Then will persecution rage more and more, for the iniquities of men shall be revealed, and those who are not built upon the rock will seek to overthrow this church; but it will increase the more opposed, and spread farther and farther, increasing in knowledge till they shall be sanctified and receive an inheritance where the glory of God shall rest upon them." We now challenge Wm. E. McLellin, David Whitmer and all other men in the world to produce one sentence of prophesy or doctrine in all the revealed word of God to us that when the stone cut out of the mountain or kingdom of God that should be established in the last days should cease to exist until the kingdom of this world should become the kingdom of our Lord. I am glad that the Dr. has ventured to give us prophesy by revelation. Page 71, Ensign of Liberty. If the Dr. means his church of Christ, alias McLellinism, I will venture to set a revelation over against it: "Thus saith the prophet Austin, Verily, verily the body of McLellinism shall soon be dissolved, its spirit shall return to hell or hades, from whence it came, and the Lord shall have its author in derision, and the saints shall have him in remembrance in shame and everlasting contempt." And now, James M. Adams, a soft word with you for your charitable letter to the Dr. You pretend to give the evidence of signs as testimony of the truth of Mc.'s system of religion. To this I oppose the testimony of thousands in Nauvoo, that anti-christian church. I myself have seen the nerves of one shaking with the ague like an aspen leaf, perfectly quieted while the hands of the elders were yet on his head. A month perhaps would not be time sufficient for the then inhabitants of that city to recount the marvelous works that God had wrought for them as individuals. And for truth and veracity they would bear a comparison with any of the doctor's disciples in Voree, if indeed the Dr.'s veracity is a standard for theirs. And now, to conclude, as we fearlessly say the Dr. nor any of his clan (after your manner of speaking) dare meet us in public in defence of his religious course. The invitation is extended to Voree and elsewhere, wherever a McLellinite may be found on this land; either that each shall pay his own postage and read the arguments of his opponent and his own in the public congregation. AUSTIN COWLES.

☞ The McLellinites here could hardly comply with these terms. They have no congregation.

for years under the teaching of the order of establishing the kingdom of God,—these men who have taught for years that when the church of God is not on the earth (as they say it was not at the time they received the notable revelation) that it requires a revelation of priesthood and the administration of the ordinances of baptism, confirmation and ordination to re-establish the church anew. Now having taught these principles for years, these same men, together with one or two women—hear it all ye saints—these men, on the 10th day of Feb., 1847, get the intelligence to discern the true principles how to build up the church as at the beginning.

Query.—Did these gentlemen understand how the church was built up at the beginning? And if they did, could they expect the Lord would build it on different principles anew? or does he change, and finding that he did not work by the right rule try a new one? Now as I profess to be in some measure a discerner of spirits, as well as a "would be prophet," I will illustrate the spirit and future history of Wm. E. McLellin, and if I fail in my reasoning then know that I am wanting in ability in my profession. Failing of a seat in the First Presidency in your organization, he (the Dr.) turns to David Whitmer as his last resort to obtain the pre-eminence.—He saw clearly that he could not place David in the chair of state without denying the whole authority of the church. This he could not do, but by denying his own and all the priesthood of all the witnesses of the Book of Mormon, all having membership in and acknowledging its authority after it was called the Church of Latter Day Saints. Hence the necessity of a new dispensation, which the Dr. and his associates obtained on the 10th of Feb., 1847, in the lying revelation to build the church or kingdom of God anew. And what is worse, if David is the Lord's seer referred to, Ensign No. 4 page 56, then has Wm. made David endorse a falsehood, when he says: "Therefore he shall continue to do all things according to the pattern I have shown to him."

But enough for the present to show that Wm. E. McLellin is doomed to shame and everlasting contempt in the minds of all the saints. But of things at present in Kirtland I guess that brother —— —— wrote the piece stating that in Kirtland the doctor's church did not number 42. This is true, the doctor to the contrary notwithstanding. His 42 members embraces not only Kirtland but other counties, and at least one other stake. "And they are all at peace and fellowship among themselves." Not exactly. Brother H. Aldrich, brother Crompton, brother A. Smith, brother Torrence, too honest to submit to his dictatorial and ambitious spirit,—we speak advisedly when we say they are not with him in spirit. The Dr. in one of his councils was heard to say: "Brethren, we cannot build up Kirtland." At another council, "we cannot do anything with them." We guess he referred to some of his members, as he has to call meetings to discipline Martin and Aaron. Brother Aldrich and Crompton will pay no attention to him in his call to order, as they believe his order is not of God.

In short, we have no idea that the doctor believes that David or Oliver or John Whitmer will attend his conference. And as a "would be prophet" I have long since prophesied that he would fall like Lucifer, (though not so far,) and that his future life is to procure his sustenance with the use of his profession as a physician, rather than the use of his lungs or the pushing of his quill for the use of the church. And to conclude, the Dr. has built his church on seven pillars, thus: 1st. The church changed its name. 2d. Lost its priesthood or authority to act as the church of Christ. 3d. Refused the name of the church of Christ. 4th. Joseph lost his authority, but the ordination of David was valid. 5th. The right of David to lead the church a true position. 6th. That the foregoing propositions are true doctrines. 7th. That it is the prerogative of Wm. E. McLellin to get a revelation by way of pattern for the church. I take the negative of the foregoing propositions, and invite Dr. Wm. E. McLellin or any of his disciples to respond in public with me in the affirmative. AUSTIN COWLES.

P. S. Since writing the above the doctor's fifth Ensign has made its appearance, and such a catalogue of absurdities and contradictions as his Ensign contains, even over his own signature, may no longer remain without exposure. I will give the pages in his Ensign where a few of them may be found. Page 5, "Christ takes his name out of the church, and consequently his authority to act in the church, otherwise called priesthood." Page 68, "ministers in the church of Christ, when it changed its character and name, destroy their authority only by their own transgressions."—Same page, "in process of time all turned away from the Lord (or polluted their priesthood) and built up themselves." Same page, "all those who have been ministers in the church and have not defiled their holy authority (or priesthood) who may unite with us will have the privilege of an equal or superior priesthood than they held before." Page 48; "our voice to all the true hearted who have not defiled themselves or their priesthood, come go with us." Page 50, "all laws for regulating the body or church to be given through the president—the head—the seer. Hence a law for the action or regulation of the body coming through any other officer or minister is not to be received or acted upon by the church." Page 54, "we were settled in our minds that the time had come for the church to come forth the second time out of obscurity." Page 55, "we were out of the church of Christ—we were out of the church of God." Page 56, "we thank and magnify the name of the Lord God who revealed himself to all holy men since the world began, who called upon him in faith as we did, and he gave to us (seven Gentiles) the pattern by which we could go forward and act, and thus build up the church unto the Lord and not to man."

And in order that the saints may believe that lying revelation the Dr., it seems, has persuaded David, the Lord's seer, to endorse it thus: Same page, "therefore he shall continue to do all things according to the pattern I have shown to him." Sec. xiv. p. 2. No revelations or commandments to be received for the church through any save they are legally appointed and ordained. We ask David whether the Lord was mistaken in that saying, or himself and Wm. E. McLellin are found false witnesses before God? One more of David's false positions and I leave him for the present. Page 78, David is made to say, Verily, verily, thus saith the Lord, It was for my purpose, yea a wise purpose, that the world and my church should not know, speaking after your manner of language, for my church for a time did not do well on earth, speaking of the righteousness of the church of Christ.

Contrast this revelation with the one given by Moroni to Joseph, in the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Messenger and Advocate of the Church of Latter Day Saints, Vol. ii. No. 1, page 199. "When they (the plates) are interpreted the Lord will give the holy priesthood to some, and they shall begin to proclaim this gospel and baptize by water, and after that they shall have power to give the Holy Ghost by the laying on of their hands. Then will persecution rage more and more, for the iniquities of men shall be revealed, and those who are not built upon the rock will seek to overthrow this church; but it will increase the more opposed, and spread farther and farther, increasing in knowledge till they shall be sanctified and receive an inheritance where the glory of God shall rest upon them." We now challenge Wm. E. McLellin, David Whitmer and all other men in the world to produce one sentence of prophesy or doctrine in all the revealed word of God to us that when the stone cut out of the mountain or kingdom of God that should be established in the last days should cease to exist until the kingdom of this world should become the kingdom of our Lord. I am glad that the Dr. has ventured to give us prophesy by revelation. Page 71, Ensign of Liberty. If the Dr. means his church of Christ, alias McLellinism, I will venture to set a revelation over against it: "Thus saith the prophet Austin, Verily, verily the body of McLellinism shall soon be dissolved, its spirit shall return to hell or hades, from whence it came, and the Lord shall have its author in derision, and the saints shall have him in remembrance in shame and everlasting contempt." And now, James M. Adams, a soft word with you for your charitable letter to the Dr. You pretend to give the evidence of signs as testimony of the truth of Mc.'s system of religion. To this I oppose the testimony of thousands in Nauvoo, that anti-christian church. I myself have seen the nerves of one shaking with the ague like an aspen leaf, perfectly quieted while the hands of the elders were yet on his head. A month perhaps would not be time sufficient for the then inhabitants of that city to recount the marvelous works that God had wrought for them as individuals. And for truth and veracity they would bear a comparison with any of the doctor's disciples in Voree, if indeed the Dr.'s veracity is a standard for theirs. And now, to conclude, as we fearlessly say the Dr. nor any of his clan (after your manner of speaking) dare meet us in public in defence of his religious course. The invitation is extended to Voree and elsewhere, wherever a McLellinite may be found on this land; either that each shall pay his own postage and read the arguments of his opponent and his own in the public congregation. AUSTIN COWLES.

☞ The McLellinites here could hardly comply with these terms. They have no congregation.

THE CHARTISTS OF ENGLAND.

The startling news by the last steamer from London has drawn attention from the volatile, enthusiastic Frank, the simple hearted Germans, to the state of the Anglo-Saxon. All eyes now are upon the chartists of Great Britain, and their allies the repealers of Ireland. Unless there is yielding somewhere, London bids fair to follow in the wake of Paris, Vienna and Berlin. The position assumed by five millions of such material as the chartists, may well cause Victoria to retire from her palace, and the oligarchs, who have so long oppressed them to tremble in their seats of power. What the next news may be no one can tell.

But who are the chartists? What do they demand? In what condition are they to enforce their claims?

The first question Carlyle answers as follows:—"Chartism means the bitter discontent grown fierce and mad, the wrong condition, therefore, or the wrong dispensation, of the working classes of England." This discontent arises from such enormous extortions by a landed aristocracy as turn every third man into a pauper; it arises from foul injustice; from long denial of right; the scorn of a capacity, the worth, the deplorable condition of the working masses. If capatalists employ them, it is at the starvation point of wages; and when they cease to do it, the poor down trodden mechanic sees before himself and little ones, only the workhouse or the grave. Such are the chartists—they are the substance of the British nation.

Now what is chartism—or the political ideas this class demand shall be realized in government? Their belief is that the social evils under which they labor spring from class legislation; and as means of procuring a thorough removal of these evils, they demand the adoption of a document they have among them called "The peoples' Charter." This would afford a radical change in the constitution of Great Britain. For years they have demanded that this change be brought about peacefully. But their demands have been treated with contempt.

One of the greatest demonstrations took place in 1842, when their petition, signed by 3,315,752 of the industrial population of Great Britain was presented to the house of commons. It was carried on a frame work of oak by thirty-three men, having written on it, "The Charter—The People's Right," and an immense procession followed it bearing banners with the inscriptions, "The Sovereignty of the People," "No Surrender," "Liberty," "More pigs and less parsons," "Universal suffrage." All in the procession bore a tri-colored rosette and a tri-colored scarf. In this way was as righteous a demand as three million of people ever made borne to the constituted authorities. In this way in peace in order, did three millions of people respectfully ask justice at the hands of the oligarchy—a mere handful of men no better than themselves—who so unmercifully eat their substance.

This petition is long, able, American in its tone, just in its main demands. It presents in fearful contrast, the expense of royalty and the living of the people. The six points of the "Peoples' Charter" are, 1. A representation of the whole population of the kingdom. 2. The right of voting by ballot. 3. Annual elections of members of parliament. 4. The abolition of the test of property qualification to constitute membership. 5. Payment of members of parliament. 6. The division of the country into equal electoral districts. Such are the demands of the chartists of England.

In proof that the people are not represented, the petition states that out of twenty-six millions of people only nine hundred thousand are permitted to vote at all: and to prove that what there is of representation is grossly unequal, it states:—

"That the existing states of representation is not only extremely limited and unjust, but unequally divided, and gives preponderating influence to the landed and moneyed interests to the utter ruin of the small trading and laboring classes.

That the borough of Guildford with a population of 4,920, returns to parliament as many members as the Tower Hamlets, with a population of 300,000; Evesham, with a population of 2,998, elects as many representatives as Manchester, with a population of 200,000; and Buckingham, Evesham, Totness, Guildford, Honiton and Bridgeport with a total population of 23,000, returns as many representatives as Manchester, Finsbury, Tower Hamlets, Liverpool, Marylebone, and Lambeth, with a total population of 1,400,000! these being but a very few instances of the enormous inequalities existing in what is called the representatives of this country."

It arrays the luxury of royalty on one hand and the poverty of the working classes on the other, as follows:—

"That your petitioners would direct the attention of your honorable house to the great disparity existing between the wages of the producing millions and the salaries of those whose comparative usefulness ought to be questioned, where riches and luxury prevail amongst the rulers, and poverty and starvation amongst the ruled.

That your petitioners, with all due respect and loyalty, would compare the daily income of the Sovereign Majesty with that of thousands of the working men of this nation; and whilst your petitioners have learned that her majesty receives daily for private use the sum of £164 17s 10d, (over $820,) they have also ascertained that many thousands of the families of the laborers are only in the receipt of 3½d per head per day.

That your petitioners have also learned that his royal highness Prince Albert receives each day the sum of £104 2s, (over $520,) whilst thousands have to subsist upon 3d per head per day.

That your petitioners have also heard with astonishment that the King of Hanover daily receives £57 10s, (over $285,) whilst thousands of the tax-payers of this empire live on 2¾d per head per day.

That your petitioners have, with pain and regret, also learned that the Archbishop of Canterbury is daily in the receipt of £52 10s, (over $260,) whilst thousands of the poor have to maintain their families upon an income not exceeding 2d per head per day.

That, notwithstanding the wretched and unparalleled condition of the people, your honorable house has manifested no disposition to curtail the expenses of the state, to diminish taxation, or promote general prosperity."

The collision with the government, unless one side or the other yields, will be precisely the same as that in France, namely: on the right of the people to hold public meetings. On this vital point this petition holds the following language:—

"That your petitioners know that it is the undoubted constitutional right of the people to meet freely, when, how, and where they choose, in public places, peaceably, in the day, to discuss their grievances, and political or other subjects, or for the purpose of framing, discussing, or passing any vote, petition, or remonstrance upon any subject whatsoever.

That your petitioners complain that the right has unlawfully and unconstitutionally been infringed; and 500 well disposed persons have been arrested, excessive bail demanded, tried by packed juries, sentenced to imprisonment, and treated as felons of the worst description.

That an unconstitutional police force is distributed all over the country, at enormous cost, to prevent the due exercise of the people's rights. And your petitioners are of opinion that the poor law bastile and the police stations, being co-existent, have originated from the same cause, viz: the increased desire on the part of the irresponsible few to oppress and starve the many."

The clause in the the petition relating to a church establishment is as follows:—

"That your petitioners complain that upwards of nine millions of pounds ($45,000,000) per annum are unjustly abstracted from them to maintain a church establishment, from which they principally dissent; and beg to call the attention of your honorable house to the fact, that this enormous sum is equal to, if it does not exceed, the cost of upholding christianity in all parts of the world beside.—Your petitioners complain that it is unjust, and not in accordance with the christian religion, to enforce compulsory support of religious creeds and expensive church establishments, with which the people do not agree.

That your petitioners direct the attention of your honorable house to the enormous revenue annually swallowed up by the bishops and the clergy, and entreat you to contrast their deeds with the conduct of the founder of the christian religion, who denounced worshippers of mammon, and taught charity, meekness and brotherly love."

This petition was presented in 1842, debated during several sessions, and its demands rejected. The three millions were not even allowed to appear at the bar of the house of commons.

Nearly six years have rolled away, and the same great demands are again made, not by THREE MILLIONS of the working classes, but by FIVE MILLIONS. They have prepared a new petition, less offensive to royalty, but more concise and powerful. They propose to present in the same way they did the other. But, though the scenes of the attempted suppression of the reform banquets are plain before the eyes of the British ministry, the government have forbidden the chartists to march through the streets!

Such are the main points of the demands of the chartists. In one of their paragraphs they say they "are of opinion that when representation is denied, taxation ought to be resisted." Such was the

THE CHARTISTS OF ENGLAND.

The startling news by the last steamer from London has drawn attention from the volatile, enthusiastic Frank, the simple hearted Germans, to the state of the Anglo-Saxon. All eyes now are upon the chartists of Great Britain, and their allies the repealers of Ireland. Unless there is yielding somewhere, London bids fair to follow in the wake of Paris, Vienna and Berlin. The position assumed by five millions of such material as the chartists, may well cause Victoria to retire from her palace, and the oligarchs, who have so long oppressed them to tremble in their seats of power. What the next news may be no one can tell.

But who are the chartists? What do they demand? In what condition are they to enforce their claims?

The first question Carlyle answers as follows:—"Chartism means the bitter discontent grown fierce and mad, the wrong condition, therefore, or the wrong dispensation, of the working classes of England." This discontent arises from such enormous extortions by a landed aristocracy as turn every third man into a pauper; it arises from foul injustice; from long denial of right; the scorn of incapacity, the worth, the deplorable condition of the working masses. If capatalists employ them, it is at the starvation point of wages; and when they cease to do it, the poor down trodden mechanic sees before himself and little ones, only the workhouse or the grave. Such are the chartists—they are the substance of the British nation.

Now what is chartism—or the political ideas this class demand shall be realized in government? Their belief is that the social evils under which they labor spring from class legislation; and as means of procuring a thorough removal of these evils, they demand the adoption of a document they have among them called "The peoples' Charter." This would afford a radical change in the constitution of Great Britain. For years they have demanded that this change be brought about peacefully. But their demands have been treated with contempt.

One of the greatest demonstrations took place in 1842, when their petition, signed by 3,315,752 of the industrial population of Great Britain was presented to the house of commons. It was carried on a frame work of oak by thirty-three men, having written on it, "The Charter—The People's Right," and an immense procession followed it bearing banners with the inscriptions, "The Sovereignty of the People," "No Surrender," "Liberty," "More pigs and less parsons," "Universal suffrage." All in the procession bore a tri-colored rosette and a tri-colored scarf. In this way was as righteous a demand as three million of people ever made borne to the constituted authorities. In this way in peace in order, did three millions of people respectfully ask justice at the hands of the oligarchy—a mere handful of men no better than themselves—who so unmercifully eat their substance.

This petition is long, able, American in its tone, just in its main demands. It presents in fearful contrast, the expense of royalty and the living of the people. The six points of the "Peoples' Charter" are, 1. A representation of the whole population of the kingdom. 2. The right of voting by ballot. 3. Annual elections of members of parliament. 4. The abolition of the test of property qualification to constitute membership. 5. Payment of members of parliament. 6. The division of the country into equal electoral districts. Such are the demands of the chartists of England.

In proof that the people are not represented, the petition states that out of twenty-six millions of people only nine hundred thousand are permitted to vote at all: and to prove that what there is of representation is grossly unequal, it states:—

"That the existing states of representation is not only extremely limited and unjust, but unequally divided, and gives preponderating influence to the landed and moneyed interests to the utter ruin of the small trading and laboring classes.

That the borough of Guildford with a population of 4,920, returns to parliament as many members as the Tower Hamlets, with a population of 300,000; Evesham, with a population of 2,998, elects as many representatives as Manchester, with a population of 200,000; and Buckingham, Evesham, Totness, Guildford, Honiton and Bridgeport with a total population of 23,000, returns as many representatives as Manchester, Finsbury, Tower Hamlets, Liverpool, Marylebone, and Lambeth, with a total population of 1,400,000! These being but a very few instances of the enormous inequalities existing in what is called the representatives of this country."

It arrays the luxury of royalty on one hand and the poverty of the working classes on the other, as follows:—.

"That your petitioners would direct the attention of your honorable house to the great disparity existing between the wages of the producing millions and the salaries of those whose comparative usefulness ought to be questioned, where riches and luxury prevail amongst the rulers, and poverty and starvation amongst the ruled.

That your petitioners, with all due respect and loyalty, would compare the daily income of the Sovereign Majesty with that of thousands of the working men of this nation; and whilst your petitioners have learned that her majesty receives daily for private use the sum of £164 17s 10d, (over $820,) they have also ascertained that many thousands of the families of the laborers are only in the receipt of 3½d per head per day.

That your petitioners have also learned that his royal highness Prince Albert receives each day the sum of £104 2s, (over $520,) whilst thousands have to subsist upon 3d per head per day.

That your petitioners have also heard with astonishment that the King of Hanover daily receives £57 10s, (over $285,) whilst thousands of the tax-payers of this empire live on 2¾d per head per day.

That your petitioners have, with pain and regret, also learned that the Archbishop of Canterbury is daily in the receipt of £52 10s, (over $260,) whilst thousands of the poor have to maintain their families upon an income not exceeding 2d per head per day.

That, notwithstanding the wretched and unparalleled condition of the people, your honorable house has manifested no disposition to curtail the expenses of the state, to diminish taxation, or promote general prosperity."

The collision with the government, unless one side or the other yields, will be precisely the same as that in France, namely: on the right of the people to hold public meetings. On this vital point this petition holds the following language:—

"That your petitioners know that it is the undoubted constitutional right of the people to meet freely, when, how, and where they choose, in public places, peaceably, in the day, to discuss their grievances, and political or other subjects, or for the purpose of framing, discussing, or passing any vote, petition, or remonstrance upon any subject whatsoever.

That your petitioners complain that the right has unlawfully and unconstitutionally been infringed; and 500 well disposed persons have been arrested, excessive bail demanded, tried by packed juries, sentenced to imprisonment, and treated as felons of the worst description.

That an unconstitutional police force is distributed all over the country, at enormous cost, to prevent the due exercise of the people's rights. And your petitioners are of opinion that the poor law bastile and the police stations, being co-existent, have originated from the same cause, viz: the increased desire on the part of the irresponsible few to oppress and starve the many."

The clause in the the petition relating to a church establishment is as follows:—

"That your petitioners complain that upwards of nine millions of pounds ($45,000,000) per annum are unjustly abstracted from them to maintain a church establishment, from which they principally dissent; and beg to call the attention of your honorable house to the fact, that this enormous sum is equal to, if it does not exceed, the cost of upholding christianity in all parts of the world beside.—Your petitioners complain that it is unjust, and not in accordance with the christian religion, to enforce compulsory support of religious creeds and expensive church establishments, with which the people do not agree.

That your petitioners direct the attention of your honorable house to the enormous revenue annually swallowed up by the bishops and the clergy, and entreat you to contrast their deeds with the conduct of the founder of the christian religion, who denounced worshippers of mammon, and taught charity, meekness and brotherly love."

This petition was presented in 1842, debated during several sessions, and its demands rejected. The three millions were not even allowed to appear at the bar of the house of commons.

Nearly six years have rolled away, and the same great demands are again made, not by THREE MILLIONS of the working classes, but by FIVE MILLIONS. They have prepared a new petition, less offensive to royalty, but more concise and powerful. They propose to present in the same way they did the other. But, though the scenes of the attempted suppression of the reform banquets are plain before the eyes of the British ministry, the government have forbidden the chartists to march through the streets!

Such are the main points of the demands of the chartists. In one of their paragraphs they say they "are of opinion that when representation is denied, taxation ought to be resisted." Such was the American ground in 1775. It was for this principle that three millions of people took up arms. Accumulated wrongs press upon the chartists—the working classes—of England, and there is every indication now that their deep hatred of their oppressors will find a terrible vent in revolution. The next arrival from England will be looked for with thrilling interest.—Republican (Me.) Journal.

"They received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

It would be difficult to embody more truth in the same number of words than Paul has in the foregoing paragraph. We know a family in this vicinity who, though they acknowledged the truth, received not the love of it; and taking pleasure in plunderings and fleshly lusts, not only believe every favorable word the Brighamites write to them, but when we point out to them Brigham's description of the Salt Valley, showing that it is a mere desert, say "that is good enough for the Gentiles, and was written to keep them away." That will do. Delusion could not go further.

Philadelphia, April 30th, 1848.

Dearly Beloved Brother Strang:—My love for you and the cause daily increases. I long to see you and brother Page. O that I could enjoy your society for a season. It truly would be a source of pleasure to me. I look back to the day when I sat under the sound of the prophet Joseph, and received the word of the Lord pure from the celestial fountain. It makes me long to be where the keys and powers of the priesthood are, but I must say not my will, but thine, O Lord, be done. The church in this place is firm in the faith. There are six high priests, five or ten elders and several that are worthy of the priesthood. There are several willing to go forth and obey the gospel, but Satan has hindered them. Now, brother Strang, I request of you in the name of the Lord to send brother Page or a faithful elder that would be willing to preach the gospel for the gospels' sake. If we knew brother Page would come, we could send the money to him to bear his expenses to this place.—I tell you a good elder can be fed and clothed and get money, if he proves himself worthy by a godly walk. Brother Hess sends his love to you. He is a good man. Bro. Haven starts with his family for Voree in two weeks. He is the brother that was afflicted in his head when you was here. You laid hands on him. He is a worthy brother, and is well. I remain as ever your friend in the new and everlasting covenant,

JACOB SYFRITT.

Pittsburgh, April 18th, 1848.

President J. J. Strang:—

Dear Brother,—I inclose the receipt of shipment of the box of paper and books, which I hope may arrive safe. I am glad to be able to say that the gathering is being understood and appreciated by the few reflecting saints here. The cry of liberty, equality and fraternity, which comes booming across the Atlantic, has awakened many to reflection upon the subject of fraternal union. And those who have not learned, must yet be taught that the righteousness of obedience to God's unwritten law is the only system of equal fraternal national liberty. I have time to write but a few lines at this time. Bro. James Smith, as well as myself, wish to know if you received our letter, and if you will come this way we will pay your expenses. If you cannot come, please write us a line directed to either of us, as we enjoy our pleasures of friendship together, and hope the time will soon come when we may have the honor of including in our social intimacies our much esteemed President, and all those men of truth associated with him. We enjoy usual good health, and are, as we believe, progressing in the knowledge of the law of God. With every wish for your health and prosperity with the church of God at Voree, we are dear brother most affectionately yours,

JAMES M. GREIG.

New Bedford, March 23d, 1848.

Brother Strang:— ——— Will you explain in your paper that part of the revelation in D. & C. sec. civ. p. 12, which speaks of the power of the priesthood given to the Twelve for the last days and last time.

BENJAMIN DEXTER.

The following is the paragraph referred to above:—

"For unto you (the twelve) and those (the first presidency) who are appointed with you to be your counselors and your leaders, is the power of this priesthood given for the last days and for the last time, in the which is the dispensation of the fullness of times, which power you hold in connection with all those who have received a dispensation at any time from the beginning of the creation: for verily I say unto you the keys of the dispensation which ye have received, have come down from the fathers; and last of all, being sent down from heaven unto you."

☞ We do not understand what particular point brother Dexter's question is intended to raise. Sec. civ. is a revelation to the Pres. of the Twelve, given at a time when the quorum of the Twelve were many of them in rebellion against the First Presidency, (July 23d, 1837,) and some of them joining in measures to build up a church without a First Presidency. The revelation contains not only a rebuke to them for this usurpation, but the fundamental law concerning the nature and relation of their priesthood. Par. 7 shows that the keys of the opening of the gospel in all places where the First Presidency cannot come are given to the Twelve, and that no man receives God (that is receives the word and authority of God) except those who receive the First Presidency. Par. 11 forbids the Twelve to meddle with the affairs of the church at the seat of the Presidency. Finally, par. 12 shows that the keys of the dispensation and the power of the priesthood, for the fullness of times and for he last time, is committed to the Twelve as ministers, and the First Presidency as leaders; and consequently that these priesthoods are essential in the church. [Ed.

☞ There will be a sale of lands on Big Beaver Island, held at the U. S. land office at Sault St. Marie, early in August. The other islands in the group will not be brought into market for some years to come.

The State of Wisconsin.—The constitution of Wisconsin has been adopted, and a State government elected. It only wants the action of the Congress of the U. S. to make Wisconsin one of the States of the Union. In this work the saints have had very little to do, and we think had they done nothing it would have been well. Our opinion is now as heretofore, that the saints have nothing to do with elections, not so much as to vote. At the late election of State officers Oliver Cowdery, one of the witnesses of the Book of Mormon, was the regular candidate of the Democratic party for member of Assembly, though not in the district where the saints reside, and was defeated solely on the ground of Mormonism. His capacity and worth was admitted, but he had been a Mormon. Indeed he was worse used than the active members of the church; for here they are elected to office, though none of them attend caucuses or elections. We regret his defeat, because it was accomplished by wicked means, and as he has rejected the pretensions of various usurpers in the church, and maintained the integrity of his testimony, and settled down in the immediate neighborhood of the true church, we think he would do well to say "Othello's occupation is returned.

DIED,

At Elgin, Ill., on the 15th inst., Bro. David Tripp, aged 81 years.

American ground in 1775. It was for this principle that three millions of people took up arms. Accumulated wrongs press upon the chartists—the working classes—of England, and there is every indication now that their deep hatred of their oppressors will find a terrible vent in revolution. The next arrival from England will be looked for with thrilling interest.—Republican (Me.) Journal.

"They received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."

It would be difficult to embody more truth in the same number of words than Paul has in the foregoing paragraph. We know a family in this vicinity who, though they acknowledged the truth, received not the love of it; and taking pleasure in plunderings and fleshly lusts, not only believe every favorable word the Brighamites write to them, but when we point out to them Brigham's description of the Salt Valley, showing that it is a mere desert, say "that is good enough for the Gentiles, and was written to keep them away." That will do. Delusion could not go further.

Philadelphia, April 30th, 1848.

Dearly Beloved Brother Strang:—My love for you and the cause daily increases. I long to see you and brother Page. O that I could enjoy your society for a season. It truly would be a source of pleasure to me. I look back to the day when I sat under the sound of the prophet Joseph, and received the word of the Lord pure from the celestial fountain. It makes me long to be where the keys and powers of the priesthood are, but I must say not my will, but thine, O Lord, be done. The church in this place is firm in the faith. There are six high priests, five or ten elders and several that are worthy of the priesthood. There are several willing to go forth and obey the gospel, but Satan has hindered them. Now, brother Strang, I request of you in the name of the Lord to send brother Page or a faithful elder that would be willing to preach the gospel for the gospels' sake. If we knew brother Page would come, we could send the money to him to bear his expenses to this place.—I tell you a good elder can be fed and clothed and get money, if he proves himself worthy by a godly walk. Brother Hess sends his love to you. He is a good man. Bro. Haven starts with his family for Voree in two weeks. He is the brother that was afflicted in his head when you was here. You laid hands on him. He is a worthy brother, and is well. I remain as ever your friend in the new and everlasting covenant,

JACOB SYFRITT.

Pittsburgh, April 18th, 1848.

President J. J. Strang:—

Dear Brother,—I inclose the receipt of shipment of the box of paper and books, which I hope may arrive safe. I am glad to be able to say that the gathering is being understood and appreciated by the few reflecting saints here. The cry of liberty, equality and fraternity, which comes booming across the Atlantic, has awakened many to reflection upon the subject of fraternal union. And those who have not learned, must yet be taught that the righteousness of obedience to God's unwritten law is the only system of equal fraternal national liberty. I have time to write but a few lines at this time. Bro. James Smith, as well as myself, wish to know if you received our letter, and if you will come this way we will pay your expenses. If you cannot come, please write us a line directed to either of us, as we enjoy our pleasures of friendship together, and hope the time will soon come when we may have the honor of including in our social intimacies our much esteemed President, and all those men of truth associated with him. We enjoy usual good health, and are, as we believe, progressing in the knowledge of the law of God. With every wish for your health and prosperity with the church of God at Voree, we are dear brother most affectionately yours,

JAMES M. GREIG.

New Bedford, March 23d, 1848.

Brother Strang:— ——— Will you explain in your paper that part of the revelation in D. & C. sec. civ. p. 12, which speaks of the power of the priesthood given to the Twelve for the last days and last time.

BENJAMIN DEXTER.

The following is the paragraph referred to above:—

"For unto you (the twelve) and those (the first presidency) who are appointed with you to be your counselors and your leaders, is the power of this priesthood given for the last days and for the last time, in the which is the dispensation of the fullness of times, which power you hold in connection with all those who have received a dispensation at any time from the beginning of the creation: for verily I say unto you the keys of the dispensation which ye have received, have come down from the fathers; and last of all, being sent down from heaven unto you."

☞ We do not understand what particular point brother Dexter's question is intended to raise. Sec. civ. is a revelation to the Pres. of the Twelve, given at a time when the quorum of the Twelve were many of them in rebellion against the First Presidency, (July 23d, 1837,) and some of them joining in measures to build up a church without a First Presidency. The revelation contains not only a rebuke to them for this usurpation, but the fundamental law concerning the nature and relation of their priesthood. Par. 7 shows that the keys of the opening of the gospel in all places where the First Presidency cannot come are given to the Twelve, and that no man receives God (that is receives the word and authority of God) except those who receive the First Presidency. Par. 11 forbids the Twelve to meddle with the affairs of the church at the seat of the Presidency. Finally, par. 12 shows that the keys of the dispensation and the power of the priesthood, for the fullness of times for the last time, is committed to the Twelve as ministers, and the First Presidency as leaders; and consequently that these priesthoods are essential in the church. [Ed.

☞ There will be a sale of lands on Big Beaver Island, held at the U. S. land office at Sault St. Marie, early in August. The other islands in the group will not be brought into market for some years to come.

The State of Wisconsin.—The constitution of Wisconsin has been adopted, and a State government elected. It only wants the action of the Congress of the U. S. to make Wisconsin one of the States of the Union. In this work the saints have had very little to do, and we think had they done nothing it would have been well. Our opinion is now as heretofore, that the saints have nothing to do with elections, not so much as to vote. At the late election of State officers Oliver Cowdery, one of the witnesses of the Book of Mormon, was the regular candidate of the Democratic party for member of Assembly, though not in the district where the saints reside, and was defeated solely on the ground of Mormonism. His capacity and worth was admitted, but he had been a Mormon. Indeed he was worse used than the active members of the church; for here they are elected to office, though none of them attend caucuses or elections. We regret his defeat, because it was accomplished by wicked means, and as he has rejected the pretensions of various usurpers in the church, and maintained the integrity of his testimony, and settled down in the immediate neighborhood of the true church, we think he would do well to say "Othello's occupation is returned.

DIED,

At Elgin, Ill., on the 15th inst., Bro. David Tripp, aged 21 years.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 10.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1848. [WHOLE No. 74.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

YUCATAN.

The Indians in Yucatan have taken up arms against the white inhabitants, and are destroying them without mercy. The oppression which has been heaped upon these Indians has scarcely a parallel in the annals of man's tyranny, and a fearful vengeance they are taking. Man, woman and child, infant and suckling are alike destroyed—man and beast together. The civilization, the courage and the tactics of the European; his strong holds, his walled cities, the serried ranks of his infantry, the tramp of his cavalry, the thunder of his artillery, and the towering strength of his castles have all failed him in the hour of his greatest need. The land which was once all the property of the Indian is again returning to him. For three centuries Japheth has dwelt in the tents of Shem, but the time has now come when Jacob goes through among his oppressors as a young lion in the midst of the flocks, and there is none to deliver.

Mic. v. 7. "And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people as a dew from the Lord, as the showers upon the grass, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men.

8. And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep; who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

9. Thy hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off.

11. And I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy strong holds:

12. And I will cut off witchcrafts (sectarianism) out of thy land; and thou (the remnant of Jacob) shalt have no more soothsayers," (sectarian missionaries who made them slaves to the Spaniards.)

We would not, of course, be understood that all this will be accomplished in an hour, a day or a year. But this is the beginning of the end. How long it will be in accomplishing, time must tell. God has told the thing to those who are the subjects of it, and given them the signs of the times. The righteous foresee the evil and flee from it. But the nations will be blind till destruction comes upon them. When they fall Zion shall be redeemed. The proposition is before the U. S. government, and meets with favor in many quarters, for the U. S. to render assistance to the white inhabitants of Yucatan. Doubtless they do not know that our God has said: "When the Lord shall stretch out his hand, both he that helpeth shall fall and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fail together. For thus hath the Lord spoken: Like as a lion, and the young lion roaring on his prey, when a multitude of shepherds is called forth against him, he will not be afraid of their voice, nor abase himself for the noise of them; so shall the Lord of hosts come down to fight for mount Zion and for the hill thereof."

☞ Since the foregoing was written we have seen the message of President Polk on the affairs of Yucatan, and the debates in Congress on the subject. There is a strong prospect of interference.—Below is the speech of Mr. Root against interference:—

"Mr. Root said here was another clear case of sympathy; and it seemed like to take the course of other sympathetic questions, in having the House go off into immediate action, even before one of the documents on which they were to act had been read. Here was the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. J. R. Ingersoll] lashing himself and the House into a perfect tempest of sympathy for the people of Yucatan, and complaining because the government had not acted on the first suggestion addressed to it. Now Mr. R. was very much inclined to believe that we were sympathizing with the ARISTOCRACY of Yucatan, and were going to oppose the DEMOCRACY; if he rightly understood the matter, it was a case of the FEW opposing the MANY; of the aborigines of the country rising up for their NATURAL RIGHTS. This was the real state of things, so far as we had any information in regard to it. Now, if that was what was going on, he wanted to know what business we had to interfere?—Let the people of Yucatan take care of themselves. We had all been accustomed to sympathize with the people of South America in their struggles to resist the Spaniards who invaded and trampled on them: we were in the habit of admitting that they had a right to keep their oppressors out, and to turn them out when they came in; and Mr. R did not know that they had lost any of their original rights. Mr. R. would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Ingersoll,] that if our government acted in this matter at all, Yucatan, as a Mexican province, was gone, forever and for aye.—Let us once take military possession of the country, and act as its defender, and annexation was inevitable.

"Here were gentlemen opposed to the acquisition of territory of any kind, yet wishing that our army and our fleet should take military occupation of Yucatan. How could gentlemen be talking in this way? They might be very sincere; he did not doubt they were; but they were certainly not very logical.

"This was the third thing of the same kind that had been carried through that House on the wings of sympathy; and when all had been done, and the House came to wake up, and gentlemen began to rub their eyes, they found themselves in the midst of a war, and, he would add, of a national crime.

"What! were we to go out and aid the weaker party in every war all over the world? Oh, no; they did not mean that; but Mr. Monroe had committed us by his declaration in 1823. Aye! And what authority had Mr. Monroe to do any such thing? None at all. But it was sometimes very convenient, when gentlemen had a point to carry, to resort to some of Mr. Monroe's old musty letters. We had no business to interfere with the internal concerns of other nations. He would like to know whether any gentleman meant seriously to take the position that it was our duty as a nation of republicans, to take part with the aristocrats of Yucatan against "the democracy?"

"The Spaniards had invaded and conquered that country years ago, and had held on to their conquest until the democracy of the country, the wool hats and check shirts, had found out that they had rights, and were resolved to maintain them. They had, to be sure, disregarded to some extent the laws of Christian warfare; they had made rather free with their neighbor's property, and so did the blouses in France. They, too, had shown but little respect for the personal property of Louis Philippe; they had torn his old throne to pieces, and carried it about the streets—that thing so sacred in the eyes of every old aristocrat in the country; and yet we had expressed our sympathy with the blouses, and sent them our congratulations. And now we were called on to sympathize with the Spaniah aristocracy in a Mexican province! Oh, but then the Indian race were so inferior: be it so; were we, for that reason, to have no respect for their rights as the aborigines of the soil?—

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 10.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY, MAY 25, 1848. [WHOLE No. 74.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

YUCATAN.

The Indians in Yucatan have taken up arms against the white inhabitants, and are destroying them without mercy. The oppression which has been heaped upon these Indians has scarcely a parallel in the annals of man's tyranny, and a fearful vengeance they are taking. Man, woman and child, infant and suckling are alike destroyed—man and beast together. The civilization, the courage and the tactics of the European; his strong holds, his walled cities, the serried ranks of his infantry, the tramp of his cavalry, the thunder of his artillery, and the towering strength of his castles have all failed him in the hour of his greatest need. The land which was once all the property of the Indian is again returning to him. For three centuries Japheth has dwelt in the tents of Shem, but the time has now come when Jacob goes through among his oppressors as a young lion in the midst of the flocks, and there is none to deliver.

Mic. v. 7. "And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people as a dew from the Lord, as the showers upon the grass, that tarrieth not for man, nor waiteth for the sons of men.

8. And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles in the midst of many people as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flocks of sheep; who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

9. Thy hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off.

11. And I will cut off the cities of thy land, and throw down all thy strong holds:

12. And I will cut off witchcrafts (sectarianism) out of thy land; and thou (the remnant of Jacob) shalt have no more soothsayers," (sectarian missionaries who made them slaves to the Spaniards.)

We would not, of course, be understood that all this will be accomplished in an hour, a day or a year. But this is the beginning of the end. How long it will be in accomplishing, time must tell. God has told the thing to those who are the subjects of it, and given them the signs of the times. The righteous foresee the evil and flee from it. But the nations will be blind till destruction comes upon them. When they fall Zion shall be redeemed. The proposition is before the U. S. government, and meets with favor in many quarters, for the U. S. to render assistance to the white inhabitants of Yucatan. Doubtless they do not know that our God has said: "When the Lord shall stretch out his hand, both he that helpeth shall fall and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fail together. For thus hath the Lord spoken: Like as a lion, and the young lion roaring on his prey, when a multitude of shepherds is called forth against him, he will not be afraid of their voice, nor abase himself for the noise of them; so shall the Lord of hosts come down to fight for mount Zion and for the hill thereof."

☞ Since the foregoing was written we have seen the message of President Polk on the affairs of Yucatan, and the debates in Congress on the subject. There is a strong prospect of interference.—Below is the speech of Mr. Root against interference:—

"Mr. Root said here was another clear case of sympathy; and it seemed like to take the course of other sympathetic questions, in having the House go off into immediate action, even before one of the documents on which they were to act had been read. Here was the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. J. R. Ingersoll] lashing himself and the House into a perfect tempest of sympathy for the people of Yucatan, and complaining because the government had not acted on the first suggestion addressed to it. Now Mr. R. was very much inclined to believe that we were sympathizing with the ARISTOCRACY of Yucatan, and were going to oppose the DEMOCRACY; if he rightly understood the matter, it was a case of the FEW opposing the MANY; of the aborigines of the country rising up for their NATURAL RIGHTS. This was the real state of things, so far as we had any information in regard to it. Now, if that was what was going on, he wanted to know what business we had to interfere?—Let the people of Yucatan take care of themselves. We had all been accustomed to sympathize with the people of South America in their struggles to resist the Spaniards who invaded and trampled on them: we were in the habit of admitting that they had a right to keep their oppressors out, and to turn them out when they came in; and Mr. R did not know that they had lost any of their original rights. Mr. R. would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Ingersoll,] that if our government acted in this matter at all, Yucatan, as a Mexican province, was gone, forever and for aye.—Let us once take military possession of the country, and act as its defender, and annexation was inevitable.

"Here were gentlemen opposed to the acquisition of territory of any kind, not wishing that our army and our fleet should take military occupation of Yucatan. How could they vote in this way? They might be very sincere; he did not doubt they were; but they were certainly not very logical.

"This was the third thing of the same kind that had been carried through that House on the wings of sympathy; and when all had been done, and the House came to wake up, and gentlemen began to rub their eyes, they found themselves in the midst of a war, and, he would add, of a national crime.

"What! were we to go out and aid the weaker party in every war all over the world? Oh, no; they did not mean that; but Mr. Monroe had committed us by his declaration in 1823. Aye! And what authority had Mr. Monroe to do any such thing? None at all. But it was sometimes very convenient, when gentlemen had a point to carry, to resort to some of Mr. Monroe's old musty letters. We had no business to interfere with the internal concerns of other nations. He would like to know whether any gentleman meant seriously to take the position that it was our duty as a nation of republicans, to take part with the aristocrats of Yucatan against "the democracy?"

"The Spaniards had invaded and conquered that country years ago, and had held on to their conquest until the democracy of the country, the wool hats and check shirts, had found out that they had rights, and were resolved to maintain them. They had, to be sure, disregarded to some extent the laws of Christian warfare; they had made rather free with their neighbor's property, and so did the blouses in France. They, too, had shown but little respect for the personal property of Louis Philippe; they had torn his old throne to pieces, and carried it about the streets—that thing so sacred in the eyes of every old aristocrat in the country; and yet we had expressed our sympathy with the blouses, and sent them our congratulations. And now we were called on to sympathize with the Spanish aristocracy in a Mexican province! Oh, but then the Indian race were so inferior: be it so; were we, for that reason, to have no respect for their rights as the aborigines of the soil?—

Who were the Spaniards that were so infiinitely their superiors?—Mr. R. imagined they were about equal to Mexicans; and if there was anything under the face of heaven meaner than a Mexican "greaser," he should like to know it. He felt more like taking sides against such fellows than against the poor Indians. The Yucatanese might have begged us long enough for meat and flour, and we should not have sent them any, though we did feed the starving Irish; but when a little foreign faction that held all the rest of the population in BONDAGE cried out to us that they were no longer able to protect themselves against what he supposed gentlemen would style "a lawless mob," but who were, after all the "native Americans" in Yucatan, we were straitway to get up a most violent sympathy for them, and censure our own President and his Secretary of State for being so dilatory in not sending fleets and armies to help them. For what were we to send troops there? The true answer was, to get a large territory, and keep it as our own. These aristocrats were to surrender us the country if we would but attack the majority, who were cruelly oppressing them, the minority.—This seemed to be the only reason why we should attack the native Yucatanese, unless, indeed, it was on account of their color.

"It was just suggested to him by a gentleman from North Carolina, (Mr. Clingham,) that no doubt Louis Philippe would have been glad if we had sympathized on his side, and protected him against the blouses. No question of it. But who would have dared to propose that? If these Spaniards in Yucatan were not able to protect themselves against the natives whom they had so long governed and oppressed, why should we be called on to do it for them? Who was troubling them? Anybody from abroad?—Not at all. It was their own affair—a contest within the country between a FOREIGN FACTION and the NATIVES of the country.

"Mr. R. said he did not rejoice in bloodshed—he hated war.—He admitted there might at times be a neccssity for it; but the heart sickened at the thought of the carnage and misery that always followed; but we were not for that reason warranted in interfering between a petty faction and a majority of the inhabitants of another country. The Administration would never have had the remotest idea of going on a crusade of pure humanity to save the Yucatanese from being slaughtered had it not been for the hope of grabbing the country—of getting more territory. The gentleman from Pensylvania, he knew, had been actuated by no such motive; he had been perfectly sincere in his idea of what humanity required at our hands. That gentleman did not see that, if we once sent an army into Yucatan on the pretext of defending the inhabitants, we should retain the country forever; this that gentleman could not see. But Mr. R. would ask every other gentleman in that House whether, if we should once take such a step, we should not hold on to Yucatan as ours forever? Why, as soon as we had driven back the Indians, we should want to be indemnified for the expenses of the war—to be indemnified for our sympathy, our great charity and regard to the claims of humanity; and they would indemnify us as Mexico was going to do by yieldidg up their territory. It would be a dear intervention for the poor Indians.

"That country contained two distinct races, at war with each other; and we were called to take part with one of them, and to destroy their enemies. Now Mr. R. admitted that his sympathies were, first, in favor of the white race; but those who went on this ground must show him better samples of the white man than these Spaniards before they would get up his sympathies very high."

Brown county, Illinois, April 16th, 1848.

To JAMES J. STRANG:—I inclose two dollars for the Herald, and you will please send it till July next, when I intend to start for that country, if God will. Sir, I had thought that the Methodist discipline had capped the infernal regions, but I now think that the epistle of the apostate Twelve has uncapped them. And we may now look for the locusts to come forth, not with the teeth of lions, nor with the wings of dragons, but the wings of the American eagle, for protecting her rights where she had none, and we shall be stung by the locusts unless we have some assistance. Therefore you will please send us some good elder, or at least have some call as they pass by. I wish you would explain one commandment given to the church, to wit: A strict adherence to the counsel of those who are placed in authority, which has heretofore been taught by the authorities, also by G. W. in the Gospel Herald in a manner that has left the authorities without any limitation; and that in disobedience to this command had been the apostacy of men, angels and devils. True, sir, a disobeying this command has in its true light been the apostacy of many an individual, though never of the church universally, nor devils, neither the stars which fell from heaven. For Lucifer, the bright son of the morning, was highest in power save God, and the stars also being the princes of the hosts of heaven, therefore could not have fallen by disobeying this command, as taught by the Brighamites and continued down to us by G. W. But, to the contrary, fell for teaching it, in the same manner of the Brighamites; which has been continued down from Lucifer, and which leaves the authorities without any limits of power; to form or reform any principle as they see fit, making themselves gods. This has been the downfall of every church, kingdom and nation since the formation of man down to the present day.

By this commandment did the authorities of the Roman church sway the sceptre over the world. Neither do they, nor can they, claim the authority upon any other principle. At this time also our own church authorities by this command have, in the nineteenth century, blinded the eyes of the lay members, trod them down in tyranny and ruled them as with a rod of iron, until they built up Zion with blood and iniquity. For the heads went in for gain; the priests taught for hire; the prophets divined for money; yet leaned on the Lord and said, there can no harm come upon us. For this has the vengeance of an offended God been poured upon us, and we driven from place to place until the present time.

I remain your brother in the bonds of the everlasting covenant,

HIRAM JAQUES.

ANSWER.—Elder Phineas Wright, one of the Presidents of the Seventies, is going in that direction, and possibly may call on the brethren in Brown Co., Ill. If he cannot, we hope he will be able to send some other, whom he may find in his pilgrimage, willing to serve God instead of standing still till he finds a crowd to help him do his duty. One thing the brethren will have for their consolation, if they are not visited. The sting of a Brighamite will not hurt a healthy constitution.

Brother Jaques has entirely mistaken the doctrine of submitting to authority, and made a wrong application of it to divers apostacies to which he refers. Beginning with the apostacies of angels: their apostacy consisted in refusing the authority of God, who was the common superior of all. Lucifer headed the rebellion, disregarding the command of God, his immediate superior; and the rest who fell with him followed the commands of a subordinate, rather than the superior, just as the Brighamites followed the commands of the apostles, who are subordinate, and had not in fact one whit of authority in a stake; and rejected the authority of Presidents, who are superior to them, and had a right to command them. In that very case which brother Jaques has referred to, as an instance of apostacy by obeying commandments of the authorities, the revelation D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 13 shows in the strongest terms that it was necessary for them to obey the voice of their leaders to avoid being driven. The words are:

"And if my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place. But if they will not hearken to my voice, nor unto the voice of these men whom I have appointed, they shall not be blest, because they pollute mine holy grounds, and mine holy ordinances, and charters, and my holy words, which I give unto them."

These words subject them to two distinct duties: 1st. To obey the commandments of God; and, 2d. To obey the commandments of the men he had set in authority over them. The keeping of both

Who were the Spaniards that were so infiinitely their superiors?—Mr. R. imagined they were about equal to Mexicans; and if there was anything under the face of heaven meaner than a Mexican "greaser," he should like to know it. He felt more like taking sides against such fellows than against the poor Indians. The Yucatanese might have begged us long enough for meat and flour, and we should not have sent them any, though we did feed the starving Irish; but when a little foreign faction that held all the rest of the population in BONDAGE cried out to us that they were no longer able to protect themselves against what he supposed gentlemen would style "a lawless mob," but who were, after all the "native Americans" in Yucatan, we were straitway to get up a most violent sympathy for them, and censure our own President and his Secretary of State for being so dilatory in not sending fleets and armies to help them. For what were we to send troops there? The true answer was, to get a large territory, and keep it as our own. These aristocrats were to surrender us the country if we would but attack the majority, who were cruelly oppressing them, the minority.—This seemed to be the only reason why we should attack the native Yucatanese, unless, indeed, it was on account of their color.

"It was just suggested to him by a gentleman from North Carolina, (Mr. Clingham,) that no doubt Louis Philippe would have been glad if we had sympathized on his side, and protected him against the blouses. No question of it. But who would have dared to propose that? If these Spaniards in Yucatan were not able to protect themselves against the natives whom they had so long governed and oppressed, why should we be called on to do it for them? Who was troubling them? Anybody from abroad?—Not at all. It was their own affair—a contest within the country between a FOREIGN FACTION and the NATIVES of the country.

"Mr. R. said he did not rejoice in bloodshed—he hated war.—He admitted there might at times be a necessity for it; but the heart sickened at the thought of the carnage and misery that always followed; but we were not for that reason warranted in interfering between a petty faction and a majority of the inhabitants of another country. The Administration would never have had the remotest idea of going on a crusade of pure humanity to save the Yucatanese from being slaughtered had it not been for the hope of grabbing the country—of getting more territory. The gentleman from Pensylvania, he knew, had been actuated by no such motive; he had been perfectly sincere in his idea of what humanity required at our hands. That gentleman did not see that, if we once sent an army into Yucatan on the pretext of defending the inhabitants, we should retain the country forever: this that gentleman could not see. But Mr. R. would ask every other gentleman in that House whether, if we should once take such a step, we should not hold on to Yucatan as ours forever? Why, as soon as we had driven back the Indians, we should want to be indemnified for the expenses of the war—to be indemnified for our sympathy, our great charity and regard to the claims of humanity; and they would indemnify us as Mexico was going to do by yieldidg up their territory. It would be a dear intervention for the poor Indians.

"That country contained two distinct races, at war with each other; and we were called to take part with one of them, and to destroy their enemies. Now Mr. R. admitted that his sympathies were, first, in favor of the white race; but those who went on this ground must show him better samples of the white man than these Spaniards before they would get up his sympathies very high."

Brown county, Illinois, April 16th, 1848.

TO JAMES J. STRANG:—I inclose two dollars for the Herald, and you will please send it till July next, when I intend to start for that country, if God will. Sir, I had thought that the Methodist discipline had capped the infernal regions, but I now think that the epistle of the apostate Twelve has uncapped them. And we may now look for the locusts to come forth, not with the teeth of lions, nor with the wings of dragons, but the wings of the American eagle, for protecting her rights where she had none, and we shall be stung by the locusts unless we have some assistance. Therefore you will please send us some good elder, or at least have some call as they pass by. I wish you would explain one commandment given to the church, to wit: A strict adherence to the counsel of those who are placed in authority, which has heretofore been taught by the authorities, also by G. W. in the Gospel Herald in a manner that has left the authorities without any limitation; and that in disobedience to this command had been the apostacy of men, angels and devils. True, sir, a disobeying this command has in its true light been the apostacy of many an individual, though never of the church universally, nor devils, neither the stars which fell from heaven. For Lucifer, the bright son of the morning, was highest in power save God, and the stars also being the princes of the hosts of heaven, therefore could not have fallen by disobeying this command, as taught by the Brighamites and continued down to us by G. W. But, to the contrary, fell for teaching it, in the same manner of the Brighamites; which has been continued down from Lucifer, and which leaves the authorities without any limits of power; to form or reform any principle as they see fit, making themselves gods. This has been the downfall of every church, kingdom and nation since the formation of man down to the present day.

By this commandment did the authorities of the Roman church sway the sceptre over the world. Neither do they, nor can they, claim the authority upon any other principle. At this time also our own church authorities by this command have, in the nineteenth century, blinded the eyes of the lay members, trod them down in tyranny and ruled them as with a rod of iron, until they built up Zion with blood and iniquity. For the heads went in for gain; the priests taught for hire; the prophets divined for money; yet leaned on the Lord and said, there can no harm come upon us. For this has the vengeance of an offended God been poured upon us, and we driven from place to place until the present time.

I remain your brother in the bonds of the everlasting covenant,

HIRAM JAQUES.

ANSWER.—Elder Phineas Wright, one of the Presidents of the Seventies, is going in that direction, and possibly may call on the brethren in Brown Co., Ill. If he cannot, we hope he will be able to send some other, whom he may find in his pilgrimage, willing to serve God instead of standing still till he finds a crowd to help him do his duty. One thing the brethren will have for their consolation, if they are not visited. The sting of a Brighamite will not hurt a healthy constitution.

Brother Jaques has entirely mistaken the doctrine of submitting to authority, and made a wrong application of it to divers apostacies to which he refers. Beginning with the apostacies of angels: their apostacy consisted in refusing the authority of God, who was the common superior of all. Lucifer headed the rebellion, disregarding the command of God, his immediate superior; and the rest who fell with him followed the commands of a subordinate, rather than the superior, just as the Brighamites followed the commands of the apostles, who are subordinate, and had not in fact one whit of authority in a stake; and rejected the authority of Presidents, who are superior to them, and had a right to command them. In that very case which brother Jaques has referred to, as an instance of apostacy by obeying commandments of the authorities, the revelation D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 13 shows in the strongest terms that it was necessary for them to obey the voice of their leaders to avoid being driven. The words are:

"And if my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place. But if they will not hearken to my voice, nor unto the voice of these men whom I have appointed, they shall not be blest, because they pollute mine holy grounds, and mine holy ordinances, and charters, and my holy words, which I give unto them."

These words subject them to two distinct duties: 1st. To obey the commandments of God; and, 2d. To obey the commandments of the men he had set in authority over them. The keeping of both those conditions to the very letter was their only guaranty of ever having peace and a home at Nauvoo. So imperative were these two obligations that God assured them in the most pointed manner that unless they kept them they should not be blessed, but should suffer cursing, wrath, indignation and judgment.

A set of apostles defying the word of God, which says: "See to it that ye trouble not yourselves concerning the affairs of my church in this place," (an organized stake of Zion;) set themselves up as leaders, saying that they were abundantly able to lead the church and teach men their duty. Assuming to themselves authority that had never been conferred on them, all their teachings were wrong. They became perfectly blind to the consequences of their acts, made the most gross and iniquitous interpretations of the word and law of God, and brought overwhelming destruction on themselves and all who followed them. Leaders and led went to destruction together, because neither of them obeyed the commands of the men whom God had appointed to lead them. The leaders obeyed nobody's commands, and the led obeyed the commands of men whom God did not appoint, and all were lost together.

It is very clear that unless the authorities are to be obeyed they are not authorities. They are merely advisers. The very use of such words as authority, power, command, &c., all imply a right to be obeyed. The scriptures of all ages are filled with this doctrine. Samuel commanded Saul to do a work which, to the view of many men, probably most of the saints, was very cruel. Yet for disobeying the priesthood the kingdom was rent away. David commanded Joab to put Uriah into the front of the battle, with the obvious intent that he should be slain. Yet the guilt of his blood fell on David and not Joab. The sole warrant of the children of Israel for nearly all their wars, and the desolations of many countries was the command of the priesthood. Nor is it safe for us to set up our mere private judgment as to the propriety of these commands.—Abraham could have given as good reasons for rejecting the command to make a burnt sacrifice of his son Isaac as the human mind can well conceive of; and it expressly contravened the law forbidding man to shed the blood of man. Gen. ix. 5, 6. And violated the covenant to Abraham. Saul might with much show have pleaded humanity against the destruction of sinless infants, and beasts, and told the prophet that he being king knew better how to go to war than a mere ecclesiastic could tell him.

All the Jewish christians might have pleaded the word of the Lord against Peter for allowing the disciples to eat meats unclean, by the law of Moses, as many of them did and apostatized on it.—When the command came in 1831 for the saints to consecrate all their property at the feet of the bishop men denied the faith, because it was not at the feet of the apostles as in the days of Peter. In 1832, when they received a new commandment to organize themselves by a covenant that could not be broken into a united and everlasting order, (D. & C. sec. lxxxvii. p. 2, 3, 4,) with a common property and a common stewardship, with which the bishop had nothing to do, others were found who could not abide the commandment, because in their opinion it did not square with the law of the Lord. Some years after, in Far West, a command came requiring the saints to put all their surplus property into the hands of the bishop, for building the Temple, laying the foundation of Zion, supporting the priesthood and paying the debts of the Presidency; and hundreds of men apostatized on it, as contravening the former commandments concerning the everlasting order. All these men set up their own private judgment against the authority of the priesthood, the truth of the word of God and the authorized interpretation of it. We look back on these events and wonder that men will not obey God and live; but had we lived in their days, should we have been more faithful than they? A hundred generations have proved the utility of Abraham's faith. But many would excuse themselves if now put to the same test. No language can be stronger than that which requires us to obey the priesthood. When the church was organized with Joseph at the head, the church were required not only to give heed to all his words and commandments as he received them, but they were required to receive his (Joseph's) word as if from the mouth of God. D. & C. sec. xlvi. p. 2.

At the time of the rebellion of the apostles against Joseph, (at Kirtland in July, 1837,) the Lord said: "Whosoever receiveth my word receiveth me; and whosoever receiveth me receiveth those (the First Presidency) whom I have sent, whom I have made counsellors for my names' sake unto you;" thus treating the receiving of God and the word of God as one and the same thing, and by consequence the receiving of the First Presidency and receiving their word as one and the same thing. The conclusion from these propositions is that he that does not receive the words (that is acknowledge their authority) of this priesthood, does not receive or acknowledge the authority of God. John, the apostle, said concerning the superior authorities of the church of whom he made one: "We are of God; he that knoweth God HEARETH US; he that is not of God HEARETH NOT US. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error." 1st John iv. 6. That this hearing intends receiving the word and obeying it is most obvious. For certainly no one will pretend that simply hearing the authorized priesthood speak and yet disregarding their words proves one to be of God.—See Matt. xviii. 15, 16, 17.

In a late able work on priesthood from the pen of John E. Page, the doctrine is most triumphantly established that priesthood is power and authority to act in the name of God; that, ecclesiastically, priesthood, power, authority and name are synonymous. And that "where the christian priesthood is, there the christian church is; and where the christian priesthood is not, there the christian church is not." Or, in other words, where the right to command in the name of God and be obeyed is, there the church of God is; and where the right to command in the name of God and be obeyed is not, there the church of God is not.

This rule was so far in exercise in the apostolic church that the apostles pronounced the bitterest curses on those who should preach different doctrine from themselves or oppose them in their ministry. Gal. i. 8, 9. 1st Tim. i. 19, 20. 2d Tim. iv. 14, 15, and see 1, 2, 3, and i. 13, 14, 15.

It is a poor story to tell that God has given authority and power to bind and loose on earth, so that the act shall stand in heaven, (Matt. xvi. 19,) to remit and retain sins, (John xx. 23,) to seal up unto everlasting life, (D. & C. sec. ciii. 38,) and to deliver over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption, and that those who are made the repositors of such powers cannot give a simple command in the work of their ministry, which men are bound to obey. The right to command implies an obligation to obey. If this obligation does not exist all commandments are mere nullities, and the word "authority" is a mere mockery.

(To be continued.)

Beaver Island, May 8th, 1848.

MR. EDITOR:—With your permission I now propose giving to your readers my views of Beaver Island, not however expecting that my name will give any considerable weight to the subject. Although I have been rocked in the cradle of Mormonism—have been through the persecutions of Jackson, Clay and Caldwell counties, Missouri, Hancock and Adams counties, Illinois, from thence to Voree, Wisconsin, and thence here, making the whole round with the saints, I am still well aware that but few of your readers are familiar with my name. But as I have been associated with the name those conditions to the very letter was their only guaranty of ever having peace and a home at Nauvoo. So imperative were these two obligations that God assured them in the most pointed manner that unless they kept them they should not be blessed, but should suffer cursing, wrath, indignation and judgment.

A set of apostles defying the word of God, which says: "See to it that ye trouble not yourselves concerning the affairs of my church in this place," (an organized stake of Zion;) set themselves up as leaders, saying that they were abundantly able to lead the church and teach men their duty. Assuming to themselves authority that had never been conferred on them, all their teachings were wrong. They became perfectly blind to the consequences of their acts, made the most gross and iniquitous interpretations of the word and law of God, and brought overwhelming destruction on themselves and all who followed them. Leaders and led went to destruction together, because neither of them obeyed the commands of the men whom God had appointed to lead them. The leaders obeyed nobody's commands, and the led obeyed the commands of men whom God did not appoint, and all were lost together.

It is very clear that unless the authorities are to be obeyed they are not authorities. They are merely advisers. The very use of such words as authority, power, command, &c., all imply a right to be obeyed. The scriptures of all ages are filled with this doctrine. Samuel commanded Saul to do a work which, to the view of many men, probably most of the saints, was very cruel. Yet for disobeying the priesthood the kingdom was rent away. David commanded Joab to put Uriah into the front of the battle, with the obvious intent that he should be slain. Yet the guilt of his blood fell on David and not Joab. The sole warrant of the children of Israel for nearly all their wars, and the desolations of many countries was the command of the priesthood. Nor is it safe for us to set up our mere private judgment as to the propriety of these commands.—Abraham could have given as good reasons for rejecting the command to make a burnt sacrifice of his son Isaac as the human mind can well conceive of; and it expressly contravened the law forbidding man to shed the blood of man. Gen. ix. 5, 6. And violated the covenant to Abraham. Saul might with much show have pleaded humanity against the destruction of sinless infants, and beasts, and told the prophet that he being king knew better how to go to war than a mere ecclesiastic could tell him.

All the Jewish christians might have pleaded the word of the Lord against Peter for allowing the disciples to eat meats unclean, by the law of Moses, as many of them did and apostatized on it.—When the command came in 1831 for the saints to consecrate all their property at the feet of the bishop men denied the faith, because it was not at the feet of the apostles as in the days of Peter. In 1832, when they received a new commandment to organize themselves by a covenant that could not be broken into a united and everlasting order, (D. & C. sec. lxxxvii. p. 2, 3, 4,) with a common property and a common stewardship, with which the bishop had nothing to do, others were found who could not abide the commandment, because in their opinion it did not square with the law of the Lord. Some years after, in Far West, a command came requiring the saints to put all their surplus property into the hands of the bishop, for building the Temple, laying the foundation of Zion, supporting the priesthood and paying the debts of the Presidency; and hundreds of men apostatized on it, as contravening the former commandments concerning the everlasting order. All these men set up their own private judgment against the authority of the priesthood, the truth of the word of God and the authorized interpretation of it. We look back on these events and wonder that men will not obey God and live; but had we lived in their days, should we have been more faithful than they? A hundred generations have proved the utility of Abraham's faith. But many would excuse themselves if now put to the same test. No language can be stronger than that which requires us to obey the priesthood. When the church was organized with Joseph at the head, the church were required not only to give heed to all his words and commandments as he received them, but they were required to receive his (Joseph's) word as if from the mouth of God. D. & C. sec. xlvi. p. 2.

At the time of the rebellion of the apostles against Joseph, (at Kirtland in July, 1837,) the Lord said: "Whosoever receiveth my word receiveth me; and whosoever receiveth me receiveth those (the First Presidency) whom I have sent, whom I have made counsellors for my names' sake unto you;" thus treating the receiving of God and the word of God as one and the same thing, and by consequence the receiving of the First Presidency and receiving their word as one and the same thing. The conclusion from these propositions is that he that does not receive the words (that is acknowledge their authority) of this priesthood, does not receive or acknowledge the authority of God. John, the apostle, said concerning the superior authorities of the church of whom he made one: "We are of God; he that knoweth God HEARETH US; he that is not of God HEARETH NOT US. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error." 1st John iv. 6. That this hearing intends receiving the word and obeying it is most obvious. For certainly no one will pretend that simply hearing the authorized priesthood speak and yet disregarding their words proves one to be of God.—See Matt. xviii. 15, 16, 17.

In a late able work on priesthood from the pen of John E. Page, the doctrine is most triumphantly established that priesthood is power and authority to act in the name of God; that, ecclesiastically, priesthood, power, authority and name are synonymous. And that "where the christian priesthood is, there the christian church is; and where the christian priesthood is not, there the christian church is not." Or, in other words, where the right to command in the name of God and be obeyed is, there the church of God is; and where the right to command in the name of God and be obeyed is not, there the church of God is not.

This rule was so far in exercise in the apostolic church that the apostles pronounced the bitterest curses on those who should preach different doctrine from themselves or oppose them in their ministry. Gal. i. 8, 9. 1st Tim. i. 19, 20. 2d Tim. iv. 14, 15, and see 1, 2, 3, and i. 13, 14, 15.

It is a poor story to tell that God has given authority and power to bind and loose on earth, so that the act shall stand in heaven, (Matt. xvi. 19,) to remit and retain sins, (John xx. 23,) to seal up unto everlasting life, (D. & C. sec. ciii. 38,) and to deliver over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption, and that those who are made the repositors of such powers cannot give a simple command in the work of their ministry, which men are bound to obey. The right to command implies an obligation to obey. If this obligation does not exist all commandments are mere nullities, and the word "authority" is a mere mockery.

(To be continued.)

Beaver Island, May 8th, 1848.

MR. EDITOR:—With your permission I now propose giving to your readers my views of Beaver Island, not however expecting that my name will give any considerable weight to the subject. Although I have been rocked in the cradle of Mormonism—have been through the persecutions of Jackson, Clay and Caldwell counties, Missouri, Hancock and Adams counties, Illinois, from thence to Voree, Wisconsin, and thence here, making the whole round with the saints, I am still well aware that but few of your readers are familiar with my name. But as I have been associated with the name of Mormon I presume my testimony would be taken in most courts of justice out of the vicinity of Warsaw. One year ago this day I landed on Beaver Island for the first time, among strangers, without purse or scrip. I put up at first with any thing but agreeable accommodations, traveling with the prophet to explore the islands without guide, picking our provisions as we could in the woods; sleeping on the ground without fire or covering, and sometimes reduced to the necessity of feeding on browse and herbs; but I was by no means discouraged. I had faith in the island to believe that the industrious could supply all wants here. I concluded to try it. I have done so, and I have more than realized my expectations.

It is the best location in many respects that the saints ever occupied. Business is rife; labor is in good demand at high prices.—The industrious laborer here need have no fears of want. He can find plenty to do, and pay for it too. So have no fears of want.—Last fall I went to the most fertile parts of the Buckeye State, and wintered there. Beaver Island is the garden of Eden for the poor man in comparison. On my return back, before my arrival here, I heard that they were here in a suffering condition. These reports I found to be without foundation, utterly false. All had enough to eat, drink and wear. The settlement is now so far advanced and business so well established that the future settler has no difficulty or privation before him beyond what is common to all countries.—But as I have already written more than I expected when I sat down, I will now wind up by saying that I for one consider Beaver Island to be a desirable location. But do not take my word for it. Come and see. More anon. R. F. MILLS.

P. S. Please write. I am anxious to hear from there, and we are all anxious to see you here in person. We are all well, as might be expected as long as we live on Beaver. R. F. M.

☞ Coming directly, to stop one day. [Ed.

Beaver Island, May 16th, 1848.

To the Prophet, &c., and to all the Saints:—

Your friend and brother in the new and everlasting covenant sendeth greeting,—The saints on Beaver are all well and happy.—Some families have arrived this spring from Michigan and from the islands near Mackinac, where they had stopped last fall on their way here. We are looking daily for more who have written that they shall come, and are doubtless on the way. The saints here rejoice that God has, through his prophet, established the everlasting order of Enoch in Voree. Oh! how I long to be one in your midst, to be one with you in this order of God. I feel as though I could cheerfully carry this news to the ends of the earth. I have now something to say to the scattered saints of a present salvation. I can tell them what God is doing, as well as what he will do.

I have got one of the best locations on the island. Bro. Shaw has another, giving us two of the best chances on the harbor. We very much want to see you, and receive counsel from you, but until you can come any counsel you may write will be received and carried out. Mr. More (of the North West Co.) has done many acts of kindness to the saints. May God bless him and make him one of us. The papers have just come to hand, and carry with them the true spirit. It gladdens our hearts. My love to all the saints. May God inspire the hearts of all the saints with the true spirit of the latter day work, and a heart for equality in all things.

JEHIEL SAVAGE.

"I CAN'T."

Yes you can. Have you yet to learn, old as you are, that I can't never made a sterling character? Point us to the man who made his fortune with I can't upon his lips. Show us the patriot and the talented, who rose to honor and distinction with this motto on his forehead. It is impossible. The irresolute, the fearful and the trembling, who though they could never accomplish any thing, never did, as you may learn by visiting the alms-house and the graveyard. We care not how humble the occupation of a man may be, we are certain he will not always plod along if he have good spirits, a determined heart, and be not easily frightened. We have seen wood sawyers and clam diggers, scavengers and hod carriers, street sweepers, and printers even, rise from their humble pursuits to the accumulation of wealth and to seats of distinction. The fire of energy burned in their bosoms and glowed in their foreheads, when you would have thought them deepest in the mire and struggling with the heaviest burdens. They believed they could accomplish whatever they undertook, and hence their success. Yet you exclaim, "I can't," when told to leap the Atlantic, or jump over the Andes. Make the attempt—have faith, and we had almost said you will accomplish it. Never die a fool or a drone, as long as you have health in your body, a single pulse is left to beat, and one drop of blood continues to circulate around your heart. We shall never be in favor of dying so long as we can move. We shall never give up doing something for ourselves or others while we have strength to move a finger or open an eye. Away, then, with your slothfulness—your drowsiness—your laziness. Jump up at once and take a further start, determined to lie in the gutter no longer. If you have been more than dead, scrape off the dust from your limbs, oil them with energy, polish them with activity, and go forth in the panoply of a Man—a man created with God-like capacities. Our word for it, you will live to bless us for our advice.

PERSEVERE!

The following extract from the writings of John Neal, may have met the eyes of many of our readers before; but is worth repeating, and the truths it conveys are worth remembering:—

"There are people who, having begun life by setting their boat against the wind and tide, are always complaining of their bad luck and always just ready to give up, and for that very reason always helpless and good for nothing; yet, if they would persevere, hard as it may be to work up stream all life long, they would have their reward at last. Good voyages are made both ways.

A certain amount of opposition is a great help to a man. Kites rise against, not with the wind. Even a head wind is better than nothing. No man ever worked his voyage any where in a dead calm. The best wind for any thing, in the long run, is a side wind. If it blows aft, how is he to get back? Let no man wax pale, therefore, because of opposition. Opposition is what he wants, and must have, to be good for anything. Hardship is the native soil of manhood and self-defence. He that cannot abide the storm without flinching or quailing, strips himself in the sunshine, and lays down by the wayside, to be overlooked and forgotten. He who but braces himself up to the struggle, when the wind blows, gives up when they are done, and falls asleep in the stillness that follows.

Did you ever know any body to stick to any kind of business, no matter how unpromising, ten years at most, who did not prosper? No matter how bad it might be at the beginning; if he stuck to it earnestly and faithfully, and nothing else, no matter how hard he may have found it sometimes to keep his head above water, still, if he persevered, he always came out bright in the long run—didn't he?"

MUSINGS.

TO BE CONTINUED.

There is no word in the English language that we so much detest as "to be continued." The Herald readers are doubtless rather dissatisfied with it. At least they have some reason to be. Let us see. We have "the social relations" "to be continued" when we can write them. The "inspiration of the Jewish prophets" "to be continued" when we can make room for it. The "Catholic discussion" "to be continued" when we can rally out Mr. Rafferty, or find time to close it up. The "Mormon discussion" "to be continued" when we can find time to finish reviewing the sheets. The "lineage of Christ" "to be continued" when we can make room for it. Toils, perils of false brethren, jealouses of sincere friends, disagreements of those engaged in a common cause, controversies and apostacies, all the ills that flesh is heir to, and these musings are "to be continued" till men learn to obey God, and the musings longer. But we hope they will take a happier turn, or not "be continued."

of Mormon I presume my testimony would be taken in most courts of justice out of the vicinity of Warsaw. One year ago this day I landed on Beaver Island for the first time, among strangers, without purse or scrip. I put up at first with any thing but agreeable accommodations, traveling with the prophet to explore the islands without guide, picking our provisions as we could in the woods; sleeping on the ground without fire or covering, and sometimes reduced to the necessity of feeding on browse and herbs; but I was by no means discouraged. I had faith in the island to believe that the industrious could supply all wants here. I concluded to try it. I have done so, and I have more than realized my expectations.

It is the best location in many respects that the saints ever occupied. Business is rife; labor is in good demand at high prices.—The industrious laborer here need have no fears of want. He can find plenty to do, and pay for it too. So have no fears of want.—Last fall I went to the most fertile parts of the Buckeye State, and wintered there. Beaver Island is the garden of Eden for the poor man in comparison. On my return back, before my arrival here, I heard that they were here in a suffering condition. These reports I found to be without foundation, utterly false. All had enough to eat, drink and wear. The settlement is now so far advanced and business so well established that the future settler has no difficulty or privation before him beyond what is common to all countries.—But as I have already written more than I expected when I sat down, I will now wind up by saying that I for one consider Beaver Island to be a desirable location. But do not take my word for it. Come and see. More anon. R. F. MILLS.

P. S. Please write. I am anxious to hear from there, and we are all anxious to see you here in person. We are all well, as might be expected as long as we live on Beaver. R. F. M.

☞ Coming directly, to stop one day. [ED.

Beaver Island, May 10th, 1848.

TO THE PROPHET, &c., AND TO ALL THE SAINTS:—

Your friend and brother in the new and everlasting covenant sendeth greeting,—The saints on Beaver are all well and happy.—Some families have arrived this spring from Michigan and from the islands near Mackinac, where they had stopped last fall on their way here. We are looking daily for more who have written that they shall come, and are doubtless on the way. The saints here rejoice that God has, through his prophet, established the everlasting order of Enoch in Voree. Oh! how I long to be one in your midst, to be one with you in this order of God. I feel as though I could cheerfully carry this news to the ends of the earth. I have now something to say to the scattered saints of a present salvation. I can tell them what God is doing, as well as what he will do.

I have got one of the best locations on the island. Bro. Shaw has another, giving us two of the best chances on the harbor. We very much want to see you, and receive counsel from you, but until you can come any counsel you may write will be received and carried out. Mr. More (of the North West Co.) has done many acts of kindness to the saints. May God bless him and make him one of us. The papers have just come to hand, and carry with them the true spirit. It gladdens our hearts. My love to all the saints. May God inspire the hearts of all the saints with the true spirit of the latter day work, and a heart for equality in all things.

JEHIEL SAVAGE.

"I CAN'T."

Yes you can. Have you yet to learn, old as you are, that I CAN'T never made a sterling character? Point us to the man who made his fortune with I CAN'T upon his lips. Show us the patriot and the talented, who rose to honor and distinction with this motto on his forehead. It is impossible. The irresolute, the fearful and the trembling, who though they could never accomplish any thing, never did, as you may learn by visiting the alms-house and the graveyard. We care not how humble the occupation of a man may be, we are certain he will not always plod along if he have good spirits, a determined heart, and be not easily frightened. We have seen wood sawyers and clam diggers, scavengers and hod carriers, street sweepers, and printers even, rise from their humble pursuits to the accumulation of wealth and to seats of distinction. The fire of energy burned in their bosoms and glowed in their foreheads, when you would have thought them deepest in the mire and struggling with the heaviest burdens. They believed they could accomplish whatever they undertook, and hence their success. Yet you exclaim, "I can't," when told to leap the Atlantic, or jump over the Andes. Make the attempt—have faith, and we had almost said you will accomplish it. Never die a fool or a drone, as long as you have health in your body, a single pulse is left to beat, and one drop of blood continues to circulate around your heart. We shall never be in favor of dying so long as we can move. We shall never give up doing something for ourselves or others while we have strength to move a finger or open an eye. Away, then, with your slothfulness—your drowsiness—your laziness. Jump up at once and take a further start, determined to lie in the gutter no longer. If you have been more than dead, scrape off the dust from your limbs, oil them with energy, polish them with activity, and go forth in the panoply of a Man—a man created with God-like capacities. Our word for it, you will live to bless us for our advice.

PERSEVERE!

The following extract from the writings of John Neal, may have met the eyes of many of our readers before; but is worth repeating, and the truths it conveys are worth remembering:—

"There are people who, having begun life by setting their boat against the wind and tide, are always complaining of their bad luck and always just ready to give up, and for that very reason always helpless and good for nothing; yet, if they would persevere, hard as it may be to work up stream all life long, they would have their reward at last. Good voyages are made both ways.

A certain amount of opposition is a great help to a man. Kites rise against, not with the wind. Even a head wind is better than nothing. No man ever worked his voyage any where in a dead calm. The best wind for any thing, in the long run, is a side wind. If it blows aft, how is he to get back? Let no man wax faint therefore, because of opposition. Opposition is what he wants, and must have, to be good for anything. Hardship is the native soil of manhood and self-defence. He that cannot abide the storm without flinching or quailing, strips himself in the sunshine, and lays down by the wayside, to be overlooked and forgotten. He who but braces himself up to the struggle, when the wind blows, gives up when they are done, and falls asleep in the stillness that follows.

Did you ever know any body to stick to any kind of business no matter how unpromising, ten years at most, who did not prosper? No matter how bad it might be at the beginning, if he stuck to it earnestly and faithfully, and nothing else, no matter how hard he may have found it sometimes to keep his head above water, still if he persevered, he always came out bright in the long run—didn't he?"

MUSINGS.

TO BE CONTINUED.

There is no word in the English language that we so much detest as "to be continued." The Herald readers are doubtless rather dissatisfied with it. At least they have some reason to be. Let us see. We have "the social relations" "to be continued" when we can write them. The "inspiration of the Jewish prophets" "to be continued" when we can make room for it. The "Catholic discussion" "to be continued" when we can rally out Mr. Rafferty or find time to close it up. The "Mormon discussion" "to be continued" when we can find time to finish reviewing the sheets. The "lineage of Christ" "to be continued" when we can make room for it. Toils, perils of false brethren, jealouses of sincere friends, disagreements of those engaged in a common cause, controversies and apostacies, all the ills that flesh is heir to, and these musings are "to be continued" till men learn to obey God, and the musings longer. But we hope they will take a happier turn, and not "be continued."

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 11.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1848. [WHOLE No. 75.

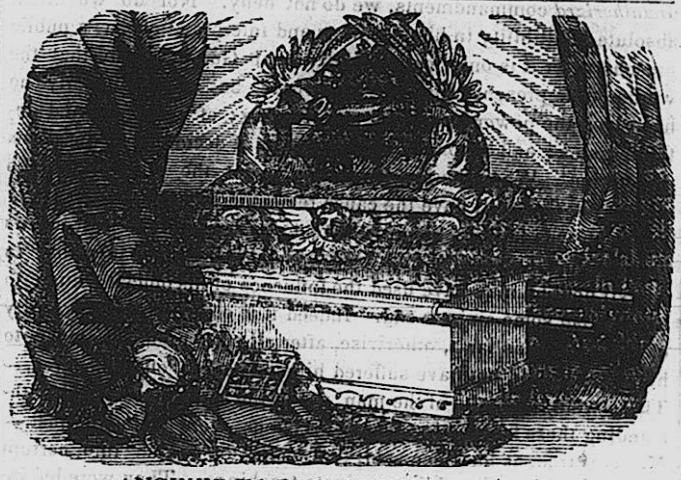
GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.



ANSWER TO BRO. JAQUES' LETTER.

(Concluded.)

You will doubtless begin to ask, "are we bound because a man holds the priesthood to obey all his commandments?" We answer, No, not one of them. It is the priesthood you are bound to obey, not the man. You are bound to obey the command which he as a priest within the purview of his priesthood makes. But the commandment which he as a man and out of the purview of his priesthood makes has no force whatever on you. When David gave commandment to Joab, the general-in-chief of his armies, to place Uriah in front of battle Joab was bound to obey, because David as king had a right to order his armies, and it was not for the general to say to his sovereign, why do you so?

And David's crime was not the simple fact that Uriah was killed, for some one must take that place with the prospect of being slain. His crime was simply that he selected Uriah to die in order to cover his own sin. But had David commanded Joab to commit a mere private murder, Joab would not have been under the least obligation to obey, and doing so would have been himself a murderer. So the hangman or headsman when he receives a warrant of execution never stops to inquire whether there is evidence satisfactory to his mind of the guilt of the culprit, but proceeds to take the life of a human being simply on the mandate of his superior. But if the same man who signed the warrant of execution should express his individual opinion that some other man deserved death, and should thereupon command him to execute him, he would disregard the mandate even though he might have no doubt that the culprit deserved death, merely because the command was extra judicial.

In every well regulated society of men, whether ecclesiastical or civil, when a mandate comes from a superior officer or priesthood to an inferior he inquires only whether he who made the command had jurisdiction and authority in the premises; never whether the command is just on the merits. And this for the simple reason that he who is authorized to act in the premises and has the case before him is better qualified to judge righteously than any other one.—This is a simple truth in civil affairs. How much more so in spiritual, which are spiritually discerned; for no man can have the spirit who is out of his place and meddling with other peoples business, or neglecting his own.

In every civil state, and in the church in all ages, certain regular authorities have been constituted and established, to which all other powers had to yield obedience. In the civil state he who opposes that power is held guilty of treason, and in the church, of schism and rebellion against God. In the civil state if the subjects raise successful rebellion, it is not called treason, but revolution, and the rebels proceed to establish a new government, by establishing in their own name and by their own authority, new officers, jurisdictions, &c. But I think it will hardly be assumed that the church, or any part of it can carry on a successful rebellion against the authority of God, so that when they have established their new officers and jurisdictions those they set up will be truly the ministers of God. The question will doubtless be asked, "Does not this rule justify the western camp in following and obeying the apostate apostles?" Certainly not. They obeyed the twelve in a state where they had no jurisdiction, and as the First Presidency which they were not. Their obedience to them was rebellion against the First Presidency, the true authority of God in the premises. Obedience to them under such circumstances was no more or less than obedience to a mere private individual. It was a case of men's assuming authority who indeed held the priesthood, but in matters where they had no jurisdiction. And it brought on both leader and follower the same fate that must befall both leader and follower in every such transaction.

The question will also be asked, "Does not this rule make the Roman Catholic church the true christian church?" Most assuredly not. The Roman Catholic church has not even in form the priesthood which in the apostolic church was supreme. Her highest priesthood by her own showing is bishops, of whom the bishop of Rome is chief. But the principal reason why she is not the true church is that she has no priesthood at all. When she ceased baptizing she ceased to have members of the church who could receive the priesthood. And though her ordinations have been good in form, those who were the subjects of them lacked both a call by revelation and membership in the true church. Having no priesthood, she is no church. True, you may say these things were all established by command and decree of the highest authority in that church. But that authority was not high enough to give validity to such a command. The highest authority claimed by the Roman church is a mere council of bishops, which might extend perhaps to deposing a bishop or establishing a feast. And this is all the excuse they have for superseding the higher authority, changing the constitution of the church, and abolishing one of the principles of the gospel.

ERALD.

VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1848. [WHOLE No. 75.

ERALD,
EKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS
LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

UM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
mmunications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

ANSWER TO BRO. JAQUES' LETTER.

(Concluded.)

You will doubtless begin to ask, "are we bound because a man holds the priesthood to obey all his commandments?" We answer, No, not one of them. It is the priesthood you are bound to obey, not the man. You are bound to obey the command which he as a priest within the purview of his priesthood makes. But the commandment which he as a man and out of the purview of his priesthood makes has no force whatever on you. When David gave commandment to Joab, the general-in-chief of his armies, to place Uriah in front of battle Joab was bound to obey, because David as king had a right to order his armies, and it was not for the general to say to his sovereign, why do you so?

And David's crime was not the simple fact that Uriah was killed, for some one must take that place with the prospect of being slain. His crime was simply that he selected Uriah to die in order to cover his own sin. But had David commanded Joab to commit a mere private murder, Joab would not have been under the least obligation to obey, and doing so would have been himself a murderer. So the hangman or headsman when he receives a warrant of execution never stops to inquire whether there is evidence satisfactory to his mind of the guilt of the culprit, but proceeds to take the life of a human being simply on the mandate of his superior. But if the same man who signed the warrant of execution should express his individual opinion that some other man deserved death, and should thereupon command him to execute him, he would disregard the mandate even though he might have no doubt that the culprit deserved death, merely because the command was extra judicial.

In every well regulated society of men, whether ecclesiastical or civil, when a mandate comes from a superior officer or priesthood to an inferior he inquires only whether he who made the command had jurisdiction and authority in the premises; never whether the command is just on the merits. And this for the simple reason that he who is authorized to act in the premises and has the case before him is better qualified to judge righteously than any other one.—This is a simple truth in civil affairs. How much more so in spiritual, which are spiritually discerned; for no man can have the spirit who is out of his place and meddling with other peoples business, or neglecting his own.

In every civil state, and in the church in all ages, certain regular authorities have been constituted and established, to which all other powers had to yield obedience. In the civil state he who opposes that power is held guilty of treason, and in the church, of schism and rebellion against God. In the civil state if the subjects raise successful rebellion, it is not called treason, but revolution, and the rebels proceed to establish a new government, by establishing in their own name and by their own authority, new officers, jurisdictions, &c. But I think it will hardly be assumed that the church, or any part of it can carry on a successful rebellion against the authority of God, so that when they have established their new officers and jurisdictions those they set up will be truly the ministers of God. The question will doubtless be asked, "Does not this rule justify the western camp in following and obeying the apostate apostles?" Certainly not. They obeyed the twelve in a stake where they had no jurisdiction, and as the First Presidency which they were not. Their obedience to them was rebellion against the First Presidency, the true authority of God in the premises. Obedience to them under such circumstances was no more or less than obedience to a mere private individual. It was a case of men's assuming authority who indeed held the priesthood, but in matters where they had no jurisdiction. And it brought on both leader and follower the same fate that must befall both leader and follower in every such transaction.

The question will also be asked, "Does not this rule make the Roman Catholic church the true christian church?" Most assuredly not. The Roman Catholic church has not even in form the priesthood which in the apostolic church was supreme. Her highest priesthood by her own showing is bishops, of whom the bishop of Rome is chief. But the principal reason why she is not the true church is that she has no priesthood at all. When she ceased baptizing she ceased to have members of the church who could receive the priesthood. And though her ordinations have been good in form, those who were the subjects of them lacked both a call by revelation and membership in the true church. Having no priesthood, she is no church. True, you may say these things were all established by command and decree of the highest authority in that church. But that authority was not high enough to give validity to such a command. The highest authority claimed by the Roman church is a mere council of bishops, which might extend perhaps to deposing a bishop or establishing a feast. And this is all the excuse they have for superseding the higher authority, changing the constitution of the church, and abolishing one of the principles of the gospel.

It will be said too that this power is liable to be abused. So is all power. It is simply because it is liable to be abused that power is not given to every one, but conferred on such as are its safest repositors. In the civil state justice must be administered by somebody. And as it would not be safe to leave every man to take it into his own hands, in this country the people elect magistrates to that power. When they are elected we obey their mandates; not because we have examined and found them severally right, but because they had the AUTHORITY. Occasionally a community is found who do not believe in obeying commands, unless they have examined them and found them right according to their private judgment. These endeavor to establish their private judgment, prejudices and opinions above law and authority, and in some cases disobeying the mandates of magistrates because they do not think them just, and in others refusing to appeal to them at all; by private and mob violence take the administration of public justice into their own hands. Their pretense is always that the public authorities who are the keepers, expounders and administrators of the law do not do what ought to be done; and therefore they undertake to do it.

So in the church God has established a priesthood, authorized in its various grades and offices, to administer all the affairs of the church, and sit in judgment on ALL QUESTIONS that shall arise.—These are the repository of the power of God on earth. They are his agents to act in his name. They are selected by HIM, not because they are perfect or infallible, but because they are the most suitable repository of so important powers as he has seen fit to confer on the priesthood. But the world is filled with men who think they know better than this priesthood, and that their private judgment is better than the official authority of those whom God has set up. Hence schisms and the setting up of various unauthorized churches.

Again, it is objected by many that this is claiming human infallibility. We answer, no; it is denying it. The man who sets up his private judgment as to what is the true intent of the law of God, makes the scriptures a matter of private interpretation, assumes to himself to reject and disobey the decisions, interpretations and commandments of those whom God has set in authority, claims infallibility to himself and assumes to use it. His conduct is equivalent to saying to the priesthood, "who are you, that I should regard you? I know what the law of God is. I know what my duty is. I understand all these matters just as well as any body else, and unless you do as I say I shall oppose you." These are the men who are assuming to themselves wisdom and power, and setting up themselves as standards of truth, power and piety, and arrogating infallibility. We confess we are among those who believe that the authority which God has set in the church in the regular organization of its quorums and councils is wiser and more likely to execute judgment in righteousness than any self-constituted tribunal or self-set-up man. And without entering into the question whether the church furnishes an infallible standard of truth or not, it is sufficient to know that God has established a council in regard to which the law lays down that "this is the highest council in the church of God; its decision FINAL in spiritual matters; and after this decision it shall be had in remembrance NO MORE BEFORE THE LORD." D. & C. sec. iii. p. 35. And that this council may have power to make its decisions worthy of such high authority it is again written in the law that in case of difficulty as to doctrine, if there is not enough written to make the case clear to the MINDS of the COUNCIL, the President may inquire and obtain the mind of the Lord by revelation. D. & C. sec. v. p. 10.

You will perceive that this resort is made to revelation not because there is or is not enough writen to satisfy other persons, but because there is not enough written to make the matter clear to the minds of the council. It is very common for persons of limited acquaintance with the law to think there is abundance written to make a matter plain, when the ablest council in the church may be embarrassed in deciding it and need immediate assistance from God. It is not men of sound talent standing in their place and taught of God that set themselves up as wiser than the authorities that God has set in the church.

Some have objected against this rule that the prophet Joseph had given both commandments and revelations contrary to the will and law of God, and had taught by all the authority of his priesthood gross abominations for a series of years. We have not the slightest suspicion that he ever did any such thing. We do not believe one word of the accusation, and look on such an assertion as simply taking up the cause of our enemies. That he, as a private man, and in his private conversations, has committed many errors, made erroneous interpretations of the word of God, and given unjust and unauthorized commandments, we do not deny. Nor do we claim absolute infallibility in his teachings and interpretations, as a public preacher; for it is only conditionally that God has said that the words of the preacher shall be his word: but unconditionally he has given the power of binding and loosing; of remitting and retaining sins; and beyond resort the power of deciding all questions of doctrine. When these acts are done, let the whole earth be silent; for God will have the cause remembered no more.

Joseph was fallible, like all the rest of us. Like the rest of us he sometimes wandered from God. It is not improbable that in an evil hour he may have used the influence of his official station to accomplish some sinister end. Indeed it is clear that he was guilty of some grievous fault, otherwise, after all the promises made to him, God would not have suffered him to be cut off as he was.—These were the faults of the man, not of the priesthood. Notwithstanding these faults, his official decisions were eminently just.—Nor is it true, as has been said, that he led the church into corrupt practices, either by public or private teachings. They were led into corruptions by their own lusts, just as other men are, and it is more probable that the influence of numbers served to destroy him than that one man has corrupted a whole community. There is vastly more evidence of the corrupt influence of a band of courtiers, parasites and speculators around him, than of his exercising any such influence on them.

The reader will bear in mind that throughout this article we have, in speaking of the commands, &c., of the priesthood, confined ourselves merely to their official acts. To their mere private conversations we attach no importance whatever. They are simply addressed to every man's reason, and derive no force from the authority of their authors. Those holding the priesthood have, since the great apostacy, been in the habit of meddling with many matters, with which they had no business whatever; both those over which they had no jurisdiction and other matters not pertaining to the priesthood at all. Of course no one was bound to pay the least respect to their commands in these matters. Even if what they required was proper enough of itself, yet men in self-respect should oppose such usurpations.

Others have contended that though we were bound to obey the commands of the priesthood in matters on which nothing was written, yet that when the law was written every man must understand it for himself. If this be true we may as well cease talking about "unity of the faith." We may safely say there is not one single revelation in the Bible, Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants containing 100 words which any two elders will interpret alike in all its bearings. This assertion may seem radical, but if any one doubts it let him bring his two elders to us and select the passage, and we will convince him in 30 minutes examination. All language is so imperfect that it is scarcely possible to write any sentence of moderate length, free from ambiguity; but if ever so unam-

It will be said too that this power is liable to be abused. So is all power. It is simply because it is liable to be abused that power is not given to every one, but conferred on such as are its safest repositors. In the civil state justice must be administered by somebody. And as it would not be safe to leave every man to take it into his own hands, in this country the people elect magistrates to that power. When they are elected we obey their mandates; not because we have examined and found them severally right, but because they had the AUTHORITY. Occasionally a community is found who do not believe in obeying commands, unless they have examined them and found them right according to their private judgment. These endeavor to establish their private judgment, prejudices and opinions above law and authority, and in some cases disobeying the mandates of magistrates because they do not think them just, and in others refusing to appeal to them at all; by private and mob violence take the administration of public justice into their own hands. Their pretense is always that the public authorities who are the keepers, expounders and administrators of the law do not do what ought to be done; and therefore they undertake to do it.

So in the church God has established a priesthood, authorized in its various grades and offices, to administer all the affairs of the church, and sit in judgment on ALL QUESTIONS that shall arise.—These are the repository of the power of God on earth. They are his agents to act in his name. They are selected by HIM, not because they are perfect or infallible, but because they are the most suitable repository of so important powers as he has seen fit to confer on the priesthood. But the world is filled with men who think they know better than this priesthood, and that their private judgment is better than the official authority of those whom God has set up. Hence schisms and the setting up of various unauthorized churches.

Again, it is objected by many that this is claiming human infallibility. We answer, no; it is denying it. The man who sets up his private judgment as to what is the true intent of the law of God, makes the scriptures a matter of private interpretation, assumes to himself to reject and disobey the decisions, interpretations and commandments of those whom God has set in authority, claims infallibility to himself and assumes to use it. His conduct is equivalent to saying to the priesthood, "who are you, that I should regard you! I know what the law of God is. I know what my duty is. I understand all these matters just as well as any body else, and unless you do as I say I shall oppose you." These are the men who are assuming to themselves wisdom and power, and setting up themselves as standards of truth, power and piety, and arrogating infallibility. We confess we are among those who believe that the authority which God has set in the church in the regular organization of its quorums and councils is wiser and more likely to execute judgment in righteousness than any self-constituted tribunal or self-set-up man. And without entering into the question whether the church furnishes an infallible standard of truth or not, it is sufficient to know that God has established a council in regard to which the law lays down that "this is the highest council in the church of God; its decision FINAL in spiritual matters; and after this decision it shall be had in remembrance NO MORE BEFORE THE LORD." D. & C. sec. iii. p. 35. And that this council may have power to make its decisions worthy of such high authority it is again written in the law that in case of difficulty as to doctrine, if there is not enough written to make the case clear to the MINDS of the COUNCIL, the President may inquire and obtain the mind of the Lord by revelation. D. & C. sec. v. p. 10.

You will perceive that this resort is made to revelation not because there is or is not enough written to satisfy other persons, but because there is not enough written to make the matter clear to the minds of the council. It is very quaintance with the law to t make a matter plain, when th be embarrassed in deciding
God. It is not men of sou taught of God that set them that God has set in the churc

Some have objected against given both commandments and law of God, and had taught by a gross abominations for a series of ye est suspicion that he ever did any such one word of the accusation, and look on s taking up the cause of our enemies. That and in his private conversations, has committed man erroneous interpretations of the word of God, and given unjust and unauthorized commandments, we do not deny. Nor do we claim absolute infallibility in his teachings and interpretations, as a public preacher; for it is only conditionally that God has said that the words of the preacher shall be his word: but unconditionally he has given the power of binding and loosing; of remitting and retaining sins; and beyond resort the power of deciding all questions of doctrine. When these acts are done, let the whole earth be silent; for God will have the cause remembered no more.

Joseph was fallible, like all the rest of us. Like the rest of us he sometimes wandered from God. It is not improbable that in an evil hour he may have used the influence of his official station to accomplish some sinister end. Indeed it is clear that he was guilty of some grievous fault, otherwise, after all the promises made to him, God would not have suffered him to be cut off as he was.—These were the faults of the man, not of the priesthood. Notwithstanding these faults, his official decisions were eminently just.—Nor is it true, as has been said, that he led the church into corrupt practices, either by public or private teachings. They were led into corruptions by their own lusts, just as other men are, and it is more probable that the influence of numbers served to destroy him than that one man has corrupted a whole community. There is vastly more evidence of the corrupt influence of a band of courtiers, parasites and speculators around him, than of his exercising any such influence on them.

The reader will bear in mind that throughout this article we have, in speaking of the commands, &c., of the priesthood, confined ourselves merely to their official acts. To their mere private conversations we attach no importance whatever. They are simply addressed to every man's reason, and derive no force from the authority of their authors. Those holding the priesthood have, since the great apostacy, been in the habit of meddling with many matters, with which they had no business whatever; both those over which they had no jurisdiction and other matters not pertaining to the priesthood at all. Of course no one was bound to pay the least respect to their commands in these matters. Even if what they required was proper enough of itself, yet men in self-respect should oppose such usurpations.

Others have contended that though we were bound to obey the commands of the priesthood in matters on which nothing was written, yet that when the law was written every man must understand it for himself. If this be true we may as well cease talking about "unity of the faith." We may safely say there is not one single revelation in the Bible, Book of Mormon or Doctrine and Covenants containing 100 words which any two elders will interpret alike in all its bearings. This assertion may seem radical, but if any one doubts it let him bring his two elders to us and select the passage, and we will convince him in 30 minutes examination. All language is so imperfect that it is scarcely possible to write any sentence of moderate length, free from ambiguity; but if ever so unambiguous many men are not capable of interpreting the words truly and will not understand them alike.

Nothing but authority can ever settle whether the highest council in the church consists of twelve or twenty-four high priests.—D. & C. sec. iii. p. 35. Nothing but authority can determine whether an assistant President presiding over the high council can inquire and obtain the mind of the Lord by revelation. D. & C. sec. v. p. 6, 10. Nothing but authority can ever determine whether it is necessary to have one First President or three to ordain or try a bishop. We know persons who would have committed theft or murder at the mandate of Hyrum Smith, and yet deny the validity of an ordination by one President, though Hyrum in two or three instances ordained bishops without any associate.

So too, though it is said in strong terms that two elders may constitute a court to try members, (D. & C. sec. xiii. p. 22,) yet probably a large majority of the church in their private opinion believe that if those elders happen to be Presidents of the Melchisedec priesthood it would take three of them; not because there is any good reason for such a distinction, but because without having considered the principles involved they think that rule would be more in accordance with the words of the law. Not to multiply instances, suffice it to say until language is perfect, and all the saints are perfect in their understanding of it, no law can ever be so written that it will not need an authorized interpreter. I have a work now laying before me containing several hundred passages of scripture collated together so as to present apparently pointed and irreconcilable contradictions. I have presented many of them to men of first rate talent and critical biblical knowledge, all of whom have been entirely unable to reconcile them. Yet no difficulty has ever presented itself to the church in deciding on any of these matters when they came up for decision. Paul's epistle to the Corinthians (ch. vii. v. 14) is expressly explained by revelation. D. & C. sec. lxxiv. The New Testament contains many expositions of the earlier scriptures, and I presume not a few of them are different from what the elders would make now a days if they were left to their own notions, and discarded authorized interpretations. I have yet to learn that the elders among the saints aside from the gift that is in them by the laying on of hands of the priesthood, that is out of their priesthood, are especially wiser than the rest of christendom. Yet there is no doctrine prevailing under that name which is not founded on a private interpretation of the prophets, the law and the gospel, honestly entertained.

All the different parties that have grown up under the name of Mormon found their faith on some private interpretation of the word of God, and all of them, I doubt not, believe their interpretation the true one. It is worthy of remark, too, that nearly all of them have selected some one or more of the revelations which they hold contradictory to those that have gone before, always selecting one coming forth about the time of their several apostacies. Those which were old revelations in their day are all perfectly consistent; as those which they reject will be consistent to the next generation after. For this reason living prophets are always being rejected as fallen, but when one is dead and his cotemporaries gone, whoever receives him as a prophet at any time in his life holds him so till the end of his life.

If any one should ask what is our security from being led astray while we acknowledge such authority in the priesthood, I answer, it is this: That our trust is in the arm of God, and not man. If we set up our own judgment as a final standard or rule of action, then we for all practical purposes make that our supreme standard of right and wrong, arrogating to ourselves individually wisdom above the whole church. If we, as a final resort in doubtful questions, yield to the advice of some man in whom we happen to have confidence, then we yield the same to such individual in derogation of the authority of the church. But acknowledging the power in the church to decide finally all questions of right and truth, we discard human infallibility and supremacy altogether and acknowledge that of God.

There are organized in the church various councils and courts for the purpose of deciding all questions of doctrine and discipline.—These are arranged as seemed wisdom in God, that the system might be made as perfect as possible; and the last resort and final supreme authority among all is a general high council of the church, with the First Presidency presiding. After a decision by this council on any question that may arise "it shall be had in remembrance no more before the Lord." I understand that the Lord will have all error in remembrance to correct it. Consequently he will in this council of final resort correct all error, that there be none to have in remembrance. Certainly the Lord has not put so forcible a sanction on decisions of themselves unjust. Our reliance that he will have a decision just, which he will have in remembrance no more, is not founded in our confidence in the men who make it, but in the God who gives force and validity to it.

So, too, in the law making power. The highest authority known in the church is a revelation or the word of God. This the church receive by the voice of the prophet. But suppose the prophet give false revelations? I answer, God has taken that matter into his own hands, without the assistance or intervention of any man.—What God does will be well done, and as the prophet is amenable immediately to him he will have him in continual remembrance.—And when there is danger of his deceiving the people, the Lord will stretch out his hand upon him and will destroy him from the midst of his people, that they be not led astray by him, neither be polluted by transgression. Ezek. xiv. 3, 12. The chain of accountability is perfect from the least of all lay members to God on his throne, who alone is supreme and infallible, and confers on his priesthood such of his powers as he sees fit, and whosoever rebels against any authority in this order rebels against the throne of God. The resort in all cases of supposed injustice is an appeal to higher powers.—And when we reach the final resort the duty of man is obedience.—This is the ark of our covenant, and the only ark of safety. Republics have established the legality of rebellion and treason, but God has not.

DAVID OUT AT LAST!

We think all the Pseudoes should lift up their voices, and hands too, and shout hosanna; for David has spoken and Strang has fallen. And we recommend this course to them with the more confidence because we recently saw some of them on the Hill of Promise doing so. Truly they made it ring, with the voice of a shout and a trumpet; but as we could not understand the trumpet's speech we have been happy to obtain the following, which we doubt not is a true translation of what it said. One thing we are much obliged to the trumpet for; or to David, for we hardly know which to give the credit to. That is, for allowing that Strang ever was a prophet. This is more liberal than McLellin, and particularly complimentary, as it leaves Strang in good company. Joseph was a prophet until he called the church by the name of saints. Christ was a prophet until he told his disciples that, "except they eat his flesh and drank his blood there was no life in them." John the Baptist was a prophet till he told the Pharisees to "bring forth fruits meet for repentance." And Moses also was a prophet till he went on the mount to talk with God. Thus all, it seems, by the testimonies of the Pseudoes of their day, fell among and went to the perdition of ungodly men; and though we don't like to think prophet Strang will come to any such fate, yet we don't object to the company. But here is David's proclamation, so let all the earth give ear:—

A VOICE OF WARNING AND PROCLAMATION TO ALL.

VOREE, RACINE COUNTY, WISCONSIN TERRITORY, NORTH AMERICA, MAY 20TH, 1848.

The word of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, through his servant David, concerning the work of the Lord, and also his people in the latter days. Hear, O heavens! and give ear, O earth! for I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but my people do not know, neither will they consider.—Therefore will I not have mercy upon them, except they quickly repent; for when I called, that they might enter into my rest, they have always refused; and now therefore when they call, in the hardness of their hearts, I will not hear until I have scourged them by my judgments, and which for a long time have slumbered not.

Therefore let every ear hear, and every heart tingle, while they read this my word, which I now send forth as a warning to all those who call themselves my people even in Voree, and also in the region round about, and also to all the inhabitants of the land. For the prophecies in my word concerning my work in the latter days have begun to be fulfilled. For behold I have brought forth my servant the Branch, even as it is said in the prophecy of my servant

...preting the words truly

...hether the highest coun-
...nty-four high priests.—
...uthority can determine
...the high council can
...revelation. D. & C.
...ever determine wheth-
...or three to ordain or
...ld have committed theft
...h, and yet deny the valid-
...though Hyrum in two or
...hout any associate.
...ong terms that two elders may con-
D. & C. sec. xiii. p. 22,) yet prob-
...hurch in their private opinion believe
...to be Presidents of the Melchisedec
...e three of them; not because there is any
...uch a distinction, but because without having condered the principles involved they think that rule would be more n accordance with the words of the law. Not to multiply instan-es, suffice it to say until language is perfect, and all the saints are erfect in their understanding of it, no law can ever be so written hat it will not need an authorized interpreter. I have a work now aying before me containing several hundred passages of scripture collated together so as to present apparently pointed and irreconcilable contradictions. I have presented many of them to men of first rate talent and critical biblical knowledge, all of whom have been entirely unable to reconcile them. Yet no difficulty has ever presented itself to the church in deciding on any of these matters when they came up for decision. Paul's epistle to the Corinthians (ch.
vii. v. 14) is expressly explained by revelation. D. & C. sec. lxxiv.
The New Testament contains many expositions of the earlier scriptures, and I presume not a few of them are different from what the elders would make now a days if they were left to their own notions, and discarded authorized interpretations. I have yet to learn that the elders among the saints aside from the gift that is in them by the laying on of hands of the priesthood, that is out of their priesthood, are especially wiser than the rest of christendom. Yet there is no doctrine prevailing under that name which is not founded on a private interpretation of the prophets, the law and the gospel, honestly entertained.

All the different parties that have grown up under the name of Mormon found their faith on some private interpretation of the word of God, and all of them, I doubt not, believe their interpretation the true one. It is worthy of remark, too, that nearly all of them have selected some one or more of the revelations which they hold contradictory to those that have gone before, always selecting one coming forth about the time of their several apostacies. Those which were old revelations in their day are all perfectly consistent; as those which they reject will be consistent to the next generation after. For this reason living prophets are always being rejected as fallen, but when one is dead and his cotemporaries gone, whoever receives him as a prophet at any time in his life holds him so till the end of his life.

If any one should ask what is our security from being led astray while we acknowledge such authority in the priesthood, I answer, it is this: That our trust is in the arm of God, and not man. If we set up our own judgment as a final standard or rule of action, then we for all practical purposes make that our supreme standard of right and wrong, arrogating to ourselves individually wisdom above the whole church. If we, as a final resort in doubtful questions, yield to the advice of some man in whom we happen to have confidence, then we yield the same to such individual in derogation of the authority of the church. But acknowledging the power in the church to decide finally all questions of right and truth, we discard human infallibility and supremacy altogether and acknowledge that of God.

There are organized in the church various councils and courts for the purpose of deciding all questions of doctrine and discipline.— These are arranged as seemed wisdom in God, that the system might be made as perfect as possible; and the last resort and final supreme authority among all is a general high council of the church, with the First Presidency presiding. After a decision by this council on any question that may arise it shall be had in remembrance no more before the Lord." I understand that the Lord will have all error in remembrance to correct it. Consequently he will in this council of final resort correct all error, that there be none to have in remembrance. Certainly the Lord has not put so forcible a sanction on decisions of themselves unjust. Our reliance that he will have a decision just, which he will have in remembrance no more, is not founded in our confidence in the men who make it, but in the God who gives force and validity to it.

So, too, in the law making power. The highest authority known in the church is a revelation or the word of God. This the church receive by the voice of the prophet. But suppose the prophet give false revelations? I answer, God has taken that matter into his own hands, without the assistance or intervention of any man.— What God does will be well done, and as the prophet is amenable immediately to him he will have him in continual remembrance.— And when there is danger of his deceiving the people, the Lord will stretch out his hand upon him and will destroy him from the midst of his people, that they be not led astray by him, neither be polluted by transgression. Ezek. xiv. 3, 12. The chain of accountability is perfect from the least of all lay members to God on his throne, who alone is supreme and infallible, and confers on his priesthood such of his powers as he sees fit, and whosoever rebels against any authority in this order rebels against the throne of God. The resort in all cases of supposed injustice is an appeal to higher powers.— And when we reach the final resort the duty of man is obedience.— This is the ark of our covenant, and the only ark of safety. Republics have established the legality of rebellion and treason, but God has not.

DAVID OUT AT LAST!

We think all the Pseudoes should lift up their voices, and hands too, and shout hosanna; for David has spoken and Strang has fallen. And we recommend this course to them with the more confidence because we recently saw some of them on the Hill of Promise doing so. Truly they made it ring, with the voice of a shout and a trumpet; but as we could not understand the trumpet's speech we have been happy to obtain the following, which we doubt not is a true translation of what it said. One thing we are much obliged to the trumpet for; or to David, for we hardly know which to give the credit to. That is, for allowing that Strang ever was a prophet. This is more liberal than McLellin, and particularly complimentary, as it leaves Strang in good company. Joseph was a prophet until he called the church by the name of saints. Christ was a prophet until he told his disciples that, "except they eat his flesh and drank his blood there was no life in them." John the Baptist was a prophet till he told the Pharisees to "bring forth fruits meet for repentance." And Moses also was a prophet till he went on the mount to talk with God. Thus all, it seems, by the testimonies of the Pseudoes of their day, fell among and went to the perdition of ungodly men; and though we don't like to think prophet Strang will come to any such fate, yet we don't object to the company. But here is David's proclamation, so let all the earth give ear:—

A VOICE OF WARNING AND PROCLAMATION TO ALL.

VOREE, RACINE COUNTY, WISCONSIN TERRITORY, NORTH AMERICA, MAY 20TH, 1848.

The word of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, through his servant David, concerning the work of the Lord, and also his people in the latter days. Hear, O heavens! and give ear, O earth! for I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but my people do not know, neither will they consider.— Therefore will I not have mercy upon them, except they quickly repent; for when I called, that they might enter into my rest, they have always refused; and now therefore when they call, in the hardness of their hearts, I will not hear until I have scourged them by my judgments, and which for a long time have slumbered not.

Therefore let every ear hear, and every heart tingle, while they read this my word, which I now send forth as a warning to all those who call themselves my people even in Voree, and also in the region round about, and also to all the inhabitants of that land. For the prophecies in my word concerning my work in the latter days have begun to be fulfilled. For behold I have brought forth my servant the Branch, even as it is said in the prophecy of my servant

Zechariah. Yea the ensign is set up on the Hill of Promise; even on the land with wings spread out, as Isaiah has said. Yea I have set my king upon my holy hill of Zion, in that I have set up my kingdom there, after the pattern of heavenly things, even that kingdom of which my servant Daniel spake. And now that men might know these things, even that my kingdom is set up on the earth for the salvation of all who will humble themselves before me and obey me in all things, have I caused this warning and proclamation to go forth. And verily what I the Lord have decreed and declared in this my word shall all be fulfilled.

For verily I called my servant Joseph that he might translate, and bring forth the record of the Nephites, that it might be a warning to this nation, that they might not fall after their example of unbelief and wickedness; and also as a preparation for things to come, even for the laying the foundation of Zion: and also for the instruction of the remnant of Joseph upon this land, to prepare them that they might return to the Lord, and be saved in his kingdom when it should come forth among them. I also called my servant Oliver (his spokesman) that they might be two anointed ones; and therefore I sent my servant John, even he who was Elijah, to ordain them, that they might receive power to baptize for the remission of sins; and thus to prepare the way before the Lord of the whole earth, even the branch, as my servant Zechariah has said.

But, behold, my servant Joseph became a foolish shepherd and a wicked steward, in resisting him who he was sent to prepare the way before; and behold he was rebuked of the Lord and cut off from his people for a season, that I might set up my kingdom and call him forth that he might gather his people around the ensign; and this that he and his people might be saved, and also that my word might be fulfilled; in that he should be healed, and also that afterward whoever would not receive my word should be cut off, and when also the remnant of Jacob should go forth among the Gentiles as a lion among the flocks of sheep, and which time is also at hand, yea even commenced, yet they know it not.

Yea, and saith the Lord, I have also called my servant James, that he might do that which my servant Joseph in his weakness and folly neglected to do, even to prepare the way for the setting up my kingdom—in the place which I had appointed. But, behold, he also was unfaithful and went astray from me, and submitted himself to wickedness, in that he listened to the tempter to deceive my people; that they might believe he could set up my kingdom, and endue them with power from on high, and all this that he might tyrannize over them even as he pleased in all things; and thus Satan gained the advantage over him, that he might again bring my people down to destruction. But, behold, saith the Lord, I will cause that Satan shall be disappointed in this thing; for, behold, he shall be brought down to the ground, yea even into the dust, except he quickly repent, even him whom he has thus deceived and led away; for he has even denied the Lord who has redeemed him, in that he denies him as the son of God. Therefore wo! unto him! except he quickly repent, and make public confession before his people of his great sin in thus deceiving them and rejecting me, saith the Lord.

Yea let him humble himself and repent of all his wickedness speedily; and let him turn to the Lord and acknowledge the work of his hand in the setting up of his kingdom; and also let him speedily proclaim a fast, and gather his people and call on the Lord that he may forgive him and his people their great sin in seeking to hide themselves under falsehood, and to fight against my kingdom which has been set up among them; and except they do this I will cause that they shall be vexed sorely, by division, and confusion among themselves: and I will also send sickness among them and even death; and also I will warn them by dreams, and signs until the day and the hour which is in my heart, and which also is even at the very doors, yet they know it not. When if he and his people repent not, behold I will visit them in my great displeasure, and in my fierce anger will I cut him off, even after the similitude of my servant Joseph, that he shall fight against me no more forever. And I will do this that all my people may fear me and come into my kingdom, that they may be saved. But he shall not be removed by the wicked, but by mine own hand saith the Lord, that all may know my power and my judgments. For behold the prophecy of Isaiah shall be fulfilled, in that the Lord through his mighty and strong one should cause the tempest of hail and the destroying storm, as a flood of mighty waters overflowing, to sweep away the refuge of lies, that the Lord to those who remain should be a crown of glory, and a diadem of beauty, that the Lord might do his strange work, and bring to pass his strange act.

Therefore let all those abroad who call themselves my people hear this warning and attend to these things, and let them speedily now prepare themselves to come to Voree; which, after it is scourged and cleansed, shall be a refuge for the faithful of the flock, who will then come and place themselves under the care of their shepherd whom they have long disowned and rejected, and who will lead them to green pastures and cause them to drink of the water of everlasting life. Yea let them come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, that my house may be filled, saith the Lord. And the yoke of bondage shall be taken off, and they shall have peace and rest; for behold my law shall now be written in the hearts of my little ones, and the faithful shall go forward in the day of my power (which is even now begun) to possess the kingdom. For behold the thrones have been cast down, and judgment is given to my chosen; yea the hour of my judgment is come, even that of which my servant John, and also my servant Daniel spake, has come to pass. And therefore my judgments shall now go forth, and they shall not cease until the earth is cleansed of wickedness; and the dominion of the Lord and his anointed shall extend over all the earth. Therefore let all the inhabitants of this land, and all the earth also, take warning by this my word; for whosoever from this time will not hear my servants when I shall send them to proclaim my kingdom among them, behold they shall be cut off from the earth by my judgments, that they shall not cumber the ground, for I the Lord am not to be mocked any longer, except I visit the mocker, and scorner in vengeance! Amen.

Centreville, May 19th, 1848.

Brother Strang:—We are in health, for which God be praised. I write this to request you to forward me what papers I have not received during the past year. At times I can scarcely get a paper. I want both copies of my paper continued. Latterly there has but one number came at a time and they "like angels visits, few and far between." I do not ask you to foward the missing No's. at your own expense. I lay no blame on you. If Uncle Sam's servants have pilfered the Herald somebody has read it. What I want is to fill up mine for binding; a thing which I have done with the papers printed by the church since 1834. The first year of the Voree Herald I will not try to fill, as I lent them until they are worn nearly out. Of Vol. 2 I have carefully kept one copy of each No. that I have received. Sometimes during the past year it seemed as though my paper had stopped altogether. Of those a single paper, No. 70, came. I want double numbers sent for the missing of the last two months. I shall forward you the money shortly, say three or four weeks, for both papers the present year and for the back numbers. Of the hymn books I suppose I have received as fast as printed.

STEPHEN POST.

P. S. Be sure that the county is put on all my papers. There are upwards of ten Centrevilles in this State, tho' but one P. O. of the name; but it makes careless P. M.'s send papers and letters in wrong directions. One a while ago came labelled, "for God's sake let this go to Crawford Co." So said we. Let them come, and wherever they go let them prove a blessing. S. P.

☞ We forward the back numbers, and take this occasion to say we do not charge for furnishing missing numbers. All our subscribers who fail to get their entire complement of papers will be furnished with missing numbers without charge, so far as we have them in the office. Of Voree Herald Vol. 1 we have from No. 6 to No. 10 inclusive. Of Reveille and Gospel Herald we have No. 5, and from No. 16 to the present time except numbers 27, 28 and 50.

It is a matter of surprise to us that on a route where the mail is carried so regular and rapidly as from here to Crawford Co., Pa., so many papers should fail of reaching their destination. We can only account for it by supposing some P. M. is fond of Mormon reading, and not able to pay for it. It is a laudable anxiety, but the means of gratifying it are inexcusable. Any P. M. or other person who wishes the reading of the Gospel Herald and is unable to pay for it shall be furnished with the paper gratuitously by applying for it.

☞ What is the order of Enoch? We have heard several say that the united order in Voree, equal in all things and holding all property in common is not the order of Enoch. Will any one of these tell us what is the order of Enoch? Speak out.

Zechariah. Yea the ensign is set up on the Hill of Promise; even on the land with wings spread out, as Isaiah has said. Yea I have set my king upon my holy hill of Zion, in that I have set up my kingdom there, after the pattern of heavenly things, even that kingdom of which my servant Daniel spake. And now that men might know these things, even that my kingdom is set up on the earth for the salvation of all who will humble themselves before me and obey me in all things, have I caused this warning and proclamation to go forth. And verily what I the Lord have decreed and declared in this my word shall all be fulfilled.

For verily I called my servant Joseph that he might translate, and bring forth the record of the Nephites, that it might be a warning to this nation, that they might not fall after their example of unbelief and wickedness; and also as a preparation for things to come, even for the laying the foundation of Zion: and also for the instruction of the remnant of Joseph upon this land, to prepare them that they might return to the Lord, and be saved in his kingdom when it should come forth among them. I also called my servant Oliver (his spokesman) that they might be two anointed ones; and therefore I sent my servant John, even he who was Elijah, to ordain them, that they might receive power to baptize for the remission of sins; and thus to prepare the way before the Lord of the whole earth, even the branch, as my servant Zechariah has said.

But, behold, my servant Joseph became a foolish shepherd and a wicked steward, in resisting him who he was sent to prepare the way before; and behold he was rebuked of the Lord and cut off from his people for a season, that I might set up my kingdom and call him forth that he might gather his people around the ensign; and this that he and his people might be saved, and also that my word might be fulfilled; in that he should be healed, and also that afterward whoever would not receive my word should be cut off, and when also the remnant of Jacob should go forth among the Gentiles as a lion among the flocks of sheep, and which time is also at hand, yea even commenced, yet they know it not.

Yea, and saith the Lord, I have also called my servant James, that he might do that which my servant Joseph in his weakness and folly neglected to do, even to prepare the way for the setting up my kingdom—in the place which I had appointed. But, behold, he also was unfaithful and went astray from me, and submitted himself to wickedness, in that he listened to the tempter to deceive my people; that they might believe he could set up my kingdom, and endue them with power from on high, and all this that he might tyrannize over them even as he pleased in all things; and thus Satan gained the advantage over him, that he might again bring my people down to destruction. But, behold, saith the Lord, I will cause that Satan shall be disappointed in this thing; for, behold, he shall be brought down to the ground, yea even into the dust, except he quickly repent, even him whom he has thus deceived and led away, for he has even denied the Lord who has redeemed him, in that he denies him as the Son of God. Therefore wo! unto him! except he quickly repent, and make public confession before his people of his great sin in thus deceiving them and rejecting me, saith the Lord.

Yea let him humble himself and repent of all his wickedness speedily; and let him turn to the Lord and acknowledge the work of his hand in the setting up of his kingdom; and also let him speedily proclaim a fast, and gather his people and call on the Lord that he may forgive him and his people their great sin in seeking to hide themselves under falsehood, and to fight against my kingdom which has been set up among them; and except they do this I will cause that they shall be vexed sorely, by division, and confusion among themselves; and I will also send sickness among them and even death; and also I will warn them by dreams, and signs until the day and the hour which is in my heart, and which also is even at the very doors, yet they know it not. When if he and his people repent not, behold I will visit them in my great displeasure, and in my fierce anger will I cut him off, even after the similitude of my servant Joseph; that he shall fight against me no more forever. And I will do this that all my people may fear me and come into my kingdom, that they may be saved. But he shall not be removed by the wicked, but by mine own hand saith the Lord, that all may know my power and my judgments. For behold, the prophecy of Isaiah shall be fulfilled, in that the Lord through his mighty and strong one should cause the tempest of hail and the destroying storm, as a flood of mighty waters overflowing, to sweep away the refuge of lies, that the Lord to those who remain should be a crown of glory, and a diadem of beauty, that the Lord might do his strange work, and bring to pass his strange act.

Therefore let all those [illegible] hear this warning and att[illegible] now prepare themselves [illegible] ed and cleansed, shall b[illegible] will then come and plac[illegible] herd whom they have [illegible] them to green pasture[illegible] everlasting life. Yea [illegible] west, and from the nort[illegible] filled, saith the Lord. [illegible] and they shall have peace [illegible] be written in the hearts of m[illegible] forward in the day of my powe[illegible] sess the kingdom. For behold the [illegible] and judgment is given to my ch[illegible] ment is come, even that of which my [illegible] servant Daniel spake, has come to pass. [illegible] shall now go forth, and they shall not cease [illegible] ed of wickedness; and the dominion of the Lor[illegible] shall extend over all the earth. Therefore let all the inhabitants of this land, and all the earth also, take warning by this my word; for whosoever from this time will not hear my servants when I shall send them to proclaim my kingdom among them, behold they shall be cut off from the earth by my judgments, that they shall not cumber the ground, for I the Lord am not to be mocked any longer, except I visit the mocker, and scorner in vengeance! Amen.

Centreville, May 19th, 1848.

BROTHER STRANG:—We are in health, for which God be praised. I write this to request you to forward me what papers I have not received during the past year. At times I can scarcely get a paper. I want both copies of my paper continued. Latterly there has but one number came at a time and they "like angels visits, few and far between." I do not ask you to foward the missing No's. at your own expense. I lay no blame on you. If Uncle Sam's servants have pilfered the Herald somebody has read it. What I want is to fill up mine for binding; a thing which I have done with the papers printed by the church since 1834. The first year of the Voree Herald I will not try to fill, as I lent them until they are worn nearly out. Of Vol. 2 I have carefully kept one copy of each No. that I have received. Sometimes during the past year it seemed as though my paper had stopped altogether. Of those a single paper, No. 70, came. I want double numbers sent for the missing of the last two months. I shall forward you the money shortly, say three or four weeks, for both papers the present year and for the back numbers. Of the hymn books I suppose I have received as fast as printed.

STEPHEN POST.

P. S. Be sure that the county is put on all my papers. There are upwards of ten Centrevilles in this State, tho' but one P. O. of the name; but it makes careless P. M.'s send papers and letters in wrong directions. One a while ago came labelled, "for God's sake let this go to Crawford Co." So said we. Let them come, and wherever they go let them prove a blessing. S. P.

☞ We forward the back numbers, and take this occasion to say we do not charge for furnishing missing numbers. All our subscribers who fail to get their entire complement of papers will be furnished with missing numbers without charge, so far as we have them in the office. Of Voree Herald Vol. 1 we have from No. 6 to No. 10 inclusive. Of Reveille and Gospel Herald we have No. 5, and from No. 16 to the present time except numbers 27, 28 and 50.

It is a matter of surprise to us that on a route where the mail is carried so regular and rapidly as from here to Crawford Co., Pa., so many papers should fail of reaching their destination. We can only account for it by supposing some P. M. is fond of Mormon reading, and not able to pay for it. It is a laudable anxiety, but the means of gratifying it are inexcusable. Any P. M. or other person who wishes the reading of the Gospel Herald and is unable to pay for it shall be furnished with the paper gratuitously by applying for it.

☞ What is the order of Enoch? We have heard several say that the united order in Voree, equal in all things and holding all property in common is not the order of Enoch. Will any one of these tell us, what is the order of Enoch? Speak out.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 12.] VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1848. [WHOLE No. 76.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

THE DOCTRINE OF CHRIST.

BY H. P. BROWN.

"Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." 2d John ver. 9.

Much is said at the present time by both men and women about the doctrine of Christ. Every one seems to have his or her own peculiar doctrine or theory, and to ascribe it to Christ as the author of their imaginations. Each one deviating from the other as far as the east is from the west. When we take into consideration that "God is not the author of confusion," the question naturally arises in the minds of those who are untrammeled by sectarianism, and who are able to think for themselves, what is the doctrine of Jesus Christ? And how shall we know it when we see and hear it? And why are there so many churches? In order to answer these questions of a free and unbiased mind, and show what the doctrine of Christ is, I shall perhaps cross the track of this almost countless number of sects, and bring down their combined anathamas upon my devoted head, as the apostles of Christ did anciently. But as I have the scriptures combined with both ancient and modern history, with a tolerable degree of common sense and reason on my side, I shall as little fear them as David did the Philistine giant.

"Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." This scripture was delivered unto those who had the doctrine of Christ; for St. Paul says, where there is no law there is no transgression. Again, whosoever abideth, i. e. stays, remains, not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. That is, after having received or embraced the doctrine of Christ and then shall transgress and not remain in it hath not God. But in order for us to find out whether the different sects abide, i. e. remain, stay, in the doctrine we must first find what the doctrine of Christ consists of, and, secondly, what it is not to abide, remain or stay in it. In the order of research the doctrine comes first.

The first thing connected with the doctrine of Christ was the ministration of angels and direct revelation from God, baptism, the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, the voice of God, and miracles. See Luke i. The second thing was the calling of the twelve and ordaining them, and calling them apostles and sending them out to preach the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, (Rom. i. 16,) and heal the sick, and tell the people to "repent, for the kingdom was at hand." At Christ's ascension, he says unto the apostles: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." Luke xxiv. 49. Which power they received on the day of pentecost. Acts ii. Paul, in speaking of the organized kingdom of Christ, says: When he ascended up he led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men; and he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers; and the great and glorious object of these officers of the kingdom was "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." And he also says that they were to continue "till we all come in the unity of the faith and the knowledge of God;" which knowlege is "life eternal." John xvii. 3. Which knowledge can only be gained by direct revelation. Matt. xi. 27. Luke x. 22. "All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him."

What faith are we to come to a knowledge of, brother Paul?—Let brother Jude answer: "The faith once delivered to the saints." What was the effect of this faith, Paul? See my epistle to the Hebrews, xi. 32. "And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gedeon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthae; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets: Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. Women received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection." This seems to be the expression of the servants of God when the doctrine of Christ was taught in its fullness by the embassadors of the kingdom.

No one disputes that the apostles enjoyed the spiritual blessings spoken of by Jesus in the sixteenth chapter of Mark, but as soon as any one says anything about our enjoying the spiritual blessings Christ promised "them that believe," then the 'priests' raise the cry of 'delusion,' 'delusion,' 'fanaticism,' &c., &c., to prejudice the minds of the people, that they may not investigate the principles of salvation and enjoy the blessings God designed to give all those who love, serve and obey him in all ages of the world. "But," says an objector, "these blessings were only given for the saints of the first century to enjoy, and then were to cease." Well, we call on brother Paul to tell how long they were to continue in the church for the perfecting of the saints and work of the ministry, and for the edifying the body (i. e. the church) of Christ. Says Paul: "Till we (i. e. the saints, Jews and Gentiles) all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: That we henceforth be no more children (i. e. mere babes) tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive."—Eph. iv. 11, 13, inclusive.

How different the doctrine taught by the apostles and Jesus from the doctrine of modern sectarianism, which we are obliged to hear instead of the gospel of Jesus Christ; which is not in word only, "but in power and the Holy Ghost and much assurance." May God hasten 'the restitution of all things spoken by the prophets,' and send a "refreshing from the presence of the Lord," that they "who have a form of godliness and denying the power thereof"

GOSPEL HERALD.

for No 34 & 35 See

VOL. III. No. 12.] vol 2 in VOREE, W. T., THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1848. [WHOLE No. 76.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

THE DOCTRINE OF CHRIST.

BY H. P. BROWN.

"Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." 2d John ver. 9.

Much is said at the present time by both men and women about the doctrine of Christ. Every one seems to have his or her own peculiar doctrine or theory, and to ascribe it to Christ as the author of their imaginations. Each one deviating from the other as far as the east is from the west. When we take into consideration that "God is not the author of confusion," the question naturally arises in the minds of those who are untrammeled by sectarianism, and who are able to think for themselves, what is the doctrine of Jesus Christ? And how shall we know it when we see and hear it? And why are there so many churches? In order to answer these questions of a free and unbiased mind, and show what the doctrine of Christ is, I shall perhaps cross the track of this almost countless number of sects, and bring down their combined anathamas upon my devoted head, as the apostles of Christ did anciently. But as I have the scriptures combined with both ancient and modern history, with a tolerable degree of common sense and reason on my side, I shall as little fear them as David did the Philistine giant.

"Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." This scripture was delivered unto those who had the doctrine of Christ; for St. Paul says, where there is no law there is no transgression. Again, whosoever abideth, i. e. stays, remains, not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. That is, after having received or embraced the doctrine of Christ and then shall transgress and not remain in it hath not God. But in order for us to find out whether the different sects abide, i. e. remain, stay, in the doctrine we must first find what the doctrine of Christ consists of, and, secondly, what it is not to abide, remain or stay in it. In the order of research the doctrine comes first.

The first thing connected with the doctrine of Christ was the ministration of angels and direct revelation from God, baptism, the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, the voice of God, and miracles. See Luke i. The second thing was the calling of the twelve and ordaining them, and calling them apostles and sending them out to preach the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, (Rom. i. 16,) and heal the sick, and tell the people to "repent, for the kingdom was at hand." At Christ's ascension, he says unto the apostles: "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." Luke xxiv. 49. Which power they received on the day of pentecost. Acts ii. Paul, in speaking of the organized kingdom of Christ, says: When he ascended up he led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men; and he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers; and the great and glorious object of these officers of the kingdom was "for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ." And he also says that they were to continue "till we all come in the unity of the faith and the knowledge of God;" which knowlege is "life eternal." John xvii. 3. Which knowledge can only be gained by direct revelation. Matt. xi. 27. Luke x. 22. "All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him."

What faith are we to come to a knowledge of, brother Paul?—Let brother Jude answer: "The faith once delivered to the saints." What was the effect of this faith, Paul? See my epistle to the Hebrews, xi. 32. "And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gedeon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephthae; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets: Who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens. Women received their dead raised to life again; and others were tortured, not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection." [illegible] the expression of the servants of God when the doctrine of Christ [illegible] ought in its fullness by the ambassadors of the kingdom.

No one disputes that the apostles enjoyed [illegible] as soon as spoken of by Jesus in the sixteenth chapter of [illegible] any one says anything about our enjoying the spiritual blessing Christ promised "them that believe," then the 'priests' raise cry of 'delusion,' 'delusion,' 'fanaticism,' &c., &c., to prejudice minds of the people, that they may not investigate the principle salvation and enjoy the blessings God designed to give all who love, serve and obey him in all ages of the world. "But says an objector, "these blessings were only given for the saints the first century to enjoy, and then were to cease." Well, we on brother Paul to tell how long they were to continue in the ch for the perfecting of the saints and work of the ministry, and fo edifying the body (i. e. the church) of Christ. Says Paul: we (i. e. the saints, Jews and Gentiles) all come in the unity faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: Th henceforth be no more children (i. e. mere babes) tossed to a and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceiv Eph. iv. 11, 13, inclusive.

How different the doctrine taught by the apostles a the doctrine of modern sectarianism, which we are o instead of the gospel of Jesus Christ; which is not "but in po Holy Ghost and much assu God all things spoken by the of the Lord, the may become confounded like "James and Jambres who withstood Moses" the servant of God, and may their "follies be made manifest as theirs also was."

THE INDIANS.

"The archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob."—Gen. xlix. 23, 24.

We published a short time since an account of the war in Yucatan; a war successfully waged by the Indians against the whole white race. There is a rumor that a peace has been concluded containing the provisions that the Indians shall be restored to their ancient lands, of which they have been dispossessed for 300 years, and be restored to absolute independence, and their ancient institutions of common property and community organization. This rumor may prove erroneous, but however that may be the Indians have successfully achieved all these advantages throughout the principal part of Yucatan. The account we publish below, the crowning of an Indian king, we presume is authentic; and the place of the coronation, amidst fallen walls, broken fountains, and ruined altars of their ancient state and faith, tells more strongly than we dared to hope of the waning influence of apostate christianity among them.

But another event has come thundering upon us from another quarter, filling men with astonishment and starting the statesmen of the nation as men untimely waked from sleep, and betokening a great change in the relations of the races on the continent. We speak of the Indian war in Oregon. From this time we look for a struggle, with occasional brief intermissions, between the aborigines and the intruders for the possession of that region. And it will be no such struggle as that which gave the prairies to the white man in 35 years, but like that of two centuries for the land east of the Alleganny mountains. God grant prosperity to the right. Let it be remembered that this war is within reach of the Salt land. What effect will it have on the Brighamites? Will the Indians know any difference between them and the Gentiles? If not, they are nearer the end of their misfortunes than we anticipated.

INDIAN WAR IN OREGON.

An arrival at St. Louis brings late dates from Oregon. The inhabitants have been plunged into a sanguinary war with the Indians, and several battles have been fought. Mr. Meek, of Oregon, who brought the intelligence to St. Louis, was despatched to Washington for aid.

The following is a sketch of affairs as drawn by him: "When I left Walla Walla, on the 26th of January, the people of the territory of Oregon were at open war with four tribes of Indians—the Capusa, Walla Walla, Shaster, and Day Indians. Four battles had taken place between them before I left the country; the first engagement took place at the foot of the Dalles of the Columbia, on the 8th of January, between a small party of troops under the command of Capt. Lee—the next took place some time after between the advanced guard of the Oregon Regiment under the command of Major Lee. He was forced to retreat, with very little loss, and fall back upon the regiment. Next day the regiment marched up the Shaster river, under Col. C. Gilliam. About 12 o'clock, they were attacked by a large body of Indians, but they were soon routed by the troops—their villages taken and burned. Large quantities of salmon fish, preserved for food, and other property, were also destroyed.

The Oregon Regiment having been reinforced, so as to number 500 men, they took up the line of march for the Walla Walla.—On the 18th of February, the enemy appeared on the plains in great numbers, and a line of battle was formed. The engagement commenced about ten o'clock, and lasted until night parted the combatants. Each party camped on the ground, but the next morning the enemy had left the field. A large number of Indians, of other tribes, were present, as lookers' on of the strife. It was not known how many of the Indians were killed. The troops had a nine pounder with them, mounted on an emigrant's wagon, drawn by six yoke of oxen; the balls gave out during the battle, and they were compelled to shoot away the lockchains belonging to the baggage wagons. Next day, they marched to the Utilla river, and thence to Dr. Whitman's Mission, the scene of massacre. All the property about the place had been destroyed by the Indians, and the houses burnt. Here, too, were the heads of the Docter and of his wife laying in the yard, and the bones of the other sufferers scattered about on the ground. At this point I left the troops, and took the Blue Mountain route, the snow from three to five feet deep, for thirty miles, until we fell in with the third division of Oregon."

The Governor called the Legislature together, and they passed a law to raise 500 men forthwith.

A resolution was also passed, authorizing the Governor to raise a company of riflemen, to proceed forthwith to occupy the mission station at the Dalles of the Columbia River. This company was immediately formed, and H. A. G. Lee elected Captain, J. Magone, 1st Lieut., and J. E. Ross 2d Lieut. On the 9th a flag was presented to the company by the ladies of Oregon City, and on the same day, the company started for the scene of the massacre.

A memorial to Congress was adopted, and Joseph L. Meek, one of the members from Twalatin county was appointed the special messenger. The memorial—written by Marcus Ford—sets forth the condition of the country in plain terms. It expresses the opinion that the massacre which has been narrated, is only the commencement of further and more extensive murders, and "our hitherto peaceful settlements will become the scene of fierce and violent warfare." "Circumstances," it is said, "warrant your memorialists in believing that many of the powerful tribes inhabiting the upper valley of the Columbia, have formed an alliance for the purpose of carrying on hostilities against our settlements," and aid from the United States is feelingly implored.

The following persons were massacred by the Indians at Walla Walla: Dr. Whitman, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Sanders, (schoolmaster,) Mr. Marsh, John Sager, Francis Sager, (youths,) Mr. Kimball, Mr. Gellen, Mr. Bewley, Mr. Young, jr., Mr. Sales, Mr. Hall.

The St. Louis Era publishes the following as the cause of the massacre of Dr. Whitman's family:—

It appears that at the missionary station of Dr. Whitman, among the Cayute Indians, a number of the Indians died of measles and dysentery. The Doctor, from the most humane motives, was relieving them by his professional skill and attention to the utmost of his ability. But some thirty of the Indians having died, the horrible thought took possession of their minds that, for the purpose of exterminating them, the Doctor was poisoning them. The Indians say that, with a view of testing the grounds of their suspicion, they requested the Doctor to administer medicine to their friends, two of whom were in reality indisposed, and the third was not. The Doctor complied, and the next morning all three were dead. This confirmed their suspicions, and vengeance was determined upon.—Committing the bodies of the three to the ground, a party of the Cayute Indians repaired to the premises of Dr. Whitman, where they found him with some of his men employed in slaughtering an ox. They surrounded the dwelling, and at once commenced the massacre. Tears and entreaties were unavailing, and fourteen persons fell victims to the ferocity of the unrelenting savages.

A large number of others were taken prisoners, but were subsequently ransomed, through the prompt and indefatigable exertions of Peter Sken Ogden, Esq., Chief Factor of the Hudson Bay Company. It is generally conceded but for his interference and the in-

Moses" the servant of God, and may their "follies be made manifest as theirs also was."

THE INDIANS.

"The archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob."—Gen. xlix. 23, 24.

We published a short time since an account of the war in Yucatan; a war successfully waged by the Indians against the whole white race. There is a rumor that a peace has been concluded containing the provisions that the Indians shall be restored to their ancient lands, of which they have been dispossessed for 300 years, and be restored to absolute independence, and their ancient institutions of common property and community organization. This rumor may prove erroneous, but however that may be the Indians have successfully achieved all these advantages throughout the principal part of Yucatan. The account we publish below, the crowning of an Indian king, we presume is authentic; and the [illegible] of the coronation, amidst fallen walls, [illegible] fountains, and ruined altars of [illegible] tells more strongly than we dared to [illegible] the waning influence of apostate christianity among them.

But another event has come thundering upon us from another quarter, filling men with astonishment and starting the statesmen of the nation as men untimely waked from sleep, and betokening a great change in the relations of the races on the continent. We speak of the Indian war in Oregon. From this time we look for a struggle, with occasional brief intermissions, between the aborigines and the intruders for the possession of that region. And it will be no such struggle as that which gave the prairies to the white man in 35 years, but like that of two centuries for the land east of the Allegany mountains. God grant prosperity to the right. Let it be remembered that this war is within reach of the Salt land. What effect will it have on the Brighamites? Will the Indians know any difference between them and the Gentiles? If not, they are nearer the end of their misfortunes than we anticipated.

INDIAN WAR IN OREGON.

An arrival at St. Louis brings late dates from Oregon. The inhabitants have been plunged into a sanguinary war with the Indians, and several battles have been fought. Mr. Meek, of Oregon, who brought the intelligence to St. Louis, was despatched to Washington [illegible].

The following is a sketch of affairs as drawn by him: "When Walla Walla, on the 26th of January, the people of the territory of Oregon were at open war with four tribes of Indians—the Cayuses, Walla Walla, Shaster, and Day Indians—and four battles had taken place between them before I left [illegible] first engagement took place at the foot of [illegible] on the 17th of January, between [illegible] Lee—the the advanced guard of the Oregon Regiment under the command of Major Lee. He was forced to retreat, with very little loss, and fall back upon the regiment. Next day the regiment marched up the Shaster river, under Col. C. Gilliam. About 12 o'clock, they were attacked by a large body of Indians, but they were soon routed by the troops—their villages taken and burned. Large quantities of salmon fish, preserved for food, and other property, were also destroyed.

The Oregon Regiment having been reinforced, so as to number 500 men, they took up the line of march for the Walla Walla.—On the 18th of February, the enemy appeared on the plains in great numbers, and a line of battle was formed. The engagement commenced about ten o'clock, and lasted until night parted the combatants. Each party camped on the ground, but the next morning the enemy had left the field. A large number of Indians, of other tribes, were present, as lookers' on of the strife. It was not known how many of the Indians were killed. The troops had a nine pounder with them, mounted on an emigrant's wagon, drawn by six yoke of oxen; the balls gave out during the battle, and they were compelled to shoot away the lockchains belonging to the baggage wagons. Next day, they marched to the Utilla river, and thence to Dr. Whitman's Mission, the scene of massacre. All the property about the place had been destroyed by the Indians, and the houses burnt. Here, too, were the heads of the Docter and of his wife laying in the yard, and the bones of the other sufferers scattered about on the ground. At this point I left the troops, and took the Blue Mountain route, the snow from three to five feet deep, for thirty miles, until we fell in with the third division of Oregon."

The Governor called the Legislature together, and they passed a law to raise 500 men forthwith.

A resolution was also passed, authorizing the Governor to raise a company of riflemen, to proceed forthwith to occupy the mission station at the Dalles of the Columbia River. This company was immediately formed, and H. A. G. Lee elected Captain, J. Magone, 1st Lieut., and J. E. Ross 2d Lieut. On the 9th a flag was presented to the company by the ladies of Oregon City, and on the same day, the company started for the scene of the massacre.

A memorial to Congress was adopted, and Joseph L. Meek, one of the members from Twalatin county was appointed the special messenger. The memorial—written by Marcus Ford—sets forth the condition of the country in plain terms. It expresses the opinion that the massacre which has been narrated, is only the commencement of further and more extensive murders, and "our hitherto peaceful settlements will become the scene of fierce and violent warfare." "Circumstances," it is said, "warrant your memorialists in believing that many of the powerful tribes inhabiting the upper valley of the Columbia, have formed an alliance for the purpose of carrying on hostilities against our settlements," and aid from the United States is feelingly implored.

The following persons were massacred by the Indians at Walla Walla: Dr. Whitman, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Sanders, (schoolmaster,) Mr. Marsh, John Sager, Francis Sager, (youths,) Mr. Kimball, Mr. Geilen, Mr. Bewley, Mr. Young, jr., Mr. Sales, Mr. Hall.

The St. Louis Era publishes the following as the cause of the massacre of Dr. Whitman's family:—

It appears that at the missionary station of Dr. Whitman, among the Cayute Indians, a number of the Indians died of measles and dysentery. The Doctor, from the most humane motives, was relieving them by his professional skill and attention to the utmost of his ability. But some thirty of the Indians having died, the horrible thought took possession of their minds that, for the purpose of exterminating them, the Doctor was poisoning them. The Indians say that, with a view of testing the grounds of their suspicion, they requested the Doctor to administer medicine to their friends, two of whom were in reality indisposed, and the third was not. The Doctor complied, and the next morning all three were dead. This confirmed their suspicions, and vengeance was determined upon.—Committing the bodies of the three to the ground, a party of the Cayute Indians repaired to the premises of Dr. Whitman, where they found him with some of his men employed in slaughtering an ox. They surrounded the dwelling, and at once commenced the massacre. Tears and entreaties were unavailing, and fourteen persons fell victims to the ferocity of the unrelenting savages.

A large number of others were taken prisoners, but were subsequently ransomed, through the prompt and indefatigable exertions of Peter Sken Ogden, Esq., Chief Factor of the Hudson Bay Company. It is generally conceded but for his interference and the influence he exercised over the Indians, a large number more of our American citizens in Oregon would have been added to the list of their murdered comrades.

Letters from Yucatan to the 14th of April states that the Indians have elected a King, under the name of TUTULXIU, which was the name of their King or Chief before the conquest of the Spaniards. He was crowned in the famous ruins of Chiehen Itza on the 9th of April.—Nat. Intel.

THE JEWS.

Dr. Durbin says:—"The Jews are scarcely less remarkable for zeal for religion, and hatred to idolatry, than for their dispersion, unity and sympathy. For eighteen hundred years they have been plundered, trodden down, banished, and put to death in a thousand forms, all of which evils they might have avoided by renouncing their religion. Yet, as a people, they have never wavered in their national faith.

"To their dispersion, their unity, their sympathy, their religious zeal, and their hatred to idolatry, is to be added the very little observed fact of their literary and political, as well as commercial, influence throughout the world. We are used to consider Jews only as peddlers or money jobbers; we have not been accustomed to think of them as occupying professorships in the first universities of Europe, as being members of national senates, as leading on national armies to victory, and as sitting in the cabinets of kings. Annihilate them, their property, their influence, and their relations with society, and the world would receive a shock from which it would not recover for centuries. The following passage, quoted from B. D'Israeli, himself a Jew, and a member of the British Parliament, may require a little abatement on the score of national bias, and the manner in which the facts are put, but in the great outlines they are true. It is the language of a Rothschild, under the title of Sidonia, to Coningsby:

"You never observe a great intellectual movement in Europe in which the Jews do not greatly participate. The first Jesuits were Jews; that mysterious Russian diplomacy, which so alarms western Europe, is organized and principally carried on by Jews; that mighty revolution, which is this moment preparing in Germany, and which will be, in fact, a second and greater reformation, and of which so little is as yet known in England, is entirely developing under the auspices of Jews, who almost monopolize the professorial chairs of Germany. Neander, the founder of spiritual christianity, and who is Regius, professor in the university of Berlin, is a Jew. Benary, equally famous in the same university, is a Jew. I think there are more than ten professors in this university who are Jews.

"A few years back we were applied to by Russia. I resolved to go myself to St. Petersburg. I had, on my arrival, an interview with the Russian minister of finance, Count Cancrin: I beheld the son of a Lithuanian Jew. The loan was connected with the affairs of Spain. I resolved on repairing to Spain from Russia. I traveled without intermission. I had an audience immediately on my arrival with the Spanish minister, Mendizabel: I beheld one like myself, a Jew of Aragon. In consequence of what transpired at Madrid, I went straight to Paris to consult the president of the French council: I beheld the son of a French Jew, a hero, an imperial marshal, and properly so, for who should be military heroes if not those who worship the Lord of Hosts?

"And is Soult a Hebrew?

"Yes; and several of the French marshals, and the famous Massenna, for example; his real name was Manassah: but to my anecdote. The consequence of our consultation was, that some northern power should be applied to in a friendly and mediative capacity.—We fixed on Prussia; the president of the council made an application to the president minister, who attended a few days after our conference. Count Arnim entered the cabinet, and I beheld a Prussian Jew. So you see my dear Coningsby, that the world is governed by very different personages to what is imagined by those who are not behind the scenes."

"D'Israeli also claims that 'almost every great composer, skilled musician—almost every voice that ravishes you with its transporting strains spring from our tribe.' 'Rosini, Meyerbeer, Mendelsohm—the three great creative minds (says he) are of Hebrew race.' He continues,—'Little do men of fashion—your 'musicians' of Paris, and your dandies of London—as they thrill into raptures at the notes of a Pasta or a Grisi, little do they suspect that they are offering their homage to the sweet singers of Israel.'"

☞ The foregoing we doubt not was literally true when written. Though the scenes have shifted throughout Europe, and new actors are on the stage, they are Jews still. Every movement brings them more forward. Yet in the face of all these facts almost every nation in Europe has laws imposing certain disabilities on the Jews. It is a marvel that in the face of these facts such disabilities are allowed to remain. And still more that with these disabilities the Jews can thus get a finger in government matters. Von Rothschild was lately elected to the House of Commons of Great Britain, but could not take his seat without a repeal of the statute requiring an oath of abjuration from all Jews before taking office. Heretofore these things have been evaded by some kind of legal fictions, that is, of lawful falsehoods and perjuries. But the Jew grows bold and manly again after looking down for eighteen centuries. In this country the Jews are put upon the same footing as other citizens in most of the States. They have filled a large share in political circles. But in Europe where their legal disabilities generally remain they are now the influential class. The actual movers of the changes of government. Von Rothschild holds the destinies of Great Britain in his hands. Against his enmity the government could not stand 24 hours. Every act requiring the use of money is submitted to him before being brought forward in Parliament, and if he disapproves it his fiat is fate. It was he who prevented a war between Great Britain and the U. S. on the Oregon question. It was he who prevented British interference in the Mexican quarrel and war. He furnished the $40,000,000 for the pacification of Ireland last year, and should he now refuse to back the nation in quelling Irish rebellion the repeal of the union would follow as soon as the act could pass the usual forms.

We do not certainly know how far the Jews are connected with the recent revolution in France; but in Italy, Venice, Lombardy, nearly all the states of Germany and Poland, they are the prime movers. In Rome they have furnished guns to the Pope's new national guards as a kind of a good will offering. Should Germany become a nation instead of a multitude of insignificant states we expect to see its destinies in the hands of Hebrews. And if Poland is ever free she must give over her rashness for the calculating judgement of a son of Abraham.

SEA MONSTER.

It is singular that our coast has never been honored by a visit from the kraken, the enormous Norwegian sea monster, believed by some naturalists to be identical with the squid or cuttle fish, which are sometimes met with of extraordinary proportions and mischievous habits. The belief in the existence of the kraken is said to be universal among the sailors and fishmermen on the Norwegian coast, and it has been often alluded to by the Scandinavian writer, from the earliest period down to the present day. The following is an abridgment of an interesting account given of this monstrous animal by the celebrated Pontoppidan:—

"Our fishermen usually affirm," says he, "that when they row out several miles to sea, particularly in hot summer days, they are informed, by various circumstances, that the kraken is at the bottom of the sea. Sometimes twenty boats get together over him, and when, from well known indications, they perceive it is rising, they get away as fast as they can. When they find themselves out of danger, they lie upon their oars, and in a few minutes they see the monster come to the surface. He there shows himself sufficiently, though only a small part of his body appears. Its back, which appears to be a mile and a half in circumference, looks at first like a number of small islands, surrounded with something which floats like sea weeds; here and there a larger rising is observed like sandy banks; at last several bright points or horns appear, which grow thicker the higher they rise, and sometimes they stand up as high and as large as the masts of middle sized vessels. It seems these are the creature's arms, and it is said that if they were to lay hold of the largest man-of-war, they would pull it down to the bottom. After the monster has been a short time on the surface of the water, he begins slowly to sink again; and then the danger is as fluence he exercised over the Indians, a large number more of our American citizens in Oregon would have been added to the list of their murdered comrades.

Letters from Yucatan to the 14th of April states that the Indians have elected a King, under the name of Tutulxiu, which was the name of their King or Chief before the conquest of the Spaniards. He was crowned in the famous ruins of Chichen Itza on the 9th of April.—Nat. Intel.

THE JEWS.

Dr. Durbin says:—"The Jews are scarcely less remarkable for zeal for religion, and hatred to idolatry, than for their dispersion, unity and sympathy. For eighteen hundred years they have been plundered, trodden down, banished, and put to death in a thousand forms, all of which evils they might have avoided by renouncing their religion. Yet, as a people, they have never wavered in their national faith.

"To their dispersion, their unity, their sympathy, their religious zeal, and their hatred to idolatry, is to be added the very little observed fact of their literary and political, as well as commercial, influence throughout the world. We are used to consider Jews only as peddlers or money jobbers; we have not been accustomed to think of them as occupying professorships in the first universities of Europe, as being members of national senates, as leading on national armies to victory, and as sitting in the cabinets of kings. Annihilate them, their property, their influence, and their relations with societys and the world would receive a shock from which it would not recover for centuries. The following passage, quoted from B. D'Israeli, himself a Jew, and a member of the British Parliament, may require a little abatement on the score of national bias, and the manner in which the facts are put, but in the great outlines they are true. It is the language of a Rothschild, under the title of Sidonia, to Coningsby:

"You never observe a great intellectual movement in Europe in which the Jews do not greatly participate. The first Jesuits were Jews; that mysterious Russian diplomacy, which so alarms western Europe, is organized and principally carried on by Jews; that mighty revolution, which is this moment preparing in Germany, and which will be, in fact, a second and greater reformation and of which so little has yet known in England, is entirely developing under the auspice of Jews, who almost monopolize the professorial chairs of Germany. Neander, the founder of spiritual christianity, and who is Hegius, professor in the university of Berlin, is a Jew. Gans, equally famous in the same university, is a Jew. I think there are more than ten professors in this university who are Jews.

"A few years back we were applied to by Russia. I resolved to go myself to St. Petersburg. I had, on my arrival, an interview with the Russian minister of finance, Count Cancrin; I beheld the son of a Lithuanian Jew. The loan was connected with the affairs of Spain. I resolved on repairing to Spain from Russia. I travelled without intermission. I had an audience immediately on my arrival with the Spanish minister, Mendizabel: I beheld one like myself, a Jew of Aragon. In consequence of what transpired at Madrid, I went straight to Paris to consult the president of the French council. I beheld the son of a French Jew, a hero, an imperial marshal, and properly so, for who should be military heroes if not those who worship the Lord of Hosts?

"And is Soult a Hebrew?

"Yes; and several of the French marshals, and the famous Massenna, for example; his real name was Manassah; but to my anecdote. The consequence of our consultation was, that some northern power should be applied to in a friendly and mediative capacity.—We fixed on Prussia; the president of the council made an application to the president minister, who attended a few days after our conference. Count Arnim entered the cabinet, and I beheld a Prussian Jew. So you see my dear Coningsby, that the world is governed by very different personages to what is imagined by those who are not behind the scenes."

"D'Israeli also claims that 'almost every great composer, skilled musician—almost every voice that ravishes you with its transporting strains spring from our tribe.' 'Rosini, Meyerbeer, Mendelsohm—the three great creative minds (says he) are of Hebrew race.' He continues,—'Little do men of fashion—your 'musicians' of Paris, and your dandies of London—as they thrill into raptures at the notes of a Pasta or a Grisi, little do they suspect that they are offering their homage to the sweet singers of Israel.'"

☞ The foregoing we doubt not was literally true when written. Though the scenes have shifted throughout Europe, and new actors are on the stage, they are Jews still. Every movement brings them more forward. Yet in the face of all these facts almost every nation in Europe has laws imposing certain disabilities on the Jews. It is a marvel that in the face of these facts such disabilities are allowed to remain. And still more that with these disabilities the Jews can thus get a finger in government matters. Von Rothschild was lately elected to the House of Commons of Great Britain, but could not take his seat without a repeal of the statute requiring an oath of abjuration from all Jews before taking office. Heretofore these things have been evaded by some kind of legal fictions, that is, of lawful falsehoods and perjuries. But the Jew grows bold and manly again after looking down for eighteen centuries. In this country the Jews are put upon the same footing as other citizens in most of the States. They have filled a large share in political circles. But in Europe where their legal disabilities generally remain they are now the influential class. The actual movers of the changes of government. Von Rothschild holds the destinies of Great Britain in his hands. Against his enmity the government could not stand 24 hours. Every act requiring the use of money is submitted to him before being brought forward in Parliament, and if he disapproves it his fiat is fate. It was he who prevented a war between Great Britain and the U. S. on the Oregon question. It was he who prevented British interference in the Mexican quarrel and war. He furnished the $40,000,000 for the pacification of Ireland last year, and should he now refuse to back the nation in quelling Irish rebellion the repeal of the union would follow as soon as the act could pass the usual forms.

We do not certainly know how far the Jews are connected with the recent revolution in France; but in Italy, Venice, Lombardy, nearly all the states of Germany and Poland, they are the prime movers. In these they have furnished guns to the Pope's new national guards as a kind [illegible] offering. Should Germany become a nation instead of a multitude [illegible] expect to see its destinies in the hands of Hebrews. And if France is ever free she must give over her rashness for the calculating judgement of a son of Abraham.

SEA MONSTER.

It is singular that our coast has never been honored by a visit from the kraken, the enormous Norwegian sea monster, believed by some naturalists to be identical with the squid or cuttle fish, which are sometimes met with of extraordinary proportions and mischievous habits. The belief in the existence of the kraken is said to be universal among the sailors and fishmermen on the Norwegian coast, and it has been often alluded to by the Scandinavian writer, from the earliest period down to the present day. The following is an abridgment of an interesting account given of this monstrous animal by the celebrated Pontoppidan:—

"Our fishermen usually affirm," says he, "that when they row out several miles to sea, particularly in hot summer days, they are informed, by various circumstances, that the kraken is at the bottom of the sea. Sometimes twenty boats get together over him, and when, from well known indications, they perceive it is rising, they get away as fast as they can. When they find themselves out of danger, they lie upon their oars, and in a few minutes they see the monster come to the surface. He there shows himself sufficiently, though only a small part of his body appears. Its back, which appears to be a mile and a half in circumference, looks at first like a number of small islands, surrounded with something which floats like sea weeds; [illegible] there a larger rising is observed like sandy banks; at [illegible] points or horns appear, which grow thick [illegible] times they stand up as high a[illegible] vessels. [illegible] become these [illegible] hol[illegible] great as before, because the motion of the sinking causes such a swell and such an eddy and whirlpool that he carries every thing down with it."

This account will, by many, be regarded as fabulous—but distinguished scientific men are of opinion that the kraken may be identified with certain species of Sepia or cuttle fish, which have been described in the annals of science; indeed, different authorities have been quoted sufficient to show the existence of an enormous inhabitant of the deep, (the cuttle fish,) possessed of characters which, in a remarkable degree, distinguish it from every other creature which is known; and the agreement which may be observed in its descriptions when compared with those of the celebrated kraken, is sufficiently obvious to warrant the inference that the great Norwegian animal thus named is to be considered not as a wild and groundless chimera, but as identical with, or nearly allied to, this colossal cuttle fish. Mr. Pennant in his description of the eight armed cuttle fish, says:—

"In the Indian seas this species has been found of such a size as to measure twelve feet in breadth across the central part, while each arm was fifty-four feet in length, thus making it extend from point to point about 120 feet. He further states that the natives of the Indian isles, when sailing in their canoes, always take care to be provided with hatchets, in order immediately to cut off the arms of such of these animals as happen to fling them over the sides of the canoe, lest they should pull it under water and sink it."

Another eminent writer, Dr. Shaw, is equally decided in expressing his belief in the existence of this strange animal. He says:—

"The existence of some enormously large species of the cuttle fish tribe in the Indian and Northern seas can hardly be doubted; and though some accounts may have been much exaggerated, yet there is sufficient cause for believing that such species may very far surpass all that are generally observed about the coasts of European seas. A modern naturalist chooses to distinguish this tremendous species by the title of colossal cuttle fish, and seems amply disposed to believe all that has been related of its ravages. A northern navigator of the name of Dens, is said, some years ago, to have lost three of his men in the African seas by a monster of this kind, which unexpectedly made its appearance while these men were employed during a calm in raking the sides of the vessel. The colossal fish seized three men in its arms, and drew them under water in spite of every effort to preserve them; the thickness of one of the arms, which was cut off in the contest, was that of the mizen mast, and the suckers of the size of pot lids."

Several instances are also related by Denys Montford, in his Natural History of the Mollusca, of the appearance of this monster.—Among them he states that there is in a church at St. Malo an ex voto, or picture, deposited there by a crew in remembrance of their wonderful preservation, when an enormous cuttle fish suddenly threw its arms across the vessel, and was on the point of dragging it to the bottom; but the continued efforts of the crew compelled the monster, after a long and severe struggle, to relinquish his grasp.

☛ We copy the foregoing from the Boston Journal. Such a monster was seen last summer near the Beaver Islands by a party of fishermen, and afterwards by two elders. But as the fishermen got thoroughly laughed at by their ignorant neighbors, the elders refused to say any thing about it and saved their credit. We are sure that if unmolested, the monster is not dangerous.

☛ A Doctor Sallisbury of Chatauque Co., N. Y., has just been tried in the U. S. Circuit Court at Rochester, and found guilty of counterfeiting coin. The Rochester Advertiser in noticing the trial says:—

"He was a man of wealth, occupied a prominent position in society, was a leading member of one of the churches, and yet it was given in evidence that after having spent the night, of a Saturday, for instance, in the manufacture of counterfeit coin, he would go into the Sunday school the next morning and take a leading part in the exercises! He was a prominent mover in all the philanthropic projects of the day, remarkable for piety, soberness and benevolence! This was his general character in community, and yet from the testimony on the part of the prosecution, he was connected with a band of the most deliberate scoundrels that ever went unwhipped of justice!

"It seems that he had constructed a room ten feet by twelve, and seven feet high, in the rear of his barn, on a side hill, dug out of the ground, which was covered over by plank, and on the top of this was placed a hen house, so as effectually to prevent discovery.—The door leading to it was concealed, so that any one entering the barn a thousand times would not have observed it. The manufacturers generally worked at night, and just previous to the Doctor's arrest, a man residing on the adjoining lot discovered a light peering through the cracks, and on looking through discovered Sallisbury and another counting over what resembled money, and heard the Doctor say that if the other had a certain pile he must pay part down or give security."

☛ If he had only been a Mormon, what a pretty story it would have made. Why not mob his church out of the country?

An Unforunate Expression.—The new Archbishop of Canterbury, as head of the Church of England, has drawn up a form of prayer "for the maintenance of peace." The worthy church dignitary by the use of unfortunate expression, has laid himself open to a charge of apparent hostility to the House of Lords, by saying in his address to the Deity, "In our prosperity we have too much forgotten Thee; other lords besides Thee have had dominion over us." In the present state of popular excitement in England, this was considered too serious a subject to joke upon.—Ex. paper.

☛ We are informed that Sidney Rigdon is engaged in the honorable avocation of dressing cloth in the western part of the State of New York. This speaks well for him, and is an example that we commend to the sectarian priests who have reviled him for eighteen years. Is there not yet hope for the old man eloquent?—Wholesome honest labor is good both for ambition and insanity, and he has shown his manliness by turning to it.

☛ Scarcely a week passes but we see in some of our exchange papers articles credited to the Missouri Republican, speaking of the great success and prosperity of the Brighamite camp in the west.—All this would be well enough if it was true. Indeed we think their worst enemies ought to be satisfied with what they have suffered, and to pray for a respite of the evils they are daily drawing down on their own heads. But these editorial puffs seem to be stretched to the last degree of tension, and may burst like overgrown bubbles before the papers can reach the readers. If a cause is to be built up by lying, yet it is possible to lie too barefaced.—Certainly it looks very much like it when the Republican says that the Mormons had, at the last accounts, put in 5,000 acres of winter wheat in Salt Valley. In an earlier article the Republican had stated that 500 teams had gone to the Valley, and though this is 336 higher than other estimates and accounts of those who met them, yet take this for a basis of reasoning, each and every team must have carried the seed for 10 acres of ground, say 13 bushels, besides carrying the families, clothing, furniture, farming utensils of every kind, and a year's provisions. If any one can believe that a single family can move into the wilderness 1,000 miles beyond the last house, carrying all provisions, clothing, furniture, tools, seeds, and every thing else necessary for a year's use, including seed wheat to put in crops for market, he may believe this story. But if one family cannot do it, many cannot. Increasing the number of persons does not diminish the food and clothing necessary for each person. Besides this it should be remembered that nearly all these wagons went over late in the fall, and could not have arrived earlier than late for wheat sowing. And by the showing of the Republican they have built a large fortified town, as well as sowed 5,000 acres of wheat. And as by the same accounts they have taken over large herds of cattle, this 5,000 acres must all be fenced too, and the timber for the fences as well as that for building has all to be drawn some twelve miles. Nonsense! Any man who will believe such stuff deserves to be deceived.

great as before, because the motion of the sinking causes such a swell and such an eddy and whirlpool that he carries every thing down with it."

This account will, by many, be regarded as fabulous—but distinguished scientific men are of opinion that the kraken may be identified with certain species of Sepia or cuttle fish, which have been described in the annals of science; indeed, different authorities have been quoted sufficient to show the existence of an enormous inhabitant of the deep, (the cuttle fish,) possessed of characters which, in a remarkable degree, distinguish it from every other creature which is known; and the agreement which may be observed in its descriptions when compared with those of the celebrated kraken, is sufficiently obvious to warrant the inference that the great Norwegian animal thus named is to be considered not as a wild and groundless chimera, but as identical with, or nearly allied to, this colossal cuttle fish. Mr. Pennant in his description of the eight armed cuttle fish, says:—

"In the Indian seas this species has been found of such a size as to measure twelve feet in breadth across the central part, while each arm was fifty-four feet in length, thus making it extend from point to point about 120 feet. He further states that the natives of the Indian isles, when sailing in their canoes, always take care to be provided with hatchets, in order immediately to cut off the arms of such of these animals as happen to fling them over the sides of the canoe, lest they should pull it under water and sink it."

Another eminent writer, Dr. Shaw, is equally decided in expressing his belief in the existence of this strange animal. He says:—

"The existence of some enormously large species of the cuttle fish tribe in the Indian and Northern seas can hardly be doubted; and though some accounts may have been much exaggerated, yet there is sufficient cause for believing that such species may very far surpass all that are generally observed about the coasts of European seas. A modern naturalist chooses to distinguish this tremendous species by the title of colossal cuttle fish, and seems amply disposed to believe all that has been related of its ravages. A northern navigator of the name of Dens, is said, some years ago, to have lost three of his men in the African seas by a monster of this kind, which unexpectedly made its appearance while these men were employed during a calm in raking the sides of the [illegible] and drew them under water [illegible] men in its [illegible]; the thickness of one of the [illegible] which was cut off in the contest, was that of the mizen mast, and the suckers of the size of pot lids."

Several instances are also related by Denys Montford, in his Natural History of the Mollusca, of the appearance of this monster.—Among them he states that there is in a church at St. Malo an ex voto, or picture, deposited there by a crew in remembrance of their wonderful preservation, when an enormous cuttle fish suddenly threw its arms across the vessel, and was on the point of dragging it to the bottom; but the continued efforts of the crew compelled the monster, after a long and severe struggle, to relinquish his grasp.

☞ We copy the foregoing from the Boston Journal. Such a monster was seen last summer near the Beaver Islands by a party of fishermen, and afterwards by two elders. But as the fishermen got thoroughly laughed at by their ignorant neighbors, the elders refused to say any thing about it and saved their credit. We are sure that if unmolested, the monster is not dangerous.

☞ A Doctor Sallisbury of Chatauque Co., N. Y., has just been tried in the U. S. Circuit Court at Rochester, and found guilty of counterfeiting coin. The Rochester Advertiser in noticing the trial says:—

"He was a man of wealth, occupied a prominent position in society, was a leading member of one of the churches, and yet it was given in evidence that after having spent the night, of a Saturday, for instance, in the manufacture of counterfeit coin, he would go into the Sunday school the next m[illegible] leading part in the exercises! He was [illegible] philanthropic projects of the day [illegible] tolence! [illegible] tes- [illegible] and [illegible] ground, which was covered over by plank, and on the top of this was placed a hen house, so as effectually to prevent discovery.—The door leading to it was concealed, so that any one entering the barn a thousand times would not have observed it. The manufacturers generally worked at night, and just previous to the Doctor's arrest, a man residing on the adjoining lot discovered a light peering through the cracks, and on looking through discovered Sallisbury and another counting over what resembled money, and heard the Doctor say that if the other had a certain pile he must pay part down or give security."

☞ If he had only been a Mormon, what a pretty story it would have made. Why not mob his church out of the country?

An Unforunate Expression.—The new Archbishop of Canterbury, as head of the Church of England, has drawn up a form of prayer "for the maintenance of peace." The worthy church dignitary by the use of unfortunate expression, has laid himself open to a charge of apparent hostility to the House of Lords, by saying in his address to the Deity, "In our prosperity we have too much forgotten Thee; other lords besides Thee have had dominion over us." In the present state of popular excitement in England, this was considered too serious a subject to joke upon.—Ex. paper.

☞ We are informed that Sidney Rigdon is engaged in the honorable avocation of dressing cloth in the western part of the State of New York. This speaks well for him, and is an example that we commend to the sectarian priests who have reviled him for eighteen years. Is there not yet hope for the old man eloquent?—Wholesome honest labor is good both for ambition and insanity, and he has shown his manliness by turning to it.

☞ Scarcely a week passes but we see in some of our exchange papers articles credited to the Missouri Republican, speaking of the great success and prosperity of the Brighamite camp in the west.—All this would be well enough if it was true. Indeed we think their worst enemies ought to be satisfied with what they have suffered, and to pray for a respite of the evils they are daily heaping down on their own heads. But these editorial puffs seem to be stretched to the last degree of tension, and may burst like over-grown bubbles before the papers can reach the readers. If a cause is to be built up by lying, yet it is possible to lie too barefaced.—Certainly it looks very much like it when the Republican says that the Mormons had, at the last accounts, put in 5,000 acres of winter wheat in Salt Valley. In an earlier article the Republican had stated that 500 teams had gone to the Valley, and though this is 33⅓ higher than other estimates and accounts of those who met the [illegible] yet take this for a basis of reasoning, each and every [illegible] have carried the seed for 10 acres of ground, say 13 bushels, besides carrying the families, clothing, furniture, farming utensils of every kind, and a year's provisions. If any one can believe that a single family can move into the wilderness 1,000 miles beyond the last house, carrying all provisions, clothing, furniture, tools, seeds, and every thing else necessary for a year's use, including seed wheat to put in crops for market, he may believe this story. But if one family cannot do it, many cannot. Increasing the number of persons does not diminish the food and clothing necessary for each person. Besides this it should be remembered that nearly all these wagons went over late in the fall, and could not have arrived earlier than late for wheat sowing. And by the showing of the Republican they have built a large fortified town, as well as sowed 5,000 acres of wheat. And as by the same accounts they have taken over large herds of cattle, this 5,000 acres must all be fenced too, and the timber for the fences as well as that for building has all to be drawn some twelve miles. Nonsense! Any man who will believe such stuff deserves to be deceived.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 13.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JUNE 15, 1848. [WHOLE No. 77.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

JAMES J. STRANG, an Apostle and witness of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the presiding authorities and Elders, his brethren, now assembled at the city of James, at the Stake of Beaver, to all our brethren scattered abroad, greeting:—

Having assembled at this place, chosen of God for the gathering of the saints, and the Holy Ghost being with us, and the spirit of Christ guiding us, we have thought fit to address you, to remind you of your obligations to God and of his gracious mercy and loving kindness unto the obedient. Suffer us to remind you in all faith and faithfulness of your duty in gathering together upon holy ground, consecrated of God to his people. We are aware that much has been said by many to dissuade you from obeying God, and have heard with grief that some of our brethren in the ministry have exercised an unholy influence against the gathering of the saints to this place.

We beg to assure you that there is no foundation for your fears of temporal want in this place. Here are extensive tracts of land of superior quality ready and waiting to be occupied, covered with valuable timber, which, both in lumber and cord wood, finds a ready cash market at high prices. Both soil, climate and location conspire to make this place a first rate agricultural region. Around the islands are the most extensive and valuable inland fisheries of North America. Business of several kinds is well established here and prospering greatly. Common labor is worth one dollar per day.—Mechanical trades are good, especially coopering and boat building. Provisions are abundant, and generally at lower prices than in the middle States.

There is a large and beautiful harbor nearly upon the track of the Buffalo and Chicago steamboats, and in the centre of this group of islands, perfectly land-locked, easy of access at all seasons, having the best of anchorage and bold shores, sufficiently large to accommodate all the shipping on the lakes at the same time, and in every respect the most perfect harbor we have ever seen.

The gathering of the saints is well begun here, and though those here are few in number we can truly commend their society to you for soundness of morals, strength of faith and devotion to the cause of God. The Mission House is nearly ready for use, and we expect soon to open a school for the instruction of both white and Indian children. Our Indian neighbors attend our meetings and private instructions in religion with interest, and are kind to us in all their intercourse, and evidently look to us as friends, keeping up with us all the familiarities of social life, and are indeed excellent neighbors and a noble and intellectual race of men. Notwithstanding the adverse circumstances in which we began here, and the unfaithfulness and wickedness of one or two who have abandoned this great work, we feel well assured that the work here is now going on to success in truth and righteousness, and earnestly admonish you to come and help us, and enjoy the fruit of your labor with us.

JAMES J. STRANG,	M. M. ALDRICH,
GALEN COLE,	R. F. MILLS,
JEHIEL SAVAGE,	G. BROWNSON,
SIMON POWERS,	SAMUEL SHAW,
DANIEL HICKOX,	DANIEL M. ADAMS.
MORRILL CAMPBELL,	M. M. ALDRICH, Jr.,
JULIUS A. HICKOX,	FRANCIS COOPER.

Beaver Island, June 26th, 1848.

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS,

HELD AT BIG BEAVER ISLAND ON THE 22D OF JUNE, 1848, AT 10 O'CLOCK, A. M.

President Strang was unanimously received President of said Conference, and M. M. Aldrich chosen Clerk. Conference opened by singing. Prayer by brother J. Savage. Preaching by Pres. Strang on the salvation of the dead. Adjourned till 2 o'clock P. M. Benediction by brother J. Savage.

Met pursuant to adjournment. Conference opened by singing.—Prayer by brother Cole. Voted that the Stake at Beaver Island go into an organization of officers. M. M. Aldrich appointed President of said Stake. Brothers G. Cole and R. F. Mills appointed Counsellors to said President. Samuel Shaw appointed Agent of temporal affairs. Adjourned till evening.

Met pursuant to adjournment. Opened by singing. Prayer by M. M. Aldrich. Brother Hiram G. Hall chosen Clerk of said Stake. Brother J. Hickox chosen Chorister. After which Pres. Strang gave instructions on the duties of these officers. Conference adjourned sine die.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.

M. M. ALDRICH, Clerk.

☞ This No., though dated June 15th, is not in fact issued till July 4th. The matter of it was nearly all in type at the usual time, but the editor and publisher have been together to Beaver organizing the stake, holding conference and a council with the Indians, by means of which this delay is produced. We shall continue the issue under the regular date, getting out two Nos. a week till we get up even.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 13.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. JUNE 15, 1848. [WHOLE No. 77.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

Illetters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

MES J. STRANG, an Apostle and witness of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the presiding authorities and Elders, his brethren, now assembled at the city of James, at the Stake of Beaver, to all our brethren scattered abroad, greeting:—

Having assembled at this place, chosen of God for the gathering the saints, and the Holy Ghost being with us, and the spirit of rist guiding us, we have thought fit to address you, to remind n of your obligations to God and of his gracious mercy and loving idness unto the obedient. Suffer us to remind you in all faith l faithfulness of your duty in gathering together upon holy ground, nsecrated of God to his people. We are aware that much has n said by many to dissuade you from obeying God, and have rd with grief that some of our brethren in the ministry have exsed an unholy influence against the gathering of the saints to place.

We beg to assure you that there is no foundation for your fears temporal want in this place. Here are extensive tracts of land superior quality ready and waiting to be occupied, covered with uable timber, which, both in lumber and cord wood, finds a ready h market at high prices. Both soil, climate and location conre to make this place a first rate agricultural region. Around the nds are the most extensive and valuable inland fisheries of North erica. Business of several kinds is well established here and spering greatly. Common labor is worth one dollar per day.—chanical trades are good, especially coopering and boat building. visions are abundant, and generally at lower prices than in the dle States.

here is a large and beautiful harbor nearly upon the track of the falo and Chicago steamboats, and in the centre of this group of nds, perfectly land-locked, easy of access at all seasons, having best of anchorage and bold shores, sufficiently large to accommote all the shipping on the lakes at the same time, and in every respect the most perfect harbor we have ever seen.

The gathering of the saints is well begun here, and though those here are few in number we can truly commend their society to you for scrupulousness of morals, strength of faith and devotion to the cause of God. The Mission House is nearly ready for use, and we expect soon to open a school for the instruction of both white and Indian children. Our Indian neighbors attend our meetings and private instructions in religion with interest, and are kind to us in all their intercourse, and evidently look to us as friends, keeping up with us all the familiarities of social life, and are indeed excellent neighbors and a noble and intellectual race of men. Notwithstanding the adverse circumstances in which we began here, and the unfaithfulness and wickedness of one or two who have abandoned this great work, we feel well assured that the work here is now going on to success in truth and righteousness, and earnestly admonish you to come and help us, and enjoy the fruit of your labor with us.

JAMES J. STRANG,	M. M. ALDRICH,
GALEN COLE,	R. F. MILLS,
JEHIEL SAVAGE,	G. BROWNSON,
SIMON POWERS,	SAMUEL SHAW,
DANIEL HICKOX,	DANIEL M. ADAMS.
MORRILL CAMPBELL,	M. M. ALDRICH, JR.,
JULIUS A. HICKOX,	FRANCIS COOPER.

Beaver Island, June 26th, 1848.

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS,

HELD AT BIG BEAVER ISLAND ON THE 22D OF JUNE, 1848, AT 10 O'CLOCK, A. M.

President Strang was unanimously received President of said Conference, and M. M. Aldrich chosen Clerk. Conference opened by singing. Prayer by brother J. Savage. Preaching by Pres. Strang on the salvation of the dead. Adjourned till 2 o'clock P. M. Benediction by brother J. Savage.

Met pursuant to adjournment. Conference opened by singing.—Prayer by brother Cole. Voted that the Stake at Beaver Island go into an organization of officers. M. M. Aldrich appointed President of said Stake. Brothers G. Cole and R. F. Mills appointed Counsellors to said President. Samuel Shaw appointed Agent of temporal affairs. Adjourned till evening.

Met pursuant to adjournment. Opened by singing. Prayer by M. M. Aldrich. Brother Hiram G. Hall chosen Clerk of said Stake. Brother J. Hickox chosen Chorister. After which Pres. Strang gave instructions on the duties of these officers. Conference adjourned sine die. JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.

M. M. ALDRICH, Clerk.

☞ This No., though dated June 15th, is not in fact issued till July 4th. The matter of it was nearly all in type at the usual time, but the editor and publisher have been together to Beaver organizing the stake, holding conference and a council with the Indians, by means of which this delay is produced. We shall continue the issue under the regular date, getting out two Nos. a week till we get up even.

MUSINGS.

HOAXING.

The value of a hoax consists in its coming out. If it comes out well of course it is a good one, no matter how got up; and if it fails the cunningest one is flat. A hoax must be a hoax or it is only a practical fib. Such was Chardolamus. A splendidly got up hoax, yet it fell as powerless as the fib of the bashful school girl. Hoaxing is poor business, at best. It can scarcely do any good, and is very likely to do hurt. But what of

CHARDOLAMUS?

Nothing; only as we said it was a well got up but unsuccessful hoax. In January, 1846, Reuben Miller came from Nauvoo up on Fox River to get up a company for the western camp. While thus engaged he met prophet Strang; undertook to debate with him; gave up beat; privately assisted in bringing over all the branches in that region, and then made haste back to Nauvoo to get paid what money he had lent to the leaders before they heard of his desertion. That done, he began to publicly preach what was called Strangism in and round about Nauvoo, giving testimony in all his congregations. In a brief time the number of so called Strangites became numerous, great numbers of whom had revelation by dream, by vision and by testimony of the spirit, &c., that prophet Strang was truly the successor of Joseph, and that the matter of his finding and translating plates was true, and truly the work of God.

This was so much like the beginning of Mormonism and was spreading so rapidly that the Brighamite leaders must needs do something to prevent it. Having no arguments they resorted to a hoax. Orson Hyde and Charles Wandell got up a work purporting to be a translation of another set of plates just revealed to prophet Strang, called the "record of Chardolamus," which professed to have been buried near the junction of the Fox and Illinois many centuries since, and containing several most thrilling Nephite prophecies of the present dispensation, and especially of the apostacy of the Brighamites, and the coming triumph of the truth in the hand of the true prophet. This work they left in the P. O. at Nauvoo as having been sent by a friend and disciple of prophet Strang, and addressed to some of the leaders of that faith, expecting they would all swallow the bait, and get the same spiritual testimones as they had received in the case of the real plates which had been revealed to prophet Strang; intending when a good number of such testimonies were given to come out and confess the fraud, and by that means prove that the Strangite revelations came from a lying spirit.—Well, now, this was a grand plan. But it failed. No body but Reuben Miller bit. All agreed that if God was to give them a confirmation of it he would give it through the highest priesthood among them, and all true spirits would be in subjection to it.—As J. E. Page, holding the highest priesthood among them, had no such testimony, Reuben the dreamer was silenced. The hoax proved no hoax at all, and poor Charles Wandell had to bear his sin and stand scape-goat for Hyde's share of it. The whole plot fell flat, and never deceived one soul except Reuben.

THE LAST HOAX.

Reader, do you know how hard it is for any one to think any body else is smarter than himself? It is just as hard to believe any body more honest. So because Reuben is weak enough to be overcome by a hoax, and wicked enough to make capital out of a lie, he expects others to do the same. Well, what of it? Nothing; only not willing to leave Voree without one triumph over Strangism, he has just tried his hand at hoaxing us. Here it is:—

Spring Prairie, June 9th, 1848.

MR. STRANG—DEAR SIR:—I have this moment received a letter from a friend, of which the following is an extract: "Bro. ——— has just come from the telegraph office, where they have just received the intelligence that a large party of Indians have attacked the camp in the Valley of the Salt Lake and killed a great many, and among them a large number of the women and children. This is dreadful. But the news comes so direct that it is thought there can be no doubt of its truth." Yours, REUBEN MILLER.

Now Reuben don't believe one word of this. If he did he would not tell of it, and if he did mention it to any one not to Pres. Strang. Certainly a rumor is afloat, and rather generally credited throughout the country, that the Indians have made war on the Mormons in Salt Valley. The thing is probable enough, but the information is not such as to give the least appearance of authenticity to it. It may be true. If no such thing has happened it probably will.—But it is quite more likely that this is a false report to raise sympathy and beg assistance on. We are utterly unable to trace this report back to any source whatever. But however true it may be, it was put into the hands of prophet Strang with the expectation that he would bite as Reuben did at Chardolamus. He has some prophecies out of Indian hostilities against the western camp. Had he claimed their fulfillment on a false report, it would not look well.—Don't be uneasy in the least, prophet Strang does not bite a naked hook. He feels no anxiety about the fulfillment of his predictions. All experience since the camp started west has proved that the hearts of the Lamanites are not turned to that people. When they drove in horses and cattle the Indians took them in open day light before their eyes. They even require their followers to come armed and in large parties to repel Indian hostilities. But if no such thing had happened, the prophet, knowing why he has spoken, would not feel any uneasiness about the fulfillment of his words, and is not in that feverish anxiety which claims divinity on a shadow or a rumor.

MEDICAL OPINIONS OF MEDICINE.

Dr. Akenside, himself a physician, has said, "Physicians, in despair of making medicine a science, have converted it into a trade." Sir Anthony Carlisle said, "that medicine was an art founded in conjecture, and improved by murder; that he never could discover any rational principle in a physician's treatment of a case, and that therefore it was all guess work."

"The late professor Gregory used to often declare in his class room that ninety-nine out of a hundred medical facts were so many medical lies; and that medical doctrines were, for the most part, little better than stark staring nonsense." The late Dr. Hooper remarks in his writings, "Medicine is now defined the art of preventing and treating diseases; but formerly it was called the art of preserving health and curing diseases. The word cure is not used at present, because we possess no remedy capable of effecting an immediate cure. There is a great difference between treatment and cure: as many diseases are incurable, but are still proper subjects for treatment." It has often been objected to the physician or practitioner that he is unable satisfactorily to explain the phenomena of a single disease, or the operation of a single remedy. However humiliating the admission of such a truth may be, it cannot wholly be denied. But fully to account for the performance of one function, would be nearly paramount to the explanation of all; for all are governed by the same general laws, and subject to the same general causes.

We are told by the ingenious John Brown that he "wasted more than twenty years in learning, teaching and diligently scrutinizing every part of medicine." The first five years passed away in hearing others, studying what he had heard, implicitly believing it, and entering upon the possession as a rich and valuable inheritance.—His mode of employment the next five years was to explain more clearly the several particulars, to refine and give them a nicer polish. During the next equal space of time, because no part of it had succeeded to his mind, he became cold upon the subject, and with many eminent men, even with the vulgar themselves, began to deplore the healing art as altogether uncertain and incomprehensible. Majendie, whose opinion is considered of much weight in Paris, says, "Consider for a moment the state in which medicine exists in the present day. Visit the different hospitals and you will not fail to observe how physicians are divided between the most opposite systems, on the nature of the seat, and even on the treatment of the most simple disease; yet each of those systems is supported by ar-

MUSINGS.

HOAXING.

The value of a hoax consists in its coming out. If it comes out well of course it is a good one, no matter how got up; and if it fails the cunningest one is flat. A hoax must be a hoax or it is only a practical fib. Such was Chardolamus. A splendidly got up hoax, yet it fell as powerless as the fib of the bashful school girl. Hoaxing is poor business, at best. It can scarcely do any good, and is very likely to do hurt. But what of

CHARDOLAMUS?

Nothing; only as we said it was a well got up but unsuccessful hoax. In January, 1846, Reuben Miller came from Nauvoo up on Fox River to get up a company for the western camp. While thus engaged he met prophet Strang; undertook to debate with him; gave up beat; privately assisted in bringing over all the branches in that region, and then made haste back to Nauvoo to get paid what money he had lent to the leaders before they heard of his desertion. That done, he began to publicly preach what was called Strangism in and round about Nauvoo, giving testimony in all his congregations. In a brief time the number of so called Strangites became numerous, great numbers of whom had revelation by dream, by vision and by testimony of the spirit, &c., that prophet Strang was truly the successor of Joseph, and that the matter of his finding and translating plates was true, and truly the work of God.

This was so much like the beginning of Mormonism and was spreading so rapidly that the Brighamite leaders must needs do something to prevent it. Having no arguments they resorted to a hoax. Orson Hyde and Charles Wandell got up a work purporting to be a translation of another set of plates just revealed to prophet Strang, called the "record of Chardolamus," which professed to have been buried near the junction of the Fox and Illinois many centuries since, and containing several most thrilling Nephite prophecies of the present dispensation, and especially of the apostacy of the Brighamites, and the coming triumph of the truth in the hand of the true prophet. This work they left in the P. O. at Nauvoo as having been sent by a friend and disciple of prophet Strang, and addressed to some of the leaders of that faith, expecting they would all swallow the bait, and get the same spiritual testimones as they had received in the case of the real plates which had been revealed to prophet Strang; intending when a good number of such testimonies were given to come out and confess the fraud, and by that means prove that the Strangite revelations came from a lying spirit.—Well, now, this was a grand plan. But it failed. No body but Reuben Miller bit. All agreed that if God was to give them a confirmation of it he would give it through the highest priesthood among them, and all true spirits would be in subjection to it.—As J. E. Page, holding the highest priesthood among them, had no such testimony, Reuben the dreamer was silenced. The hoax proved no hoax at all, and poor Charles Wandell had to bear his sin and stand scape-goat for Hyde's share of it. The whole plot fell flat, and never deceived one soul except Reuben.

THE LAST HOAX.

Reader, do you know how hard it is for any one to think any body else is smarter than himself? It is just as hard to believe any body more honest. So because Reuben is weak enough to be overcome by a hoax, and wicked enough to make capital out of a lie, he expects others to do the same. Well, what of it? Nothing; only not willing to leave Voree without one triumph over Strangism, he has just tried his hand at hoaxing us. Here it is:—

Spring Prairie, June 9th, 1848.

MR. STRANG—DEAR SIR:—I have this moment received a letter from a friend, of which the following is an extract: "Bro.——— has just come from the telegraph office, where they have just received the intelligence that a large party of Indians have attacked the camp in the Valley of the Salt Lake and killed a great many and among them a large number of the women and children. This is dreadful. But the news comes so direct that it is thought there can be no doubt of its truth." Yours, REUBEN MILLER.

Now Reuben don't believe one word of this. If he did he won't not tell of it, and if he did mention it to any one not to Pres. Strang. Certainly a rumor is afloat, and rather generally credited throughout the country, that the Indians have made war on the Mormons in Salt Valley. The thing is probable enough, but the information is not such as to give the least appearance of authenticity to it. It may be true. If no such thing has happened it probably will. But it is quite more likely that this is a false report to raise sympathy and beg assistance on. We are utterly unable to trace this report back to any source whatever. But however true it may be, it was put into the hands of prophet Strang with the expectation that he would bite as Reuben did at Chardolamus. He has some prophecies out of Indian hostilities against the western camp. Had he claimed their fulfillment on a false report, it would not look well.—Don't be uneasy in the least, prophet Strang does not bite a naked hook. He feels no anxiety about the fulfillment of his predictions. All experience since the camp started west has proved that the hearts of the Lamanites are not turned to that people. When they drove in horses and cattle the Indians took them in open day light before their eyes. They even require their followers to come armed and in large parties to repel Indian hostilities. But if no such thing had happened, the prophet, knowing why he has spoken, would not see any uneasiness about the fulfillment of his words, and is not in the feverish anxiety which claims divinity on a shadow or a rumor.

MEDICAL OPINIONS OF MEDICINE.

Dr. Akenside, himself a physician, has said, "Physicians, in despair of making medicine a science, have converted it into a trade." Sir Anthony Carlisle said, "that medicine was an art founded in conjecture, and improved by murder; that he never could discover any rational principle in a physician's treatment of a case, and that therefore it was all guess work."

"The late professor Gregory used to often declare in his class room that ninety-nine out of a hundred medical facts were so many medical lies; and that medical doctrines were, for the most part, little better than stark staring nonsense." The late Dr. Hooper remarks in his writings, "Medicine is now defined the art of preventing and treating diseases; but formerly it was called the art of preserving health and curing diseases. The word cure is not used at present, because we possess no remedy capable of effecting an immediate cure. There is a great difference between treatment and cure; as many diseases are incurable, but are still proper subjects for treatment." It has often been objected to the physician or practitioner that he is unable satisfactorily to explain the phenomena of a single disease, or the operation of a single remedy. However humiliating the admission of such a truth may be, it cannot wholly be denied. But fully to account for the performance of one function, would be nearly paramount to the explanation of all; for all are governed by the same general laws, and subject to the same general causes.

We are told by the ingenious John Brown that he "wasted more than twenty years in learning, teaching and diligently scrutinizing every part of medicine." The first five years passed away in hearing others, studying what he had heard, implicitly believing it, and entering upon the possession as a rich and valuable inheritance.—His mode of employment the next five years was to explain more clearly the several particulars, to refine and give them a nicer polish. During the next equal space of time, because no part of it had succeeded to his mind, he became cold upon the subject, and with many eminent men, even with the vulgar themselves, began to deplore the healing art as altogether uncertain and incomprehensible. Majendie, whose opinion is considered of much weight in Paris, says, "Consider for a moment the state in which medicine exists in the present day. Visit the different hospitals and you will not fail to observe how physicians are divided between the most opposite systems, on the nature of the seat, and even on the treatment of the most simple disease; yet each of those systems is supported by arguments more or less specious; each theory is based upon facts more or less certain."

Dr. Vicesimus Knox has said, "after all that has been said in commendation of the uncertain art of medicine, the most sensible physicians admit that it is to them uncertain whether it has done more good than harm to mankind; this fact being certain, that in the hands of the young, the rash, the inexperienced it is dreadfully desrtuctive to the human race, and that professional men do not prescribe for themselves."—London Critic.

PROBABLE DISCOVERY OF THE HISTORY OF A FORMER RACE.

The Lower Sandusky (Ohio) Democrat states that, about two miles from that village, on land known as the 'Kerr tract,' there is an ancient mound, circular at the base—about 36 feet in diameter, raising ovally to a point which is surmounted by an oaken stump probably originally, two feet in diameter, which is almost totally decayed from age. A few days since some boys dug into the mound; nearly under the stump, at the depth of three feet, a skeleton was found much decayed, but portions of it in a fair degree of preservation.—Near the head were found two stone hatchets, an arrow-head, a stone pipe, and—far more singular—a lot of plate, apparently isinglass, which are covered with lines and hieroglyphics of different and beautiful colors. The colors and workmanship betoken a more advanced and entirely different state of the arts than has heretofore been discovered in remains of Indian tribes. Some of the plates were destroyed, but there are fifteen preserved. They are circular, oval in shape, and about seven inches by ten in size. A pipe-bowl beautifully finished from stone was also found, the bowl of which is nearly round, rises from a base, on the bottom of which are figures '1461.' Measures have been taken under the supervision of some intelligent citizens, farther to explore the singular mound.—There is little doubt that these plates contain the history of some former race that has inhabited this country, and farther discoveries will be awaited with impatience.—Ex. paper.

☞ Ah! yes; a history of a former race undoubtedly. There is not the least doubt that many such records exist, and will occasionally appear by various means. How credulous the world is.—This little story has quite an extensive circulation, merely on the authority of a country newspaper, and we have yet to hear the first man question the truth of it. But let any prophet read and translate the language of the plates and soon their existence will be denied, and the whole story of their discovery scouted by the whole community. So long as the discovery is worthless men can credit it. Though it may be of some little use if the power of man only is displayed in it they can yet believe. But when the Almighty begins his work, their credulity is at an end.

CRIMES.

In the eastern States if any one is overtaken in a crime of peculiar horror, it is laid to Millerism. In Illinois and Missouri the same things are invariably attributed to Mormonism. As for Mormonism, we think it has been too much defended, and that if all the lies told by its enemies were silently passed by less would be told. Many of them are simple inventions designed to annoy us, or intended as a capital by means of which to speculate out of the morbid tastes of the more corrupt among men. Of the authors of this latter class we count William Smith, who has lately been in Ottawa, Ill., and we presume in other towns, delivering lectures on the corruptions of the Mormon leaders,—admittance 12½ cents, or 20 cents when too delectable for female rowdies. In the same line we might mention several small fry, who, after being for years the terror of all who had cattle and other property out of doors about Nauvoo and Montrose, have recently found Voree too wicked a place for them to live in and are just moving off. These men do not look for any particular compensation, but content themselves at being able to hold a man by the button hole, while they tell their dolorous tales of unbareable wickedness. Their tales are principally told among saints and apostates, and the only reason we can give for their being so little credited is, that the tale bearers are extensively known. Let it be distinctly understood that we do not retaliate their accusations. Whatever their disposition may have been, circumstances, at least, have forbid any serious mistakes as to the title to property. Society is too well regulated here, and the arm of the law too strong to break through. Evil passions here make the tongue, and not the hands, their organ.

But those falsehoods, more extensively reported, are got up by amateur story tellers; penny-a-liners of the press and stool-pigeons of the bar-room, intended rather for the amusement of hearers and readers than to be credited; such for instance as the colloquy with the Devil, the walking on the water, the spirit in the form of a dove, and several more modern ones.

Recently the Advent Herald has taken up the wholesale scandal put on the Millerites by the press generally, both secular and religious, and has shown the gross injustice of the press on the subject. But probably not one in a hundred of the papers that contained the scandal will ever notice its refutation. Among the cases alluded to is the awful tragedy of the Pinkerton family at Edgecomb in Me.—Pinkerton and his wife seem to have agreed on the destruction of themselves and their children, in consequence of poverty and discouragement on account of the difficulty of making a living. The Gentile system of employing the poor at wages, by means of which capital gets all the profit, and wealth comes only by oppression and fraud, had trod the last ray of hope out of him. Leaving a paper written by both husband and wife, stating that they had resolved on self-destruction because they had nothing to live on, Pinkerton cut off the heads of his children, four in number, while sleeping in their beds, then his wife while awake, and finally cut his own throat with a razor.

A Baptist clergyman, the Rev. Enos Dudley, recently murdered his wife, and it was laid to Millerism, though the leading Millerites had never heard of his being of their faith. An unrecognized body of a colored woman was found in a dock in Boston, and one of the Boston papers said she was an insane Millerite who jumped into the dock to escape the Devil, whom she imagined was chasing her.

The Millerites are too closely connected with the evangelical denominations for them to indulge in accusations of a more loathsome character. But we were surprised and grieved a short time since when we saw a suggestion in the Advent Herald that the Perfectionists, a little sect every where spoken against, allowed indiscriminate intercourse in derogation of marriage. The leaders of the Millerites were taken from the first ranks of various popular sects, yet there are few crimes they have not been charged with. When they regard as truth charges got up in a similar manner on others, it is equivalent to confessing guilt in their own cases. If common fame among enemies is good against others, it is against them.

PROTESTANTISM.

It is a singular fact that Protestantism has not made the least progress within the last two hundred years. Not a nation has been converted from Romanism; not one from heathenism; a few small tribes are claimed, as the Sandwich Islanders, but the hold of christianity on them is very feeble, and they are rapidly becoming extinct under the withering scourge of the christian vices. The countries which were originally parties to the Protestant reformation have not even maintained their ground. England contains ten times as many Catholics as it did forty years since. Twenty-five years ago they were known only in a very few places in the United States. Now they are far the most numerous denomination. We are well aware that this increase is principally by emigration. But it is equally true that the children of Protestants are a great portion of them indifferent to their father's faith, and rapidly becoming unguments more or less specious; each theory is based upon facts more or less certain."

Dr. Vicesimus Knox has said, "after all that has been said in commendation of the uncertain art of medicine, the most sensible physicians admit that it is to them uncertain whether it has done more good than harm to mankind; this fact being certain, that in the hands of the young, the rash, the inexperienced it is dreadfully desrtuctive to the human race, and that professional men do not prescribe for themselves."—London Critic.

PROBABLE DISCOVERY OF THE HISTORY OF A FORMER RACE.

The Lower Sandusky (Ohio) Democrat states that, about two miles from that village, on land known as the 'Kerr tract,' there is an ancient mound, circular at the base—about 36 feet in diameter, raising ovally to a point which is surmounted by an oaken stump probably originally two feet in diameter, which is almost totally decayed from age. A few days since some boys dug into the mound; nearly under the stump, at the depth of three feet, a skeleton was found much decayed, but portions of it in a fair degree of preservation.—Near the head were found two stone hatchets, an arrow-head, a stone pipe, and—far more singular—a lot of plate, apparently isinglass, which are covered with lines and hieroglyphics of different and beautiful colors. The colors and workmanship betoken a more advanced and entirely different state of the arts than has heretofore been discovered in remains of Indian tribes. Some of the plates were destroyed, but there are fifteen preserved. They are circular, oval in shape, and about seven inches by ten in size. A pipe-bowl beautifully finished from stone was also found, the bowl of which is nearly round, rises from a base, on the bottom of which are figures '1461.' Measures have been taken under the supervision of some intelligent citizens, farther to explore the singular mound.—There is little doubt that these plates contain the history of some former race that has inhabited this country, and farther discoveries will be awaited with impatience.—Ex. paper.

☞ Ah! yes; a history of a former race undoubtedly. There is not the least doubt that many such records exist, and will occasionally appear by various means. How credulous the world is.—This little story has quite an extensive circulation, merely on the authority of a country newspaper, and we have yet to hear the first man question the truth of it. But let any prophet read and translate the language of the plates and soon their existence will be denied, and the whole story of their discovery scouted by the whole community. So long as the discovery is worthless men can credit it. Though it may be of some little use if the power of man only is displayed in it they can yet believe. But when the Almighty begins his work, their credulity is at an end.

CRIMES.

In the eastern States if any one is overtaken in a crime of peculiar horror, it is laid to Millerism. In Illinois and Missouri the same things are invariably attributed to Mormonism. As for Mormonism, we think it has been too much defended, and that if all the lies told by its enemies were silently passed by less would be told. Many of them are simple inventions designed to annoy us, or intended as a capital by means of which to speculate out of the morbid tastes of the more corrupt among men. Of the authors of this latter class we count William Smith, who has lately been in Ottawa, Ill., and we presume in other towns, delivering lectures on the corruptions of the Mormon leaders,—admittance 12½ cents, or 20 cents when too delectable for female rowdies. In the same line we might mention several small fry, who, after being for years the terror of all who had cattle and other property out of doors about Nauvoo and Montrose, have recently found Voree too wicked a place for them to live in and are just moving off. These men do not look for any particular compensation, but content themselves at being able to hold a man by the button hole, while they tell their dolorous tales of unbareable wickedness. Their tales are principally told among saints and apostates, and the only reason we can give for their being so little credited is, that the tale bearers are extensively known. Let it be distinctly understood that we do not retaliate their accusations. Whatever their disposition may have been, circumstances, at least, have forbid any serious mistakes as to the title to property. Society is too well regulated here, and the arm of the law too strong to break through. Evil passions here make the tongue, and not the hands, their organ.

But those falsehoods, more extensively reported, are got up by amateur story tellers; penny-a-liners of the press and stool-pigeons of the bar-room, intended rather for the amusement of hearers and readers than to be credited; such for instance as the colloquy with the Devil, the walking on the water, the spirit in the form of a dove, and several more modern ones.

Recently the Advent Herald has taken up the wholesale scandal put on the Millerites by the press generally, both secular and religious, and has shown the gross injustice of the press on the subject. But probably not one in a hundred of the papers that contained the scandal will ever notice its refutation. Among the cases alluded to is the awful tragedy of the Pinkerton family at Edgecomb in Me.—Pinkerton and his wife seem to have agreed on the destruction of themselves and their children, in consequence of poverty and discouragement on account of the difficulty of making a living. The Gentile system of employing the poor at wages, by means of which capital gets all the profit, and wealth comes only by oppression and fraud, had trod the last ray of hope out of him. Leaving a paper written by both husband and wife, stating that they had resolved on self-destruction because they had nothing to live on, Pinkerton cut off the heads of his children, four in number, while sleeping in their beds, then his wife while awake, and finally cut his own throat with a razor.

A Baptist clergyman, the Rev. Enos Dudley, recently murdered his wife, and it was laid to Millerism, though the leading Millerites had never heard of his being of their faith. An unrecognized body of a colored woman was found in a dock in Boston, and one of the Boston papers said she was an insane Millerite who jumped into the dock to escape the Devil, whom she imagined was chasing her.

The Millerites are too closely connected with the evangelical denominations for them to indulge in accusations of a more loathsome character. But we were surprised and grieved a short time since when we saw a suggestion in the Advent Herald that the Perfectionists, a little sect every where spoken against, allowed indiscriminate intercourse in derogation of marriage. The leaders of the Millerites were taken from the first ranks of various popular sects, yet there are few crimes they have not been charged with. When they regard as truth charges got up in a similar manner on others, it is equivalent to confessing guilt in their own cases. If common fame among enemies is good against others, it is against them.

PROTESTANTISM.

It is a singular fact that Protestantism has not made the least progress within the last two hundred years. Not a nation has been converted from Romanism; not one from heathenism; a few small tribes are claimed, as the Sandwich Islanders, but the hold of christianity on them is very feeble, and they are rapidly becoming extinct under the withering scourge of the christian vices. The countries which were originally parties to the Protestant reformation have not even maintained their ground. England contains ten times as many Catholics as it did forty years since. Twenty-five years ago they were known only in a very few places in the United States. Now they are far the most numerous denomination. We are well aware that this increase is principally by emigration. But it is equally true that the children of Protestants are a great portion of them indifferent to their father's faith, and rapidly becoming unchurched. Not more than one-fourth of the present population descended from Protestant ancestors are now members of Protestant churches. And though they have not yet become Catholics, their prejudices against that faith are rapidly being removed, and as that is becoming the fashionable church in all the west and many of the eastern cities, there is good reason to believe that in a few years they will go over to that faith in great numbers. Whenever Catholic nations have conquered uncivilized nations they have converted them, but all the countries which are accessions to Protestantism, have become so by colonizing and exterminating the natives; not one by converting them.

FAITH.

Faith is the first principle of all sciences. The mathematician, who can solve the most abstruse problem in mathematics, commenced the study of that science with faith, destitute of all demonstrative knowledge of its truth. He began with faith that a knowledge of the science was attainable, and that some one was qualified to teach it. He was placed or placed himself under the tuition of one capable to instruct him; advanced step by step till he gained a knowledge of the science, and could solve the most difficult problem.

It is the same with the science of revealed religion. Faith is the first principle. We must believe that God exists; that he is the rewarder of them who diligently seek him; (Heb. ii. 6;) that some one is authorized and qualified to instruct us (Rom. x. 14, 15) in the principles of the gospel, by which we can be perfected, and attain unto a "knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." G. W.

☞ Our thanks are due to J. V. Himes for a small package of excellent Advent tracts, published by him at No. 9 Milk st., Boston. Also to Messrs. Tweedy & Levin for valuable public documents.

For the Gospel Herald.

Come listen ye preachers and priests to my song,
Concerning your practice of teaching things wrong;
You all preach for hire, for money divine—
The truths of the gospel are far more sublime.

With faces disfigured you all do appear
To men to be righteous, by making long prayers;
The commandments of God you reject with disdain,
And teach for the gospel commandments of men.

I find that in prophets you do not believe,
Yet you are all prophets sent forth to deceive;
The spirit of your master, the Devil, you show,
By teaching false doctrine wherever you go.

You travel by sea, and you travel by land,
To keep the poor heathen from all being damned;
But, O! silly fools, while you show them the way
You lead the poor heathen still further astray.

Their gold and their silver is what you desire,
While you preach up to them great lakes of hell fire,
And Pharisee like for the flock you don't care,
If they have a good fleece you're sure of a share.

For the thousand years and over I find,
That people and priests have been willfully blind;
They all have a form without power to save,
But the words of our Savior they will not believe.

Your prejudiced bosoms with envy would swell,
While the truth of the gospel to you I would tell;
The plan of salvation you basely abuse,
But the Jews will receive when Gentiles refuse.

Instead of immersion you sprinkle the face—
The way you baptize in the gospel of grace;
Now this is contrary, you very well know,
To the way that our Savior's disciples did show.

You follow traditions your fathers hath given,
Which is not the way that will lead you to heaven;
But if you're determined this course to pursue,
I have no objections, but wont follow you.

To prove this assersion I now am prepared,
Your ways with the scriptures have all been compared;
I just want to show you how you went astray
From the plan of salvation in this latter day.

Your cup of damnation will soon overflow,
And with your great riches to hell you must go;
Whilst the poor and the meek will inherit the earth,
When Gabriel's trump will call all the saints forth.

But still there is room to repent, I believe,
If you quit going forth the world to deceive;
And come to the water and there be baptized,
By this may your body be immortalized.

And then when the Savior in clouds doth appear,
And call on his saints to meet him in the air,
Then you can go with them and join in their song,
And shout forth hosannas to God and the Lamb.

And then when the Devil in chains hath been bound,
The songs of salvation o'er earth will resound,
Then Jesus will reign on the throne of a king,
And the saints will their tithes and their offerings bring.

S. Blair.

☞ We acknowledge the receipt of the Cooperstown Conference minutes, with $40 tithing. Also many letters from friends, which we are happy to receive, but utterly unable to answer.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cn.

churched. Not more than one-fourth of the present population descended from Protestant ancestors are now members of Protestant churches. And though they have not yet become Catholics, their prejudices against that faith are rapidly being removed, and as that is becoming the fashionable church in all the west and many of the eastern cities, there is good reason to believe that in a few years they will go over to that faith in great numbers. Whenever Catholic nations have conquered uncivilized nations they have converted them, but all the countries which are accessions to Protestantism, have become so by colonizing and exterminating the natives; not one by converting them.

FAITH.

Faith is the first principle of all sciences. The mathematician, who can solve the most abstruse problem in mathematics, commenced the study of that science with faith, destitute of all demonstrative knowledge of its truth. He began with faith that a knowledge of the science was attainable, and that some one was qualified to teach it. He was placed or placed himself under the tuition of one capable to instruct him; advanced step by step till he gained a knowledge of the science, and could solve the most difficult problem.

It is the same with the science of revealed religion. Faith is the first principle. We must believe that God exists; that he is the rewarder of them who diligently seek him; (Heb. ii. 6;) that some one is authorized and qualified to instruct us (Rom. x. 14; 15) in the principles of the gospel, by which we can be perfected, and attain unto a "knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." G. W.

☞ Our thanks are due to J. V. Himes for a small package of excellent Advent tracts, published by him at No. 9 Milk st., Boston. Also to Messrs. Tweedy & Levin for valuable public documents.

For the Gospel Herald.

Come listen ye preachers and priests to my song,
Concerning your practice of teaching things wrong;
You all preach for hire, for money divine—
The truths of the gospel are far more sublime.

With faces disfigured you all do appear
To men to be righteous, by making long prayers;
The commandments of God you reject with disdain,
And teach for the gospel commandments of men.

I find that in prophets you do not believe,
Yet you are all prophets sent forth to deceive;
The spirit of your master, the Devil, you show,
By teaching false doctrine wherever you go.

You travel by sea, and you travel by land,
To keep the poor heathen from all being damned;
But, O! silly fools, while you show them the way
You lead the poor heathen still further astray.

Their gold and their silver is what you desire,
While you preach up to them great lakes of hell fire,
And Pharisee like for the flock you don't care,
If they have a good fleece you're sure of a share.

For the thousand years and over I find,
That people and priests have been willfully blind;
They all have a form without power to save,
But the words of our Savior they will not believe.

Your prejudiced bosoms with envy would swell,
While the truth of the gospel to you I would tell;
The plan of salvation you basely abuse,
But the Jews will receive when Gentiles refuse.

Instead of immersion you sprinkle the face—
The way you baptize in the gospel of grace;
Now this is contrary, you very well know,
To the way that our Savior's disciples did show.

You follow traditions your fathers hath given,
Which is not the way that will lead you to heaven;
But if you're determined this course to pursue,
I have no objections, but wont follow you.

To prove this assersion I now am prepared,
Your ways with the scriptures have all been compared;
I just want to show you how you went astray
From the plan of salvation in this latter day.

Your cup of damnation will soon overflow,
And with your great riches to hell you must go;
Whilst the poor and the meek will inherit the earth,
When Gabriel's trump will call all the saints forth.

But still there is room to repent, I believe,
If you quit going forth the world to deceive;
And come to the water and there be baptized,
By this may your body be immortalized.

And then when the Savior in clouds doth appear,
And call on his saints to meet him in the air,
Then you can go with them and join in their song,
And shout forth hosannas to God and the Lamb.

And then when the Devil in chains hath been bound,
The songs of salvation o'er earth will resound,
Then Jesus will reign on the throne of a king,
And the saints will their tithes and their offerings bring.

S. Blair.

☞ We acknowledge the receipt of the Cooperstown Conference minutes, with $40 tithing. Also many letters from friends, which we are happy to receive, but utterly unable to answer.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 14.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JUNE 22, 1848. [WHOLE No. 78.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE PEARL HUMANITY.

Most of our readers have doubtless heard of the recent attempt of the schooner Pearl to assist some 70 or 80 slaves in escaping from bondage in Washington. The following letter from a member of Congress gives but a faint idea of the scene when the principal part of them were taken by Slatter, the slave drover, to the south. This Slatter is a very pious Methodist of Baltimore, where he occupies a prominent position in the church, having his pew beautifully cushioned, and ornamented with gilt edged bibles and hymn books.—Having become immensely rich by trading in the souls of men, it is said he is about to retire from business to enjoy the fruit of his works in meditation, pious seclusion and works of kindness and charity. His speculations out of the unfortunate slaves of the Pearl have rendered him abundantly able to do so, for most of them were of very little value to their masters, and had been withheld from market for want of an excuse to sell them. On that occasion they were brought into market at such price as the pious Methodist pleased to give. Among them were two beautiful girls in the blushing bloom of youth, quite as white as most white ladies, Methodists with himself, who had partaken of the same sacramental offering, at the same Lord's table, and, of course, whom he expects to dwell with as sisters in the mansions of glory in heaven; whom this same Slatter has contrived to peddle off at extra prices for compelled prostitution.

In this pious age, at the Capitol of this free country, an exemplary Methodist, after heading a mob against a printing office, can purchase a chaste and beautiful sister in his church on speculation, trade her off to a gang of drunken, gambling rowdies to be violently prostituted by each in turn to their hearts' content, and if she survives with life to be then traded off as second hand wares for common use in a house of infamy. And with the price of her pollution in his pocket the Rev. Mr. Slicer, chaplain of the Senate, and spiritual pastor of both destroyed and destroyer, of the wolf and the lamb, takes the wolf arm in arm while he gnashes his teeth over the rest of his victims, just to show that he, the priest of a holy God, does not consider such wolves dangerous. Shame on such christianity! But here is the letter:—

Washington, April 22, 1848.

FRIEND ———:—Last evening, in passing the railroad depot, I saw quite a large number of colored persons gathered round one of the cars, and from manifestations of grief among some of them, I was induced to draw near, and ascertain the cause. I found in the car towards which they were so eagérly gazing, fifty colored persons, some nearly as white as myself. A large majority of the number were those who attempted to gain their liberty last week, in the schooner Pearl. About half of them were females, a few of whom had but a slight tinge of African blood in their veins; they were finely formed and beautiful. The men were ironed together, and the whole group looked sad and dejected. At each end of the car stood a ruffian-looking guard, with large canes in their hands. In the middle of the car, stood the notorious slave dealer, of Baltimore, who is a member of the Methodist church, in good and regular standing. He had purchased the men and women around him, and was taking his departure for Georgia. While observing this old grey-headed dealer in the bodies and souls of men, the chaplain of the Senate—a Methodist brother—entered the car, and took his brother Methodist by the hand, chatted with him for a short time, and seemed to view the heart-rending scene before him, with as little concern as he would look upon cattle! I knew not whether he came with a view to sancitify the act, or pronounce the parting blessing; but this I do know, that he justifies slavery.

Some of the colored people outside, as well as in the car, were weeping most bitterly. I learned that many families were separated. Wives were there to take leave of their husbands, and husbands of their wives; children of their parents, and parents of their children. Friends parting with friends, and the tenderest ties of humanity severed at a single bid of the inhuman slave broker before them. A husband, in the meridian of life, begged to see the partner of his bosom. He protested that she was free—that she had free papers, and was torn away from him, and shut up in the jail. He clambered up to one of the windows of the car to see his wife, and as she was reaching forward her hand to him, the black-hearted slave dealer ordered him down. He did not obey. The husband and wife, with tears streaming down their cheeks, besought him to let them speak to each other. But no; he was knocked down from the car, and ordered away! The bystanders could hardly restrain themselves from laying violent hands upon the brute. This is but a faint description of the scene which took place within a few rods of the Capitol, and under enactments recognized by Congress.—Oh, what a revolting scene to a feeling heart, and what a retribution awaits the actors. Will not their wailings of anguish reach the ears of the Most High? 'Vengeance is mine—I will repay, saith the Lord.'

You have already heard of the fugitive case and the mob here.—A very exciting discussion has been going on in the House for the last two days, growing out of these riots. The galleries were thronged, and the most intense interest was manifested, while Northern and Southern members were discussing.

I have the honor to be your sincere friend and obedient servant,

JOHN I. SLINGERLAND.

The Methodist minister referred to, the Rev. Mr. Slicer, is one of the spiritual todies who manage mixing up politics with religion to secure their election to the chaplaincies of Congress. He is to be seen in the assembling of Congress infesting the hotels, and openly, with bare headed debasement, begging, for the sake of the party, to be re-elected, as he has been for several sessions, to the great disgrace of the body by whom he has been appointed. The motto, 'to the victor belong the spoils,' has been carried even into the control of the speaker's chair for the Lord's day, as earnestly as for the days of the week. The consequence has been that todies of the Slicer school have for years past been elected chaplains, and a man of respectable character cannot condescend to meanness enough to obtain the office.

Fiery debates grew up in both houses of Congress on the subject of the Pearl humanity, during which Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, expressed his willingness to serve as hangman to John P. Hale of N. H., and two or three southern rowdies of the Lower House paid the same compliment to Mr. Giddings of Ohio.

HERALD OF THE PRAIRIES.—Some four or five months since a traveling agent for this paper called on us and asked an exchange.—

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 14.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. JUNE 22, 1848. [WHOLE No. 78.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE PEARL HUMANITY.

Most of our readers have doubtless heard of the recent attempt of the schooner Pearl to assist some 70 or 80 slaves in escaping from bondage in Washington. The following letter from a member of Congress gives but a faint idea of the scene when the principal part of them were taken by Slatter, the slave drover, to the south. This Slatter is a very pious Methodist of Baltimore, where he occupies a prominent position in the church, having his pew beautifully cushioned, and ornamented with gilt edged bibles and hymn books.—Having become immensely rich by trading in the souls of men, it is said he is about to retire from business to enjoy the fruit of his works in meditation, pious seclusion and works of kindness and charity. His speculations out of the unfortunate slaves of the Pearl have rendered him abundantly able to do so, for most of them were of very little value to their masters, and had been withheld from market for want of an excuse to sell them. On that occasion they were brought into market at such price as the pious Methodist pleased to give. Among them were two beautiful girls in the blushing bloom of youth, quite as white as most white ladies, Methodists with himself, who had partaken of the same sacramental offering, at the same Lord's table, and, of course, whom he expects to dwell with as sisters in the mansions of glory in heaven; whom this same Slatter has contrived to peddle off at extra prices for compelled prostitution.

In this pious age, at the Capitol of this free country, an exemplary Methodist, after heading a mob against a printing office, can purchase a chaste and beautiful sister in his church on speculation, trade her off to a gang of drunken, gambling rowdies to be violently prostituted by each in turn to their hearts' content, and if she survives with life to be then traded off as second hand wares for common use in a house of infamy. And with the price of her pollution in his pocket the Rev. Mr. Slicer, chaplain of the Senate, and spiritual pastor of both destroyed and destroyer, of the wolf and the lamb, takes the wolf arm in arm while he gnashes his teeth over the rest of his victims, just to show that he, the priest of a holy God, does not consider such wolves dangerous. Shame on such Christianity! But here is the letter:—

Washington, April 22, 1848.

FRIEND ———:—Last evening, in passing the railroad depot, I saw quite a large number of colored persons gathered round one of the cars, and from manifestations of grief among some of them, I was induced to draw near, and ascertain the cause. I found in the car towards which they were so eagerly gazing, fifty colored persons, some nearly as white as myself. A large majority of the number were those who attempted to gain their liberty last week, in the schooner Pearl. About half of them were females, a few of whom had but a slight tinge of African blood in their veins; they were finely formed and beautiful. The men were ironed together, and the whole group looked sad and dejected. At each end of the car stood a ruffian-looking guard, with large canes in their hands. In the middle of the car, stood the notorious slave dealer, of Baltimore, who is a member of the Methodist church, in good and regular standing. He had purchased the men and women around him, and was taking his departure for Georgia. While observing this old grey-headed dealer in the bodies and souls of men, the chaplain of the Senate—a Methodist brother—entered the car, and took his brother Methodist by the hand, chatted with him for a short time, and seemed to view the heart-rending scene before him, with as little concern as he would look upon cattle! I knew not whether he came with a view to sanctify the act, or pronounce the parting blessing; but this I do know, that he justifies slavery.

Some of the colored people outside, as well as in the car, were weeping most bitterly. I learned that many families were separated. Wives were there to take leave of their husbands, and husbands of their wives; children of their parents, and parents of their children. Friends parting with friends, and the tenderest ties of humanity severed at a single bid of the inhuman slave broker before them. A husband, in the meridian of life, begged to see the partner of his bosom. He protested that she was free—that she had free papers, and was torn away from him, and shut up in the jail. He clambered up to one of the windows of the car to see his wife, and as she was reaching forward her hand to him, the black-hearted slave dealer ordered him down. He did not obey. The husband and wife, with tears streaming down their cheeks, besought him to let them speak to each other. But no; he was knocked down from the car, and ordered away! The bystanders could hardly restrain themselves from laying violent hands upon the brute. This is but a faint description of the scene which took place within a few rods of the Capitol, and under enactments recognized by Congress.—Oh, what a revolting scene to a feeling heart, and what a retribution awaits the actors. Will not their wailings of anguish reach the ears of the Most High? 'Vengeance is mine—I will repay, saith the Lord.'

You have already heard of the fugitive case and the mob here.—A very exciting discussion has been going on in the House for the last two days, growing out of these riots. The galleries were thronged, and the most intense interest was manifested, while Northern and Southern members were discussing.

I have the honor to be your sincere friend and obedient servant,

JOHN L. SLINGERLAND.

The Methodist minister referred to, the Rev. Mr. Slicer, is one of the spiritual todies who manage mixing up politics with religion to secure their election to the chaplaincies of Congress. He is to be seen in the assembling of Congress infesting the hotels, and openly, with bare headed debasement, begging, for the sake of the party, to be re-elected, as he has been for several sessions, to the great disgrace of the body by whom he has been appointed. 'The motto, 'to the victor belong the spoils,' has been carried even into the control of the speaker's chair for the Lord's day, as earnestly as for the days of the week. The consequence has been that todies of the Slicer school have for years past been elected chaplains, and a man of respectable character cannot condescend to meanness enough to obtain the office.

Fiery debates grew up in both houses of Congress on the subject of the Pearl humanity, during which Jefferson Davis, of Mississippi, expressed his willingness to serve as hangman to John P. Hale of N. H., and two or three southern rowdies [illegible] paid the same compliment to Mr. Giddings of Ohio.

HERALD OF THE PRAIRIES.—Some four or [illegible] traveling agent for this paper called on us and

We have sent the Gospel Herald since that time, and have not received a paper in return. This would not be honest in a Mormon. Is it with the Orthodox? What says the Herald? The same agent asked a discussion on the necessity of an authorized priesthood, to be conducted through the papers, which we assured we would accord with. What says the editor? Does he stand to his agent's proposition? We hear that he has recently published on the subject, but we cannot get sight of the article.

OPPRESSION.

The sin of oppressing the poor and the needy is one of the most heinous sins in the sight of God—one which crieth unto him for vengeance, and which he will avenge, as clearly appears from the following scriptures:—

Psalms xii. 5. "For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord; I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him."

Psa. lxxii. 4. "He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor.

12. For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper.

13. He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy.

14. He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence: and precious shall their blood be in his sight."

Prov. xxi. 13. "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard."

Eccl. v. 8. "If thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not at the matter: for he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they."

In view of these scriptures what may we expect upon this generation, who, notwithstanding all their pretensions to christianity, have adopted a system of legalized oppression, whereby thousands are literally starved to death, and thousands more, yea millions, looking like so many ghastly skeletons, daily going round in quest of the necessary sustenance of life? Nor is this altogether confined to the old countries. In the United States of America, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," "the model republic," whose banner unfurls to the breeze that "all men are born equal and have certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," there are three millions and a half of human beings held in abject slavery. Nor is this all. There are thousands in what are called the free States suffering for want of the common necessaries of life, and instances have occurred where men, rather than pine out a miserable existence for want of them, have butchered their wives and children and then committed suicide themselves.

All this is caused by a system of legalized oppression, by which he who has the almighty dollar is made the oppressor. And it is worthy of notice that, in those nations who call themselves christian, there is the most of it. This shows the baneful effects of corrupted christianity. Almost every new invention or improvement in the sciences is followed by some new species of oppression. In the midst of all this the poor among mankind are struggling for freedom, but every effort seems to bind their shackles the stronger. It is true that France has nominally gained her liberty, but that her internal condition has been improved we have yet to learn. Every mail brings intelligence of some new outbreak, and a very great dissatisfaction among large portions of the community. Generally when the people have the power they lack wisdom to use it. The consequence is anarchy and confusion. We have come to the conclusion, from the past history of the world and from the word of God, that man is not capable of self-government; that nothing short of the government of God will bring in everlasting righteousness and establish justice and judgment on the earth, whereby the poor will be redeemed from deceit and violence. And were it not for the promise of God that in the last days he would establish such a kingdom, we should despair of it ever being accomplished; but as he has promised so he will perform. For it is the Lord that "poureth contempt upon princes, and causeth them to wander in the wilderness, where there is no way. Yet setteth he the poor on high from affliction, and maketh him families like a flock. The righteous shall see it, and rejoice: and all iniquity shall stop her mouth. Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord." Psa. cvii. 40, 41, 42, 43.

G. W.

Decatur, Ala., June 6th, 1848.

My Dear Brother:—After a long silence of nearly two years I again address a few lines to you, with the intention to assure you that I am still alive and rejoicing in the work of the Lord of this latter day, which he hath commenced through his prophet Joseph and which he has promised to continue through you. Greatly rejoicing, after duly investigating your claim, in the persuasion that you are the lawfully appointed successor of Joseph, I set out, in the latter part of August, 1846, in company with a countryman of mine, to Wisconsin with the purpose to visit you at Voree. We arrived there, and were, to my great chagrin, informed that you were not at home. My traveling companion not willing to stay, and anxious to return to our families, we immediately commenced our journey homeward by the way of St. Louis. After my arrival at home I got very sick with the fever, which lasted about eight months. I was very ill, and living as a widower with my little children alone, I was exposed to many trials and temptations; my faith at times became weak, and my naturally feeble constitution was more weakened. But through the great mercy and grace of God I have recovered bodily and spiritually.

In the latter part of February last I succeeded in selling my place in the vicinity of Madison, Indiana, and moved to Alabama, to stay there for a season with a countryman of mine, in order to enjoy a milder climate. My friend, who is a doctor and a gentleman of good morals, formerly, too, a missionary in Africa, is now investigating the Book of Mormon and our doctrine. He begins to believe it, and wishes now for a good many informations concerning your calling to the First Presidency of the church. He wants to have clear evidence, and then very likely will become a useful tool in the hands of God. Not wishing to stay in Alabama longer than next spring, we shall wind up our partnership business in the fall. While I was yet in Madison reports have reached us from different quarters that things at Voree were going wrong; that many had dissented from the church, and that the work was about to break up. I suppose that such reports were spread by some apostate Mormons. I did not put any confidence in them, knowing that the enemy is trying his best to destroy and oppose the work of God; nevertheless I became somewhat uneasy, having not heard any thing from you and the saints for more than a year. You would oblige me very much to give us some correct information respecting the true state of the church at Voree.

My intention and desire is now to move to Voree, the city that God has appointed to be the gathering place for his saints, to gain an inheritance therein according to the commandment of God. We should be very happy to receive some of your papers containing Joseph's letter to you, the translation of the plates found at Voree, some news respecting the mission to the Lamanites on Big Beaver Island, and several interesting items. We should like to be informed who is the editor of the paper at Voree. Doubtless the

We have sent the Gospel Herald since that time, and have not received a paper in return. This would not be honest in a Mormon. Is it with the Orthodox? What says the Herald? The same agent asked a discussion on the necessity of an authorized priesthood, to be conducted through the papers, which we assured we would accord with. What says the editor? Does he stand to his agent's proposition? We hear that he has recently published on the subject, but we cannot get sight of the article.

OPPRESSION.

The sin of oppressing the poor and the needy is one of the most heinous sins in the sight of God—one which crieth unto him for vengeance, and which he will avenge, as clearly appears from the following scriptures:—

Psalms xii. 5. "For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, now will I arise, saith the Lord; I will set him in safety from him that puffeth at him."

Psa. lxxii. 4. "He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor.

12. For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper.

13. He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy.

14. He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence: and precious shall their blood be in his sight."

Prov. xxi. 13. "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard."

Eccl. v. 8. "If thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not at the matter: for he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they."

In view of these scriptures what may we expect upon this generation, who, notwithstanding all their pretensions to christianity, have adopted a system of legalized oppression, whereby thousands are literally starved to death, and thousands more, yea millions, looking like so many ghastly skeletons, daily going round in quest of the necessary sustenance of life? Nor is this altogether confined to the old countries. In the United States of America, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," "the model republic," whose banner unfurls to the breeze that "all men are born equal and have certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," there are three millions and a half of human beings held in abject slavery. Nor is this all. There are thousands in what are called the free States suffering for want of the common necessaries of life, and instances have occurred where men, rather than pine out a miserable existence for want of them, have butchered their wives and children and then committed suicide themselves.

All this is caused by a system of legalized oppression, by which he who has the almighty dollar is made the oppressor. And it is worthy of notice that, in those nations who call themselves christian, there is the most of it. This shows the baneful effects of corrupted christianity. Almost every new invention or improvement in the sciences is followed by some new species of oppression. In the midst of all this the poor among mankind are struggling for freedom, but every effort seems to bind their shackles the stronger. It is true that France has nominally gained her liberty, but that her internal condition has been improved we have yet to learn. Every mail brings intelligence of some new outbreak, and a very great dissatisfaction among large portions of the community. Generally when the people have the power they lack wisdom to use it. The consequence is anarchy and confusion. We have come to the conclusion, from the past history of the world and from the word of God, that man is not capable of self-government; that nothing short of the government of God will bring in everlasting righteousness and establish justice and judgment on the earth, whereby the poor will be redeemed from deceit and violence. And were it not for the promise of God that in the last days he would establish such a kingdom, we should despair of it ever being accomplished; but as he has promised so he will perform. For it is the Lord that "poureth contempt upon princes, and causeth them to wander in the wilderness, where there is no way. Yet setteth he the poor on high from affliction, and maketh him families like a flock. The righteous shall see it, and rejoice: and all iniquity shall stop her mouth. Whoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving kindness of the Lord." Psa. cvii. 40, 41, 42, 43.

G. W.

Decatur, Ala., June 6th, 1848.

My Dear Brother:—After a long silence of nearly two years I again address a few lines to you, with the intention to assure you that I am still alive and rejoicing in the work of the Lord of this latter day, which he hath commenced through his prophet Joseph and which he has promised to continue through you. Greatly rejoicing, after duly investigating your claim, in the persuasion that you are the lawfully appointed successor of Joseph, I set out, in the latter part of August, 1846, in company with a countryman of mine, to Wisconsin with the purpose to visit you at Voree. We arrived there, and were, to my great chagrin, informed that you were not at home. My traveling companion not willing to stay, and anxious to return to our families, we immediately commenced our journey homeward by the way of St. Louis. After my arrival at home I got very sick with the fever, which lasted about eight months. I was very ill, and living as a widower with my little children alone, I was exposed to many trials and temptations; my faith at times became weak, and my naturally feeble constitution was more weakened. But through the great mercy and grace of God I have recovered bodily and spiritually.

In the latter part of February last I succeeded in selling my place in the vicinity of Madison, Indiana, and moved to Alabama, to stay there for a season with a countryman of mine, in order to enjoy a milder climate. My friend, who is a doctor and a gentleman of good morals, formerly, too, a missionary in Africa, is now investigating the Book of Mormon and our doctrine. He begins to believe it, and wishes now for a good many informations concerning your calling to the First Presidency of the church. He wants to have clear evidence, and then very likely will become a useful tool in the hands of God. Not wishing to stay in Alabama longer than next spring, we shall wind up our partnership business in the fall. While I was yet in Madison reports have reached us from different quarters that things at Voree were going wrong; that many had dissented from the church, and that the work was about to break up. I suppose that such reports were spread by some apostate Mormons. I did not put any confidence in them, knowing that the enemy is trying his best to destroy and oppose the work of God; nevertheless I became somewhat uneasy, having not heard any thing from you and the saints for more than a year. You would oblige me very much to give us some correct information respecting the true state of the church at Voree.

My intention and desire is now to move to Voree, the city that God has appointed to be the gathering place for his saints, to gain an inheritance therein according to the commandment of God. We should be very happy to receive some of your papers containing Joseph's letter to you, the translation of the plates found at Voree, some news respecting the mission to the Lamanites on Big Beaver Island, and several interesting items. We should like to be informed who is the editor of the paper at Voree, Doubtless the gathering unto Voree will soon become considerable. Presently there exists a great deal of uncertainty and doubt among the saints concerning the head of the church. To me Joseph's letter to you, and the coming forth of the plates at Voree, is sufficient evidence. It is to be hoped that all the honest saints will soon comprehend the case. The Twelve are out with a proclamation calling upon all the saints to go speedily to the Great Salt Lake City. I received a copy of the proclamation, but it is evident to me that it is not of God, and that destruction will come upon the camp of Israel in the wilderness. Already the news has come that the Indians are upon them, and have killed many men, women and children. The case of their going west with arms and ammunition proveth evidently that they are not going with peaceful intentions, and fear the hand of the savages, who, very likely, will be upon them ere long. It is a fearful affair, and it makes me shudder to think about it.

We hear of wars and rumors of wars in foreign lands. The convulsions in Europe seem to bring about a great change. It showeth that the Lord is doing his work in removing all obstacles, in order to prepare the way for the messengers of the God of Israel, to proclaim the everlasting gospel to the nations of the earth. What a work will that be whenever the Lord will send his servants to the populous kingdoms and states of Europe with great power, in all their different languages. Very sublime and great, too, is the mission to the Indians with the gospel of peace, not with guns, pistols and rifles. Now, my dear brother Strang, I hope that you will receive this letter in good health, and should feel exceedingly happy to receive a few lines in return as soon as your occupations will allow you a moment to write me. May the Lord bless you, your family and the saints at Voree. I excuse myself for not having written you sooner, and remain, with the sentiments of love and affection, your brother in the bonds of the everlasting covenant,

LOUIS VON BUREN.

☞ We have taken too much pleasure in reading this not to give it also to our readers, especilally as it asks some questions in which many others are equally interested. There was a very considerable falling off from the church in the fall of 1846, and another in the summer of 1847. But as for the breaking up of Voree, the story is like that of a certain lady's age. After giving it as 30 and appealing to her husband for proof, he replied that "he thought she ought to be 30, for he had heard her say so every day for at least 10 years." For the sake of apostate veracity Voree ought to be broke up and abandoned, for they have been saying it was just used up for two years, and it is doing more and better business now than at any time heretofore. It is very true that the place has had a small growth, and that at some times the external appearances have been discouraging; but as soon as those who both produced and published the discouragement disappeared, our prosperity has been renewed. These feverish fits have constantly become less violent and less frequent, till we now think nothing of them. Work is now going on upon the Temple. There are 150 dwelling together according to the order of Enoch, who are greatly improving their condition. Many more are doing well.

Voree has rather a rural and agricultural appearance than that of a town, but its valuable improvements and substantial business are constantly increasing. The work of carrying the gospel to the Lamanites is now well begun, and is, we think, placed on a permanent foundation. President Strang has recently been in communication with several leading chiefs and braves of the Indians in the north part of Lake Michigan. At Beaver, the seat of the Indian mission, a large number of them met him on his recent visit, and made the preliminary arrangements for the education of several Indian youth at the mission school there, and a few at the association school in Voree. It is probable that six or eight will attend school at Voree through the coming winter, and from twenty to thirty be received into the mission school on the Beaver. We expect soon to make an appeal to the benevolence of our countrymen in behalf of this much injured race, to sustain these schools by liberal contributions.

We hope, though we dare not promise, to hold the next October Conference in a basement room of the Temple. Very little of the work is done, but considerable material is accumulated, and means is now coming in with considerable freedom. Indeed ever since the order of Enoch was established the work has seemed to have a new impetus. More has been accomplished in six months than in the preceding eighteen. For further information we send brother V. B. a file of the Herald and a small quantity of tracts. Pres. S. expects to hold a discussion with the professors of the Michigan Central College in a few weeks, which, when published, he will send also, more especially for the use of brother V. B.'s partner.

In conclusion, permit us to assure you that, though there has been an apparent falling away from the church here at different times, there has been very little falling away from the FAITH. Those who have gone out from among us were not of us. With very few exceptions they were always disturbers of our peace and hinderances to the work of God. They were men we were willing to try to save, but of whom we had little or nothing to hope. In the beginning, by mutually crying up each other, they had come to considerable influence. Yet by various means they were continually a weight and burden on the church, until, quarreling among themselves, they have gradually slipped off and left the old ship of Zion in smooth water, with a fresh breeze aft, plenty of sail and very little useless lumber or bilge water aboard. To this we add the assurance of Pres. Strang's prayers for you, continued prosperity, and speedy arrival at the home of the saints, and of his own excellent health and real happiness.

FROM MEXICO.

New York, June 20.

We have New Orleans dates to the 11th inst.

The schooner John Bell, arrived at New Orleans on the evening of the 18th, from Tuspan, Mexico, which place she left on the 1st instant. At that time the greatest panic and alarm prevailed among the people at Tuspan, on account of threatened attack from the Indians, who had surrounded the place in great numbers—estimated at 8,000.

The Indians were said to be about 12 leagues from the city, and steadily advancing towards it.

At Tamiagua, it is reported, several white persons had been killed by the Indians, and others had been captured and condemned to be executed. A body of mounted men had been sent from Tuspan to rescue these captives, if possible.

The people of Tuspan generally were under arms, and a constant patrol was kept up.

The war steamer Vixen, lying near Tuspan, had sent a company of marines and some ammunition, to aid in the defence of the town; and an American armed schooner moored at the Bridge, ready to open a fire upon the Indians, as soon as they should make their appearance.

MORE HORRORS IN YUCATAN.—Intelligence to May 23 states that the Indians were increasing in strength to an alarming degree. All who fall into their hands are put to death. A large force was at Ticul, 22 miles from Merida, marching upon that city. Stilfech was taken on the 18th of May. Sisal was filled with troops. A battalion had been raised in Campeachy to defend that city. Jacinto Pat had demanded 1,200 stand of arms from Barbachano, to be delivered in five days.—Ex. Paper.

MARTINIQUE.—By an arrival at New York, the account of the insurrection is confirmed. On the 25th of May the negroes held undisputed sway over the whole island excepting Port Royal. The troops, by order of the authorities, offered no resistance. The negroes had murdered a few hundred white families, and burnt 20 gathering unto Voree will soon become considerable. Presently here exists a great deal of uncertainty and doubt among the saints concerning the head of the church. To me Joseph's letter to you, and the coming forth of the plates at Voree, is sufficient evidence. It is to be hoped that all the honest saints will soon comprehend the case. The Twelve are out with a proclamation calling upon all the saints to go speedily to the Great Salt Lake City. I received a copy of the proclamation, but it is evident to me that it is not of God, and that destruction will come upon the camp of Israel in the wilderness. Already the news has come that the Indians are upon them, and have killed many men, women and children. The case of their going west with arms and ammunition proveth evidently that they are not going with peaceful intentions, and fear the hand of the savages, who, very likely, will be upon them ere long. It is a fearful affair, and it makes me shudder to think about it.

We hear of wars and rumors of wars in foreign lands. The convulsions in Europe seem to bring about a great change. It showeth that the Lord is doing his work in removing all obstacles, in order to prepare the way for the messengers of the God of Israel, to proclaim the everlasting gospel to the nations of the earth. What a work will that be whenever the Lord will send his servants to the populous kingdoms and states of Europe with great power, in all their different languages. Very sublime and great, too, is the mission to the Indians with the gospel of peace, not with guns, pistols and rifles. Now, my dear brother Strang, I hope that you will receive this letter in good health, and should feel exceedingly happy to receive a few lines in return as soon as your occupations will allow you a moment to write me. May the Lord bless you, your family and the saints at Voree. I excuse myself for not having written you sooner, and remain, with the sentiments of love and affection, your brother in the bonds of the everlasting covenant,

LOUIS VON BUREN.

☞ We have taken too much pleasure in reading this not to give it also to our readers, especilally as it asks some questions in which many others are equally interested. There was a very considerable falling off from the church in the fall of 1846, and another in the summer of 1847. But as for the breaking up of Voree, the story is like that of a certain lady's age. After giving it as 30 and appealing to her husband for proof, he replied that "he thought she ought to be 30, for he had heard her say so every day for at least 10 years." For the sake of apostate veracity Voree ought to be broke up and abandoned, for they have been saying it was just used up for two years, and it is doing more and better business now than at any time heretofore. It is very true that the place has had a small growth, and that at some times the external appearances have been discouraging; but as soon as those who both produced and published the discouragement disappeared, our prosperity has been renewed. These feverish fits have constantly become less violent and less frequent, till we now think nothing of them. Work is now going on upon the Temple. There are 150 dwelling together according to the order of Enoch, who are greatly improving their condition. Many more are doing well.

Voree has rather a rural and agricultural appearance than that of a town, but its valuable improvements and substantial business are constantly increasing. The work of carrying the gospel to the Lamanites is now well begun, and is, we think, placed on a permanent foundation. President Strang has recently been in communication with several leading chiefs and braves of the Indians in the north part of Lake Michigan. At Beaver, the seat of the Indian mission, a large number of them met him on his recent visit, and made the preliminary arrangements for the education of several Indian youth at the mission school there, and a few at the association school in Voree. It is probable that six or eight will attend school at Voree through the coming winter, and from twenty to thirty be received into the mission school on the Beaver. We expect soon to make an appeal to the benevolence of our countrymen in behalf of this much injured race, to sustain these schools by liberal contributions.

We hope, though we dare not promise, to hold the next October Conference in a basement room of the Temple. Very little of the work is done, but considerable material is accumulated, and means is now coming in with considerable freedom. Indeed ever since the order of Enoch was established the work has seemed to have a new impetus. More has been accomplished in six months than in the preceding eighteen. For further information we send brother V. B. a file of the Herald and a small quantity of tracts. Pres. S. expects to hold a discussion with the professors of the Michigan Central College in a few weeks, which, when published, he will send also, more especially for the use of brother V. B.'s partner.

In conclusion, permit us to assure you that, though there has been an apparent falling away from the church here at different times, there has been very little falling away from the FAITH. Those who have gone out from among us were not of us. With very few exceptions they were always disturbers of our peace and hinderances to the work of God. They were men we were willing to try to save, but of whom we had little or nothing to hope. In the beginning, by mutually crying up each other, they had come to considerable influence. Yet by various means they were continually a weight and burden on the church, until, quarreling among themselves, they have gradually slipped off and left the old ship of Zion in smooth water, with a fresh breeze aft, plenty of sail and very little useless lumber or bilge water aboard. To this we add the assurance of Pres. Strang's prayers for you, continued prosperity, and speedy arrival at the home of the saints, and of his own excellent health and real happiness.

FROM MEXICO.

New York, June 20.

We have New Orleans dates to the 11th inst.

The schooner John Bell, arrived at New Orleans on the evening of the 18th, from Tuspan, Mexico, which place she left on the 1st instant. At that time the greatest panic and alarm prevailed among the people at Tuspan, on account of threatened attack from the Indians, who had surrounded the place in great numbers—estimated at 8,000.

The Indians were said to be about 12 leagues from the city, and steadily advancing towards it.

At Tamiagua, it is reported, several white persons had been killed by the Indians, and others had been captured and condemned to be executed. A body of mounted men had been sent from Tuspan to rescue these captives, if possible.

The people of Tuspan generally were under arms, and a constant patrol was kept up.

The war steamer Vixen, lying near Tuspan, had sent a company of marines and some ammunition, to aid in the defence of the town; and an American armed schooner moored at the Bridge, ready to open a fire upon the Indians, as soon as they should make their appearance.

MORE HORRORS IN YUCATAN.—Intelligence to May 23 states that the Indians were increasing in strength to an alarming degree. All who fall into their hands are put to death. A large force was at Ticul, 22 miles from Merida, marching upon that city. Stilfeoh was taken on the 18th of May. Sisal was filled with troops. A battalion had been raised in Campeachy to defend that city. Jacinto Pat had demanded 1,200 stand of arms from Barbachano, to be delivered in five days.—Ex. Paper.

MARTINIQUE.—By an arrival at New York, the account of the insurrection is confirmed. On the 25th of May the negroes held undisputed away over the whole island excepting Port Royal. The troops, by order of the authorities, offered no resistance. The negroes had murdered a few hundred white families, and burnt 20 houses. No molestation was offered to American vessels. The roads to Port Royal were crowded with negroes marching on to the city.

At Martinique the blacks continue their revolt. Many of the whites have left, and all who can are removing. The blacks are ravaging the whole island, and massacreing all who come into their hands. In one instance 36 persons, including women and children, were driven into a house and burned to death.

Martinique and Guadeloupe belong to the French, and the slaves of the two islands were to be liberated under the orders of the Provisional Government of France. The decree of the French government abolishing slavery took effect on the 24th of May. The Governor of Guadeloupe, on being informed of the state of things in Martinique, immediately abolished slavery in the island of Guadeloupe and its dependencies; but in so doing, took such precautionary measures as to protect life and property, and matters there passed off in a quiet and orderly manner.—Plymouth Rock.

☞ These accounts of negro as well as of Indian cruelties should always be received with great allowance, because we have only the interested account of one side. The negroes have no newspapers, and issue neither manifestoes or bulletins. And though they may in fact be carrying on war with great violence and cruelty, it does not follow that they are doing it without cause. Their former masters cannot or will not realize that they are free, and are already engaged in plots to reduce them to slavery again. If it is no sin for a white man to throw off slavery or to provide against it, why for a black? The blood of Cain which Canaan inherited from his mother will be in bondage as long as Japheth dwells in the tents of Shem. Is not the time of the end coming? Half of Mexico is receding to the Indians.

☞ A good sister sends word that she wishes to "subscribe for the Herald when we cease saying hard things of Pseudoes," &c. We will do so whenever she will send us a New Testament with no hard sayings on the Pseudoes (hypocrites and schismatics) apostates and unbelievers of that age. People that make such suggestions don't know what they want, and in nine cases in ten, when in the same circumstances, use harder language than we do. The editor of this paper endures almost daily, without moving a line of his countenance, provocations that would set them in a foaming rage. His patience under provocation is proverbial. True, when he does speak he says something. And without forever being in a fret about injuries and insults, whenever he does resent them he is apt to do it so that the same persons will feel no disposition to repeat them. Half the persons who complain of him if they stood by to endure with him, would resort to clubs and knives instead of sound words.

FOREIGN AID TO ROMANISM IN AMERICA.

The Association (in Europe) for the propagation of the faith, have granted to the missions in America, this year:—$5,000 to the Bishop of Dubuque; $6,000 to the Bishop of Detroit; $4,000 to Bishop of Cincinnati; $3,000 to Bishop of Philadelphia; $3,000 to Richmond; $4,000 to Bishop Hughes, New York; $1,000 to priests of Mercy, N. Y.; $2,000 to Hartford; $3,000 to Nashville; $3,000 to Louisville; $8,000 to Bishop of Vincennes, and $3,000 to congregation of Holy Cross, same diocese; $6,000 to St. Louis; $2,250 to Milwaukee; $3,500 to Bishop of Little Rock; $7,500 to Bishop Quarter at Chicago; $3,500 to Nachez; $4,750 to New Orleans; $7,500 to Mobile; $8,000 to Charleston; $6,000 to Lazarists in the United States; $2,150 to Society of Jesus, Mo; $9,000 to Society of Jesus in Rocky Mountains; $760 to Dominicans in do.; $10,000 to Dr. Odin, Vicar Apostolic, Texas; $3,000 to Jesuit Missions in America; $26,000 to West Indian and South American Missions; $11,000 to the Archbishop of Oregon City; $4,000 to Vicar Apostolic, Hudson's Bay; $26,000 to British American Missions; $11,500 to Oblats, Canada, and Hudson's Bay; $6,000 to Jesuits in Canada.—Ex. Paper.

☞ All this money will truly be laid out in mission labor, and not as many Protestant mission funds in keeping up princely establishments. The Catholics are the industrious and progressive sect of the country. [Ed.

A Humane Decree.—The Provisional Government of France has issued a decree interdicting exposure in the pillory. The reasons assigned for this decision are—first, that this punishment brands the offender with infamy to such an extent, that it prevents forever the possibility of his being restored to his former rank in society; secondly, that it is dreadfully unequal in its visitation, scarcely affecting the hardened criminal, while it gives an irreparable blow to the repentant offender; and, thirdly, because the spectacle of such exposure extinguishes the sentiment of pity, and familiarizes the public to the sight of crime.—Chris. Reflector.

SPEAK NO ILL.

Nay, speak no ill: a kindly word
Can never leave a sting behind;
And O, to breathe each tale we've heard
Is far beneath a noble mind.
Full oft a better seed is sown,
By choosing thus the kinder plan;
For if but little good be known,
Still let us speak the best we can.

Give me the heart that fain would hide—
Would fain another's faults efface;
How can it pleasure human pride
To prove humanity but base!
No! let us reach a higher mood—
A nobler estimate for man;
Be earnest in the search for good,
And speak of all the best we can.

Then speak no ill—but lenient be
To other's failings as your own;
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known.
For life is but a passing day,
No lip may tell how brief its span;
Then O, the little time we stay,
Let's speak of all the best we can.

MARRIED,

In the Porter Branch, on the 16th of April last, by Elder James Beneworth, Elder Hiram P. Brown, of Turtleville, to Miss Hannah A. Barker, of the former place.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

houses. No molestation was offered to American vessels. The roads to Port Royal were crowded with negroes marching on to the city.

At Martinique the blacks continue their revolt. Many of the whites have left, and all who can are removing. The blacks are ravaging the whole island, and massacreing all who come into their hands. In one instance 36 persons, including women and children, were driven into a house and burned to death.

Martinique and Guadeloupe belong to the French, and the slaves of the two islands were to be liberated under the orders of the Provisional Government of France. The decree of the French government abolishing slavery took effect on the 24th of May. The Governor of Guadeloupe, on being informed of the state of things in Martinique, immediately abolished slavery in the island of Guadeloupe and its dependencies; but in so doing, took such precautionary measures as to protect life and property, and matters there passed off in a quiet and orderly manner.—Plymouth Rock.

☞ These accounts of negro as well as of Indian cruelties should always be received with great allowance, because we have only the interested account of one side. The negroes have no newspapers, and issue neither manifestoes or bulletins. And though they may in fact be carrying on war with great violence and cruelty, it does not follow that they are doing it without cause. Their former masters cannot or will not realize that they are free, and are already engaged in plots to reduce them to slavery again. If it is no sin for a white man to throw off slavery or to provide against it, why for a black? The blood of Cain which Canaan inherited from his mother will be in bondage as long as Japheth dwells in the tents of Shem. Is not the time of the end coming? Half of Mexico is receding to the Indians.

☞ A good sister sends word that she wishes to "subscribe for the Herald when we cease saying hard things of Pseudoes," &c. We will do so whenever she will send us a New Testament with the hard sayings on the Pseudoes (hypocrites and schismatics) apostates and unbelievers of that age. People that make such suggestions don't know what they want, and in nine cases in ten, when in the same circumstances, use harder language than we do. The editor of this paper endures almost daily, without moving a line of his countenance, provocations that would set them in a foaming rage. His patience under provocation is proverbial. True, when he does speak he says something. And without forever being in a fret about injuries and insults, whenever he does resent them he is apt to do it so that the same persons will feel no disposition to repeat them. Half the persons who complain of him if they stood by to endure with him, would resort to clubs and knives instead of sound words.

FOREIGN AID TO ROMANISM IN AMERICA.

The Association (in Europe) for the propagation of the faith, have granted to the missions in America, this year:—$5,000 to the Bishop of Dubuque; $6,000 to the Bishop of Detroit; $4,000 to Bishop of Cincinnati; $3,000 to Bishop of Philadelphia; $3,000 to Richmond; $4,000 to Bishop Hughes, New York; $1,000 to priests of Mercy, N. Y.; $2,000 to Hartford; $3,000 to Nashville; $3,000 to Louisville; $8,000 to Bishop of Vincennes, and $3,000 to congregation of Holy Cross, same diocese; $6,000 to St. Louis; $2,250 to Milwaukee; $3,500 to Bishop of Little Rock; $7,500 to Bishop Quarter at Chicago; $3,500 to Nachez; $4,750 to New Orleans; $7,500 to Mobile; $8,000 to Charleston; $6,000 to Lazarists in the United States; $2,150 to Society of Jesus, Mo; $9,000 to Society of Jesus in Rocky Mountains; $760 to Dominicans in do.; $10,000 to Dr. Odin, Vicar Apostolic, Texas; $3,000 to Jesuit Missions in America; $26,000 to West Indian and South American Missions; $11,000 to the Archbishop of Oregon City; $4,000 to Vicar Apostolic, Hudson's Bay; $26,000 to British American Missions; $11,500 to Oblats, Canada, and Hudson's Bay; $6,000 to Jesuits in Canada.—Ex. Paper.

☞ All this money will truly be laid out in mission labor, and not as many Protestant mission funds in keeping up princely establishments. The Catholics are the industrious and progressive sect of the country. [Ed.

A Humane Decree.—The Provisional Government of France has issued a decree interdicting exposure in the pillory. The reasons assigned for this decision are—first, that this punishment brands the offender with infamy to such an extent, that it prevents forever the possibility of his being restored to his former rank in society; secondly, that it is dreadfully unequal in its visitation, scarcely affecting the hardened criminal, while it gives an irreparable blow to the repentant offender; and, thirdly, because the spectacle of such exposure extinguishes the sentiment of pity, and familiarizes the public to the sight of crime.—Chris. Reflector.

SPEAK NO ILL.

Nay, speak no ill: a kindly word
Can never leave a sting benind;
And O, to breathe each tale we've heard
Is far beneath a noble mind.
Full oft a better seed is sown,
By choosing thus the kinder plan;
For if but little good be known,
Still let us speak the best we can.

Give me the heart that fain would hide—
Would fain another's faults efface;
How can it pleasure human pride
To prove humanity but base!
No! let us reach a higher mood—
A nobler estimate for man;
Be earnest in the search for good,
And speak of all the best we can.

Then speak no ill—but lenient be
To other's failings as your own;
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known.
For life is but a passing day,
No lip may tell how brief its span;
Then O, the little time we stay,
Let's speak of all the best we can.

MARRIED,

In the Porter Branch, on the 16th of April last, by Elder James Beneworth, Elder Hiram P. Brown, of Turtleville, to Miss Hannah A. Barker, of the former place.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 15.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1848. [WHOLE No. 79.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE LATE EUROPEAN REVOLUTIONS.

Democratic America has been for some months congratulating aristocratic and monarchical Europe on the progress of liberty, equality and fraternity in the old world, as though these words implied an approximation to the institutions of the U. S. or a desire to imitate them. Nothing can be further from the facts. It is true that these revolutions have overthrown kings and princes in their course, but this was a mere contingency, and not the end or object had in view. They would equally overthrow the governments of the union and the states. The end and object of these revolutions is not a political partnership in the government, but practical EQUALITY in the USE of property; actual LIBERTY in the enjoyment of INTELLECTUAL RICHES, and a real FRATERNITY in the social RELATIONS of mankind. They are revolutions, not against the despotism of monarchy or aristocracy, but against the tyranny of the almighty dollar.

Money governs the world. The systems existing among men cast every thing else beneath its power. Crowns and sceptres are but sand and dust before it. It makes love false, justice a farce, and truth a fable. Men, to obtain it, will slay their mothers; betray brothers to death; sell sisters to infamy, and wives to prostitution; and gives children to the prison and the gallows. And he who possesses it puts courts and law at defiance; steeped in crime, lust and avarice, he leads the public enterprize and fashion; is courted and caressed by the great, the learned, the intellectual, the world's great men, its priests and its parasites; reposes in lovely but loathing arms of beauty—in wrinkles, petulence and the decrepitude of age, receives the fondling care and watching which were once the boon of youth's warm heart.

It is the tyranny of this autocrat, this almighty dollar, that the masses of Europe have rebelled against. Little did they care whether their rulers were called Kings or Governors, Emperors or Presidents; equalization of property, liberty of intellectual attainments, and a real brotherhood among men is what they call for.—They would as soon have this under hereditary princes and ancient forms of government; yes, far rather, if they could obtain it.—When they fail of it under a republic they will undertake new revolutions. And thus revolution will succeed revolution like waves on the sea, with an occasional truce, till the people, tired of anarchy, settle down under despotism as barely preferable to no government at all.

The newspapers are filled with accounts of three parties in France: the Fourierites, Communists and Socialists. This is all error. No such three parties exist. The principal actors of the revolution are Socialists. Socialism is a generic name for all the various parties who hold to the necessity of a new social organization of society, in which the goods of the whole community should in some sense be made a fund for the ultimate wants of all men, and the small families swallowed up in larger and more economical communities. Of these there are two principal parties: the Fourierites, who advocate a social community and a joint stock of property, dividing the income between capital and labor, by means of which the distinction of rich and poor will be kept up and probably might increase, but a home and the use of capital would be secured to the poor with great economy of living, and wealth and luxury to those who have skill in investment and a profitable occupation; and the Communists, who advocate abolishing all separate property and organizing men in large communities, who shall live as one family, on terms of perfect equality in all things, having a joint control of certain districts of country as their especial domain, and utterly discarding all distinction between the rich and the poor by abolishing the fact on which the distinction is formed. They assume to take from money its power of oppressing by taking from any and every man the power of controling it.

Besides these two leading parties are several less ones, all agreeing that some new system or other must be introduced in lieu of the present isolation and Ishmaeliteism of society. All agreeing that so long as man's greatness and his enjoyment of temporal blessings depends on setting his hand against all men, so long misery and want will be the lot of the masses, and luxury, hollow show and fear that of the few.

Ledru Rollin, who is the least socialist, the papers have made most so. La Martine, whose ideas are too poetical to be immediately appreciated in all their bearings, is as much so as any man, but he is a man of great prudence, and though he had the desperate courage to undertake to carry on the government in the stormy times which overthrew the strongest government save one in Europe, yet, knowing how difficult it is to introduce any great change in the social condition of men, hesitates about committing the whole nation to socialism. The scenes which he has witnessed with such men as La Grange, without shaking his faith in the ultimate triumph of socialism, has impressed him fully with the difficulties in the way. With all great and truly thinking men he realizes that there must be a great change in the heart of man, in his passions, in all that constitutes the intellectual or spiritual man, before he can be made the participant of a regenerated state of society.

The state of affairs we have spoken of in France is that of much of Europe, and the same spirit is every where at work. As all the nations of the earth were looking for some great prince who, as a messenger from heaven, should bring in some great good to all mankind at the very time that Christ came, so all nations are now looking for LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY—the order of Enoch and of the church of the first born, as they dwell in heaven, to be ushered in on earth in this present age.

The honest, devoted and patriotic La Martine need but learn that it takes the authority of God, the order of his law, and the united hearts of the people, to accomplish a real renovation of society; and with the assistance of his faithful compeers he might see a nation born in a day, to endure forever. Even now the simple hope of the order of the ancient days, when man was no Ishmaelite, and his

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 15.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JUNE 29, 1848. [WHOLE No. 79.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE LATE EUROPEAN REVOLUTIONS.

Democratic America has been for some months congratulating aristocratic and monarchical Europe on the progress of liberty, equality and fraternity in the old world, as though these words implied an approximation to the institutions of the U. S. or a desire to imitate them. Nothing can be further from the facts. It is true that these revolutions have overthrown kings and princes in their course, but this was a mere contingency, and not the end or object had in view. They would equally overthrow the governments of the union and the states. The end and object of these revolutions is not a political partnership in the government, but practical EQUALITY in the USE of property; actual LIBERTY in the enjoyment of INTELLECTUAL RICHES, and a real FRATERNITY in the social RELATIONS of mankind. They are revolutions, not against the despotism of monarchy or aristocracy, but against the tyranny of the almighty dollar.

Money governs the world. The systems existing among men cast every thing else beneath its power. Crowns and sceptres are but sand and dust before it. It makes love false, justice a farce, and truth a fable. Men, to obtain it, will slay their mothers; betray brothers to death; sell sisters to infamy, and wives to prostitution; and gives children to the prison and the gallows. And he who possesses it puts courts and law at defiance; steeped in crime, lust and avarice, he leads the public enterprize and fashion; is courted and caressed by the great, the learned, the intellectual, the world's great men, its priests and its parasites; reposes in lovely but loathing arms of beauty—in wrinkles, petulence and the decrepitude of age, receives the fondling care and watching which were once the boon of youth's warm heart.

It is the tyranny of this autocrat, this almighty dollar, that the masses of Europe have rebelled against. Little did they care whether their rulers were called Kings or Governors, Emperors or Presidents; equalization of property, liberty of intellectual attainments, and a real brotherhood among men is what they call for.—They would as soon have this under hereditary princes and ancient forms of government; yes, far rather, if they could obtain it.—When they fail of it under a republic they will undertake new revolutions. And thus revolution will succeed revolution like waves on the sea, with an occasional truce, till the people, tired of anarchy, settle down under despotism as barely preferable to no government at all.

The newspapers are filled with accounts of three parties in France: the Fourierites, Communists and Socialists. This is all error. No such three parties exist. The principal actors of the revolution are Socialists. Socialism is a generic name for all the various parties who hold to the necessity of a new social organization of society, in which the goods of the whole community should in some sense be made a fund for the ultimate wants of all men, and the small families swallowed up in larger and more economical communities. Of these there are two principal parties: the Fourierites, who advocate a social community and a joint stock of property, dividing the income between capital and labor, by means of which the distinction of rich and poor will be kept up and probably might increase, but a home and the use of capital would be secured to the poor with great economy of living, and wealth and luxury to those who have skill in investment and a profitable occupation; and the Communists, who advocate abolishing all separate property and organizing men in large communities, who shall live as one family, on terms of perfect equality in all things, having a joint control of certain districts of country as their especial domain, and utterly discarding all distinction between the rich and the poor by abolishing the fact on which the distinction is formed. They assume to take from money its power of oppressing by taking from any and every man the power of controling it.

Besides these two leading parties are several less ones, all agreeing that some new system or other must be introduced in lieu of the present isolation and Ishmaeliteism of society. All agreeing that so long as man's greatness and his enjoyment of temporal blessings depends on setting his hand against all men, so long misery and want will be the lot of the masses, and luxury, hollow show and fear that of the few.

Ledru Rollin, who is the least socialist, the papers have made most so. La Martine, whose ideas are too poetical to be immediately appreciated in all their bearings, is as much so as any man, but he is a man of great prudence, and though he had the desperate courage to undertake to carry on the government in the stormy times which overthrew the strongest government save one in Europe, yet, knowing how difficult it is to introduce any great change in the social condition of men, hesitates about committing the whole nation to socialism. The scenes which he has witnessed with such men as La Grange, without shaking his faith in the ultimate triumph of socialism, has impressed him fully with the difficulties in the way. With all great and truly thinking men he realizes that there must be a great change in the heart of man, in his passions, in all that constitutes the intellectual or spiritual man, before he can be made the participant of a regenerated state of society.

The state of affairs we have spoken of in France is that of much of Europe, and the same spirit is every where at work. As all the nations of the earth were looking for some great prince who, as a messenger from heaven, should bring in some great good to all mankind at the very time that Christ came, so all nations are now looking for LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY—the order of Enoch and of the church of the first born, as they dwell in heaven, to be ushered in on earth in this present age.

The honest, devoted and patriotic La Martine need but learn that it takes the authority of God, the order of his law, and the united hearts of the people, to accomplish a real renovation of society; and with the assistance of his faithful compeers he might see a nation born in a day, to endure forever. Even now the simple laws of the order of the ancient days, when man was no Ishmaelite, and his hand was not against every man, is as a fiery flame issuing forth to consume the hands of the oppressor. In prophetic symbol it might well be said that its throne was a flame, and the wheels of it burning fire; setting the throne of its judgment above the thrones of kings, and the power of the money-god; and with its ten thousand times ten thousand attendants is overthrowing kings and rulers, and executing judgment on the false prophet, the beast and his image, as well as upon the little horn, that both had eyes and spoke blasphemies.

THE SCATTERED MORMONS.

Lyman Wight and George Miller have settled on the Colorado in Texas with some thirty houses, and have their property common, and by their account are doing well. They have published a small tract giving an account of their doings and circumstances, and the reasons for their separation from the Brighamites. We have not been able to obtain a copy of the tract, but one of the elders who has read it gives us this information.

We have a letter from a gentleman connected with the press in St. Louis saying that the Mormons in Salt Valley are divided into two parties, Taylorites and Parleyites. We are more disposed to think this information correct, because some of the elders recently from the Bluffs speak of P. P. Pratt's excommunication as a probable and necessary event. We have taken some pains to ascertain the health of the western camp, and finally suceeded in getting the sexton's account of the burials at Council Bluffs. Don't stare, reader; even in that wilderness means can be contrived to tax the dead.—Some friend of Brigham, too lazy to earn an honest living at ordinary wages, must needs monopolize the business of burying the dead for a fee. Well, the sexton's account shows eight hundred deaths at the Bluffs in one year from April 1847 to April 1848. We could not ascertain the number the preceding year, but those who have visited the ground say the burials cover more than twice the space, and it is universally agreed that the former year was far the most sickly.

The camp fever and scurvy in addition to the usual diseases of new countries then prevailed greatly. The last year the most common disease among them was chills and fever, and the deaths have very many of them been for want of suitable nourishment after the fever had its course. In other words, they have starved to death.—Not that there has been an absolute and entire destitution of food, but that the supply has been so limited and so unequally distributed that the poor were unable to obtain such as the sick could possibly eat.

Allowing the number of Mormons at the Bluffs to be 4,000, and we think that number too high, and 800 deaths is equal to one in every five. It just takes one to a family, on an average, and is equal to the last curse on the Egyptans, the smighting of the first born. It would take off a generation in five years, and would shortly exterminate the human race. It should be understood that this account does not include the deaths at Salt Vally, Garden Grove, or any other place but merely at the Bluffs.

Our St Louis correspondent also informs us that there is a difficulty with Young and Kimball about the soldiers' bounty. The bounty which the Mormon battalion received in advance at the time of their enlistment amounted to twenty thousand dollars.—This was left with Young and Kimball as a fund for the benefit of the families of these soldiers left behind, but was immediately laid out for a large supply of merchandise which they sold out on speculation, and pocketed the proceeds. The soldiers have many of them got back as far as Salt Valley, and are now thundering vengeance on Brigham and Heber, and they are afraid to go to their new home. Doubtless the thing will be hushed up in some way, but be that as it may the whole crowd are rapidly diminishing in number, and the leaders are rapidly becoming estranged from one another. Having no bond of union but the fleece of the flock, as that fails to yield its increase they natuarally separate from each other.

The Indians have killed four or five hundred head of cattle the past season, and at one time drove off forty horses. In addition to this the Mormons west of Missouri River have all had to leave, and either go on to Salt Valley or return to Iowa. Their settlements west of the Mo. were on the Omaha Indians land, and the U. S. Indian Agent warned them off, by which means extensive improvements and their crops of winter wheat were lost. And what is still worse, because the loss was irreparable, what crops were put in at Salt Valley were left without fence, and a guard stationed to keep off the cattle. And by some mischance the guard was not duly kept up and the whole crop except a few potatoes was destroyed. The fault in this case is laid on P. P. Pratt.

ANNEXATION OF YUCATAN.

The late insurrections in Yucatan have sprung a new question upon our nation. Mr. Sierra, an agent of that distracted province, is now at Washington, endeavoring to secure the annexation of Yucatan to the United States. The papers are already warmly discussing the matter, some leading journals of both political parties advocating and some deprecating the scheme.

Latterly the British agents are offering the protection of that government, or at least are accused of doing so, on condition that the sovereignty of the country shall be yielded to that power. This is appealed to as a strong reason for immediate interference and consequent annexation.

We have in former numbers given our readers copious accounts of the Indian insurrections. It is not strange that the aborigines of Yucatan should prove themselves superior to their white invaders and old oppressors, when we consider the corruption and effeminacy that have every year been growing upon them. The number of the Indians, too, is put down at 450,000, while that of the whites is but 50,000.

This scheme of annexation is to us one of the wildest Utopianism. It is one, too, of sheer injustice, spite of all pleas to the contrary. Who first drove these Indians from the soil of that province, and by force disinherited them for these two hundred years? Now that they are able to rise and regain that of which they were cruelly and barbarously robbed, and now that they are nine to one of their oppressors, why should there be, as we see expressed, strong sympathy alone with the latter? If ours or any other government choose to interpose so as to guard innocence and humanity, it is well—if without washing their hands in 'snow water' they can do it.

But if they are going to annex Yucatan, where, they ask, are these schemes of annexation to end? The South American provinces lie next in order—Guatamala, Columbia, and the empire of Brazil. But an Ichabod is as truly written upon their destiny as upon that of the old Roman Empire, if they continue to prosecute the career on which they have entered. Decay in such a case must immediately commence at her very heart.

☞ Doubtless many of our readers are aware that McLellin was to hold his great organization Conference at Kirtland in the latter part of June. Of course we have had a little curiosity to hear what would be the upshot, though we never had the least idea that his "First Presidency" would honor it with their presence, or that we had any thing to learn except the manner of its death. No Ensign coming we have taken pains to get a peep into a letter of the Dr.'s to one of his friends here, which, in his usual swelling hand was not against every man, is as a fiery flame issuing forth to consume the hands of the oppressor. In prophetic symbol it might well be said that its throne was a flame, and the wheels of it burning fire; setting the throne of its judgment above the thrones of kings, and the power of the money-god; and with its ten thousand times ten thousand attendants is overthrowing kings and rulers, and executing judgment on the false prophet, the beast and his image, as well as upon the little horn, that both had eyes and spoke blasphemies.

THE SCATTERED MORMONS.

Lyman Wight and George Miller have settled on the Colorado in Texas with some thirty houses, and have their property common, and by their account are doing well. They have published a small tract giving an account of their doings and circumstances, and the reasons for their separation from the Brighamites. We have not been able to obtain a copy of the tract, but one of the elders who has read it gives us this information.

We have a letter from a gentleman connected with the press in St. Louis saying that the Mormons in Salt Valley are divided into two parties, Taylorites and Parleyites. We are more disposed to think this information correct, because some of the elders recently from the Bluffs speak of P. P. Pratt's excommunication as a probable and necessary event. We have taken some pains to ascertain the health of the western camp, and finally suceeded in getting the sexton's account of the burials at Council Bluffs. Don't stare, reader; even in that wilderness means can be contrived to tax the dead.—Some friend of Brigham, too lazy to earn an honest living at ordinary wages, must needs monopolize the business of burying the dead for a fee. Well, the sexton's account shows eight hundred deaths on to the Bluffs in one year from April 1847 to April 1848. We could not ascertain the number the preceding year, but those who have visited the ground say the burials cover more than twice the space, and it is universally agreed that the former year was far the most sickly.

The camp fever and scurvy in addition to the usual diseases of new countries then prevailed greatly. The last year the most common disease among them was chills and fever, and the deaths have very many of them been for want of suitable nourishment after the fever had its course. In other words, they have starved to death.—Not that there has been an absolute and entire destitution of food, but that the supply has been so limited and so unequally distributed that the poor were unable to obtain such as the sick could possibly eat.

Allowing the number of Mormons at the Bluffs to be 4,000, and we think that number too high, and 800 deaths is equal to one in every five. It just takes one to a family, on an average, and is equal to the last curse on the Egyptans, the smighting of the first born. It would take off a generation in five years, and would shortly exterminate the human race. It should be understood that this account does not include the deaths at Salt Vally, Garden Grove, or any other place but merely at the Bluffs.

Our St Louis correspondent also informs us that there is a difficulty with Young and Kimball about the soldiers' bounty. The bounty which the Mormon battalion received in advance at the time of their enlistment amounted to twenty thousand dollars.—This was left with Young and Kimball as a fund for the benefit of the families of these soldiers left behind, but was immediately laid out for a large supply of merchandise which they sold out on speculation, and pocketed the proceeds. The soldiers have many of them got back as far as Salt Valley, and are now thundering vengeance on Brigham and Heber, and they are afraid to go to their new home. Doubtless the thing will be hushed up in some way, but be that as it may the whole crowd are rapidly diminishing in number, and the leaders are rapidly becoming estranged from one another. Having no bond of union but the fleece of the flock, as that fails to yield its increase they natuarally separate from each other.

The Indians have killed four or five hundred head of cattle the past season, and at one time drove off forty horses. In addition to this the Mormons west of Missouri River have all had to leave, and either go on to Salt Valley or return to Iowa. Their settlements west of the Mo. were on the Omaha Indians land, and the U. S. Indian Agent warned them off, by which means extensive improvements and their crops of winter wheat were lost. And what is still worse, because the loss was irreparable, what crops were put in at Salt Valley were left without fence, and a guard stationed to keep off the cattle. And by some mischance the guard was not duly kept up and the whole crop except a few potatoes was destroyed. The fault in this case is laid on P. P. Pratt.

ANNEXATION OF YUCATAN.

The late insurrections in Yucatan have sprung a new question upon our nation. Mr. Sierra, an agent of that distracted province, is now at Washington, endeavoring to secure the annexation of Yucatan to the United States. The papers are already warmly discussing the matter, some leading journals of both political parties advocating and some deprecating the scheme.

Latterly the British agents are offering the protection of that government, or at least are accused of doing so, on condition that the sovereignty of the country shall be yielded to that power. This is appealed to as a strong reason for immediate interference and consequent annexation.

We have in former numbers given our readers copious accounts of the Indian insurrections. It is not strange that the aborigines of Yucatan should prove themselves superior to their white invaders and old oppressors, when we consider the corruption and effeminacy that have every year been growing upon them. The number of the Indians, too, is put down at 450,000, while that of the whites is but 50,000.

This scheme of annexation is to us one of the wildest Utopianism. It is one, too, of sheer injustice, spite of all pleas to the contrary. Who first drove these Indians from the soil of that province, and by force disinherited them for these two hundred years? Now that they are able to rise and regain that of which they were cruelly and barbarously robbed, and now that they are nine to one of their oppressors, why should there be, as we see expressed, strong sympathy alone with the latter? If ours or any other government choose to interpose so as to guard innocence and humanity, it is well—if without washing their hands in 'snow water' they can do it.

But if they are going to annex Yucatan, where, they ask, are these schemes of annexation to end? The South American provinces lie next in order—Guatamala, Columbia, and the empire of Brazil. But an Ichabod is as truly written upon their destiny as upon that of the old Roman Empire, if they continue to prosecute the career on which they have entered. Decay in such a case must immediately commence at her very heart.

☞ Doubtless many of our readers are aware that McLellin was to hold his great organization Conference at Kirtland in the latter part of June. Of course we have had a little curiosity to hear what would be the upshot, though we never had the least idea that his "First Presidency" would honor it with their presence, or that we had any thing to learn except the manner of its death. No Ensign coming we have taken pains to get a peep into a letter of the Dr.'s to one of his friends here, which, in his usual swelling point, no point style, shows that neither of the Whitmers or any body else from their region attended; and that David did not even deign a line to them, and John simply gave promise that when the Dr. succeeded in wiping all stains out of their characters they would do what they deemed to be duty. (Well, now, we think a cup that was tolerably clean would not ask the husk in a sty to wipe it.) Mc. is troubled with the apostacy of A. H. Anson, his file leader at Elizabeth, Ill., and the conduct of J. M. Adams, which he deems equivalent to apostacy, and entertains some serious fears in regard to the conduct of Oliver. He also tells of his Conference being attended by 20 persons from a distance, viz.: 3 from Mich. and 4 from Pa. Baptized about 10, and expects to baptize more some time; and says that uncle (not brother) Aaron is there yet, but cannot tell what he may do, as he is one of the odd ones of the earth and may become a Brewsterite.

For our part we think Aaron quite a better man than those who played lick spittle to him till they drew him into apostacy with flattery and falsehood, and are now slighting and abusing him. And as for Oliver Cowdery, all fears on his account are quite uncalled for. He resides here in our immediate vicinity, doing a first rate business as a lawyer, enjoying and deserving the confidence of the public, and, we believe, about to make his debut as the editor of a leading Democratic paper. And though we are quite sorry to see any of the saints engaged in politics, still we say success to brother Oliver.

We learn by the Dr.'s letter that James Collin Brewster's kingdom was organized at Kirtland about the time of Mc.'s Conference. Whether Brewster attended or not we do not learn, but Mc. says Hazen Aldrich is President of the kingdom, and A. Cowles Secretary. Of course we do not know that there is a word of truth in this, but if it is so we commend that kingdom to all who have got so much of Mormonism about them that they cannot get rid of it, and at the same time do not believe in revelations and prophets. We have not the least idea that either of them will use such authority to commit or cloak iniquity, and have no doubt they are both sincere and well disposed; and that when deception ceases and all men and things stand revealed as they are, they will be found looking after truth—if in the mean time they do not find it, which God speed. Mc. promises another Ensign when he gets money enough to pay for printing. If he could not raise it at Conference the chance is a dull one.

☞ For a hasty reply to the inquiries of several brethren concerning the Association of the order of Enoch, we are most happy to avail ourselves of the following ready written letter of the Pres. of the Twelve. The more so, because, being intended for the scattered saints, it is his appropriate jurisdiction, and of course right:—

Voree, July 10th, 1848.

Bro. Calhoun—Sir:—This is to inform you that your son has joined the Association, and gone to work. The Association is in fine spirits. The way they drive business is a caution to Gentile sluggards. They laid out so much work in the spring that they are now driven to the extreme point to keep the weeds down in their corn and potatoes and preparing for harvest. Their crops look very fine indeed. The emigration is faster than they can prepare for at present. Every house is full, and they cannot attend to preparing more houses until after harvest. Most of the new emigrants are poor and bring not much means to buy lumber or other means for building, but still they are all doing as fast as possible. They are more than anxious to welcome the saints to the "garden of peace" and be equal partakers of the blessings and of the rest for the saints of God, and will do all in their power to accommodate them. Their teams are all employed in ploughing their corn, and cannot possibly be sent to you or any others to move them until after wheat harvest, which is very abundant.

Do not let this dishearten you. I do wish all the honest in heart in Chicago were here to see for themselves the union and spirit of the Association. I think they would hail it as the beginning of better days for the church and the deliverance of the oppressed.—What I say to you may be regarded as counsel for all the saints in Chicago; therefore read this to all the saints. You will do well to lay up money to bear the expense of moving by water or otherwise, and after harvest if we can send teams to move the poor saints we will do so; if we do your money can be appropriated to purchase lumber for finishing houses for your occupancy. If we cannot send teams your money will move you of course. God bless the faithful who love and practice truth in its fullness.

JOHN E. PAGE.

DOWNFALL OF PAPACY.

We find the following article concerning the recent events at Rome in the columns of the London Standard, a leading political paper of the empire:—

"The late revolution at Rome deserves more consideration than our contemporaries seem disposed to bestow upon it. We call the change a revolution; and the event fully answers that description. The civic guard occupy the whole city, to the exclusion of the regular troops of the Pope, and exercise their power by a strict and jealous superintendence of the cardinals. They appoint and support a ministry who are invested 'with full power to decide all temporal matters, war included;' and in consequence war has been declared against the Emperor of Austria, in utter defiance of the expressed will of the Pope. Who does not see that this ministry is, in truth, the real sovereign of the State—a Provisional Government, in fact, moulded precisely upon that which ruled France for the last eleven weeks? This Provisional Government has taken such steps to secure its authority as the circumstances of the place and time required.

"First. No priest is to be employed in any civil or military capacity.

"Second. War against Austria solemnly declared.

"Third. Pope Pius the Ninth is to be the nominal head of the government, but in the same sense in which Charles the First was the nominal head of that army which fought against him at Naseby. &c.

"Fourth. Encouragement is to be given to the population to arm themselves universally.

"Surely, this is a revolution, if ever there was one—a revolution scarcely qualified by leaving to the Pope the nominal headship of the government, after every shred of temporal power is taken from him. * * *

"Every christian believes that the prophecies of scripture have been 'written for our instruction,' though all must approach the interpretation of those that are apparently yet unfulfilled with reverence and pious awe. On the other hand, we must anxiously avoid the guilt of the accursed Jews, who neglected, or refused to ac knowledge, the plain accomplishment of the divine predictions.—The question, therefore, seems properly to force itself upon our attention, Are we not now witnessing the fulfillment of one of the most striking prophecies of the Apocalypse—the overthrow of the mystic Babylon?

"We, at least, shall be thought free from being misled by a strained interpretation of scripture, when it is remembered that, reasoning upon purely political grounds, we predicted more than six months ago that Pius the Ninth would probably be the last Pope of Rome. At that time the convulsions that have since, as it were, 'turned Europe upside down,' were anticipated, as we believe, by no man alive. At that time, too, the outward conduct of the Pope left room for the charitable hypothesis that the man was a sincere enemy of abuse of every kind. We therefore put the alternative, that if Pius was honest, he would reform the abuses of the church, of which he was the head, as well as of the State, and in that way terminate the Papacy; but that if he was dishonest, and a mere imitator of his predecessors of the sixteenth century, he would find that he was three hundred years too late in renewing the game of the Borgias, and that the Pope and Papal sovereignty would fall to-point, no point style, shows that neither of the Whitmers or any body else from their region attended; and that David did not even deign a line to them, and John simply gave promise that when the Dr. succeeded in wiping all stains out of their characters they would do what they deemed to be duty. (Well, now, we think a cup that was tolerably clean would not ask the husk in a sty to wipe it.) Mc. is troubled with the apostacy of A. H. Anson, his file leader at Elizabeth, Ill., and the conduct of J. M. Adams, which he deems equivalent to apostacy, and entertains some serious fears in regard to the conduct of Oliver. He also tells of his Conference being attended by 20 persons from a distance, viz.: 3 from Mich. and 4 from Pa. Baptized about 10, and expects to baptize more some time; and says that uncle (not brother) Aaron is there yet, but cannot tell what he may do, as he is one of the odd ones of the earth and may become a Brewsterite.

For our part we think Aaron quite a better man than those who played lick spittle to him till they drew him into apostacy with flattery and falsehood, and are now slighting and abusing him. And as for Oliver Cowdery, all fears on his account are quite uncalled for. He resides here in our immediate vicinity, doing a first rate business as a lawyer, enjoying and deserving the confidence of the public, and, we believe, about to make his debut as the editor of a leading Democratic paper. And though we are quite sorry to see any of the saints engaged in politics, still we say success to brother Oliver.

We learn by the Dr.'s letter that James Collin Brewster's kingdom was organized at Kirtland about the time of Mc.'s Conference. Whether Brewster attended or not we do not learn, but Mc. says Hazen Aldrich is President of the kingdom, and A. Cowles Secretary. Of course we do not know that there is a word of truth in this, but if it is so we commend that kingdom to all who have got so much of Mormonism about them that they cannot get rid of it, and at the same time do not believe in revelations and prophets. We have not the least idea that either of them will use such authority to commit or cloak iniquity, and have no doubt they are both sincere and well disposed; and that when deception ceases and all men and things stand revealed as they are, they will be found looking after truth—if in the mean time they do not find it, which God speed. Mc. promises another Ensign when he gets money enough to pay for printing. If he could not raise it at Conference the chance is a dull one.

☞ For a hasty reply to the inquiries of several brethren concerning the Association of the order of Enoch, we are most happy to avail ourselves of the following ready written letter of the Pres. of the Twelve. The more so, because, being intended for the scattered saints, it is his appropriate jurisdiction, and of course right:—

Voree, July 10th, 1848.

Bro. Calhoun—Sir:—This is to inform you that your son has joined the Association, and gone to work. The Association is in fine spirits. The way they drive business is a caution to Gentile sluggards. They laid out so much work in the spring that they are now driven to the extreme point to keep the weeds down in their corn and potatoes and preparing for harvest. Their crops look very fine indeed. The emigration is faster than they can prepare for at present. Every house is full, and they cannot attend to preparing more houses until after harvest. Most of the new emigrants are poor and bring not much means to buy lumber or other means for building, but still they are all doing as fast as possible. They are more than anxious to welcome the saints to the "garden of peace" and be equal partakers of the blessings and of the rest for the saints of God, and will do all in their power to accommodate them. Their teams are all employed in ploughing their corn, and cannot possibly be sent to you or any others to move them until after wheat harvest, which is very abundant.

Do not let this dishearten you. I do wish all the honest in heart in Chicago were here to see for themselves the union and spirit of the Association. I think they would hail it as the beginning of better days for the church and the deliverance of the oppressed.—What I say to you may be regarded as counsel for all the saints in Chicago; therefore read this to all the saints. You will do well to lay up money to bear the expense of moving by water or otherwise, and after harvest if we can send teams to move the poor saints we will do so; if we do your money can be appropriated to purchase lumber for finishing houses for your occupancy. If we cannot send teams your money will move you of course. God bless the faithful who love and practice truth in its fullness.

JOHN E. PAGE.

DOWNFALL OF PAPACY.

We find the following article concerning the recent events at Rome in the columns of the London Standard, a leading political paper of the empire:—

"The late revolution at Rome deserves more consideration than our contemporaries seem disposed to bestow upon it. We call the change a revolution; and the event fully answers that description. The civic guard occupy the whole city, to the exclusion of the regular troops of the Pope, and exercise their power by a strict and jealous superintendence of the cardinals. They appoint and support a ministry who are invested 'with full power to decide all temporal matters, war included;' and in consequence war has been declared against the Emperor of Austria, in utter defiance of the repressed will of the Pope. Who does not see that this ministry is in truth, the real sovereign of the State—a Provisional Government in fact, moulded precisely upon that which ruled France for the last eleven weeks? This Provisional Government has taken such steps to secure its authority as the circumstances of the place and time required.

"First. No priest is to be employed in any civil or military capacity.

"Second. War against Austria solemnly declared.

"Third. Pope Pius the Ninth is to be the nominal head of the government, but in the same sense in which Charles the First was the nominal head of that army which fought against him at Naseby, &c.

"Fourth. Encouragement is to be given to the population to arm themselves universally.

"Surely, this is a revolution, if ever there was one—a revolution scarcely qualified by leaving to the Pope the nominal headship of the government, after every shred of temporal power is taken from him. * * *

"Every christian believes that the prophecies of scripture have been 'written for our instruction,' though all must approach the interpretation of those that are apparently yet unfulfilled with reverence and pious awe. On the other hand, we must anxiously avoid the guilt of the accursed Jews, who neglected, or refused to acknowledge, the plain accomplishment of the divine predictions.—The question, therefore, seems properly to force itself upon our attention, Are we not now witnessing the fulfillment of one of the most striking prophecies of the Apocalypse—the overthrow of the mystic Babylon?

"We, at least, shall be thought free from being misled by a strained interpretation of scripture, when it is remembered that, reasoning upon purely political grounds, we predicted more than six months ago that Pius the Ninth would probably be the last Pope of Rome. At that time the convulsions that have since, as it were, 'turned Europe upside down,' were anticipated, as we believe, by no man alive. At that time, too, the outward conduct of the Pope left room for the charitable hypothesis that the man was a sincere enemy of abuse of every kind. We therefore put the alternative, that if Pius was honest, he would reform the abuses of the church, of which he was the head, as well as of the State, and in that way terminate the Papacy; but that if he was dishonest, and a mere imitator of his predecessors of the sixteenth century, he would find that he was three hundred years too late in renewing the crimes of the Borgias, and that the Pope and Papal sovereignty would fall together. This was a merely political prediction, and to this we adhere; for whoever shall conquer in the present strife, the temporal authority of the Pope is extinguished forever. If the Austrians prevail, as we trust they will, they will not be again guilty of the folly of re-establishing upon their weakest frontier that which has ever proved the disturbing power of Europe. If the French once more achieve the Protectorate of Italy, they, we may be sure, will use it as their predecessors used it forty or fifty years ago; in either case the Papal States will disappear—in the former, absorbed into the Lombardy-Venetian kingdom; in the latter, making part of the French kingdom of Italy.

"This is our political prediction.

"We are fully sensible how ill the columns of a newspaper are suited to the treatment of sacred subjects—not less sensible of our own want of qualification for the task; but there is something so remarkable in the downfall of Papacy, be it but temporary, be it final, (as we devoutly believe it to be,) that we cannot withhold from our readers the striking fact, that a pious interpreter of scripture prophecies, one hundred and forty-seven years ago, fixed the event as foretold in the Apocalypse, for this very year, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight.

"The prediction will be found in a little tract, by the Rev. Robert Fleming, published in 1701, under the title of 'The Rise and Fall of the Papacy.' This little work, of which some editions have been lately printed at a cheap rate, is one of the most remarkable and interesting religious works that we have ever seen. It is written in a pure Saxon style, a clear method, and in a sober christian spirit, as far as possible removed from enthusiasm. The book extracts from the Apocalypse, by reasoning almost arithmetical, a prediction of the persecution of the French Protestants, in 1723—of the massacre of the Protestants at Thorn, in 1724—of the movement against the Jesuits towards the close of the last century, and of the destruction of the French Monarchy at its end, placing the consummation of that destruction as to be effected before the year one thousand seven hundred and ninety-four—a prediction fulfilled to the letter by the murder of the King and Queen, in 1793. Using the same canon of interpretation, Mr. Fleming foretells the obscuration of the Papacy in the first years of the present century (the imprisonment of Pius VII. by Napoleon) and its final destruction for the present year 1848.

"Mr. Fleming died in 1716, before the fulfillment of any of the extracted predictions of which we have spoken, so as to exempt him from the class of seers who prophecy after the event. We strongly recommend his little book to all upon whom present events are making the impression which they ought to make; and we recommend it with more confidence, because, though contrary to our expectation, the reader may not recognize the justice of Mr. Fleming's conclusions, he must be delighted and edified by his christian spirit."

To this the London Tablet, the organ of the Roman church in Great Britain, replies as follows:—

"All this while, it is proper to notice, the English Exeter Hall journals, and even grave lawyers and judges, have been going wild about the abolition of the Pope's temporal power. Prophecies of the most wonderful kind, and venerable with more than a hundred years of antiquity, have been dug up to prove from the Apocalypse, and by the aid of logarithms, the differential calculus, and the number of the beast, that the Papacy is to come to an end in this year of grace, 1848. Heaven help us, and even the prophets; it will be a sad thing if 1849 shows them to be false prophets. Of course, the temporal power forms no essential part of the Papacy, which has lived for three hundred years without it; which lived just as much when Pope Pius VII. was imprisoned at Savona and Fontainbleau; just as much when St. Gregory VII. died in exile, as when Innocent III. perished over the Council of Lateran, and Julius II. stood in the breaches of Mirandolda.

"The Papacy; the Spiritual Papacy; that awful power over men's souls, which Exeter Hall grieves at and weeps at, sighs at and lies at; the dominion over faith and morals; the Creed of Pope Pius; the practice of Confessions; the Decrees of Lateran and Trent; the theology of Dens; the Idolatry and Mariolatry; saints worship and image worship; obedience and allegiance paid by priests and people to a foreign Potentate—all this we assure our friends of the 'Standard,' have no necessary connexion with the Pope being an inhabitant householder on either bank of the Tiber. Catholics of all grades, and of all orders, can welcome, with considerable composure, the abolition of the temporal authority, when the angel of God sounds the knell of its departure. Nay, (it will be news to Exeter Hall,) some Catholics think that the Papacy would be more powerful, more respected, more beloved; and that holy water, the confessional, and idolatry, would prosper more, and strike their roots more widely, if the temporal power were altogether abolished. For our own private part, we feel that it is one of those questions with regard to which much might be said on both sides. But, at all events, it will be well for the 'Standard' to know, once for all, that those who are most interested in the matter do not regard the abolition of the Papacy as a downfall in any sense of the word; and that a prophecy which predicts the downfall of the Papacy in 1848, will receive only a sham verification in the exile or dethronement of the Pope. The downfall of the Papacy is not yet come, the Exeter Hall prophets may depend upon it. Even M. Jouffroy admits that it has three hundred years of vitality in it; and horrible as it may sound to the ears of the elect, one of the principal functions which this British empire fulfills in the drama of universal history—one of the main tasks which its economic virtues, its blunders, its crimes, its avarice, and its power, combine to fulfill, —is that of spreading over the globe, to its fartherest island and shores, the power of the Papacy, extending the empire of the Pope, and increasing his glory and the permanence of his spiritual dominion. Stupid Exeter Hall, English philosophy, asleep with its eyes open, in a state of somnambulism, may sneer or be aghast at this; but this is the very truth, which neither logarithms, nor the differential calculus, nor the number of the beast, nor Mr. Fleming's prophecy, nor the editor of the 'Standard,' nor any other authority now extant, will be able to disprove in the year 1848."

HE IS 'GOD OF NATIONS.'

God moves the nations at his will;
He speaks, and all the earth is still:
Fear falls upon each guilty mind,
And the proud eye is closed or blind.

An earthquake shakes the guilty land;
On tyrant's walls, a 'writing hand;'
And close upon its warning word,
Follow the judgments of the Lord.

Where riot revelled, now is wo;
Blood in the thronging streets does flow;
And palled wickedness falls down,
A dread, avenging power to own.

The crowned head, the jeweled brow,
Are laid, by angry vengeance, low;
The iron face is wet with tears,
The loftiest heart perplexed with fears.

We see: and own that God is just;
That man, before Him, is but dust;
And all the world, a desert land,
If God sweeps o'er it with his hand.

J. F. D.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

gether. This was a merely political prediction, and to this we adhere; for whoever shall conquer in the present strife, the temporal authority of the Pope is extinguished forever. If the Austrians prevail, as we trust they will, they will not be again guilty of the folly of re-establishing upon their weakest frontier that which has ever proved the disturbing power of Europe. If the French once more achieve the Protectorate of Italy, they, we may be sure, will use it as their predecessors used it forty or fifty years ago; in either case the Papal States will disappear—in the former, absorbed into the Lombardy-Venetian kingdom; in the latter, making part of the French kingdom of Italy.

"This is our political prediction.

"We are fully sensible how ill the columns of a newspaper are suited to the treatment of sacred subjects—not less sensible of our own want of qualification for the task; but there is something so remarkable in the downfall of Papacy, be it but temporary, be it final, (as we devoutly believe it to be,) that we cannot withhold from our readers the striking fact, that a pious interpreter of scripture prophecies, one hundred and forty-seven years ago, fixed the event as foretold in the Apocalypse, for this very year, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight.

"The prediction will be found in a little tract, by the Rev. Robert Fleming, published in 1701, under the title of 'The Rise and Fall of the Papacy.' This little work, of which some editions have been lately printed at a cheap rate, is one of the most remarkable and interesting religious works that we have ever seen. It is written in a pure Saxon style, a clear method, and in a sober christian spirit, as far as possible removed from enthusiasm. The book extracts from the Apocalypse, by reasoning almost arithmetical, a prediction of the persecution of the French Protestants, in 1723—of the massacre of the Protestants at Thorn, in 1724—of the movement against the Jesuits towards the close of the last century, and of the destruction of the French Monarchy at its end, placing the consummation of that destruction as to be effected before the year [illegible] thousand seven hundred and ninety-four—a prediction fulfilled [illegible]ie letter by the murder of the King and Queen, in 1793. Using [illegible]ame canon of interpretation, Mr. Fleming foretells the obscuration of the Papacy in the first years of the present century (the imprisonment of Pius VII. by Napoleon) and its final destruction for the present year 1848.

"Mr. Fleming died in 1716, before the fulfillment of any of the extracted predictions of which we have spoken, so as to exempt him from the class of seers who prophecy after the event. We strongly recommend his little book to all upon whom present events are making the impression which they ought to make; and we recommend it with more confidence, because, though contrary to our expectation, the reader may not recognize the justice of Mr. Fleming's conclusions, he must be delighted and edified by his christian spirit."

To this the London Tablet, the organ of the Roman church in Great Britain, replies as follows:—

"All this while, it is proper to notice, the English Exeter Hall journals, and even grave lawyers and judges, have been going wild about the abolition of the Pope's temporal power. Prophecies of the most wonderful kind, and venerable with more than a hundred years of antiquity, have been dug up to prove from the Apocalypse, and by the aid of logarithms, the differential calculus, and the number of the beast, that the Papacy is to come to an end in this year of grace, 1848. Heaven help us, and even the prophets; it will be a sad thing if 1849 shows them to be false prophets. Of course, the temporal power forms no essential part of the Papacy, which has lived for three hundred years without it; which lived just as much when Pope Pius VII. was imprisoned at Savona and Fontainbleau; just as much when St. Gregory VII. died in exile, as when Innocent III. perished over the Council of Lateran, and Julius II. stood in the breaches of Mirandolda.

"The Papacy; the Spiritual Papacy; that awful power over men's souls, which Exeter Hall grieves at and weeps at, sighs at and lies at; the dominion over faith and morals; the Creed of Pope Pius; the practice of Confessions; the Decrees of Lateran and Trent; the theology of Dens; the Idolatry and Mariolatry; saints worship and image worship; obedience and allegiance paid by priests and people to a foreign Potentate—all this we assure our friends of the 'Standard,' have no necessary connexion with the Pope being an inhabitant householder on either bank of the Tiber. Catholics of all grades, and of all orders, can welcome, with considerable composure, the abolition of the temporal authority, when the angel of God sounds the knell of its departure. Nay, (it will be news to Exeter Hall,) some Catholics think that the Papacy would be more powerful, more respected, more beloved; and that holy water, the confessional, and idolatry, would prosper more, and strike their roots more widely, if the temporal power were altogether abolished. For our own private part, we feel that it is one of those questions with regard to which much might be said on both sides. But, at all events, it will be well for the 'Standard' to know, once for all, that those who are most interested in the matter do not regard the abolition of the Papacy as a downfall in any sense of the word; and that a prophecy which predicts the downfall of the Papacy in 1848, will receive only a sham verification in the exile or dethronement of the Pope. The downfall of the Papacy is not yet come, the Exeter Hall prophets may depend upon it. Even M. Jouffroy admits that it has three hundred years of vitality in it, and horrible as it may sound to the ears of the elect, one of the principal functions which this British empire fulfills in the drama of universal history—one of the main tasks which its economic virtues, its blunders, its crimes, its avarice, and its power, combine to fulfill, —is that of spreading over the globe, to its farthest island and shores, the power of the Papacy, extending the empire of the Pope, and increasing his glory and the permanence of his spiritual dominion. Stupid Exeter Hall, English philosophy, asleep with its eyes open, in a state of somnambulism, may sneer or be aghast at this; but this is the very truth, which neither logarithms, nor the differential calculus, nor the number of the beast, nor Mr. Fleming's prophecy, nor the editor of the 'Standard,' nor any other authority now extant, will be able to disprove in the year 1848."

HE IS 'GOD OF NATIONS.'

God moves the nations at his will;
He speaks, and all the earth is still:
Fear falls upon each guilty mind,
And the proud eye is closed or blind.

An earthquake shakes the guilty land;
On tyrant's walls, a 'writing hand;'
And close upon its warning word,
Follow the judgments of the Lord.

Where riot revelled, now is wo;
Blood in the thronging streets does flow;
And palled wickedness falls down,
A dread, avenging power to own.

The crowned head, the jeweled brow,
Are laid, by angry vengeance, low;
The iron face is wet with tears,
The loftiest heart perplexed with fears.

We see: and own that God is just;
That man, before Him, is but dust;
And all the world, a desert land,
If God sweeps o'er it with his hand.

J. F. D.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 16.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JULY 6, 1848. [WHOLE No. 80.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

What an interesting book is the Book of Mormon! Because of all American Antiquities it is the most valuable and marvelous specimen; because with all American Antiquities it is associated in the most important and interesting relations; because the most valuable discoveries in American Antiquity must appeal to the Book of Mormon for interpretation; and the registers of long lost events and generations inscribed upon the rocks and buried in the fossil remains of far distant ages, or scattered far and wide in the ruins of once mighty empires on the American continent, are so many WITNESSES constantly multiplying to confirm the truth of the history contained in the Book of Mormon.

As a SPECIMEN of American Antiquity, what is comparable in point of interest with this Book? Suppose that, in searching the tumuli that are scattered over this country, the silent, aged, mysterious remembrances of some populous race, once carrying on all the business of life, where now are only the wild forests of many centuries, a race of whom we ask so often who they were, whence they came and whither they went. Suppose that under one of those huge structures of earth which remain of their works a book was accidentally discovered, an alphabetic history of that race, and all undeniably composed many hundreds of years before any of the white nations now possessing this continent were here. What a wonder such a book would be! What intense interest would attach to such a relic! What price would not the learned be willing to give for it! Not all the fragments of Egyptian inscriptions—not all the unintelligible characters among the ruins of the tower of Babel—not all the remains from the bowels of the earth on the eastern continent telling of national convulsions, the overthrow of mighty and renowned cities, and the final downfall of empires and ancient kingdoms, could be compared in value to such a book of ancient American origin, a detailed history of a nation otherwise unheard of. But much more than this is the Book of Mormon. It points us to the people who, the time when, and places where certain notable events transpired in Central and Northern America, (the book being published in Palmyra, Ontario county, State of New York, in the spring season of 1830,) detailing to us a minute account of things that anciently transpired with the ancient inhabitants of Central America, as since confirmed by their developments as recorded by Messrs. Stephens and Catherwood, Antiquarians, in Central America, as published in the city of New York, 1841, '43. The truth of the history of the Book of Mormon is also confirmed in almost innumerable instances by Mr. Josiah Priest's history of the Antiquities of North America, as published in Albany, N. Y., 1833.

A book entitled "An Inquiry into the Origin of the Antiquities of America, by John Delafield," published in Cincinnati, Ohio, 1839, is an overwhelming confirmation of the truth of the Book of Mormon, in such minute and numerous important particulars, that if any person (after being made acquainted with the corroborating facts as found in the Book of Mormon and the authorities quoted above) should deny the truth and divinity of the Book of Mormon they would be considered as unsound by all reasonable, logical and philosophical minds.

To all the saints of God, the honest in heart; to all lovers of confirmed truth; to all that are looking for the ushering in of the latter day glory and the rest of the people of God, so much spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world begun; to all that are looking for the return of Israel from the "north country," and the Jews from the four corners of the earth to the land of Canaan, given to their fathers "for an everlasting possession;" to all that wish the amelioration of the condition of the house of Israel, the descendants of Joseph, (the son of Jacob,) in the west; in fine, we call upon the rich and the philanthropists of all grades in life to step forward with your wealth and your mites to assist the subscriber in laying before the reading world a book that will be entitled the COLLATERAL and POSITIVE EVIDENCES of the truth and divinity of the BOOK OF MORMON. The nature of the work is such that it can be published in two volumes. The first will contain illustrative pictorial plates, the engraving of which will cost two hundred dollars and perhaps a trifle more, which will swell the aggregate cost of publication to range from 75 cents to $1,00 per single copy. The important inquiry now is, who among the thousands that have subscribed to the faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, that have the means, be it little or much, are willing to make an investment to assist me in this all important work? I am well persuaded that should I succeed in publishing the proposed work it will do more to convince the honest in heart of the truth of the claims of the faith of the Latter Day Saints than all the elders can do without it. Can I but succeed in obtaining means to publish the first volume, I shall stand on a sure basis for publishing the second, which will cost more than twice as much; it will embrace more than three times as many engraved plates.

If this notice should reach the eye of any person or persons that should feel desirous to be secured for their money until the work is done, to such I will say, I will make any arrangement with them that is practicable with me for their security that is rational, honorable and fair. All my brethren and friends who have either personally or historically acquainted themselves with the history of my career in the gospel ministry for twelve years past, know well that I have devoted wholly, solely and totally all my time and means to that purpose and none other, so that I possess no means whatever to defray present incidental expenses by way of postage on communications. Therefore should this notice wake up the attention of any on the subject of assisting me in publishing the proposed work so much that they would wish to correspond with me on the subject, they must expect to bear the expense of such correspondence.

The work of which I have spoken is of such vast importance to me there is no one thing that I can do for my fellow men that I more desire to do, before I go hence or depart to be with Christ, than to

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 16.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JULY 6, 1848. [WHOLE No. 80.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

What an interesting book is the Book of Mormon! Because of all American Antiquities it is the most valuable and marvelous specimen; because with all American Antiquities it is associated in the most important and interesting relations; because the most valuable discoveries in American Antiquity must appeal to the Book of Mormon for interpretation; and the registers of long lost events and generations inscribed upon the rocks and buried in the fossil remains of far distant ages, or scattered far and wide in the ruins of once mighty empires on the American continent, are so many WITNESSES constantly multiplying to confirm the truth of the history contained in the Book of Mormon.

As a SPECIMEN of American Antiquity, what is comparable in point of interest with this Book? Suppose that, in searching the tumuli that are scattered over this country, the silent, aged, mysterious remembrances of some populous race, once carrying on all the business of life, where now are only the wild forests of many centuries, a race of whom we ask so often who they were, whence they came and whither they went. Suppose that under one of those huge structures of earth which remain of their works a book was accidentally discovered, an alphabetic history of that race, and all undeniably composed many hundreds of years before any of the white nations now possessing this continent were here. What a wonder such a book would be! What intense interest would attach to such a relic! What price would not the learned be willing to give for it! Not all the fragments of Egyptian inscriptions—not all the unintelligible characters among the ruins of the tower of Babel—not all the remains from the bowels of the earth on the eastern continent telling of national convulsions, the overthrow of mighty and renowned cities, and the final downfall of empires and ancient kingdoms, could be compared in value to such a book of ancient American origin, a detailed history of a nation otherwise unheard of. But much more than this is the Book of Mormon. It points us to the people who, the time when, and places where certain notable events transpired in Central and Northern America, (the book being published in Palmyra, Ontario county, State of New York, in the spring season of 1830,) detailing to us a minute account of things that anciently transpired with the ancient inhabitants of Central America, as since confirmed by their developments as recorded by Messrs. Stephens and Catherwood, Antiquarians, in Central America, as published in the city of New York, 1841, '43. The truth of the history of the Book of Mormon is also confirmed in almost innumerable instances by Mr. Josiah Priest's history of the Antiquities of North America, as published in Albany, N. Y., 1833.

A book entitled "An Inquiry into the Origin of the Antiquities of America, by John Delafield," published in Cincinnati, Ohio, 1839, is an overwhelming confirmation of the truth of the Book of Mormon, in such minute and numerous important particulars, that if any person (after being made acquainted with the corroborating facts as found in the Book of Mormon and the authorities quoted above) should deny the truth and divinity of the Book of Mormon they would be considered as unsound by all reasonable, logical and philosophical minds.

To all the saints of God, the honest in heart; to all lovers of confirmed truth; to all that are looking for the ushering in of the latter day glory and the rest of the people of God, so much spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world begun; to all that are looking for the return of Israel from the "north country," and the Jews from the four corners of the earth to the land of Canaan, given to their fathers "for an everlasting possession;" to all that wish the amelioration of the condition of the house of Israel, the descendants of Joseph, (the son of Jacob,) in the west; in fine, we call upon the rich and the philanthropists of all grades in life to step forward with your wealth and your mites to assist the subscriber in laying before the reading world a book that will be entitled the COLLATERAL and POSITIVE EVIDENCES of the truth and divinity of the BOOK OF MORMON. The nature of the work is such that it can be published in two volumes. The first will contain illustrative pictorial plates, the engraving of which will cost two hundred dollars and perhaps a trifle more, which will swell the aggregate cost of publication to range from 75 cents to $1,00 per single copy. The important inquiry now is, who among the thousands that have subscribed to the faith of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, that have the means, be it little or much, are willing to make an investment to assist me in this all important work? I am well persuaded that should I succeed in publishing the proposed work it will do more to convince the honest in heart of the truth of the claims of the faith of the Latter Day Saints than all the elders can do without it. Can I but succeed in obtaining means to publish the first volume, I shall stand on a sure basis for publishing the second, which will cost more than twice as much; it will embrace more than three times as many engraved plates.

If this notice should reach the eye of any person or persons that should feel desirous to be secured for their money until the work is done, to such I will say, I will make any arrangement with them that is practicable with me for their security that is rational, honorable and fair. All my brethren and friends who have either personally or historically acquainted themselves with the history of my career in the gospel ministry for twelve years past, know well that I have devoted wholly, solely and totally all my time and means to that purpose and none other, so that I possess no means whatever to defray present incidental expenses by way of postage on communications. Therefore should this notice wake up the attention of any on the subject of assisting me in publishing the proposed work so much that they would wish to correspond with me on the subject, they must expect to bear the expense of such correspondence.

The work of which I have spoken is of such vast importance to me there is no one thing that I can do for my fellow men that I more desire to do, before I go hence or depart to be with Christ, that to leave as a legacy to the world evidence indisputable (as such a work will be) of the truth and divinity of the Book of Mormon. In the course of my ministry I have met with thousands who could freely subscribe to the theory of my faith except the Book of Mormon, or rather the identity of the book as being the record of the law of God written to Ephraim as called for by the Bible or Jewish prophets, for the commencement of the literal gathering, the temporal and spiritual salvation of all the scattered branches of the progeny of the sons of Jacob. To all such as are or may be rationally convinced of the fact that such a book as the Book of Mormon professes to be is called for by the Jewish prophets, the work which I propose to publish is designed to show the indisputable evidence of the Book of Mormon as being that book, by comparing its historical matter relative to things of antiquity, which are found on the face of the book, and corroborated by those authors which are quoted above. I shall seek principally to confine myself to such items as have been developed since the Book of Mormon was published.

The propriety of such a work as I design to bring forth, will appear on the face of the following considerations: I have in the course of my ministry sought diligently to obtain and carefully investigate several authors, viz.: Howe of Painsville, Ohio, Kidder of New York, Turner of Springfield, Ill., who have written books at some considerable length against the claims of the Book of Mormon. I have read pamphlet authors too numerous to mention, all of the same character. All of which authors of books and pamphlets have brought down upon themselves the indignation of all just men, in the manner they have treated upon the Book of Mormon, by quoting sentences from it detaching them from their connection at both ends so as to make them appear absurd, ridiculous and contemptible to those readers who were not familiar with the Book of Mormon, or perhaps never saw it. Most of the authors of books and pamphlets who have written against the Book of Mormon have in some shape or other pretended to give some credit to the divinity of the Bible, and no doubt would in turn, and perhaps have, deprecated much the manner in which Thomas Paine, B. D. White and numerous other skeptical writers have treated the Holy Bible. I have as diligently sought to investigate those who have written against the Bible as I have those that have written against the Book of Mormon. Relative to the two classes of writers I must say, in strict justice to my fellow men, I must give the laurel to those who have written against the Bible as having displayed more common sense justice, more reason, sounder logic and philosophy in ten pages reading than all that has been written against the Book of Mormon. Those who have written against the Book of Mormon seem to have labored under an idea that there were none but themselves that ever read the book, consequently their falsehoods could never be exposed, or the infamy they intended to heap upon the Book of Mormon would never recoil on their own heads.

What should we know of the history of ancient America and its nations from the beginning of the world until the day of Christopher Columbus, if all that has been derived exclusively from the Book of Mormon were obliterated from all memories and all books?—Where should we go for knowledge of that immense extent of time which has given birth to such astonishing wonders as are now and have been for some fifty years past developing themselves to the observing eye of the traveler, the historian and efficient antiquarian? As geographers thrust into the extremities of their maps those countries that are unknown to them, remarking at the same time that "all beyond is hills of sand and haunts of wild beasts, frozen seas, marshes and mountains that are inaccessible to human courage or industry," so it is to the traveler, the historian and antiquarian relative to the history of America. When he traces the history of America back to the days of Columbus, behind that period all would be prodigy and fiction, a region for poets and fabulists to speculate upon, wrapt in clouds and unworthy of belief; to which we have no clue of certainty but by the Book of Mormon, and even that loses its force with many simply because it is presented to us by the special providence of God, and not by mere accident.

As we now wander among the mysterious remains of the race which possessed all this land, and pausing beneath some lofty mound crested with sturdy oaks, which have stood for centuries and are now nourished with the decayed materials of a former generation, or measuring the exact angles and regular outlines of some vast system of warlike defense, we are deeply impressed with the evidence that we are constantly walking over the graves of an immense population, and pained with a sense of utter darkness as to every thing connected with them, except that they bequeathed to posterity those existing and confounding traces of their existence, and the vail would still remain upon our minds were we not in possession of the Book of Mormon.

We should have the vast heaps of tumuli which are scattered over the wide extended and fertile "fields of the woods," (the prairies of North America,) the frightful heaps of desolations that are to be seen on the ruined tombs and temples of "Palanqua," "Copan," "Uxmal," and "forty" more "cities" of Yucatan, all of ancient origin, sculptured with characters which no Champolian as yet has been able to decypher. We have the gigantic remains of the distant antiquities of South America, all presenting themselves to heighten our wonder and astonishment, but the Book of Mormon has rolled back the vail, the mystery is fled and satisfaction takes the place of wonder and surprise. Exceedingly insignificant as are all the resources for the earliest history of ancient America independently of the Book of Mormon, yet they may be of great consequence in connection with it. They may add no facts to what it contains, but they may confirm it.

One discovery of the antiquarian or the geologist perfectly authenticated, accurately interpreted, certainly speaking the truth, certainly corroborating the history contained in the Book of Mormon, what an evidence of its inspiration! Then how singularly has the Book of Mormon exposed itself along the whole line to attack; what an immense frontier has it had to defend; what a chain of posts in the wilderness to protect. Relating minutely the most important events that has transpired from the confounding of the languages at the tower of Babel down to four hundred and twenty years into the christian era, telling of events such as traditions and inscriptions and monuments and strata of the earth, if they speak of any thing, can hardly avoid recording in some shape or other. Thus the Book of Mormon is inviting investigation, challenging attack along the whole line of its details. What book in such circumstances, and from so distant an age, could stand such a trial were it not given by direct inspiration?

We are thrice happy to say that every search into the traditions of the American Indians, every interpretation of inscriptions, every trace of the Indian nations, every remnant of their ancient works, every development of the geology of the earth thus far has confirmed the truth of the Book of Mormon. Assaults have been made, fears excited, but when the smoke of the artillery had blown off truth has always appeared, as ever, resting her right hand on the Book of Mormon, so that even now, after a trial of eighteen years since the first copy was published, the people of God, viz., the Latter Day Saints, may exclaim in triumph: Walk about the dilapidated walls of the ancient cities of the Jaradites, Nephites and Lamanites, God has given us their true history and will establish it forever.

For my part I have no fear that any future discoveries in the developments of the antiquities of America will really militate against leave as a legacy to the world evidence indisputable (as such a work will be) of the truth and divinity of the Book of Mormon. In the course of my ministry I have met with thousands who could freely subscribe to the theory of my faith except the Book of Mormon, or rather the identity of the book as being the record of the law of God written to Ephraim as called for by the Bible or Jewish prophets, for the commencement of the literal gathering, the temporal and spiritual salvation of all the scattered branches of the progeny of the sons of Jacob. To all such as are or may be rationally convinced of the fact that such a book as the Book of Mormon professes to be is called for by the Jewish prophets, the work which I propose to publish is designed to show the indisputable evidence of the Book of Mormon as being that book, by comparing its historical matter relative to things of antiquity, which are found on the face of the book, and corroborated by those authors which are quoted above. I shall seek principally to confine myself to such items as have been developed since the Book of Mormon was published.

The propriety of such a work as I design to bring forth, will appear on the face of the following considerations: I have in the course of my ministry sought diligently to obtain and carefully investigate several authors, viz.: Howe of Painsville, Ohio, Kidder of New York, Turner of Springfield, Ill., who have written books at some considerable length against the claims of the Book of Mormon. I have read pamphlet authors too numerous to mention, all of the same character. All of which authors of books and pamphlets have brought down upon themselves the indignation of all just men, in the manner they have treated upon the Book of Mormon, by quoting sentences from it detaching them from their connection at both ends so as to make them appear absurd, ridiculous and contemptible to those readers who were not familiar with [illegible] of Mormon, or perhaps never saw it. Most of the authors of books and pamphlets who have written against the Book of Mormon have in some shape or other pretended to give some credit to the divinity of the Bible, and no doubt would in turn, and perhaps have, deprecated much the manner in which Thomas Paine, B. D. White and numerous other skeptical writers have treated the Holy Bible. I have as diligently sought to investigate those who have written against the Bible as I have those that have written against the Book of Mormon. Relative to the two classes of writers I must say, in strict justice to my fellow men, I must give the laurel to those who have written against the Bible as having displayed more common sense justice, more reason, sounder logic and philosophy in ten pages reading than all that has been written against the Book of Mormon. Those who have written against the Book of Mormon seem to have labored under an idea that there were none but themselves that ever read the book, consequently their falsehoods could never be exposed, or the infamy they intended to heap upon the Book of Mormon would never recoil on their own heads.

What should we know of the history of ancient America and its nations from the beginning of the world until the day of Christopher Columbus, if all that has been derived exclusively from the Book of Mormon were obliterated from all memories and all books?—Where should we go for knowledge of that immense extent of time which has given birth to such astonishing wonders as are now and have been for some fifty years past developing themselves to the observing eye of the traveler, the historian and efficient antiquarian? As geographers thrust into the extremities of their maps those countries that are unknown to them, remarking at the same time that "all beyond is hills of sand and haunts of wild beasts, frozen seas, marshes and mountains that are inaccessible to human courage or industry," so it is to the traveler, the historian and antiquarian, relative to the history of America. When he traces the history of America back to the days of Columbus, behind that period all would be prodigy and fiction, a region for poets and fabulists to speculate upon, wrapt in clouds and unworthy of belief; to which we have no clue of certainty but by the Book of Mormon, and even that loses its force with many simply because it is presented to us by the special providence of God, and not by mere accident.

As we now wander among the mysterious remains of the race which possessed all this land, and pausing beneath some lofty mound crested with sturdy oaks, which have stood for centuries and are now nourished with the decayed materials of a former generation, or measuring the exact angles and regular outlines of some vast system of warlike defense, we are deeply impressed with the evidence that we are constantly walking over the graves of an immense population, and pained with a sense of utter darkness as to every thing connected with them, except that they bequeathed to posterity those existing and confounding traces of their existence, and the vail would still remain upon our minds were we not in possession of the Book of Mormon.

We should have the vast heaps of tumuli which are scattered over the wide extended and fertile "fields of the woods," (the prairies of North America,) the frightful heaps of desolations that are to be seen on the ruined tombs and temples of "Palanqua," "Copan," "Uxmal," and "forty" more "cities" of Yucatan, all of ancient origin, sculptured with characters which no Champolian as yet has been able to decypher. We have the gigantic remains of the distant antiquities of South America, all presenting themselves to heighten our wonder and astonishment, but the Book of Mormon has rolled back the vail, the mystery is fled and satisfaction takes the place of wonder and surprise. Exceedingly insignificant as are all the resources for the earliest history of ancient America independently of the Book of Mormon, yet they may be of great consequence in connection with it. They may add no facts to what it contains, but they may confirm it.

One discovery of the antiquarian or the geologist perfectly authenticated, accurately interpreted, certainly speaking the truth, certainly corroborating the history contained in the Book of Mormon, what an evidence of its inspiration! Then how singularly has the Book of Mormon exposed itself along the whole line to attack; what an immense frontier has it had to defend; what a chain of posts in the wilderness to protect. Relating minutely the most important events that has transpired from the confounding of the languages at the tower of Babel down to four hundred and twenty years into the christian era, telling of events such as traditions and inscriptions and monuments and strata of the earth, if they speak of any thing, can hardly avoid recording in some shape or other. Thus the Book of Mormon is inviting investigation, challenging attack along the whole line of its details. What book in such circumstances, and from so distant an age, could stand such a trial were it not given by direct inspiration?

We are thrice happy to say that every search into the traditions of the American Indians, every interpretation of inscriptions, every trace of the Indian nations, every remnant of their ancient works, every development of the geology of the earth thus far has confirmed the truth of the Book of Mormon. Assaults have been made, fears excited, but when the smoke of the artillery had blown off truth has always appeared, as ever, resting her right hand on the Book of Mormon, so that even now, after a trial of eighteen years since the first copy was published, the people of God, viz., the Latter Day Saints, may exclaim in triumph: Walk about the dilapidated walls of the ancient cities of the Jaradites, Nephites and Lamanites, God has given us their true history and will establish it forever.

For my part I have no fear that any future discoveries in the developments of the antiquities of America will really militate against the disclosures of the Book of Mormon. The book is so far sustained by collateral testimony. It puts the matter beyond the power of human imagination, with all the advantages of the literature of the nineteenth century, to account for the fact how or by what means that a certain amount or kind of matter it contains crept on to its pages in the spring season of A. D. 1830, and so minutely corroborated by the developments of the antiquities of Chiapas and Yucatan as published in New York in 1841 by Stephens and Catherwood. The whole book of Ether, as contained in the Book of Mormon, is corroborated by "the curious hieroglyphic map," some eighteen feet long, as published by John Delafield in Cincinnati, 1839. The map begins with a hieroglyphic representing the tower of Babel, where the book of Ether begins its account of the Jaradites, and ends with the hieroglyphic representation of two men with sword in hand, where the Book of Ether terminates the account of the Jaradites, with the account of the combat between Coriantumr and Shiz, the two last commanding generals of that nation.

I first obtained a copy of Mr. Delafield's work in Boston, Mass., 1843. I gave it a critical perusal and knew not at first where to apply this map as corroborating any thing contained in the book, but my mind was strongly impressed with the idea that if the map could be truly interpreted it would divulge something directly either for or against the Book of Mormon. So there I was left entirely in suspense on the subject, having not the advantages of a Champolian. I strove to quiet my mind, believing that the day would come when that map would be understood in its true sense; but still my anxiety was on tip toe to know or understand the general outlines of its true meaning, whether it would militate for or against the Book of Mormon; consequently I gave it a very frequent review. Not many days passed until I was sitting on a sofa in the city of Boston taking a review of the "curious map," my eyes became heavy with sleep; I reclined my length on the sofa and, as I suppose without doubt, fell into a sleep, and dreamed I was reviewing the map, still anxious to know where to apply it; of a sudden there appeared the face of a personage before me, apparently far advanced in years, and says, "Read and compare with the Book of Ether," and then disappeared; and I suddenly awoke and did accordingly, and gave it a critical comparing with the book I assure you, and to my great satisfaction I find that the collateral corroboration of the map with the history of the Jaradites as found in the book of Ether of the Book of Mormon that one is the other in point of history.

Accordingly I detached the map from the book to which it was connected and fastened it to a piece of white muslin cloth and suspended it across the Boylston Hall of Boston,& commenced lecturing for the first time to show the collateral corroboration of the map with the history of the Jaradites contained in the book of Ether of the Book of Mormon, to an assemblage of more than a thousand people. I then proceeded to the city of Washington, D. C., and made the same exhibition, but not to so numerous a congregation, my means being too limited to hire a hall of sufficient attraction to suit the taste of that proud populace, but still there were some condescending enough to give me a hearing, and gave me the following certificates:—

TO THE PUBLIC.

Washington, March 12, 1844.

We, the undersigned, having had ample opportunities of forming an agreeable acquaintance with the Rev. John E. Page, now preaching in this city, take pleasure in stating, that we believe him to be a gentleman worthy of respect and public esteem; and, to say the least, can but recommend all to hear him before coming to any positive conclusions touching his merits, and claims to public attention.

In regard to his religious views, so peculiar in their character, we have but one remark to make, viz: That, as the age in which we live, has been one so wonderfully characterized by fallacy, sophism, logical artifice, deceitful arguments, and gross religious impositions, we can but expect from a community whose indignation has been so often excited against these repeated attempts at deception, a treatment alike severe, to the introduction of any modern Faith.—And however reasonable, in reality, it must expect to meet, at first, with inconsideration; and, however pure its doctrine, it must anticipate a cold and unwelcome reception, and endure the scorn, ridicule, and buffets of the world—until time shall permit its expounders to lower the popular emblem of error, and raise in its stead the standard of truth. But, whatever, may be the name of the sect or church, whose doctrines Mr. Page professes to preach and inculcate, or under what estimation they may have heretofore been held by a prejudiced and uninquiring community, so far as they bear, as their main characteristic, a literal and unqualified interpretation of Scripture, and followed by a strict belief in Biblical doctrine, and accompanied by such an explanation as the dictates of nature and reason teach an impartial mind to be correct, so far are we bound to coincide with them. We are vulnerable to truth—all sects and churches pretend to wield it as their weapon—but it matters not to us by what name they are recognized, we accept the wound from those who pierce the deepest.

In regard to the book, commonly termed "Mormon," we have now but little to say. In relation to its origin, &c., we are of opinion that it merits a fair, candid, and impartial examination; in relation to a portion of its contents we are compelled to make some further acknowledgments.

At a recent lecture, given by Mr. Page, we were struck with the extraordinary character of the evidence adduced to sustain the claims of the Book of Mormon. If we are to rely upon the veracity of men standing high in public estimation, and Government favor, Messrs. Delafield, Priest, Stephens and Catherwood, whose recent important discoveries of ancient antiquities of America, have astounded all, under whose supervision their statements in relation thereto have come, then must their evidence remove, in a great degree, the doubts at present existing in the public mind, in relation to the character of this book; the plates of which, if we are to rely upon the statements made, were found some seventeen years previous to the discoveries made by the gentlemen named above; the most important of which, were the fossil remains of ancient cities, found immured in the dense forests of the west, and the many bright specimens of human ingenuity, and ripe mechanical skill, found buried many feet beneath the trunks of towering oaks, proving beyond the possibility of a doubt, that the very land now known as the "wild western forests," have at some former period been densely populated by a wise and intelligent people—beautified by noble cities, ornamented with grand statuary, and towering monuments erected to the memory of their popular rulers. The book gives the exact location and character of these cities, while treating upon the extinct race that once inhabited and enlivened the crumbling walls that now barely mark the spot, and tell us of the "exceeding curious workmanship," which characterized the ingenuity of the people of that age, as found carved upon the blocks of fallen monuments, and broken statuary, that now moulder beneath the forest rubbish.

Need we say, that it was beyond the power of mortal being, or human understanding to have possessed any knowledge of the existence of these buried cities, at the time the book was written, or previous to the discoveries made by the above named gentleman, which were seventeen years after. Yet the statements of the book, and the discoveries made, have proved in no particular inconsistent with each other.

The question then arises, from whence did the Book of Mormon receive its information, 17 years before these discoveries, that these "people," "cities," "curious workmanship," "statuary," "monuments," &c., were all flourishing at some former period?

Without coming to any conclusion upon this important point, or the remarkable evidence alluded to above, we leave all who feel an anxiety to become acquainted with this book, to give it a proper examination and thorough investigation, and then draw their own conclusions from the evidence they can readily procure in relation thereto.

We are with respect, &c.,

FRANKLIN LITTLE, Clerk at the Globe Office.
JOS. S. POTTER, Printer.
F. EDMONSTON, Printer.

Having been favored with an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the Rev. John E. Page, listened to his conversation, sat under his ministry, and, in some degree, become familiar with the

the disclosures of the Book of Mormon. The book is so far sustained by collateral testimony. It puts the matter beyond the power of human imagination, with all the advantages of the literature of the nineteenth century, to account for the fact how or by what means that a certain amount or kind of matter it contains crept on to its pages in the spring season of A. D. 1830, and so minutely corroborated by the developments of the antiquities of Chiapas and Yucatan as published in New York in 1841 by Stephens and Catherwood. The whole book of Ether, as contained in the Book of Mormon, is corroborated by "the curious hieroglyphic map," some eighteen feet long, as published by John Delafield in Cincinnati, 1839. The map begins with a hieroglyphic representing the tower of Babel, where the book of Ether begins its account of the Jaradites, and ends with the hieroglyphic representation of two men with sword in hand, where the Book of Ether terminates the account of the Jaradites, with the account of the combat between Coriantumr and Shiz, the two last commanding generals of that nation.

I first obtained a copy of Mr. Delafield's work in Boston, Mass., 1843. I gave it a critical perusal and knew not at first where to apply this map as corroborating any thing contained in the book, but my mind was strongly impressed with the idea that if the map could be truly interpreted it would divulge something directly either for or against the Book of Mormon. So there I was left entirely in suspense on the subject, having not the advantages of a Champolian. I strove to quiet my mind, believing that the day would come when that map would be understood in its true sense; but still my anxiety was on tip toe to know or understand the general outlines of its true meaning, whether it would militate for or against the Book of Mormon; consequently I gave it a very frequent review. Not many days passed until I was sitting on a sofa in the city of Boston taking a review of the "curious map," my eyes became heavy with sleep; I reclined my length on the sofa and, as I suppose without doubt, fell into a sleep, and dreamed I was reviewing the map, still anxious to know where to apply it; of a sudden there appeared the face of a personage before me, apparently far advanced in years, and says, "Read and compare with the Book of Ether," and then disappeared; and I suddenly awoke and did accordingly, and gave it a critical comparing with the book I assure you, and to my great satisfaction I find that the collateral corroboration of the map with the history of the Jaradites as found in the book of Ether of the Book of Mormon that one is the other in point of history.

Accordingly I detached the map from the book to which it was connected and fastened it to a piece of white muslin cloth and suspended it across the Boylston Hall of Boston,& commenced lecturing for the first time to show the collateral corroboration of the map with the history of the Jaradites contained in the book of Ether of the Book of Mormon, to an assemblage of more than a thousand people. I then proceeded to the city of Washington, D. C., and made the same exhibition, but not to so numerous a congregation, my means being too limited to hire a hall of sufficient attraction to suit the taste of that proud populace, but still there were some condescending enough to give me a hearing, and gave me the following certificates:—

TO THE PUBLIC.

Washington, March 12, 1844.

We, the undersigned, having had ample opportunities of forming an agreeable acquaintance with the Rev. John E. Page, now preaching in this city, take pleasure in stating, that we believe him to be a gentleman worthy of respect and public esteem; and, to say the least, can but recommend all to hear him before coming to any positive conclusions touching his merits, and claims to public attention.

In regard to his religious views, so peculiar in their character, we have but one remark to make, viz: That, as the age in which we live, has been one so wonderfully characterized by fallacy, sophism, logical artifice, deceitful arguments, and gross religious impositions, we can but expect from a community whose indignation has been so often excited against these repeated attempts at deception, a treatment alike severe, to the introduction of any modern Faith.—And however reasonable, in reality, it must expect to meet, at first, with inconsideration; and, however pure its doctrine, it must anticipate a cold and unwelcome reception, and endure the scorn, ridicule, and buffets of the world—until time shall permit its expounders to lower the popular emblem of error, and raise in its stead the standard of truth. But, whatever, may be the name of the sect or church, whose doctrines Mr. Page professes to preach and inculcate, or under what estimation they may have heretofore been held by a prejudiced and uninquiring community, so far as they bear, as their main characteristic, a literal and unqualified interpretation of Scripture, and followed by a strict belief in Biblical doctrine, and accompanied by such an explanation as the dictates of nature and reason teach an impartial mind to be correct,so far are we bound to coincide with them. We are vulnerable to truth—all sects and churches pretend to wield it as their weapon—but it matters not to us by what name they are recognized, we accept the wound from those who pierce the deepest.

In regard to the book, commonly termed "Mormon," we have now but little to say. In relation to its origin, &c., we are of opinion that it merits a fair, candid, and impartial examination; in relation to a portion of its contents we are compelled to make some further acknowledgments.

At a recent lecture, given by Mr. Page, we were struck with the extraordinary character of the evidence adduced to sustain the claims of the Book of Mormon. If we are to rely upon the veracity of men standing high in public estimation, and Government favor, Messrs. Delafield, Priest, Stephens and Catherwood, whose recent important discoveries of ancient antiquities of America,have astounded all, under whose supervision their statements in relation thereto have come, then must their evidence remove, in a great degree, the doubts at present existing in the public mind, in relation to the character of this book; the plates of which, if we are to rely upon the statements made, were found some seventeen years previous to the discoveries made by the gentlemen named above; the most important of which, were the fossil remains of ancient cities, found immured in the dense forests of the west, and the many bright specimens of human ingenuity, and ripe mechanical skill, found buried many feet beneath the trunks of towering oaks, proving beyond the possibility of a doubt, that the very land now known as the "wild western forests," have at some former period been densely populated by a wise and intelligent people—beautified by noble cities, ornamented with grand statuary, and towering monuments erected to the memory of their popular rulers. The book gives the exact location and character of these cities, while treating upon the extinct race that once inhabited and enlivened the crumbling walls that now barely mark the spot, and tell us of the "exceeding curious workmanship," which characterized the ingenuity of the people of that age, as found carved upon the blocks of fallen monuments, and broken statuary, that now moulder beneath the forest rubbish.

Need we say, that it was beyond the power of mortal being, or human understanding to have possessed any knowledge of the existence of these buried cities, at the time the book was written, or previous to the discoveries made by the above named gentleman, which were seventeen years after. Yet the statements of the book, and the discoveries made, have proved in no particular inconsistent with each other.

The question then arises, from whence did the Book of Mormon receive its information, 17 years before these discoveries, that these "people," "cities," "curious workmanship," "statuary," "monuments," &c., were all flourishing at some former period?

Without coming to any conclusion upon this important point, or the remarkable evidence alluded to above, we leave all who feel an anxiety to become acquainted with this book, to give it a proper examination and thorough investigation, and then draw their own conclusions from the evidence they can readily procure in relation thereto.

We are with respect, &c.,

FRANKLIN LITTLE, Clerk at the Globe Office.
JOS. S. POTTER, Printer.
F. EDMONSTON, Printer.

Having been favored with an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the Rev. John E. Page, listened to his conversation, sat under his ministry, and, in some degree, become familiar with the peculiar doctrines of his sect, (peculiar as regards the Book of Mormon,) being satisfied of the correctness of his deportment, and the soundness of his religious views, (taking the Bible as the standard of faith,) and of his ability to explain, illustrate and elucidate, and carry conviction of the truths therein contained to the minds of his hearers, we cheerfully avail ourselves of the opportunity presented by this publication, to recommend him to the attention of all sincere and candid inquirers after truth; feeling convinced, that after a patient hearing, they will be both edified and profited. We the more cordially invite public attention to his discourses at this time, as they fully, conclusively and convincingly prove the statements and calculations of Mr. Miller, which have caused so much excitement, distress and misery throughout the country, to be false, fallacious and unfounded: that his (Miller's) arguments, professedly drawn from the Bible, are garbled extracts—isolated texts—which, taken in connection with the preceding and succeeding text, prove the very reverse of that which they are made to sustain by the application of Mr. Miller and his coadjutors. This he (Mr. Page) is able to do—and for this alone, he deserves the thanks and kind consideration of all who have the happiness and well being of their fellow citizens at heart. HEAR AND JUDGE.

CHARLES W. FENTON, Printer.
L. A. EDMONSTON.

Washington, D. C., March 7, 1844.

I am as well assured of the fact as I am of my personal existence that it is as far from the reach of the cunning device of man or men to have conjured up that kind of matter as is presented on the face of the Book of Mormon in 1830, and corroborated by the developments made since, to confirm its truth, as it is for men to clinch the horns of the moon and tear it from its orbit, or to blow out the light of the sun, or change the revolution of the earth on its axis, except they are aided by the supreme power of the divine mind who created them. We remember how in by gone ages self-made ecclesiastics set themselves against the true servants of God, who were presenting to the world the revealed wonders of the heavens, & calling on all men of every grade in life to investigate and hold fast that which proved to be good, yet the learned prodigies of the leading class, apprehensive that the new theories were subversive of their peculiar learned notions of God and his word, set themselves to pre-judge every new thing or theory as having derived itself from some erroneous source, Jesus Christ and his servants, the apostles, not excepted, as being pre-judged and cast out of men and denounced as heretics, and inhumanly persecuted, to stop the spread of their new yet pure doctrine. But truth triumphed; bigotry and ignorance could not long prevail to the hiding from the world the harmonious walkings forth of the rays of light emanating from the divine mind. So also in this case the power of that same fountain of intelligence which assisted in the translation of the Book of Mormon, which has laid open in a great degree the past wonders that have transpired on the American continent, has proved itself almighty and efficient to still reveal secrets far beyond the learned philosophers gaze.

And thus I am persuaded shall it always be; science may scale new heights and explore new depths in search of American antiquities, and may yet add ten thousands of additional testimonies to confirm the truths of the Book of Mormon, but she shall bring nothing back absolutely contradictory. Sectarian infidels may watch their progress with eagerness, exulting in the thought that they are furnishing material with which the Book of Mormon may be successfully assailed, but the champions of revelation may confidently attend it (the Book of Mormon) in its onward march, assured that they will find nothing which will successfully contradict it, but many things which will confirm the word, which they know to be divine.

Times will doubtless come again and again when, in consequence of imperfect investigations, hasty theories and rash conclusions, the calm surface of a settled belief in the divinity of the Book of Mormon may in some minds be troubled, as has already occurred with some, and the progress of this cause be threatened with storm and wreck, but the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob ("the memorial by which he should be known among all nations") is in the ship and in his time will rebuke the winds and the waves and the little faith of his people, and the light of truth shall shine out as when "the Lord looked unto the host of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled their host and took off their chariot wheels." The Book of Mormon asks nothing but mature accurate investigation of all departments of knowledge connected with its statements, whether in the traditions of the American Indians, the developments of American antiquities, or the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments.

JOHN E. PAGE, Elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

P. S. Who among all the readers of the above will correspond with me upon the conditions proposed and step forward with their means to assist in this laudable enterprise, and excuse me from making them a visit in person? J. E. P.

Voree, July 15th, 1848.

New Bedford, Mass., June 14th, 1848.

To PRESIDENT JAMES J. STRANG:—

DEAR BROTHER,—These lines are sent by brother Ricketson, who has come to visit you. You may depend upon my sending to you the one-tenth of all my collectable earnings as fast as they shall have been collected. I have been laboring with all my might to procure means to remove my family to Voree, but am in no better readiness now than when I saw you in Boston. I have now determined to put shoulder to the wheel and help build the house of the Lord, according to my ability, as the Lord requires; for I feel bound to keep the commandments of the Lord here as strictly as though I was at a stake of Zion. From your brother striving to obtain that rest that remains for the people of God, JESSE W. NICHOLS.

CUT AND POLISHED STONE,

Of superior quality and finish, and of various sorts, constantly on hand and for sale at the Voree quarry. Caps, Sills, Tombstones, Doorsteps, Imposing stones, &c., made to order on short notice.

Voree, April 27th, 1848.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848, 13cw.

peculiar doctrines of his sect, (peculiar as regards the Book of Mormon,) being satisfied of the correctness of his deportment, and the soundness of his religious views, (taking the Bible as the standard of faith,) and of his ability to explain, illustrate and elucidate, and carry conviction of the truths therein contained to the minds of his hearers, we cheerfully avail ourselves of the opportunity presented by this publication, to recommend him to the attention of all sincere and candid inquirers after truth; feeling convinced, that after a patient hearing, they will be both edified and profited. We the more cordially invite public attention to his discourses at this time, as they fully, conclusively and convincingly prove the statements and calculations of Mr. Miller, which have caused so much excitement, distress and misery throughout the country, to be false, fallacious and unfounded: that his (Miller's) arguments, professedly drawn from the Bible, are garbled extracts—isolated texts—which, taken in connection with the preceding and succeeding text, prove the very reverse of that which they are made to sustain by the application of Mr. Miller and his coadjutors. This he (Mr. Page) is able to do—and for this alone, he deserves the thanks and kind consideration of all who have the happiness and well being of their fellow citizens at heart. HEAR AND JUDGE.

CHARLES W. FENTON, Printer.
L. A. EDMONSTON.

Washington, D. C., March 7, 1844.

I am as well assured of the fact as I am of my personal existence that it is as far from the reach of the cunning device of man or men to have conjured up that kind of matter as is presented on the face of the Book of Mormon in 1830, and corroborated by the developments made since, to confirm its truth, as it is for men to clinch the horns of the moon and tear it from its orbit, or to blow out the light of the sun, or change the revolution of the earth on its axis, except they are aided by the supreme power of the divine mind who created them. We remember how in by gone ages self-made ecclesiastics set themselves against the true servants of God, who were presenting to the world the revealed wonders of the heavens, & calling on all men of every grade in life to investigate and hold fast that which proved to be good, yet the learned prodigies of the leading class, apprehensive that the new theories were subversive of their peculiar learned notions of God and his word, set themselves to pre-judge every new thing or theory as having derived itself from some erroneous source, Jesus Christ and his servants, the apostles, not excepted, as being pre-judged and cast out of men and denounced as heretics, and inhumanly persecuted, to stop the spread of their new yet pure doctrine. But truth triumphed; bigotry and ignorance could not long prevail to the hiding from the world the harmonious walkings forth of the rays of light emanating from the divine mind. So also in this case the power of that same fountain of intelligence which assisted in the translation of the Book of Mormon, which has laid open in a great degree the past wonders that have transpired on the American continent, has proved itself almighty and efficient to still reveal secrets far beyond the learned philosophers gaze.

And thus I am persuaded shall it always be; science may scale new heights and explore new depths in search of American antiquities, and may yet add ten thousands of additional testimonies to confirm the truths of the Book of Mormon, but she shall bring nothing back absolutely contradictory. Sectarian infidels may watch their progress with eagerness, exulting in the thought that they are furnishing material with which the Book of Mormon may be successfully assailed, but the champions of revelation may confidently attend it (the Book of Mormon) in its onward march, assured that they will find nothing which will successfully contradict it, but many things which will confirm the word, which they know to be divine.

Times will doubtless come again and again when, in consequence of imperfect investigations, hasty theories and rash conclusions, the calm surface of a settled belief in the divinity of the Book of Mormon may in some minds be troubled, as has already occurred with some, and the progress of this cause be threatened with storm and wreck, but the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob ("the memorial by which he should be known among all nations") is in the ship and in his time will rebuke the winds and the waves and the little faith of his people, and the light of truth shall shine out as when "the Lord looked unto the host of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled their host and took off their chariot wheels." The Book of Mormon asks nothing but mature accurate investigation of all departments of knowledge connected with its statements, whether in the traditions of the American Indians, the developments of American antiquities, or the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments.

JOHN E. PAGE, Elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

P. S. Who among all the readers of the above will correspond with me upon the conditions proposed and step forward with their means to assist in this laudable enterprise, and excuse me from making them a visit in person? J. E. P.

Voree, July 15th, 1848.

New Bedford, Mass., June 14th, 1848.

TO PRESIDENT JAMES J. STRANG:—

DEAR BROTHER,—These lines are sent by brother Ricketson, who has come to visit you. You may depend upon my sending to you the one-tenth of all my collectable earnings as fast as they shall have been collected. I have been laboring with all my might to procure means to remove my family to Voree, but am in no better readiness now than when I saw you in Boston. I have now determined to put shoulder to the wheel and help build the house of the Lord, according to my ability, as the Lord requires; for I feel bound to keep the commandments of the Lord here as strictly as though I was at a stake of Zion. From your brother striving to obtain that rest that remains for the people of God, JESSE W. NICHOLS.

CUT AND POLISHED STONE,

Of superior quality and finish, and of various sorts, constantly on hand and for sale at the Voree quarry. Caps, Sills, Tombstones, Doorsteps, Imposing stones, &c., made to order on short notice.

Voree, April 27th, 1848.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 17.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. JULY 13, 1848. [WHOLE No. 81.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

On the Big Bend of Fox River, Kane Co., Ill., June 15th, 1848.

BY JAMES BLAKESLEE.

To the Saints of the last days, who have been scattered abroad since the death of the prophet Joseph, by reason of the many persecutions which have been heaped upon you, and partly by reason of those who have set themselves up as teachers and interpreters of the law and commandments of God:—

BELOVED BRETHREN,—I have great reason to fear that you have lost sight of one of the greatest principles in the revealed religion of heaven to man, which is this: That God never had a church on the earth which he acknowledged as his church without giving to that church a legal interpreter of the law and commandments of God for the salvation of that people, and that the legal interpreter of the law and commandments of God given for the salvation of the church is the Prophet, Seer, Revelator and Translator to the church, the First President of the whole church. Consequently without a prophet at the head of the church as a legal interpreter of the law and commandments of God there is no salvation, for without a prophet to act in the above capacity there can be no final decision in spiritual matters which might arise in the church; and the consequence would be the church would soon be divided into different factions and parties, understanding the law and commandments differently, and we should soon have a Babylon among ourselves, and should be no better off than the professed religious world of the present age.

And now I will try to sustain the position which I have taken in as few words as possible, and try to make the subject plain to your understanding; and to begin we will try to ascertain the order of God as we find it in the Old Testament. By a prophet the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt, and by a prophet was he preserved.—Hosea xii. 13. Preserved from what? I answer, from an erroneous (or wrong) interpretation of the law and commandments of God given for the salvation of that people. Who did the Lord acknowledge as the legal interpreter of his law and commandments in the days of Moses? I answer again, that prophet Moses, who had brought Israel out of Egypt. You will remember that in the days of Moses there was one court in the church where a final decision was had in all matters of controversy that might arise in the church. That court was the supreme or highest court in the church, where the prophet himself presided, and his decision was an end of controversy in all matters of dispute in the church which might arise in consequence of a difference of opinion, or of understanding, in matters of law and commandments for the church. For instance, just turn to Ex. xviii. and there you will find an account of the order established and carried out among the children of Israel, where we have an account of several different courts being established, and where the small matters or cases were disposed of; and if either of the parties were disposed to do so they could carry their case up to the supreme court before Moses, the supreme judge, where, if it was a great or hard matter to dispose of, it was decided by revelation, by a thus saith the Lord; and which was an end of all controversy, Moses being the Lord's seer and prophet.

Please turn and read the whole chapter for yourselves, and if you want an example where wicked men rebelled against that order, and who thought Moses and Aaron took too much honor upon themselves, just turn to Num. xvi. and you will find an account of Korah and his band, a formidable company indeed, some 250 princes, men of renown, who gathered themselves against Moses and Aaron, and said to them, (Moses and Aaron,) you take too much honor upon you, seeing the congregation are holy, even every one of them; as much as to say the people of the Lord are capable of understanding his law and commandments themselves without so much teaching by you, Moses and Aaron, seeing they are all holy, &c. But Moses answered and said, to-morrow you shall see who is holy and who the Lord has chosen. And what was the result? Why, Korah and his band of 250 men of renown were destroyed by fire, and their wives and children and their adherents were swallowed up in the earth, and many more (several thousand) who had held to the doctrine of Korah were destroyed by the plague.

Here we have a striking example of the dealings of God with the wicked who would not abide the order which God had established for the salvation of his people in the days of Moses. Again I would ask, what the Lord established a school of the prophets for in days of old? I answer, that all who were authorized to teach the law and commandments of God might be perfectly instructed in the sense of the law and commandments, and being thus instructed, and having a knowledge of the law and commandments, they could see eye to eye in all things; that they were authorized to teach in their several callings and spheres in which they were called to act, that they might give the true sense or true interpretation, and make the people understand them in their true sense. And now for an example of reading of the law and making the people understand it. When the Jews returned from Babylon to Jerusalem we have an account in Neh. viii. I will only quote the 8th verse, as follows: So they read in the book, in the law of God, distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them (the people) to understand the reading.—Why, the people did not think of interpreting the law and commandments themselves in those days, they knew that the Lord had placed an authorized priesthood in his church for that purpose. It was in consequence of men not having authority in days of old who took upon themselves the honor of teaching and expounding the law and commandments of God, and who did not give the true sense of the law that there was so many divisions and so much trouble in the church in every age of the world. It was that which finally broke up and scattered Israel in days of old. For instance, turn and read Malachi ii. where the Lord by his prophet complains of those who do not teach the law in truth and righteousness. Verse 7.—The priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they (the people) should seek the law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts. Who is the messenger of the Lord of hosts? I answer, the man who is authorized of God to teach his law and commandments and give the true sense. Well, but suppose we have no such messenger of the Lord of hosts. Well, then, we have no man who is authorized of God to teach and enforce the observance of the law and commandments of the Lord, and consequently the law and commandments are of little or no benefit to us; for without the authority to teach them and give the sense they can be of no use to us whatever, and consequently no salvation.

You will not pretend to say that salvation can be had among the Jews at the present time, while they are without a prophet to lead them and to teach them the law and commandments of their God, and they in a scattered condition to the four winds of heaven, with-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 17.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JULY 13, 1848. [WHOLE No. 81.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

On the Big Bend of Fox River, Kane Co., Ill., June 15th, 1848.

BY JAMES BLAKESLEE.

To the Saints of the last days, who have been scattered abroad since the death of the prophet Joseph, by reason of the many persecutions which have been heaped upon you, and partly by reason of those who have set themselves up as teachers and interpreters of the law and commandments of God:—

BELOVED BRETHREN,—I have great reason to fear that you have lost sight of one of the greatest principles in the revealed religion of heaven to man, which is this: That God never had a church on the earth which he acknowledged as his church without giving to that church a legal interpreter of the law and commandments of God for the salvation of that people, and that the legal interpreter of the law and commandments of God given for the salvation of the church is the Prophet, Seer, Revelator and Translator to the church, the First President of the whole church. Consequently without a prophet at the head of the church as a legal interpreter of the law and commandments of God there is no salvation, for without a prophet to act in the above capacity there can be no final decision in spiritual matters which might arise in the church; and the consequence would be the church would soon be divided into different factions and parties, understanding the law and commandments differently, and we should soon have a Babylon among ourselves, and should be no better off than the professed religious world of the present age.

And now I will try to sustain the position which I have taken in as few words as possible, and try to make the subject plain to your understanding; and to begin we will try to ascertain the order of God as we find it in the Old Testament. By a prophet the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt, and by a prophet was he preserved.—Hosea xii. 13. Preserved from what? I answer, from an erroneous (or wrong) interpretation of the law and commandments of God given for the salvation of that people. Who did the Lord acknowledge as the legal interpreter of his law and commandments in the days of Moses? I answer again, that prophet Moses, who had brought Israel out of Egypt. You will remember that in the days of Moses there was one court in the church where a final decision was had in all matters of controversy that might arise in the church. That court was the supreme or highest court in the church, where the prophet himself presided, and his decision was an end of controversy in all matters of dispute in the church which might arise in consequence of a difference of opinion, or of understanding, in matters of law and commandments for the church. For instance, just turn to Ex. xviii. and there you will find an account of the order established and carried out among the children of Israel, where we have an account of several different courts being established, and where the small matters or cases were disposed of; and if either of the parties were disposed to do so they could carry their case up to the supreme court before Moses, the supreme judge, where, if it was a great or hard matter to dispose of, it was decided by revelation, by a thus saith the Lord; and which was an end of all controversy, Moses being the Lord's seer and prophet.

Please turn and read the whole chapter for yourselves, and if you want an example where wicked men rebelled against that order, and who thought Moses and Aaron took too much honor upon themselves, just turn to Num. xvi. and you will find an account of Korah and his band, a formidable company indeed, some 250 princes, men of renown, who gathered themselves against Moses and Aaron, and said to them, (Moses and Aaron,) you take too much honor upon you, seeing the congregation are holy, even every one of them; as much as to say the people of the Lord are capable of understanding his law and commandments themselves without so much teaching by you, Moses and Aaron, seeing they are all holy, &c. But Moses answered and said, to-morrow you shall see who is holy and who the Lord has chosen. And what was the result? Why, Korah and his band of 250 men of renown were destroyed by fire, and their wives and children and their adherents were swallowed up in the earth, and many more (several thousand) who had held to the doctrine of Korah were destroyed by the plague.

Here we have a striking example of the dealings of God with the wicked who would not abide the order which God had established for the salvation of his people in the days of Moses. Again I would ask, what the Lord established a school of the prophets for in days of old? I answer, that all who were authorized to teach the law and commandments of God might be perfectly instructed in the sense of the law and commandments, and being thus instructed, and having a knowledge of the law and commandments, they could see eye to eye in all things; that they were authorized to teach in their several callings and spheres in which they were called to act, that they might give the true sense or true interpretation, and make the people understand them in their true sense. And now for an example of reading of the law and making the people understand it. When the Jews returned from Babylon to Jerusalem we have an account in Neh. viii. I will only quote the 8th verse, as follows: So they read in the book, in the law of God, distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them (the people) to understand the reading.—Why, the people did not think of interpreting the law and commandments themselves in those days, they knew that the Lord had placed an authorized priesthood in his church for that purpose. It was in consequence of men not having authority in days of old who took upon themselves the honor of teaching and expounding the law and commandments of God, and who did not give the true sense of the law that there was so many divisions and so much trouble in the church in every age of the world. It was that which finally broke up and scattered Israel in days of old. For instance, turn and read Malachi ii. where the Lord by his prophet complains of those who do not teach the law in truth and righteousness. Verse 7.—The priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they (the people) should seek the law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts. Who is the messenger of the Lord of hosts? I answer, the man who is authorized of God to teach his law and commandments and give the true sense. Well, but suppose we have no such messenger of the Lord of hosts. Well, then, we have no man who is authorized of God to teach and enforce the observance of the law and commandments of the Lord, and consequently the law and commandments are of little or no benefit to us; for without the authority to teach them and give the sense they can be of no use to us whatever, and consequently no salvation.

You will not pretend to say that salvation can be had among the Jews at the present time, while they are without a prophet to lead them and to teach them the law and commandments of their God, and they in a scattered condition to the four winds of heaven, without a prophet or shepherd to say to them in the name of the Lord come home to the land of your fathers, and rebuild your city and temple. O, no, say you. Well, then, you have acknowledged yourself that without a prophet there is no salvation. When I say there is no salvation without a prophet I mean to say that to all such as have passed the line of accountability there is no salvation without a prophet. Well, then, if the Jews cannot obtain salvation without a prophet, can any other people, and still the Lord be an unchangable being and consistent with himself? Certainly not. For if the Lord could save one people without a prophet to teach his law and commandments and give the true sense and interpretation, he could save another people. And if another, then he could save all people without a prophet. What was the condemnation of the people in the days of the ancient prophets? I answer, it was for not giving heed to the law and commandments which the Lord sent his prophets to teach them and to command them to observe. Very good; then if the Lord had not sent his prophets with his law and commandments for their salvation they must have remained in ignorance of the way and means of salvation, and consequently we are forced to the conclusion that without a prophet there is no salvation. Well, then, what have we learned from the foregoing? We have learned that in the absence of a prophet we are without the means by which we can obtain a knowledge of the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe. Consequently in the absence of a prophet there is neither condemnation nor salvation. But in the presence of a prophet we are under condemnation if we do not give heed to the law and commandments which the Lord has sent him to command us to observe.

And again, salvation is with the Lord. And again, the secret of the Lord is with him. Well, how does the Lord make known his secret to the children of men? The prophet Amos has answered that question. iii. 7. Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets. Here we have it again, no prophet, no revelation; and no revelation, no salvation. Well, we will now leave the Old Testament times for a while and come to the New Testament, and see if the Lord had a court of final decision in spiritual matters and controversies in the days of the apostles. You will remember that in the 24th chapter of Luke we have an account of the resurrection of Christ, and of his appearing to his apostles, and of opening their understanding, as it is said, 45th verse, Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures. Now again, I ask, for what purpose did he (Jesus) open the understanding of the apostles? Ans. That they might teach repentance and remission of sins in his name in all the world, beginning at Jerusalem; and the apostles were to teach and instruct others in the understanding of the scriptures, that they might also go and teach the nations the gospel, and that all might be instructed in the law and commandments of the Lord for their salvation. Rom. xiii. Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers; for there is no power but of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God. Here I ask again, what decision is had in spiritual matters? Read the first five verses. Again: 1 Cor. iv. 1. Let a man so account of us (the apostles) as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Here we have something said of the higher powers again in the church and of the mysteries of God, consequently the keys of mysteries and revelations must have been among the apostles as well as the keys of the kingdom.

Now we will try to find an occasion to use the higher powers or supreme court in a case of final decision. We turn to Acts xv. and we find a case brought before the highest court. But what is the question in dispute? It is a question of doctrine. It is this: Whether the saints who have received the gospel among the Gentiles, and been baptized, shall be circumcised and keep the law of Moses or not. This question was raised at Antioch and disputed by some of the apostles, and finally appealed to the highest court at the seat of the First Presidency at Jerusalem, and where the decision of Paul and Barnabas was confirmed by Peter and James and all the church and by the Holy Ghost. Just turn and read part of the 14th chapter and all of the 15th chapter of the acts of the apostles, and you have the whole subject before you. And here we have an account of a most important question of doctrine being decided forever. Why? Because from the decision of that court there could be no appeal. And all in any degree acquainted with the order of God in his church will know it. And this was the only reason why the church in the days of the apostles was not split up into different factions. Because the keys of mysteries and revelations was with the church, as well as the keys of the kingdom. And after the decision of this important question by the highest court in the church, the saints of those days never dreamed of bringing it up again, nor no other subject of dispute which had been decided by the court of which we have been speaking. And who is so blind that he cannot see that in the absence of that court the church of Christ has been divided and sub-divided into sects and parties, all arrayed against each other, both in doctrine, ordinances and practices, dealing out wrath and indignation on each other continually? And thus, instead of the church of the living God, we have Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth.

Who in his sober senses will say that salvation can be had in Babylon? or in any of the departments of old Babylon? No one in any degree acquainted with the order of God dare say it. But some perhaps who are ready to begin to mourn over the fall of Babylon will say, I know I have the spirit, for I have a good feeling and am happy. Well, suppose you are happy and have a good feeling, what evidence is that that you have the spirit of Christ and are accepted of God? When you are selling goods and other property at an extravagant price and grinding the face of the poor and giving the poor laborer only wages by which he can barely subsist, and yourselves rolling in wealth, do you not feel happy? You are compelled to say that you do. And the would-be priest who peddles what he pleases to call the gospel to the poor for several thousand pounds per year, will tell you he has the spirit and is happy. So if that is an evidence of their acceptance with God, every wicked man has an evidence of his acceptance with God. Be not deceived, brethren, there is no God in any of the works of Babylon. Therefore we will leave old Babylon for the present and come to our own day and generation, and see what kind of an order God has established in his church of the last days for the salvation of his people. When the Lord commenced his work in our day to raise up a people unto himself, the first thing he did was to raise up a prophet through whom to reveal his law and commandments to the children of men, even Joseph Smith, and through him the Lord revealed the everlasting gospel. And when a sufficient number had received the gospel at the hands of the authorized priesthood which the Lord had established, the church was organized on the 6th day of April, 1830, and at that time there was no other court known in the church but the highest court, even the supreme court, over which the prophet himself presided; and after his decision, it being a final decision on any matter, it was had in remembrance no more before the Lord. The court just named was the only court in the church at that time, and the first court established in the church of God in our day, and the only one which was necessary until the church had become large, when it became necessary to organize lesser courts, as in the days of Moses, (see Exodus xiii.,) to judge the small matters. And now in regard to this highest court, how is the supreme judge of the highest court in the church appointed? Ans. The President of the church, who is also the President of the council, (or supreme court,) is appointed by revelation. D. & C. sec. v. p. 6. Well, now, suppose a question should arise among the elders abroad concerning any point of doctrine, how could it be disposed of? Why, it would be carried up before the supreme judge at the highest court in the church, namely, at the seat of the First Presidency, where a final decision would be had by that court and there would be an end of the matter, and it would be had no more in remembrance before the Lord.

O yes, say you, I know that was the order while Joseph Smith was living, but Joseph is dead. Well, what of that? Did not the Lord say that if Joseph was taken he should appoint another in his (Joseph's) stead? See D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2. We ask, what another in Joseph's stead was to be appointed for? The Lord has answered that question in the paragraph just referred to above.—To teach the revelations and commandments which the Lord had given and should give through Joseph. That is, to give the sense of them, and cause the saints (or people) to understand their meaning in their true light, as well as to receive revelations and commandments for the salvation of the church as Joseph did, and to preside over the whole church and also over the highest court in the church. Well, say you, if we can find the evidence that the Lord has appointed a prophet in Joseph's stead then we will receive him. Well, the letter of appointment by or through Joseph can be found in the first No. of the Voree Herald, bearing date June 18th, 1844, and mailed at the Nauvoo post office June 19th, directed to James J. Strang of Burlington, W. T. In that letter you can find the appointment of Pres. Strang as Joseph's successor in the First Presidency of the whole church, and also an appointment of Voree as a

out a prophet or shepherd to say to them in the name of the Lord come home to the land of your fathers, and rebuild your city and temple. O, no, say you. Well, then, you have acknowledged yourself that without a prophet there is no salvation. When I say there is no salvation without a prophet I mean to say that to all such as have passed the line of accountability there is no salvation without a prophet. Well, then, if the Jews cannot obtain salvation without a prophet, can any other people, and still the Lord be an unchangable being and consistent with himself? Certainly not. For if the Lord could save one people without a prophet to teach his law and commandments and give the true sense and interpretation, he could save another people. And if another, then he could save all people without a prophet. What was the condemnation of the people in the days of the ancient prophets? I answer, it was for not giving heed to the law and commandments which the Lord sent his prophets to teach them and to command them to observe. Very good; then if the Lord had not sent his prophets with his law and commandments for their salvation they must have remained in ignorance of the way and means of salvation, and consequently we are forced to the conclusion that without a prophet there is no salvation. Well, then, what have we learned from the foregoing? We have learned that in the absence of a prophet we are without the means by which we can obtain a knowledge of the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe. Consequently in the absence of a prophet there is neither condemnation nor salvation. But in the presence of a prophet we are under condemnation if we do not give heed to the law and commandments which the Lord has sent him to command us to observe.

And again, salvation is with the Lord. And again, the secret of the Lord is with him. Well, how does the Lord make known his secret to the children of men? The prophet Amos has answered that question. iii. 7. Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets. Here we have it again, no prophet, no revelation; and no revelation, no salvation. Well, we will now leave the Old Testament times for a while and come to the New Testament, and see if the Lord had a court of final decision in spiritual matters and controversies in the days of the apostles. You will remember that in the 24th chapter of Luke we have an account of the resurrection of Christ, and of his appearing to his apostles, and of opening their understanding, as it is said, 45th verse, Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures. Now again, I ask, for what purpose did he (Jesus) open the understanding of the apostles? Ans. That they might teach repentance and remission of sins in his name in all the world, beginning at Jerusalem; and the apostles were to teach and instruct others in the understanding of the scriptures, that they might also go and teach the nations the gospel, and that all might be instructed in the law and commandments of the Lord for their salvation. Rom. xiii. Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers; for there is no power but of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God. Here I ask again, what decision is had in spiritual matters? Read the first five verses. Again: 1 Cor. iv. 1. Let a man so account of us (the apostles) as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Here we have something said of the higher powers again in the church and of the mysteries of God, consequently the keys of mysteries and revelations must have been among the apostles as well as the keys of the kingdom.

Now we will try to find an occasion to use the higher powers or supreme court in a case of final decision. We turn to Acts xv. and we find a case brought before the highest court. But what is the question in dispute? It is a question of doctrine. It is this: Whether the saints who have received the gospel among the Gentiles, and been baptized, shall be circumcised and keep the law of Moses or not. This question was raised at Antioch and disputed by some of the apostles, and finally appealed to the highest court at the seat of the First Presidency at Jerusalem, and where the decision of Paul and Barnabas was confirmed by Peter and James and all the church and by the Holy Ghost. Just turn and read part of the 14th chapter and all of the 15th chapter of the acts of the apostles, and you have the whole subject before you. And here we have an account of a most important question of doctrine being decided forever. Why? Because from the decision of that court there could be no appeal. And all in any degree acquainted with the order of God in his church will know it. And this was the only reason why the church in the days of the apostles was not split up into different factions. Because the keys of mysteries and revelations was with the church, as well as the keys of the kingdom. And after the decision of this important question by the highest court in the church, the saints of those days never dreamed of bringing it up again, nor no other subject of dispute which had been decided by the court of which we have been speaking. And who is so blind that he cannot see that in the absence of that court the church of Christ has been divided and sub-divided into sects and parties, all arrayed against each other, both in doctrine, ordinances and practices, dealing out wrath and indignation on each other continually? And thus, instead of the church of the living God, we have Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth.

Who in his sober senses will say that salvation can be had in Babylon? or in any of the departments of old Babylon? No one in any degree acquainted with the order of God dare say it. But some perhaps who are ready to begin to mourn over the fall of Babylon will say, I know I have the spirit, for I have a good feeling and am happy. Well, suppose you are happy and have a good feeling, what evidence is that that you have the spirit of Christ and are accepted of God? When you are selling goods and other property at an extravagant price and grinding the face of the poor and giving the poor laborer only wages by which he can barely subsist, and yourselves rolling in wealth, do you not feel happy? You are compelled to say that you do. And the would-be priest who peddles what he pleases to call the gospel to the poor for several thousand pounds per year, will tell you he has the spirit and is happy. So if that is an evidence of their acceptance with God, every wicked man has an evidence of his acceptance with God. Be not deceived, brethren, there is no God in any of the works of Babylon. Therefore we will leave old Babylon for the present and come to our own day and generation, and see what kind of an order God has established in his church of the last days for the salvation of his people. When the Lord commenced his work in our day to raise up a people unto himself, the first thing he did was to raise up a prophet through whom to reveal his law and commandments to the children of men, even Joseph Smith, and through him the Lord revealed the everlasting gospel. And when a sufficient number had received the gospel at the hands of the authorized priesthood which the Lord had established, the church was organized on the 6th day of April, 1830, and at that time there was no other court known in the church but the highest court, even the supreme court, over which the prophet himself presided; and after his decision, it being a final decision on any matter, it was had in remembrance no more before the Lord. The court just named was the only court in the church at that time, and the first court established in the church of God in our day, and the only one which was necessary until the church had become large, when it became necessary to organize lesser courts, as in the days of Moses, (see Exodus xiii.,) to judge the small matters. And now in regard to this highest court, how is the supreme judge of the highest court in the church appointed? Ans. The President of the church, who is also the President of the council, (or supreme court,) is appointed by revelation. D. & C. sec. v. p. 6. Well, now, suppose a question should arise among the elders abroad concerning any point of doctrine, how could it be disposed of? Why, it would be carried up before the supreme judge at the highest court in the church, namely, at the seat of the First Presidency, where a final decision would be had by that court and there would be an end of the matter, and it would be had no more in remembrance before the Lord.

O yes, say you, I know that was the order while Joseph Smith was living, but Joseph is dead. Well, what of that? Did not the Lord say that if Joseph was taken he should appoint another in his (Joseph's) stead? See D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2. We ask, what another in Joseph's stead was to be appointed for? The Lord has answered that question in the paragraph just referred to above.—To teach the revelations and commandments which the Lord had given and should give through Joseph. That is, to give the sense of them, and cause the saints (or people) to understand their meaning in their true light, as well as to receive revelations and commandments for the salvation of the church as Joseph did, and to preside over the whole church and also over the highest court in the church. Well, say you, if we can find the evidence that the Lord has appointed a prophet in Joseph's stead then we will receive him. Well, the letter of appointment by or through Joseph can be found in the first No. of the Voree Herald, bearing date June 18th, 1844, and mailed at the Nauvoo post office June 19th, directed to James J. Strang of Burlington, W. T. In that letter you can find the appointment of Pres. Strang as Joseph's successor in the First Presidency of the whole church, and also an appointment of Voree as a stake of Zion, and a commandment to the saints to gather there and in the country round about, and also telling them that if they scatter the ungodly of the world would swallow them up.

So we see that as in the days of Joseph, Peter and Moses we have a supreme court where a final decision can be had, and an end of controversy in all matters of doctrine in the church. Now, brethren, what are we to do under existing circumstances? Shall we flee into the wilderness? No. There is no prospect there, for Brigham Young told the saints in Nauvoo the same year that brother Joseph was killed that they need not suppose for a moment that Joseph's place would ever be filled by another; thus giving the word of the Lord by Joseph the lie. See D. & C. sec. li. p. 2.—Well, he is the man who assumes the authority to preside over the church and to lead them. And where has he led them who have followed him? We will let Jeremiah answer this question. xvii. 5, 6. Thus saith the Lord: Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh: but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited. Their location in the Salt Valley in the Rocky Mountains according to their own showing will require irrigation in order to produce crops, and that being the case it is a parched place. And they also say it is a salt land, and so did Jeremiah say it should be, and in the wilderness.

Well, says some one of the saints who are about discouraged, where shall we go for salvation? The Lord has answered that question in a vision and revelation given to his servant James J. Strang, on the 27th day of June, 1844. Among many other things which the Lord told him on that occasion, he says: Unto thee has the Lord thy God given salvation. For who? Ans. For as many as will obey the law and commandments of God given for the salvation of his church in this dispensation. Now, brethren, how much better off are the apostate Twelve and their followers than Babylon the great of the present age? For they (the Brighamites) are without a prophet as well as all the rest of Babylon. And here we have it again, no prophet, no revelation; and no revelation, no salvation. And again, how are the Brighamites to settle any question of difference of doctrine or discipline originating among them? Well, say you, I hardly know. Well, I will suggest an idea for your consideration. Perhaps they will do as other sectarians do under like circumstances. But how is that, say you? Why, the Catholics consult and abide the decision of the Pope, if I understand it right; and other sects, at least some of them, appeal to Doct. Adam Clark, Mr. Scott, John Wesley, Mr. Campbell and others. But they none of them have a thus saith the Lord. And I suppose the Brighamites will abide the decision of their principal men, as they, too, are without a prophet, and of course without the means of salvation.

I will now suggest another idea. The Lord says, by Isa., xxiv. 5, The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. What ordinance is it that the Lord says they have changed? I answer, paradventure the ordinance by which a final decision in matters of difference in doctrine might be had by a thus saith the Lord. For in the absence of a prophet that ordinance could not be observed, and consequently the laws would be transgressed and the everlasting covenant would be broken.—For I understand that the Lord by an everlasting covenant has promised to give salvation to the children of men by a prophet, and that without a prophet there is no salvation.

At home, near West Buffalo, Iowa, June 10th, 1848.

Mr. John E. Page:—

Dear Sir,—Some time has elapsed since I have had the privilege of seeing you, or of hearing from you direct. A day or two ago two brethren and families stopped at my present residence. They requested me to write to you, and to inform you that the blessing of God had attended them, and that they were determined to importune at the hand of God till they were delivered out of Babylon.—I am not connected with any of the present organizations, but as strong in the faith and knowledge of PRIMITIVE M-O-R-M-O-N-I-S-M as any man in this lower world!!! God has signally blessed me both spiritually and temporally.

I have been investigating Mr. Whitmer's claims, and I am somewhat favorable to them; but a little time will tell. There are a good many warm hearted saints here who are waiting for deliverance, but I cannot particularize. Suffice it to say that I would be glad to see you and converse with you on those most superlative principles. Can you come down and see me? I have much to say to you, but cannot with ink and pen. Answer this, and in my next I will be more elaborate.

As ever yours,

A. P. RINGER.

ANSWER TO THE ABOVE.

Mr. Ringer:—I am glad to hear from you and of your prosperity, but I am sorry, very sorry, to hear you are so weak in the faith of the everlasting gospel of Christ. I say weak, because of your words which have flowed out of the abundance of your heart. You say, "I am not connected with any of the present organizations, but as strong in the faith and knowledge of PRIMITIVE M-O-R-M-O-N-I-S-M as any man in this lower world." If that is a fact, I must say I pity every body else, and despair of my own salvation. Let me tell you candidly, your own words show clearly that you are yet a stranger to the very first rudiment of "Mormonism," which is found in the following words:—

"I have sent forth the fulness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph; and in weakness have I blessed him, and I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me, and if not, another will I plant in his stead." D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4.

By this we learn that the "keys of mysteries" was to abide in the church with Joseph or his successors until the coming of Christ. Now if Christ has suffered the church to be left void of those keys even one day, it proves positively that Joseph was an impostor from the beginning of his ministry. Now as we both agree in the fact that Joseph was a true prophet, of course the "keys of mysteries and revelations" is with somebody who is actually and practically taking the lead of the church in this dispensation; and still you are not decided who that person is, and are still "strong in the faith and knowledge of primitive MORMONISM" as any man on earth. Oh! consistency! hasten the time of thy return, and doctor Mr. Ringer's head, if not his heart, and that too if it needs it.

You say you "have been investigating Mr. Whitmer's claims." Strange business, indeed. What! investigate "a man's claims that has not yet said one word for himself, as having any claims to the "keys of mysteries and revelations" as Joseph's successor?—It is true that Wm. McLellin has been beating a reveille to wake up David Whitmer to a remembrance that Joseph ordained him to be his successor, but for some reason or other David won't hear. He seems to be more stupid on the subject than the little boy Samuel was when he was called to be a prophet. Ah! there is no Eli (or Joseph) to appeal to on the subject. Why? The Lord never told Joseph that he (Joseph) should ever ordain his successor. In Sept., 1830, the Lord told Joseph and Oliver, "I have sent unto you Peter, James and John (angels) to ordain you," &c. In Feb., 1831, five months after the Lord said to the church through Joseph rel-stake of Zion, and a commandment to the saints to gather there and in the country round about, and also telling them that if they scatter the ungodly of the world would swallow them up.

So we see that as in the days of Joseph, Peter and Moses we have a supreme court where a final decision can be had, and an end of controversy in all matters of doctrine in the church. Now, brethren, what are we to do under existing circumstances? Shall we flee into the wilderness? No. There is no prospect there, for Brigham Young told the saints in Nauvoo the same year that brother Joseph was killed that they need not suppose for a moment that Joseph's place would ever be filled by another; thus giving the word of the Lord by Joseph the lie. See D. & C. sec. li. p. 2.—Well, he is the man who assumes the authority to preside over the church and to lead them. And where has he led them who have followed him? We will let Jeremiah answer this question. xvii. 5, 6. Thus saith the Lord: Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh: but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited. Their location in the Salt Valley in the Rocky Mountains according to their own showing will require irrigation in order to produce crops, and that being the case it is a parched place. And they also say it is a salt land, and so did Jeremiah say it should be, and in the wilderness.

Well, says some one of the saints who are about discouraged, where shall we go for salvation? The Lord has answered that question in a vision and revelation given to his servant James J. Strang, on the 27th day of June, 1844. Among many other things which the Lord told him on that occasion, he says: Unto thee has the Lord thy God given salvation. For who? Ans. For as many as will obey the law and commandments of God given for the salvation of his church in this dispensation. Now, brethren, how much better off are the apostate Twelve and their followers than Babylon the great of the present age? For they (the Brighamites) are without a prophet as well as all the rest of Babylon. And here we have it again, no prophet, no revelation; and no revelation, no salvation. And again, how are the Brighamites to settle any question of difference of doctrine or discipline originating among them? Well, say you, I hardly know. Well, I will suggest an idea for your consideration. Perhaps they will do as other sectarians do under like circumstances. But how is that, say you? Why, the Catholics consult and abide the decision of the Pope, if I understand it right; and other sects, at least some of them, appeal to Doct. Adam Clark, Mr. Scott, John Wesley, Mr. Campbell and others. But they none of them have a thus saith the Lord. And I suppose the Brighamites will abide the decision of their principal men, as they, too, are without a prophet, and of course without the means of salvation.

I will now suggest another idea. The Lord says, by Isa., xxiv. 5, The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. What ordinance is it that the Lord says they have changed? I answer, paradventure the ordinance by which a final decision in matters of difference in doctrine might be had by a thus saith the Lord. For in the absence of a prophet that ordinance could not be observed, and consequently the laws would be transgressed and the everlasting covenant would be broken.—For I understand that the Lord by an everlasting covenant has promised to give salvation to the children of men by a prophet, and that without a prophet there is no salvation.

At home, near West Buffalo, Iowa, June 10th, 1848.

Mr. John E. Page:—

Dear Sir,—Some time has elapsed since I have had the privilege of seeing you, or of hearing from you direct. A day or two ago two brethren and families stopped at my present residence. They requested me to write to you, and to inform you that the blessing of God had attended them, and that they were determined to importune at the hand of God till they were delivered out of Babylon.—I am not connected with any of the present organizations, but as strong in the faith and knowledge of PRIMITIVE M-O-R-M-O-N-I-S-M as any man in this lower world!!! God has signally blessed me both spiritually and temporally.

I have been investigating Mr. Whitmer's claims, and I am somewhat favorable to them; but a little time will tell. There are a good many warm hearted saints here who are waiting for deliverance, but I cannot particularize. Suffice it to say that I would be glad to see you and converse with you on those most superlative principles. Can you come down and see me? I have much to say to you, but cannot with ink and pen. Answer this, and in my next I will be more elaborate.

As ever yours,

A. P. RINGER.

ANSWER TO THE ABOVE.

Mr. Ringer:—I am glad to hear from you and of your prosperity, but I am sorry, very sorry, to hear you are so weak in the faith of the everlasting gospel of Christ. I say weak, because of your words which have flowed out of the abundance of your heart. You say, "I am not connected with any of the present organizations, but as strong in the faith and knowledge of PRIMITIVE M-O-R-M-O-N-I-S-M as any man in this lower world." If that is a fact, I must say I pity every body else, and despair of my own salvation. Let me tell you candidly, your own words show clearly that you are yet a stranger to the very first rudiment of "Mormonism," which is found in the following words:—

"I have sent forth the fulness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph; and in weakness have I blessed him, and I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me, and if not, another will I plant in his stead." D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4.

By this we learn that the "keys of mysteries" was to abide in the church with Joseph or his successors until the coming of Christ. Now if Christ has suffered the church to be left void of those keys even one day, it proves positively that Joseph was an impostor from the beginning of his ministry. Now as we both agree in the fact that Joseph was a true prophet, of course the "keys of mysteries and revelations" is with somebody who is actually and practically taking the lead of the church in this dispensation; and still you are not decided who that person is, and are still "strong in the faith and knowledge of primitive MORMONISM" as any man on earth. Oh! consistency! hasten the time of thy return, and doctor Mr. Ringer's head, if not his heart, and that too if it needs it.

You say you "have been investigating Mr. Whitmer's claims." Strange business, indeed. What! investigate "a man's claims that has not yet said one word for himself, as having any claims to the "keys of mysteries and revelations" as Joseph's successor?—It is true that Wm. McLellin has been beating a reveille to wake up David Whitmer to a remembrance that Joseph ordained him to be his successor, but for some reason or other David won't hear. He seems to be more stupid on the subject than the little boy Samuel was when he was called to be a prophet. Ah! there is no Eli (or Joseph) to appeal to on the subject. Why? The Lord never told Joseph that he (Joseph) should ever ordain his successor. In Sept., 1830, the Lord told Joseph and Oliver, "I have sent unto you Peter, James and John (angels) to ordain you," &c. In Feb., 1831, five months after the Lord said to the church through Joseph relative to Joseph's successor, that Joseph should appoint, (by revelation,) but God would ordain his successor as he (Joseph) was ordained, as the Lord had "told him before." Read D. & C. Sec. 1. p. 3. Sec. xiv. p. 1, 2.

Who on earth then presents an indisputable "appointment" and "ordination" in the form that fills the letter of the word of God on this all important point to a minutia? ANS. JAMES J. STRANG, and no other man. Admitting Joseph did under any impulse or occasion attempt to ordain Whitmer or any other man to be his successor in the prophetic office, he assumed a prerogative that did not belong to him, admitting him to be a prophet; for the Lord said to him in both alternates, that either in his apostacy or martyrdom he should only "appoint" his successor, not ordain. But by the by Joseph never did attempt to ordain Whitmer as his successor. He only ordained him to be President of a stake of Zion, if the "Times and Seasons" (the organ of the church) tells us the truth.

Any man that will say he is a believer in the Book of D. & C. as the word of God, and deny James J. Strang as being Joseph's successor in the prophetic office is ignorant of the word of God relative to that matter, or wilfully disobedient. You invite me to "come and see you." Thank you, sir. I will do so when it becomes my duty. Sir, I have not a dollar on earth beyond the simple means of keeping house in a very plain style. I hear you are quite wealthy, will you come and see me. Can you sell all you have and give to the poor, that you may inherit eternal life? If you can, come and go with us who do so; if not repent and believe in primitive MORMONISM, I beseech you.

Respectfully your servant,
JOHN E. PAGE.

BROTHER STRANG:—I wish to inquire of you if any one holding the priesthood have a right to give signs to prove such things as to them appears a reality. Are they not abusing their power in the priesthood, even if the sign is fulfilled? When I speak of signs I mean when one calls upon them that are in authority to administer in case of disease, and desires relief from the disease through the administration, and while administering he gives a sign. As you are the prophet, I conclude that you are at the head in expounding things that pertain to the instruction of the church.

A Member in the Church, and believer in the Prophet.

ANSWER.—This came up some time since from some where in Genesee Co., N. Y. For a general answer we refer to D. & C. Sec. ix. p. 6., and to Mark xvi. 17. It is particularly observable that the signs follow them that believe, but do NOT go before those who believe not. But if in controverted points among the saints any one should offer a sign (as for instance the healing of a sick person) as evidence that he was in the right, it would be a gross abuse. Even though he might be in the right as to the controverted point, yet the sign is no proof that he is so. God may not refuse to give relief to the innocent subject of such signs, but such practices would be fatal to the faith of all concerned if persisted in.—Signs confirm believers, but they do not beget faith in the unbelieving.

☞ We have just been looking over a long communication from C. B. Thompson, of St. Louis, received some time since, and which he appears quite anxious to see in print entire. We shall try to accommodate him as far as possible, though we think he would be quite mortified to see his work published verbatim, et literatum, et punctuatum. He probably has little idea what appearance it would make with points, caps, etymology and syntax just as he has written it, however well he may be satisfied with its reasonings.—So have half the writers; and if their articles were published without correction would feel injured. Yet we feel little disposition to touch pen to the controversial works of an opponent.

MINUTES OF THE CONFERENCE AT COOPERSTOWN OTSEGO CO., N. Y.

Conference met at the Universalist meeting house on Saturday June 10th at one o'clock, P. M. Meeting opened by singing.—Prayer by Elder Page. The meeting was called to order with Ebenezer Page in the chair, and Alden Hale Sec. The meeting was then addressed by Elder Hale on the subject of the gathering of Israel, and followed by Elder Page on the folly of believing isolated passages of scriptures which appear against sound logic or common sense, and in contradicton to all other scriptures. Adjourned to brother Bacon's, at 5 P. M., for a social meeting, instruction, &c.

Met Sunday the 11th, at the school house near Gilbert Parshalls, Middleford. Opened by singing. Prayer by Elder Hale. Sermon by Elder Page on the gospel of the kingdom, in a clear and lucid manner, to an attentive audience. Met at Cooperstown at one, P. M.—Prayer by Elder Hale, and sermon by Elder Page on the true order of the church; followed by Elder Hale with appropriate remarks, after which a vote of thanks was taken for the liberality, good order and respect shown by the citizens of the place. Adjourned to brother Stevens' at 5 P. M. Remarks by Elders Page and Hale on the gathering at Voree, building the temple and tower, showing clearly and positively that the kingdom of God will be established there if the saints are faithful, by comparing the 18th chap. of Isa. which calls for an ensign to be raised to all the earth, or all are called upon to hear and see at that time, saying, he (God) would take his rest at that time, and the revelation given July first, 1846, saying, James shall lift an ensign to all the earth, and also comparing the 8th verse of the 4th chap. of Micah, saying, O tower of the flock, to thee shall it come, even the first dominion, with that clause in the above revelation mentioned which says build a house, for if you do these things dominion shall be given unto you. Thus clearly demonstrating where the local spot will be. After which a vote was taken that the present organization of the church under James J. Strang would be sustained, the vote was unanimous. We have here many warm hearted brethren who have manifested their works as well as their faith by paying tithing to the amount of forty dollars cash, which we shall forward to brother Strang as soon as will be discreet and safe, together with subscriptions for the Herald, amount four and a half dollars, giving liberally for our pecuniary advantage, for which we pray God to doublly reward them.

ALDEN HALE, Sec. EBENEZER PAGE, Pres.

☞ Tithing. Received $30 to the credit of Moses Chidister, and $10 to the credit of Samuel Snider.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

ative to Joseph's successor, that Joseph should appoint, (by revelation,) but God would ordain his successor as he (Joseph) was ordained, as the Lord had "told him before." Read D. & C. Sec. 1. p. 3. Sec. xiv. p. 1, 2.

Who on earth then presents an indisputable "appointment" and "ordination" in the form that fills the letter of the word of God on this all important point to a minutia? Ans. JAMES J. STRANG, and no other man. Admitting Joseph did under any impulse or occasion attempt to ordain Whitmer or any other man to be his successor in the prophetic office, he assumed a prerogative that did not belong to him, admitting him to be a prophet; for the Lord said to him in both alternates, that either in his apostacy or martyrdom he should only "appoint" his successor, not ordain. But by the by Joseph never did attempt to ordain Whitmer as his successor. He only ordained him to be President of a stake of Zion, if the "Times and Seasons" (the organ of the church) tells us the truth.

Any man that will say he is a believer in the Book of D. & C. as the word of God, and deny James J. Strang as being Joseph's successor in the prophetic office is ignorant of the word of God relative to that matter, or wilfully disobedient. You invite me to "come and see you." Thank you, sir. I will do so when it becomes my duty. Sir, I have not a dollar on earth beyond the simple means of keeping house in a very plain style. I hear you are quite wealthy, will you come and see me. Can you sell all you have and give to the poor, that you may inherit eternal life? If you can, come and go with us who do so; if not repent and believe in primitive MORMONISM, I beseech you.

Respectfully your servant,
JOHN E. PAGE.

Brother Strang:—I wish to inquire of you if any one holding the priesthood have a right to give signs to prove such things as to them appears a reality. Are they not abusing their power in the priesthood, even if the sign is fulfilled? When I speak of signs I mean when one calls upon them that are in authority to administer in case of disease, and desires relief from the disease through the administration, and while administering he gives a sign. As you are the prophet, I conclude that you are at the head in expounding things that pertain to the instruction of the church.

A Member in the Church, and believer in the Prophet.

Answer.—This came up some time since from some where in Genesee Co., N. Y. For a general answer we refer to D. & C. Sec. ix. p. 6., and to Mark xvi. 17. It is particularly observable that the signs follow them that believe, but do not go before those who believe not. But if in controverted points among the saints any one should offer a sign (as for instance the healing of a sick person) as evidence that he was in the right, it would be a gross abuse. Even though he might be in the right as to the controverted point, yet the sign is no proof that he is so. God may not refuse to give relief to the innocent subject of sueh signs, but such practices would be fatal to the faith of all concerned if persisted in.—Signs confirm believers, but they do not beget faith in the unbelieving.

☞ We have just been looking over a long communication from C. B. Thompson, of St. Louis, received some time since, and which he appears quite anxious to see in print entire. We shall try to accommodate him as far as possible, though we think he would be quite mortified to see his work published verbatim, et literatum, et punctuatum. He probably has little idea what appearance it would make with points, caps, etymology and syntax just as he has written it, however well he may be satisfied with its reasonings.—So have half the writers; and if their articles were published without correction would feel injured. Yet we feel little disposition to touch pen to the controversial works of an opponent.

MINUTES OF THE CONFERENCE AT COOPERSTOWN OTSEGO CO., N. Y.

Conference met at the Universalist meeting house on Saturday June 10th at one o'clock, P. M. Meeting opened by singing.—Prayer by Elder Page. The meeting was called to order with Ebenezer Page in the chair, and Alden Hale Sec. The meeting was then addressed by Elder Hale on the subject of the gathering of Israel, and followed by Elder Page on the folly of believing isolated passages of scriptures which appear against sound logic or common sense, and in contradicton to all other scriptures. Adjourned to brother Bacon's, at 5 P. M., for a social meeting, instruction, &c.

Met Sunday the 11th, at the school house near Gilbert Parshalls, Middleford. Opened by singing. Prayer by Elder Hale. Sermon by Elder Page on the gospel of the kingdom, in a clear and lucid manner, to an attentive audience. Met at Cooperstown at one, P. M.—Prayer by Elder Hale, and sermon by Elder Page on the true order of the church; followed by Elder Hale with appropriate remarks, after which a vote of thanks was taken for the liberality, good order and respect shown by the citizens of the place. Adjourned to brother Stevens' at 5 P. M. Remarks by Elders Page and Hale on the gathering at Voree, building the temple and tower, showing clearly and positively that the kingdom of God will be established there if the saints are faithful, by comparing the 18th chap. of Isa. which calls for an ensign to be raised to all the earth, or all are called upon to hear and see at that time, saying, he (God) would take his rest at that time, and the revelation given July first, 1846, saying, James shall lift an ensign to all the earth, and also comparing the 8th verse of the 4th chap. of Micah, saying, O tower of the flock, to thee shall it come, even the first dominion, with that clause in the above revelation mentioned which says build a house, for if you do these things dominion shall be given unto you. Thus clearly demonstrating where the local spot will be. After which a vote was taken that the present organization of the church under James J. Strang would be sustained, the vote was unanimous. We have here many warm hearted brethren who have manifested their works as well as their faith by paying tithing to the amount of forty dollars cash, which we shall forward to brother Strang as soon as will be discreet and safe, together with subscriptions for the Herald, amount four and a half dollars, giving liberally for our pecuniary advantage, for which we pray God to doublly reward them.

Alden Hale, Sec. EBENEZER PAGE, Pres.

☞ Tithing. Received $30 to the credit of Moses Chidister, and $10 to the credit of Samuel Snider.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 18.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JULY 20, 1848. [WHOLE No. 82.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

A FRAGMENT.

Let us now pause one moment and review the grand fundamental principles of Mormonism, and see some of the glorious, grand and sublime principles embodied in their faith. The most beautiful that have ever been taught since the days that the self-same and self-evident doctrines were taught by Christ and his apostles while on earth. Passing by the first principles of their doctrine, faith, repentance, baptism, &c., &c., we shall go into an investigation of the God that they worship.

The first question is, then, what is God? He is a material substance, possessing body, parts and passions; can see, hear, talk, walk and converse the same as Jesus Christ. That he possesses body, hands, feet, toes, fingers, in fact every thing that is necessary to constitute a perfect man, we have an abundance of evidence from the Bible to establish this fact beyond controversy. Possessing these attributes he can no more occupy two distinct places at one and the same time than I can. But he can go, come, traverse from planet to planet with ease and rapidity. This is the Mormon God. What is a sectarian God? He is an immaterial being, possessing neither body, parts or passions; can neither be seen, felt nor handled; every where present and no where at all. He is immaterial, which is but another name for nonenity; precisely the same God the infidel believes in, just none at all.

What is Jesus Christ? He is a man, possessing the same attributes of God his Father. Can go from planet to planet with the same ease and rapidity of the Father; talk, eat, drink, walk and converse the same that we can. In fact he is a man who has gone on to perfection, and the express image of the Father.

What are angels? They are men who once lived on earth the same as we do; who have died, been resurrected and now dwell with God their Father; who are now messengers of God to go from planet to planet, whithersoever their services are required.

What are spirits? They are men in embryo, which we in our gross senses cannot see; are capable of receiving knowledge and instructions, and are waiting to come into this world to take bodies and be men of flesh and blood as we are.

What are men? They are sons of God and brothers to Jesus Christ, sent upon earth to do a work for their Father; if they are obedient children, obey the will of their Father, keep his commandments, they will become heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ.

Now to sum the whole up we are one great family of brothers and sisters, bound together by the ties of humanity sacred and divine, destined eventually to go on through a series of years progressing in knowledge, wisdom, understanding, power and dominion until we shall possess more knowledge more power and dominion than Jesus Christ now does. But at the same time his knowledge, power and dominion will have increased so that when we arrive where he is now he will be just as far in advance of us then as he now is. Thus goes on the great work of our God. He continually increasing in knowledge, power and dominion, and his children following the example. These are some of the grand, glorious and sublime principles of Mormonism.

R. F. MILLS.

Bloomington, July 2d, 1848.

PRESIDENT STRANG:—As my paper has not come to hand for two weeks I thought probably it was because money was lacking, therefore I now send you a dollar, though money is scarce with me and hard to get. I intend to purchase the paper if I purchase nothing else, for I consider it one of the necessaries of life, not only of the life that now is but of that which is to come. It is a great comfort to me in my loneliness, without a saint to speak to. O that I was at Voree, or with the saints some where. I intend to come to Voree and get commissioned afresh if it be the will of the Lord, and endued with power so that I may make Babylon tremble. I have not preached any here for three reasons, yea four perhaps; first, I had no demonstrative evidence that the people had ears to hear; secondly, I did not know that I was sent or called of God as was Aaron, therefore I wanted to go to head quarters and there say, Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do? thirdly, my natural abilities for a preacher being very limited, and having no honor in my own country, therefore I justified myself in lying still, but perhaps weakness of faith has had something to do in the matter; nevertheless I feel as though I wanted to be about my Father's business, and if I had a commandment from the Lord through the prophet to preach to the people here or any where else I should try to do it, because I believe in God that he could use even as weak a thing as I am to some purpose.

I intend to come to the October Conference and learn the way of God more perfectly. I sent a dollar some time in the winter intending to come to the April Conference, but could not for want of means. I regret that my life is passing away without my doing any thing in the cause of God. But I shall not move without a thus saith the Lord, and when that comes I intend not to consult with flesh and blood, but try to magnify my office. I am exerting myself to get my family served so that I may have some leisure* to serve the Lord. I work some at shoes in the winter, at gardening in the summer, and heal the sick with herbs, roots and leaves of the trees. I have been ordained it is true to the office of an elder by two other elders, but not called as was Aaron, by revelation through the prophet; and many an one has been ordained to be an elder that was not fit, and I know not but that is my case, however I don't think I can preach at all unless I am sent. I want to be careful not to act without authority, and also not to bury my talent (if I have any) in the earth. I have written thus much that thou mightest know my situation and thereby be enabled to correct me if I am wrong, which I wish thou wouldst do if thou thinkest me worth the trouble, or hast time without omitting weightier matters.† Fare thee well.

REUBEN PARKHURST.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 18.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. JULY 20, 1848. [WHOLE No. 82.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

A FRAGMENT.

Let us now pause one moment and review the grand fundamental principles of Mormonism, and see some of the glorious, grand and sublime principles embodied in their faith. The most beautiful that have ever been taught since the days that the self-same and self-evident doctrines were taught by Christ and his apostles while on earth. Passing by the first principles of their doctrine, faith, repentance, baptism, &c., &c., we shall go into an investigation of the God that they worship.

The first question is, then, what is God? He is a material substance, possessing body, parts and passions; can see, hear, talk, walk and converse the same as Jesus Christ. That he possesses body, hands, feet, toes, fingers, in fact every thing that is necessary to constitute a perfect man, we have an abundance of evidence from the Bible to establish this fact beyond controversy. Possessing these attributes he can no more occupy two distinct places at one and the same time than I can. But he can go, come, traverse from planet to planet with ease and rapidity. This is the Mormon God. What is a sectarian God? He is an immaterial being, possessing neither body, parts or passions; can neither be seen, felt nor handled; every where present and no where at all. He is immaterial, which is but another name for nonenity; precisely the same God the infidel believes in, just none at all.

What is Jesus Christ? He is a man, possessing the same attributes of God his Father. Can go from planet to planet with the same ease and rapidity of the Father; talk, eat, drink, walk and converse the same that we can. In fact he is a man who has gone on to perfection, and the express image of the Father.

What are angels? They are men who once lived on earth the same as we do; who have died, been resurrected and now dwell with God their Father; who are now messengers of God to go from planet to planet, whithersoever their services are required.

What are spirits? They are men in embryo, which we in our gross senses cannot see; are capable of receiving knowledge and instructions, and are waiting to come into this world to take bodies and be men of flesh and blood as we are.

What are men? They are sons of God and brothers to Jesus Christ, sent upon earth to do a work for their Father; if they are obedient children, obey the will of their Father, keep his commandments, they will become heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ.

Now to sum the whole up we are one great family of brothers and sisters, bound together by the ties of humanity sacred and divine, destined eventually to go on through a series of years progressing in knowledge, wisdom, understanding, power and dominion until we shall possess more knowledge more power and dominion than Jesus Christ now does. But at the same time his knowledge, power and dominion will have increased so that when we arrive where he is now he will be just as far in advance of us then as he now is. Thus goes on the great work of our God. He continually increasing in knowledge, power and dominion, and his children following the example. These are some of the grand, glorious and sublime principles of Mormonism.

R. F. MILLS.

Bloomington, July 2d, 1848.

PRESIDENT STRANG:—As my paper has not come to hand for two weeks I thought probably it was because money was lacking, therefore I now send you a dollar, though money is scarce with me and hard to get. I intend to purchase the paper if I purchase nothing else, for I consider it one of the necessaries of life, not only of the life that now is but of that which is to come. It is a great comfort to me in my loneliness, without a saint to speak to. O that I was at Voree, or with the saints some where. I intend to come to Voree and get commissioned afresh if it be the will of the Lord, and endued with power so that I may make Babylon tremble. I have not preached any here for three reasons, yea four perhaps; first, I had no demonstrative evidence that the people had ears to hear; secondly, I did not know that I was sent or called of God as was Aaron, therefore I wanted to go to head quarters and there say, Lord, what wouldst thou have me to do? thirdly, my natural abilities for a preacher being very limited, and having no honor in my own country, therefore I justified myself in lying still, but perhaps weakness of faith has had something to do in the matter; nevertheless I feel as though I wanted to be about my Father's business, and if I had a commandment from the Lord through the prophet to preach to the people here or any where else I should try to do it, because I believe in God that he could use as much as a thing as I am to some purpose.

I intend to come to the October Conference and learn the way of God more perfectly. I sent a dollar some time in the winter intending to come to the April Conference, but could not for want of means. I regret that my life is passing away without my doing any thing in the cause of God. But I shall not move without a thus saith the Lord, and when that comes I intend not to consult with flesh and blood, but try to magnify my office. I am exerting myself to get my family served so that I may have some leisure* to serve the Lord. I work some at shoes in the winter, at gardening in the summer, and heal the sick with herbs, roots and leaves of the trees. I have been ordained it is true to the office of an elder by two other elders, but not called as was Aaron, by revelation through the prophet; and many an one has been ordained to be an elder that was not fit, and I know not but that is my case, however I don't think I can preach at all unless I am sent. I want to be careful not to act without authority, and also not to bury my talent (if I have any) in the earth. I have written thus much that thou mightest know my situation and thereby be enabled to correct me if I am wrong, which I wish thou wouldst do if thou thinkest me worth the trouble, or hast time without omitting weightier matters.† Fare thee well.

REUBEN PARKHURST.

*That leisure never comes. It must be taken.

†Fail not to come. In the mean time if you find those who have ears to hear fail not to speak. More when we meet. [Ed.

WHAT NEXT?

What is to become of Mexico, since the Treaty is ratified? This is at present the most interesting question of the day, now that the Treaty is ratified by the Mexican Congress.

Will Mexico be able to re-establish her government on a safe and permanent footing? Or will she again be made the prey of military aspirants—of pronunciamentos and gritos? Or will she share the fate of other countries colonized by Spaniards, and be overrun by the colored and aboriginal races? These questions will soon be solved. We are deeply interested in their solution.

Until men's natures can be radically changed, it is vain to look to Mexico for a steady, permanent Government. The nation has retrograded too far to be brought back to the point of order and energy. A proud and ignorant race is slow to improve—to progress. A people so infatuated as the Mexicans are, will never see, much less repair their vices and defects. A people who are satisfied with big words will never attempt great deeds. The easy vent which their pride and patriotism find, in their rich, copious and hyperbolical language, will leave them but little vigor and force to prompt to energetic deeds and practical demonstrations. Their patriotic manifestations are mere pyrotechnic displays,—they are not the sparks emitted from a working engine; they pass off in an evanescent blaze, which leaves behind only smoke and ashes.

A degenerate race is the most difficult to make Republican, or to inspire with elevated ideas. A people who rely upon their ancient name seldom look forward. A barbarian race, full of savage vigor and healthy though uncurbed instincts, may be disciplined and drilled.

The white race who settled Mexico sprang from a combination of the hardy and savage Visigoth and the enterprising Celt, with the cultivated and high spirited Moor. It produced a race of such heroes as Cortes, Gonsalvo de Cordova, Ximenes, and a host of others who illustrated the warlike era of Spanish history. The admixture of the southern blood of the Moors with the northern blood of the Celtic tribes formed a just and healthy combination. But when another cross was effected, and a large infusion of the blood of the southern Indians was introduced into the Mexican organization, the balance was destroyed, the northern vigor succumbed to tropical imbecility, and the Mexicans rapidly degenerated.

The present race of whites in Mexico is inferior in the physical and moral virtues to the Indians. The arts of civilization, by which they have long maintained their superiority over the aborigines, cannot long avail against the proclivity, the rapid decline which marks the present condition of the Spanish-Mexican race. The Indians have seen during this war that the proud descendants of their noble conquerors, the old steel-clad warriors of Cortes, are in truth a weak and cowardly race, that they have worn the yoke of a people whose only reliance in war was upon the poor Indians, whom they treated in peace with so much pride and contempt. The rank and file of the Mexican army is made up of Indians and Mestizoes. All our officers have remarked that there appeared no lack of courage and vigor among the private soldiers of the Mexican army, but the cowardice of the officers, who are mostly whites, generally lost them the day.

A general insurrection of the Indians of Mexico will produce scenes of unparalleled bloodshed and devastation. The wrongs of Montezuma and his amiable subjects will be fearfully avenged upon the descendants of Cortes. We do not believe that the power and resources of the whites are adequate to the suppression of such an outbreak. The aboriginal races, with whom are allied the colored tribes, are triumphing over the whites in nearly all the States of Spanish America. They have conquered in Central America—they have regained power in Ecuador—they have proved the stronger party in Venezuela, even against the tried valor and powerful virtues of Paez—they have driven the whites of Yucatan into the sea. In Mexico they constitute nine-tenths of the population. Will they resist the general inclination of their race, and the instinct of humanity to seize upon the power within their reach? Already have we information which indicates a very general determination among the Indians to assert their power.—N. O. Delta.

The Icarian Colony.—An esteemed friend has sent us some interesting information in reference to the Icarian Colony in Texas. He says of the members of this new Colony:—

They are no more or less than a detatchment of a colony of Communists, sent on by Cabet "to make straight the ways of the Lord," and found a new Jerusalem in the fruitful wilds of Texas. They are the pioneer section which left France, about the close of January, arrived here in the middle of March, immediately took steam to Shreveport, and, by wagon transportation, struck into Texas. The second section, to be immediately followed by the third and last, headed by the veritable Cabet himself, was on the point of leaving France when the downfall of Louis Philippe took place. The part they (the Communists) have acted in the recent important events in France, is well known.

Cabet, who plants himself in the attitude of an expounder of our Savior's doctrine, about the close of 1847 addressed his sectarians in a very able pamphlet, in which, after some apposite allusions to the precept of Christ, "When they persecute you in this city, flee ye to another," he proclaims to the Communists or Icarians that the day has come to leave France, and settle in a part of the United States, to be called Icaria. He declares, in his manifesto, that it is not to be a partial attempt, nor a small emigration, as, upon calculations which cannot deceive him, he relies upon a number of 20,000 Icarians, able and willing to go to their new home—an army of mechanics, in every branch, ready to settle the foundation of a new people and State.

How far the attempt has been partial may be inferred from the fact that the head is in Texas—between it and the trunk rolls the broad Atlantic—whilst the tail has wriggled "some" in the spasmodic efforts of our democratic friends across the blue waters.

Cabet had stated that they "were not a mob without ideas," induced by wretchedness to better their personal condition, but a fraternity of mechanics, full of heart, intelligence and information, to raise the new structure of society, and indeed I conversed with two or three of the Apostles, and found them full of the manly simplicity and stern enthusiasm of the primitive Christians—thinking with one faith, swayed by one motive, "the realization of the idea," as they said, in this free country, in which there were no dynasties to hamper its application and development.—Ex. paper.

"None Liveth to Himself."—"God has written upon the flower that sweetens the air, upon the breeze that rocks it upon its stem, upon the raindrop that refreshes the smallest sprig of moss that rears its head in the desert, upon the ocean that rocks every swimmer in its chambers, upon every pencilled shell that sleeps in the caverns of the deep, as well as upon the mighty sun which warms and cheers the millions of creatures that live in his light—upon all He has written, 'None of us liveth to himself.'" Notwithstanding all that has thus been done to impress this important lesson upon our hearts, it is still one which the most of us are slow to learn, especially so as to exemplify it in our lives. We seem too generally to feel and act as though we were wholly independent of every thing around us, and under obligation to live for no one but ourselves.—Many evils result from this state of things, both to ourselves and others. The path of true happiness is the path which God himself has marked out for us. "None of us liveth to himself." Such is the intimate relation which we sustain to our fellow men, as beings formed for society, and to all the creatures of God, that none of us can live to ourselves. Our influence will be felt in some way upon all with whom we have to do, and if it does not tell upon the promotion of their interests, it will result to their injury. Whatever may be the character of our influence, however, for it we shall be held responsible. It is our interest, therefore, as well as our duty, in all things to live for others as well as for ourselves. We must seek the happiness of all with whom we have to do, and it is only when we are living under the influence of this principle, that we truly provide for our own interests. "None of us liveth to himself."—Weekly Messenger.

Beware of Bad Books!—Lord Bacon makes the pithy remark, that "in the body there are three degrees of that we receive in it, ailment, medicine and poison; whereof ailment is that which the nature of man can perfectly alter and overcome; medicine is that which is partly converted by nature and partly converteth nature; and poison is that which worketh wholly upon nature without nature being able to work at all upon it; so in the mind, whatsoever knowledge reason cannot at all work upon and convert, is a mere intoxication, and engendereth a dissolution of the mind and understanding."

*That leisure never comes. It must be taken.

†Fail not to come. In the mean time if you find those who have ears to hear fail not to speak. More when we meet. [Ed.

WHAT NEXT?

What is to become of Mexico, since the Treaty is ratified? This is at present the most interesting question of the day, now that the Treaty is ratified by the Mexican Congress.

Will Mexico be able to re-establish her government on a safe and permanent footing? Or will she again be made the prey of military aspirants—of pronunciamentos and gritos? Or will she share the fate of other countries colonized by Spaniards, and be overrun by the colored and aboriginal races? These questions will soon be solved. We are deeply interested in their solution.

Until men's natures can be radically changed, it is vain to look to Mexico for a steady, permanent Government. The nation has retrograded too far to be brought back to the point of order and energy. A proud and ignorant race is slow to improve—to progress. A people so infatuated as the Mexicans are, will never see, much less repair their vices and defects. A people who are satisfied with big words will never attempt great deeds. The easy vent which their pride and patriotism find, in their rich, copious and hyperbolical language, will leave them but little vigor and force to prompt to energetic deeds and practical demonstrations. Their patriotic manifestations are mere pyrotechnic displays,—they are not the sparks emitted from a working engine; they pass off in an evanescent blaze, which leaves behind only smoke and ashes.

A degenerate race is the most difficult to make Republican, or to inspire with elevated ideas. A people who rely upon their ancient name seldom look forward. A barbarian race, full of savage vigor and healthy though uncurbed instincts, may be disciplined and drilled.

The white race who settled Mexico sprang from a combination of the hardy and savage Visigoth and the enterprising Celt, with the cultivated and high spirited Moor. It produced a race of such heroes as Cortes, Gonsalvo de Cordova, Ximenes, and a host of others who illustrated the warlike era of Spanish history. The admixture of the southern blood of the Moors with the northern blood of the Celtic tribes formed a just and healthy combination. But when another cross was effected, and a large infusion of the blood of the southern Indians was introduced into the Mexican organization, the balance was destroyed, the northern vigor succumbed to tropical imbecility, and the Mexicans rapidly degenerated.

The present race of whites in Mexico is inferior in the physical and moral virtues to the Indians. The arts of civilization, by which they have long maintained their superiority over the aborigines, cannot long avail against the proclivity, the rapid decline which marks the present condition of the Spanish-Mexican race. The Indians have seen during this war that the proud descendants of their noble conquerors, the old steel-clad warriors of Cortes, are in truth a weak and cowardly race, that they have worn the yoke of a people whose only reliance in war was upon the poor Indians, whom they treated in peace with so much pride and contempt. The rank and file of the Mexican army is made up of Indians and Mestizoes. All our officers have remarked that there appeared no lack of courage and vigor among the private soldiers of the Mexican army, but the cowardice of the officers, who are mostly whites, generally lost them the day.

A general insurrection of the Indians of Mexico will produce scenes of unparalleled bloodshed and devastation. The wrongs of Montezuma and his amiable subjects will be fearfully avenged upon the descendants of Cortes. We do not believe that the power and resources of the whites are adequate to the suppression of such an outbreak. The aboriginal races, with whom are allied the colored tribes, are triumphing over the whites in nearly all the States of Spanish America. They have conquered in Central America—they have regained power in Ecuador—they have proved the stronger party in Venezuela, even against the tried valor and powerful virtues of Paez—they have driven the whites of Yucatan into the sea. In Mexico they constitute nine-tenths of the population. Will they resist the general inclination of their race, and the instinct of humanity to seize upon the power within their reach? Already have we information which indicates a very general determination among the Indians to assert their power.—N. O. Delta.

The Icarian Colony.—An esteemed friend has sent us some interesting information in reference to the Icarian Colony in Texas. He says of the members of this new Colony:—

They are no more or less than a detatchment of a colony of Communists, sent on by Cabet "to make straight the ways of the Lord," and found a new Jerusalem in the fruitful wilds of Texas. They are the pioneer section which left France, about the close of January, arrived here in the middle of March, immediately took steam to Shreveport, and, by wagon transportation, struck into Texas. The second section, to be immediately followed by the third and last, headed by the veritable Cabet himself, was on the point of leaving France when the downfall of Louis Philippe took place. The part they (the Communists) have acted in the recent important events in France, is well known.

Cabet, who plants himself in the attitude of an expounder of our Savior's doctrine, about the close of 1847 addressed his sectarians in a very able pamphlet, in which, after some apposite allusions to the precept of Christ, "When they persecute you in this city, flee ye to another," he proclaims to the Communists or Icarians that the day has come to leave France, and settle in a part of the United States, to be called Icaria. He declares, in his manifesto, that it is not to be a partial attempt, nor a small emigration, as, upon calculations which cannot deceive him, he relies upon a number of 20,000 Icarians, able and willing to go to their new home—an army of mechanics, in every branch, ready to settle the foundation of a new people and State.

How far the attempt has been partial may be inferred from the fact that the head is in Texas—between it and the trunk rolls the broad Atlantic—whilst the tail has wriggled "some" in the spasmodic efforts of our democratic friends across the blue waters.

Cabet had stated that they "were not a mob without ideas," induced by wretchedness to better their personal condition, but a fraternity of mechanics, full of heart, intelligence and information, to raise the new structure of society, and indeed I conversed with two or three of the Apostles, and found them full of the manly simplicity and stern enthusiasm of the primitive Christians—thinking with one faith, swayed by one motive, "the realization of the idea," as they said, in this free country, in which there were no dynasties to hamper its application and development.—Ex. paper.

"None Liveth to Himself."—"God has written upon the flower that sweetens the air, upon the breeze that rocks it upon its stem, upon the raindrop that refreshes the smallest sprig of moss that rears its head in the desert, upon the ocean that rocks every swimmer in its chambers, upon every pencilled shell that sleeps in the caverns of the deep, as well as upon the mighty sun which warms and cheers the millions of creatures that live in his light—upon all He has written, 'None of us liveth to himself.'" Notwithstanding all that has thus been done to impress this important lesson upon our hearts, it is still one which the most of us are slow to learn, especially so as to exemplify it in our lives. We seem too generally to feel and act as though we were wholly independent of every thing around us, and under obligation to live for no one but ourselves.—Many evils result from this state of things, both to ourselves and others. The path of true happiness is the path which God himself has marked out for us. "None of us liveth to himself." Such is the intimate relation which we sustain to our fellow men, as beings formed for society, and to all the creatures of God, that none of us can live to ourselves. Our influence will be felt in some way upon all with whom we have to do, and if it does not tell upon the promotion of their interests, it will result to their injury. Whatever may be the character of our influence, however, for it we shall be held responsible. It is our interest, therefore, as well as our duty, in all things to live for others as well as for ourselves. We must seek the happiness of all with whom we have to do, and it is only when we are living under the influence of this principle, that we truly provide for our own interests. "None of us liveth to himself."—Weekly Messenger.

Beware of Bad Books!—Lord Bacon makes the pithy remark, that "in the body there are three degrees of that we receive in it, ailment, medicine and poison; whereof ailment is that which the nature of man can perfectly alter and overcome; medicine is that which is partly converted by nature and partly converteth nature; and poison is that which worketh wholly upon nature without nature being able to work at all upon it; so in the mind, whatsoever knowledge reason cannot at all work upon and convert, is a mere intoxication, and engendereth a dissolution of the mind and understanding."

Bad books are like ardent spirits; they furnish neither "ailment" nor "medicine;" they are "poison." Both intoxicate—one the mind, the other the body; the thirst for each increases by being fed, and is never satisfied; both ruin—one the intellect, the other the health, and, together, the soul. The makers and venders of each are equally guilty and equally corruptors of the community; and the safeguard against each is the same—total abstinence from all that intoxicates mind or body.

Here we have a definition of what we mean by "bad books;" whatever books neither feed the mind nor the heart, but have the effect to intoxicate the mind and corrupt the heart. Works of science, art, philosophy, history, theology, &c., furnish "ailment," or medicine; books of mere fancy, romance, infidelity, war, piracy and murder are poison more or less diluted, and are as much to be shunned as the drunkard's cup. They will "bite like a serpent and sting like an adder."—Am. Messenger.

Be True to Yourselves.—The history of the world, as the biography of those who have played a prominent part in its concerns, is worthy of everlasting remembrance. It assures us that it matters but little what form of danger may assail a man, if he be true to himself.

Poverty may lay its chilly hand upon him, and freeze up the brightest fountain of his hope—disappointments may strike him at every step—affliction may strike down those who are dearest to his heart—the foul breath of slander may attempt to sully his name and tarnish his reputation—still let him be true to himself—let him maintain a stout heart and clear breast—and he will eventually out ride the storm. Let those who are struggling with "low birth and iron fortune" remember this truth—and let them remember that no man can be destroyed by others, without fault and weakness in himself.—Ex. paper.

From Yucatan.—Capt. Stillman, of schooner Fanny Gray, at New York, from Laguana, reports that intelligence was received there that 15,000 persons had arrived at Merida in 3 days, from other sections of Yucatan. On his passage down the river he met a number of canoes, filled with men, women, and children, who were seeking a refuge at Laguana from the inroads of the Indians. The governor of Laguana has issued a proclamation refusing to have any more Indians landed on that Island, except females.—Great numbers of neutral Indians are flocking to that place for refuge. Things looked worse than ever

The prophecy of Chilam Balaam, an Indian sorcerer at the time of the conquest, that at the regeneration of the Indian race, they would wade ankle deep in the blood of their conquerors at the plaza of Merida.

The village of Iturbide is stated to have defended itself for eight hours against an overpowering force of savages. The loss on the part of the whites was 23 killed and 11 wounded. During the retreat of the whites 106 soldiers deserted, thus leaving the commander with a force of 60 men.

The whole coast from the port of Cilam to Cape Catoche, and thence to Bacalar is now in possession of the Indian chiefs, Pat and Chi, and their blood-thirsty followers.

More than 100,000 persons are now crowded into the capital of Yucatan, and should it unfortunately fall into the hands of savages, but a portion of these refugees could be saved, owing to the small number of vessels now on the coast.

The Amigo del Pueblo, published at Campeachy, states that the British Minister of Mexico had received the official communication from the Yucatan government, offering the sovereignity and dominion of Yucatan to Great Britain, in case assistance and protection were offered, and that the Minister had written to his Government, earnestly urging the compliance with the offer.—Ex. paper.

The Perilous State of Mexico.—From a conversation with an intelligent Mexican, who has just arrived from Mexico, we have derived much valuable information confirmatory of our previous predictions, that a fierce revolution will soon break out in that unhappy country. We learn that the pronunciamento of Paredes has met with more favor than is generally supposed. He has many influential partisans, who, it is thought, when a favorable opportunity offers, will rally around his standard, and in as great numbers as they did in '45, when Paredes overthrew the government of Herrera.

The party of Penay Pena is said to be disaffected, and to be secretly laboring to undermine the weak and imbecile government of Herrera, who is generally admitted to be entirely unequal to the task of holding the helm in these stormy times. His Cabinet, moreover, is composed of such heterogenious and conflicting elements, that unity of counsel and action, so neccessary in such a crisis, cannot be expected of it. The spirit of party, now raging more fiercely through the country than any previous epoch of its history, must inevitably, in a very short time, bring about the dissolution of the present government.

A war of races is already begun, and soon will extend all over Mexico. The extermination of the Hispano-American race will be the result of their hostilities, unless timely measures are adopted to break up the incipient organization of the Indians. Herrera is so apprehensive of a general rising of the Indians in and about the city of Mexico, that he dares not send away any of the troops to oppose the progress of Paredes and Padre Jaraúta.

To add to these difficulties, England, we understand, has peremptorily demanded the payment of the debts due by Mexico to English subjects, and threatens to blockade her ports in case of refusal.

Truly has the treaty of Guadaloupe settled the fate of Mexico.—St. Louis Organ.

Vera Cruz, June 9th, 1848.

Sir:—By the French brig of war Pylade, I received letters from Campeachy, and other parts of Yucatan, up to the 4th inst.

The town of Yzamal, about fifteen leagues from Merida, has lately been taken, and it is supposed that many hundred lives were lost. In one day, about a fortnight before the taking of Yzamal, 11,000 persons, mostly women and children, entered, fugitives from their dwellings, into the city of Merida, saving but their lives for a short time. Ticul, another large place near Merida, is likewise in the hands of the Indians, and these will soon surround Merida, a place with neither natural nor artificial defences. The prophecy of Chilam Balaam, an Indian sorcerer at the time of the conquest, that at the regeneration of the Indian race, they would wade ankle deep in the blood of their conquerors at the plaza of Merida, may become frightfully true if no early and immediate aid is given to Merida.—The town of Campeachy is going to be surrounded by Indians, who had appeared already in the neighborhood thereof. Merida is the point most exposed, containing, with fugitives, now about 60,000 persons, most of them unable to carry arms.—Ex. paper.

Hayti.—Schr. Ontario has arrived at Boston from Jeremie, which place she left on the 1st inst. In consequence of the recent events at Port au Prince all the colored (mulatto) population are emigrating, and the business will naturally fall into the hands of foreigners. The President is expected here in ten or fifteen days, with three or four thousand troops, when we can better judge of our security.

At Gonaives all was quiet. The stores were open and the mulattoes were acting as soldiers for the protection of their own property.

Jacmel, St Domingo.—It is rumored that the negroes had had a bloody battle about 20 miles from there, murdering about 200 men, women and children and drinking their blood.

Two bands of pickets had marched towards Jacmel, with determination of murder and pillage.—Ex. paper.

A very simple expedient will protect the inhabitants of regions exposed to bilious affections, such as intermittent and remittent fevers, from these desolating scourges. A cold infusion of the common dog wood (Cornus Florida) taken morning, noon and night, say a tea cup full at a time, will in most cases be found an effectual preventive. Chemical analysis has revealed in the dog wood a principle similar in nature and qualities to the quinine, though perhaps not so energetic. The writer of this communication had occasion once to employ the infusion of dog wood in an obscure part of the country, where the quinine was rare, and too costly for the poor, and he found it to answer the purpose admirably. This slight precaution, if adopted by families, might protect them from much suffering and expense.—Ex. paper.

The Methodist Episcopal General Conference.—The Rev. Dr. Pierce recently made application to the Methodist Episcopal General Conference, North, in session in Pittsburgh, to be admitted

Bad books are like ardent spirits; they furnish neither "ailment" "medicine;" they are "poison." Both intoxicate—one the nd, the other the body; the thirst for each increases by being d, and is never satisfied; both ruin—one the intellect, the other health, and, together, the soul. The makers and venders of ch are equally guilty and equally corruptors of the community; the safeguard against each is the same—total abstinence from that intoxicates mind or body.

Here we have a definition of what we mean by "bad books;" hatever books neither feed the mind nor the heart, but have the ect to intoxicate the mind and corrupt the heart. Works of sci-ce, art, philosophy, history, theology, &c., furnish "ailment," or dicine; books of mere fancy, romance, infidelity, war, piracy murder are poison more or less diluted, and are as much to be ned as the drunkard's cup. They will "bite like a serpent and ng like an adder."—Am. Messenger.

Be True to Yourselves.—The history of the world, as the biog-phy of those who have played a prominent part in its concerns, is rthy of everlasting remembrance. It assures us that it matters t little what form of danger may assail a man, if he be true to mself.

Poverty may lay its chilly hand upon him, and freeze up the ightest fountain of his hope—disappointments may strike him at ery step—affliction may strike down those who are dearest to his art—the foul breath of slander may attempt to sully his name and rnish his reputation—still let him be true to himself—let him intain a stout heart and clear breast—and he will eventually out de the storm. Let those who are struggling with "low birth and on fortune" remember this truth—and let them remember that no an can be destroyed by others, without fault and weakness in mself.—Ex. paper.

From Yucatan.—Capt. Stillman, of schooner Fanny Gray, at New York, from Laguana, reports that intelligence was received here that 15,000 persons had arrived at Merida in 3 days, from ther sections of Yucatan. On his passage down the river he met number of canoes, filled with men, women, and children, who ere seeking a refuge at Laguana from the inroads of the Indians. he governor of Laguana has issued a proclamation refusing to re any more Indians landed on that Island, except females.—reat numbers of neutral Indians are flocking to that place for refuge. hings looked worse than ever

The prophecy of Chilam Balaam, an Indian sorcerer at the time t the conquest, that at the regeneration of the Indian race, they ould wade ankle deep in the blood of their conquerors at the plaza f Merida.

The village of Iturbide is stated to have defended itself for eight ours against an overpowering force of savages. The loss on the art of the whites was 23 killed and 11 wounded. During the re-eat of the whites 106 soldiers deserted, thus leaving the com-mander with a force of 60 men.

The whole coast from the port of Cilam to Cape Catoche, and hence to Bacalar is now in possession of the Indian chiefs, Pat nd Chi, and their blood-thirsty followers.

More than 100,000 persons are now crowded into the capital of ucatan, and should it unfortunately fall into the hands of savages, ut a portion of these refugees could be saved, owing to the small umber of vessels now on the coast.

The Amigo del Pueblo, published at Campeachy, states that the British Minister of Mexico had received the official communication rom the Yucatan government, offering the sovereignity and domin-on of Yucatan to Great Britain, in case assistance and protection ere offered, and that the Minister had written to his Government. arnestly urging the compliance with the offer.—Ex. paper.

The Perilous State of Mexico.—From a conversation with an ntelligent Mexican, who has just arrived from Mexico, we have erived much valuable information confirmatory of our previous redictions, that a fierce revolution will soon break out in that un-appy country. We learn that the pronunciamento of Paredes has net with more favor than is generally supposed. He has many nfluential partisans, who, it is thought, when a favorable opportuni-y offers, will rally around his standard, and in as great numbers s they did in '45, when Paredes overthrew the government of Herrera.

The party of Penay Pena is said to be disaffected, and to be secretly laboring to undermine the weak and imbecile government of Herrera, who is generally admitted to be entirely unequal to the task of holding the helm in these stormy times. His Cabinet, moreover, is composed of such heterogenious and conflicting elements, that unity of counsel and action, so neccessary in such a crisis, cannot be expected of it. The spirit of party, now raging more fiercely through the country than any previous epoch of its history, must inevitably, in a very short time, bring about the dissolution of the present government.

A war of races is already begun, and soon will extend all over Mexico. The extermination of the Hispano-American race will be the result of their hostilities, unless timely measures are adopted to break up the incipient organization of the Indians. Herrera is so apprehensive of a general rising of the Indians in and about the city of Mexico, that he dares not send away any of the troops to oppose the progress of Paredes and Padre Jarauta.

To add to these difficulties, England, we understand, has peremptorily demanded the payment of the debts due by Mexico to English subjects, and threatens to blockade her ports in case of refusal.

Truly has the treaty of Guadaloupe settled the fate of Mexico.—St. Louis Organ.

Vera Cruz, June 9th, 1848.

Sir:—By the French brig of war Pylade, I received letters from Campeachy, and other parts of Yucatan, up to the 4th inst.

The town of Yzamal, about fifteen leagues from Merida, has lately been taken, and it is supposed that many hundred lives were lost. In one day, about a fortnight before the taking of Yzamal, 11,000 persons, mostly women and children, entered, fugitives from their dwellings, into the city of Merida, saving but their lives for a short time. Ticul, another large place near Merida, is likewise in the hands of the Indians, and these will soon surround Merida, a place with neither natural nor artificial defences. The prophecy of Chilam Balaam, an Indian sorcerer at the time of the conquest, that at the regeneration of the Indian race, they would wade ankle deep in the blood of their conquerors at the plaza of Merida, may become frightfully true if no early and immediate aid is given to Merida.—The town of Campeachy is going to be surrounded by Indians, who had appeared already in the neighborhood thereof. Merida is the point most exposed, containing, with fugitives, now about 60,000 persons, most of them unable to carry arms.—Ex. paper.

Hayti.—Schr. Ontario has arrived at Boston from Jeremie, which place she left on the 1st inst. In consequence of the recent events at Port au Prince all the colored (mulatto) population are emigrating, and the business will naturally fall into the hands of foreigners. The President is expected here in ten or fifteen days, with three or four thousand troops, when we can better judge of our security.

At Gonaives all was quiet. The stores were open and the mulattoes were acting as soldiers for the protection of their own property.

Jacmel, St Domingo.—It is rumored that the negroes had had a bloody battle about 20 miles from there, murdering about 200 men, women and children and drinking their blood.

Two bands of pickets had marched towards Jacmel, with determination of murder and pillage.—Ex. paper.

A very simple expedient will protect the inhabitants of regions exposed to bilious affections, such as intermittent and remittent fevers, from these desolating scourges. A cold infusion of the common dog wood (Cornus Florida) taken morning, noon and night, say a tea cup full at a time, will in most cases be found an effectual preventive. Chemical analysis has revealed in the dog wood a principle similar in nature and qualities to the quinine, though perhaps not so energetic. The writer of this communication had occasion once to employ the infusion of dog wood in an obscure part of the country, where the quinine was rare, and too costly for the poor, and he found it to answer the purpose admirably. This slight precaution, if adopted by families, might protect them from much suffering and expense.—Ex. paper.

The Methodist Episcopal General Conference.—The Rev. Dr. Pierce recently made application to the Methodist Episcopal General Conference, North, in session in Pittsburgh, to be admitted, as a delegate from the Southern Division of the Church. It was refused, and Dr. Pierce returned the following answer to the annunciation:—

To the Bishops and Members at the General Conference of the M. E. Church:—Rev. and Dear Brethren,—I have received two extracts from your journal of the 4th and 5th inst. From these extracts I learn that you decline receiving me in my proper character as the accredited delegate of the M. E. Church South, and only invite me to a seat within the bar as due to me on account of my private and personal merits. These considerations I shall appreciate, and will reciprocate them with you in all the private walks of Christian and social life. But within the bar of the General Conference I can only be known in my official character.

You will therefore regard this communication as final, on the part of the M. E. Church South. She can never renew the offer of fraternal relations between the two great bodies of Wesleyan Methodists in the United States. But the proposition can be renewed at any time, either now or hereafter, by the M. E. Church North.—And if ever made upon the basis of the plan of separation, as adopted by the Conference of 1844, the Church South will cordially entertain the proposition.

With sentiments of deep regard, and with feelings of disappointed hope, I am yours, in Christian fellowship, L. PIERCE,
Delegate from the M. E. Church South.

Pittsburgh, May 9, 1848.

☞ So the Methodist Church is effectually divided on the slave question. [Ed.

Your children are, in some respects, like metals in a state of fusion; they receive a form corresponding with the mould into which they are cast. If their minds come in daily contact with the language of profanity, obscenity, or less objectionable forms of impropriety,—if they are accustomed to witness examples of discourtesy, pride, revenge, or of artful and dishonest dealing,—in a word, if they are taught that it is as well to be superficial as profound, provided they can make a good appearance on examination day, what can be expected of them, but that they will grow up an unprincipled generation, a "seed of evil doers," who will transmit to posterity the pernicious influences by which their own characters were formed. But if their young and tender minds are imbued with the principles of truth, justice, humanity, and sound scholarship,—if they are taught to admire whatsoever is good, excellent and praiseworthy, and regard the welfare of others as they do their own, our schools will resemble those fountains whose streams refresh and fertilize the land.—Ex. paper.

Parental Duty.—The father who plunges into business so deeply that he has no leisure for domestic duties and pleasures, and whose only intercourse with his children consists in a brief and occasional word of authority, or a surly lamentation over their intolerable expensiveness, is equally to be pitied and to be blamed.—What right has he to devote to other pursuits the time which God has allotted to his children? Nor is it any excuse to say he cannot support his family in their present style of living without this effort. I ask, by what right can his family demand to live in a manner which requires him to neglect his most solemn and important duties? Nor is it an excuse to say that he wishes to leave them a competence. Is he under obligation to leave them that competence which he desires? Is it an advantage to them to be relieved from the necessity of labor? Besides, is money the only desirable bequest which a father can leave to them? Surely, well cultivated intellects, hearts sensible to domestic affection, the love of parents, and brethren, and sisters; a taste for home pleasures; habits of order, regularity and industry; a hatred of vice and vicious men; and a lively sensibility to the excellence of virtue—are as valuable a legacy as an inheritance of property—simple property, purchased by the loss of every habit which could render that property a blessing.—Ex. paper.

Effects of the Absence of Sun and Air.—Dr. Moore, the eloquent and amiable author of "The use of the body in relation to the mind," says:—A tadpole confined in the dark would never turn to a frog, and an infant deprived of heaven's free light, would only grow to a shapeless idiot, instead of a beauteous and reasonable being. Hence, in the deep, dark gorges and ravines of the Swiss Valais, where the direct sunshine never reaches, the hideous prevalence of idiocy startles the traveler. It is strange, melancholy idiocy.—Many citizens are incapable of any articulate speech; some are deaf, some blind, some labor under all these privations, and all are misshapen in almost every part of the body. I believe there is, in all places, a marked difference in the healthiness of houses, according to their aspect with regard to the sun, and that those are the healthiest in which all the rooms are, during some part of the day, fully exposed to direct light. It is a well known fact that epidemics attack inhabitants on the shady side of the street, and totally exempt those on the other side; and even in epidemics, such as ague, the morbid influence is often thus partial in its actions.—Ex. paper.

LIFE.

We toil for renown, yet we sigh for repose;
We are happy in prospect, yet restless to day;
And we look back on life, from its dawn to its close,
To feel that we've squandered its treasures away.

Though bound by obstructions of clay to our sphere,
Our hearts may aspire to a better to rise;
But evil the weight is that fixes them here,
For frail are our pinions, and far are the skies.

We love—but the object has withered and died,
We are left as a wreck on a desolate shore,
To remember with grief as we gaze on the tide,
That the cherished, the lost, and beloved, are no more.

The lost—the lamented! Ye cannot return,
To learn how our souls were with yours interwove;
To see the vain flowers that we strew on the urn,
Or behold from our sorrow how deep was our love.

Cure for Crossness.—A sensible woman of the Doctor's acquaintance, (the mother of a young family,) entered so far into his views upon this subject, that she taught her children, from their earliest childhood, to consider ill-humor as a disorder which was to be cured by physic. Accordingly she had always small doses ready, and the little patients, whenever it was thought needful, took rhubarb for the crossness. No punishment was required. Peevishness or ill-temper and rhubarb were associated in their minds, always as cause and effect.—The Doctor.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

as a delegate from the Southern Division of the Church. It was refused, and Dr. Pierce returned the following answer to the announciation:—

To the Bishops and Members at the General Conference of the M. E. Church:—Rev. and Dear Brethren,—I have received two extracts from your journal of the 4th and 5th inst. From these extracts I learn that you decline receiving me in my proper character as the accredited delegate of the M. E. Church South, and only invite me to a seat within the bar as due to me on account of my private and personal merits. These considerations I shall appreciate, and will reciprocate them with you in all the private walks of Christian and social life. But within the bar of the General Conference I can only be known in my official character.

You will therefore regard this communication as final, on the part of the M. E. Church South. She can never renew the offer of fraternal relations between the two great bodies of Wesleyan Methodists in the United States. But the proposition can be renewed at any time, either now or hereafter, by the M. E. Church North.—And if ever made upon the basis of the plan of separation, as adopted by the Conference of 1844, the Church South will cordially entertain the proposition.

With sentiments of deep regard, and with feelings of disappointed hope, I am yours, in Christian fellowship, L. PIERCE,
Delegate from the M. E. Church South.

Pittsburgh, May 9, 1848.

☞ So the Methodist Church is effectually divided on the slave question. [Ed.

Your children are, in some respects, like metals in a state of fusion; they receive a form corresponding with the mould into which they are cast. If their minds come in daily contact with the language of profanity, obscenity, or less objectionable forms of impropriety,—if they are accustomed to witness examples of discourtesy, pride, revenge, or of artful and dishonest dealing,—in a word, if they are taught that it is as well to be superficial as profound, provided they can make a good appearance on examination day, what can be expected of them, but that they will grow up an unprincipled generation, a "seed of evil doers," who will transmit to posterity the pernicious influences by which their own characters were formed. But if their young and tender minds are imbued with the principles of truth, justice, humanity, and sound scholarship,—if they are taught to admire whatsoever is good, excellent and praiseworthy, and regard the welfare of others as they do their own, our schools will resemble those fountains whose streams refresh and fertilize the land.—Ex. paper.

Parental Duty.—The father who plunges into business so deeply that he has no leisure for domestic duties and pleasures, and whose only intercourse with his children consists in a brief and occasional word of authority, or a surly lamentation over their intolerable expensiveness, is equally to be pitied and to be blamed.—What right has he to devote to other pursuits the time which God has allotted to his children? Nor is it any excuse to say he cannot support his family in their present style of living without this effort. I ask, by what right can his family demand to live in a manner which requires him to neglect his most solemn and important duties? Nor is it an excuse to say that he wishes to leave them a competence. Is he under obligation to leave them that competence which he desires? Is it an advantage to them to be relieved from the necessity of labor? Besides, is money the only desirable bequest which a father can leave to them? Surely, well cultivated intellects, hearts sensible to domestic affection, the love of parents, and brethren, and sisters; a taste for home pleasures; habits of order, regularity and industry; a hatred of vice and vicious men; and a lively sensibility to the excellence of virtue—are as valuable a legacy as an inheritance of property—simple property, purchased by the loss of every habit which could render that property a blessing.—Ex. paper.

Effects of the Absence of Sun and Air.—Dr. Moore, the eloquent and amiable author of "The use of the body in relation to the mind," says:—A tadpole confined in the dark would never turn to a frog, and an infant deprived of heaven's free light, would only grow to a shapeless idiot, instead of a beauteous and reasonable being. Hence, in the deep, dark gorges and ravines of the Swiss Valais, where the direct sunshine never reaches, the hideous prevalence of idiocy startles the traveler. It is strange, melancholy idiocy.—Many citizens are incapable of any articulate speech; some are deaf, some blind, some labor under all these privations, and all are misshapen in almost every part of the body. I believe there is, in all places, a marked difference in the healthiness of houses, according to their aspect with regard to the sun, and that those are the healthiest in which all the rooms are, during some part of the day, fully exposed to direct light. It is a well known fact that epidemics attack inhabitants on the shady side of the street, and totally exempt those on the other side; and even in epidemics, such as ague, the morbid influence is often thus partial in its actions.—Ex. paper.

LIFE.

We toil for renown, yet we sigh for repose;
We are happy in prospect, yet restless to-day;
And we look back on life, from its dawn to its close,
To feel that we've squandered its treasures away.

Though bound by obstructions of clay to our sphere,
Our hearts may aspire to a better to rise;
But evil the weight is that fixes them here,
For frail are our pinions, and far are the skies.

We love—but the object has withered and died,
We are left as a wreck on a desolate shore,
To remember with grief as we gaze on the tide,
That the cherished, the lost, and beloved, are no more.

The lost—the lamented! Ye cannot return,
To learn how our souls were with yours interwove;
To see the vain flowers that we strew on the urn,
Or behold from our sorrow how deep was our love.

Cure for Crossness.—A sensible woman of the Doctor's acquaintance, (the mother of a young family,) entered so far into his views upon this subject, that she taught her children, from their earliest childhood, to consider ill-humor as a disorder which was to be cured by physic. Accordingly she had always small doses ready, and the little patients, whenever it was thought needful, took rhubarb for the crossness. No punishment was required. Peevishness or ill-temper and rhubarb were associated in their minds, always as cause and effect.—The Doctor.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cn.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 19.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, JULY 27, 1848. [WHOLE No. 83.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

Suppose some unlettered boy, brought up without any opportunities whatever of obtaining general information, totally destitute of geographical, historical and scientific knowledge, should offer to the world a book dictated by himself and written by an amanuensis, purporting to contain the history of several unknown nations, which had had their day and passed away. Suppose that in this historic account he had given a description of the natural and artifical features of their country, such as towns, palaces, temples and fortresses; of mountains, rivers, rocks, caverns, lakes and seas with their relative distances, locations, &c., with all the minuteness common in histories written on the spot at the time the events transpired.—Suppose further that the author of such a work so written should claim for it the credence of all mankind as a work of standard truth, and facts afterwards discovered by scientific men should show the existence of just such a country, having the same mountains, rivers, rocks, caverns, lakes and seas; the ruins of the same towns, palaces, temples and fortresses. Suppose further that some distinguished citizen, a national embassador, should go into that country, visit those towns, palaces and temples, and finding them filled and covered with many feet of new earth, filling and covering ancient halls and ante-chambers, with trees of many centuries growth darkening the ancient cities with their foliage, should, beneath the forests of 500 years and the accumulated soil of 10 or 15 centuries, discover there on the ancient walls the exact pictures of the same historic events, so published by such an unlettered boy, what would be the astonishment and admiration of men.

These thoughts were forcibly thrust upon us last Sabbath as we listened to the abla discourse of J. E. Page on the American Antiquities. It was indeed astonishing to read the book of Ether (part of the Book of Mormon) published in 1830, by Joseph Smith, and lay by the side of it the great picture of M. Bottarini found in the ancient halls of the Montezumas, a relic of the Aztec archives, published some years after the Book of Mormon, and then behold the almost speaking picture of all the same events recorded in that book distributed in the same order, beginning with the same fact and ending with the same. So perfect is the concord that no man can think otherwise than that they are chronicles of the same facts. Even the chronology is marked on the ancient pictures, by points corresponding with the years in the book of Ether. The numbers of persons in the various scenes correspond. The number of barges used in crossing various waters is the same. The feasts, the coronation of kings, the battles and the mourning for the slain are found painted and sculptured on the ancient ruins of Yucatan, Chiapas and Central America precisely as Joseph Smith had written them in the Book of Mormon years before the world knew that those countries contained any ruins. Until Stevens, the American embassador, Catherwood, Bottarini, Priest, Delafield and a host of other distinguished antiquarians can all be impeached, and the great body of their works proved lies and impositions, the world is bound to acknowledge that the ignorant unlettered Joseph Smith, a mere boy without even a common school education, has sat down in western New York and written a minute history of the buried and unknown ruins of an extensive and once densly populated country and of the people who inhabited it, whether that history was written from golden plates or from these buried memorials that antiquarians have since exhumed.

Infidelity is more credulous than faith. Christian skepticism is particularly so; for it has been able to believe that such a man as Joseph Smith was able to do on the first trial what no literary writer has been able ever to accomplish: write a work bearing an ancient date without betraying its modern origin, by some allusion to modern sciences, superstitions or prejudices. But whether it will be able to believe that such an one could literally write out the history of nations long annihilated, from pictures buried deep in the ruins of cities thousands of miles off, and for years after covered with ancient forests, and all without the help of God, is a question yet to be determined.

Elder Page has all the material for a work presenting an astonishing array of such facts as we have been speaking of, showing that nearly all the ruins discovered by all antiquarians in the central parts of America are minutely described and frequently spoken of in the Book of Mormon while in their pristine glory, and that the paintings and sculpture there found are but the incidents which make up the body of that book. Never was the scenery of the Bible so well illustrated in any pictorial edition as the Book of Mormon would be by using the very cuts used in Stevens' and Delafield's works for its illustration. Where is the man that will come forward with the means of publishing such a work, as Harris did the Book of Mormon? Shall it always be said the poor cannot and the rich will not? Here is testimony that will challenge the world.—Can no man be found who, out of his abundance, will furnish a few hundred dollars to pay for engraving the necessary cuts and buy type, ink and paper? The poor are ready to do the work. Will the rich furnish the means? We shall see.

For the Gospel Herald.

FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD.

Upon this subject the whole sectarian world stand arrayed against me, and even many Mormons are preposterous enough to contend that from the beginning of time God foreknew all things. It appears to me that no reasonable man, after a few moments reflection and investigation, could for one moment entertain such erroneous ideas. To suppose that God looked down from the beginning through the vista of unknown millions of years and saw the millions of frivolous incidents which daily occur is entirely presumptuous. For a christian civilized people to contend for such absurdities is astonishing. Now I ask, in all candor, is there any practical difference between foreknowledge and foreordination? If God knew from the beginning the precise course that I would take through

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 19.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, JULY 27, 1848. [WHOLE No. 83.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

Suppose some unlettered boy, brought up without any opportunities whatever of obtaining general information, totally destitute of geographical, historical and scientific knowledge, should offer to the world a book dictated by himself and written by an amanuensis, purporting to contain the history of several unknown nations, which had had their day and passed away. Suppose that in this historic account he had given a description of the natural and artifical features of their country, such as towns, palaces, temples and fortresses; of mountains, rivers, rocks, caverns, lakes and seas with their relative distances, locations, &c., with all the minuteness common in histories written on the spot at the time the events transpired.—Suppose further that the author of such a work so written should claim for it the credence of all mankind as a work of standard truth, and facts afterwards discovered by scientific men should show the existence of just such a country, having the same mountains, rivers, rocks, caverns, lakes and seas; the ruins of the same towns, palaces, temples and fortresses. Suppose further that some distinguished citizen, a national embassador, should go into that country, visit those towns, palaces and temples, and finding them filled and covered with many feet of new earth, filling and covering ancient halls and ante-chambers, with trees of many centuries growth darkening the ancient cities with their foliage, should, beneath the forests of 500 years and the accumulated soil of 10 or 15 centuries, discover there on the ancient walls the exact pictures of the same historic events, so published by such an unlettered boy, what would be the astonishment and admiration of men.

These thoughts were forcibly thrust upon us last Sabbath as we listened to the able discourse of J. E. Page on the American Antiquities. It was indeed astonishing to read the book of Ether (part of the Book of Mormon) published in 1830, by Joseph Smith, and lay by the side of it the great picture of M. Bottarini found in the ancient halls of the Montezumas, a relic of the Aztec archives, published some years after the Book of Mormon, and then behold the almost speaking picture of all the same events recorded in that book distributed in the same order, beginning with the same fact and ending with the same. So perfect is the concord that no man can think otherwise than that they are chronicles of the same facts. Even the chronology is marked on the ancient pictures by points corresponding with the years in the book of Ether. The numbers of persons in the various scenes correspond. The number of barges used in crossing various waters is the same. The feasts, the coronation of kings, the battles and the mourning for the slain are found painted and sculptured on the ancient ruins of Yucatan, Chiapas and Central America precisely as Joseph Smith had written them in the Book of Mormon years before the world knew that those countries contained any ruins. Until Stevens, the American embassador, Catherwood, Bottarini, Priest, Delafield and a host of other distinguished antiquarians can all be impeached, and the great body of their works proved lies and impositions, the world is bound to acknowledge that the ignorant unlettered Joseph Smith, a mere boy without even a common school education, has sat down in western New York and written a minute history of the buried and unknown ruins of an extensive and once densly populated country and of the people who inhabited it, whether that history was written from golden plates or from these buried memorials that antiquarians have since exhumed.

Infidelity is more credulous than faith. Christian skepticism is particularly so; for it has been able to believe that such a man as Joseph Smith was able to do on the first trial what no literary writer has been able ever to accomplish: write a work bearing an ancient date without betraying its modern origin, by some allusion to modern sciences, superstitions or prejudices. But whether it will be able to believe that such an one could literally write out the history of nations long annihilated, from pictures buried deep in the ruins of cities thousands of miles off, and for years after covered with ancient forests, and all without the help of God, is a question yet to be determined.

Elder Page has all the material for a work presenting an astonishing array of such facts as we have been speaking of, showing that nearly all the ruins discovered by all antiquarians in the central parts of America are minutely described and frequently spoken of in the Book of Mormon while in their pristine glory, and that the paintings and sculpture there found are but the incidents which make up the body of that book. Never was the scenery of the Bible so well illustrated in any pictorial edition as the Book of Mormon would be by using the very cuts used in Stevens' and Delafield's works for its illustration. Where is the man that will come forward with the means of publishing such a work, as Harris did the Book of Mormon? Shall it always be said the poor cannot and the rich will not? Here is testimony that will challenge the world.—Can no man be found who, out of his abundance, will furnish a few hundred dollars to pay for engraving the necessary cuts and buy type, ink and paper? The poor are ready to do the work. Will the rich furnish the means? We shall see.

For the Gospel Herald.

FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD.

Upon this subject the whole sectarian world stand arrayed against me, and even many Mormons are preposterous enough to contend that from the beginning of time God foreknew all things. It appears to me that no reasonable man, after a few moments reflection and investigation, could for one moment entertain such erroneous ideas. To suppose that God looked down from the beginning through the vista of unknown millions of years and saw the millions of frivolous incidents which daily occur is entirely presumptuous. For a christian civilized people to contend for such absurdities is astonishing. Now I ask, in all candor, is there any practical difference between foreknowledge and foreordination? If God knew from the beginning the precise course that I would take through life, knew whether I would be saved or damned, I would ask, where then is my free moral agency? If he knows that I am to be damned, be damned I must. There is no getting over, under, above, below or around it. My destiny is sealed. I have no free moral agency in the matter. I might as well sit down and fold my arms. My exertions can neither turn my course to the right nor to the left. The decree has gone forth, and I must submit. If God knows that I am to be saved, be saved I will. I may commit murder and all manner of wickedness that a scoundrel can invent. I cannot damn myself. If I could, then of course God did not know that I would be saved. And if man cannot save or damn himself, then he is not a free moral agent.

If God foreknows that any event will take place, it must take place just the same as if he had ordained or decreed it. Consequently if God foreknows that a man will be damned, his works cannot save him. Therefore it destroys at once the free agency of man.—It is folly to contend otherwise. That God has means by which he can know things that may or have transpired I at once concede.—But to suppose he foreknew all things from the foundation of the world, is one of the most ridiculous ideas that ever originated in the human brain. But I do not ask you to take my assertions nor even common sense mixed with strong reason alone, but shall also give proofs from the good book. The first that I shall introduce is from the Book of Abraham: "And the Gods took counsel among themselves and said, 'Let us go down and form man in our image, after our likeness.'" 29th verse. And again: "And thus we will finish the heavens and the earth and all of the hosts of them. And Gods said among themselves, on the seventh time we will end our work which we have counseled, and we will rest on the seventh time from all our work which we have counseled. And the Gods concluded on the seventh time because that on the seventh time they would rest from all their works which they, the Gods, counseled among themselves to form, and sanctified it; and thus were their decisions at the time that they counseled among themselves to form the heavens and the earth." 30th verse.

What were all these councils about if God knew all things from the foundation of the world? It must be idle work to hold councils on things that he knows. And we believe God has enough to do without performing unnecessary labor. And what were their decisions at the time they concluded among themselves? What concluded? How could he conclude on any thing that he knew? If he knows a thing, that thing is already concluded upon. It is folly to talk otherwise. To suppose that God is going to hold councils on things that he already knows is folly, to say the least of it, if not mockery. We will now call your attention to some proofs from the book of Genesis. We find in the 22d chapter that God tempted Abraham, and commanded him to offer his only son for a burnt offering. I ask, what did God do this for? Was it not to try the faith of Abraham? Certainly it was. If, then, he knew that Abraham would offer up his only son as well before trying as he did after, what was the use of taking this pains to ascertain the fact, and putting Abraham to the trouble of three days journey all in order to prove a thing that he knew just as well before?

I said before that God had means to ascertain facts. This was the means he took to ascertain the faith of Abraham. And after Abraham had bound his son Isaac and stretched forth his hand and took the knife to slay his son, then the voice came, saying: "Stay thy hand, for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing that thou hast not withheld thy son, thy only son." Gen. xxii. 12. I shall now introduce one more passage for your consideration: "And the Lord said, Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous, I will go down now and SEE WHETHER THEY HAVE DONE ALTOGETHER ACCORDING to the CRY OF IT, which is come unto me; and if not, I WILL KNOW." Gen. xviii. 20, 21. What think you of that passage? What are you to do with it? "And if not, I will know." The language is plain and emphatic, unmistakable and unsurmountable. There is no way of getting around it, only to deny the words of God. "And Arbaham drew near and said, Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked? Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city: wilt thou also destroy and not spare the place for the fifty righteous that are therein? And the Lord said, If I find in Sodom fifty righteous within the city, then I will spare all the place for their sakes." Gen. xviii. 23, 24, 26. Thus Abraham plead with God till God said: "I will not destroy it for tens' sake." What conclusion do we draw from the foregoing conversation between God and Abraham? It seems as if Abraham plead with God face to face, and persuaded God to spare the city for tens' sake. This would certainly be the inference to be drawn, that Abraham did actually exercise an influence on the mind of God. At all events God was going down in person to SEE FOR HIMSELF, THAT HE MIGHT KNOW.

R. F. MILLS.

SECTARIAN HETERODOXY.

What wont men do when led on by the bewildering influence of wild sectarian blindness in attempting to evangelize the world by what they call the gospel of Christ? Being "destitute of the truth" because they do not enjoy "the spirit which leadeth into all truth." Not a century since I was present and heard a two hours discourse from Rev. D. Davidson, in which he labored with great zeal to prove that the sprinkling of water in the name of the Holy Trinity, on a subject, was gospel baptism; and that it was the duty of parents to present their children while they were incapable of exercising faith in the word preached, to receive the ordinance. At the close of his discourse he called for candidates for the ordinance, on which occasion some were sprinkled, others effused, nine adults were immersed, and one kneeled in the flowing stream and was effused. All this triple mode of sectarian perversion was conducted and administered by the same Rev. D. D. in one and the same day. How does this compare with Paul, who says, "one Lord, one faith, one baptism." To the above case the following words of another author will well apply:—

"'Tis something strange, we freely own
That those who preach immersion down
Should, after all the things they say,
Consent to tread that frantic way;
And from the pulpit straight repair
To practice what they censured there!
How can we without wonder mention
Such vast, such friendly condescension?
Rather than lose a wandering sheep,
Whom all their reasoning cannot keep—
To please the man—but not his God,
They will immerse him in the flood."

JOHN E. PAGE.

Louisville, Knox Co., Ill., April 29th, 1848.

PRESIDENT JAMES J. STRANG:—

DEAR BROTHER,—As the second volume of the Herald is full the third is commenced and I have not sent on in advance until now, I inclose in this one dollar to continue my paper, for it is all the little I get, and not half enough of that. My desire is that the sheet might be enlarged; for one under my situation has no other way of any intelligence. My health is much impaired ever since I was at Voree last October one year ago. I nor my family have not heard a gospel sermon since. My health is such that I am hardly capable of writing a letter. I do not know that there has been a gospel sermon preached in Knox Co. by any one of our elders from Voree since Jehiel Savage preached there. I have just received the minutes of the Conference in Vol. iii. No. 4, mentioning some preaching by John E. Page and yourself. Page preached on the restitution of all things spoken of, and the desolations that are coming upon the earth. Yourself on the establishment of the kingdom of God, the time when and the circumstances connected with its establishment. Now would it not be a pleasing and profitable thing to put those two discourses in the Herald? I would rather hear them than any thing else that I can think of, and you would do me a favor, seeing we have no preaching nor elders to administer in any thing. O how I long for that ministering power and faith among us to the healing the sick. I have no elders to send for, and doctors pour their poison down us. I am afraid they have ruined my system thereby. I have no one to earn any thing for me, and I cannot do much myself.

There are some few brethren scattered about the country, some gone to the camp, some think the authorities of the church are with the Brighamites. Many do not know where it is, because there are so many lo heres. Some again think the authorities are all gone, and that God would have to organize the kingdom anew again upon the earth. Some think the Romans are to be that great kingdom.—There are many sorts of Mormonism. I want the true kind or none. I am tired of so many self-made beings. I am afraid they have no body or parts. I have just heard from the camp by way of a letter to brother ———. Many are in a state of starvation. He is going to bring his sister-in-law away because she is in suffering circumstances. Her husband has taken another wife and left her with three or four children. She says that she has had nothing all winter but corn meal and water, and some others suffering to death.—I do not ask you to write to me, for I know that you have writing enough to do, only favor me with those two sermons and I will be abundantly thankful.

Yours respectfully,

RICHARD STEPHENS.

☛ We should be most glad to furnish our readers with those sermons and many others which we think still more interesting, but time and labor absolutely forbid writing them out. Pres. Strang has constantly laying by him a large package of unread letters, which he runs over as soon as possible and sometimes not till weeks after they are received, and in his anxiety to keep up with his duties sometimes literally writes over a half quire of paper in a day, in addition to various duties which every day brings with it, and still has works intended for publication the matter of which has been all prepared a full year, which he cannot write out. As for enlarging the paper, it is now kept up at a loss in the expense of publication for the sake of the cause, and that too by poor hard working men. Those who are better off in this world's goods might help us to $100 worth of material to enlarge with, probably the increased patronage would support it; but how hard is it for the rich to be saved! Bro. Stephens should come and dwell with the saints, and then he could find an elder to rebuke the diseases that baffle earthly physicians. We know some in his neighborhood who dreaded the wolves who were getting into the sheepfold, and so stayed in the wilderness. Since we have sent the wolves howling to the woods, will they now come to the fold to dwell with the sheep? If not, they are not so afraid of the wolf as the shepherd.

Union, July 6th, 1848.

Dear Brother Strang:—I inclose one dollar for the continuation of the Gospel Herald. I have read the Gospel Herald with a great deal of pleasure. It is not only a source of great information, but a benefit to my soul. I live in a thickly settled town, where the gospel in its primitive purity never has been preached, although there are a multitude of professed preachers (sectarians) ever learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. I am abundantly convinced that you, brother, are the Lord's appointed to lead the saints into green and living pastures, and direct them in this dark and cloudy day. No other has even professed to take the lead according to our Book of doctrine, which is proof enough to my satisfaction. If the Lord will I intend to be with you in Voree as soon as I can sell out here. Yours in the bonds of the everlasting covenant,

FRANKLIN BEVIER.

New Bedford, July 4th, 1848.

To President James J. Strang:—

Dear Brother,—Herein is inclosed one dollar for the common interest of the church, or the store house of the Lord; and as fast as I obtain money or other property I shall remit one-tenth of the value thereof to you in money, according as the law of the Lord requires. May the God of heaven sustain you and prepare the church for the reception of the sealed records that are reserved for a day of righteousness, and inspire the saints in the strength of Israel's God to bring their tithes and offerings in that the Temple may be built according to the commandment of the Lord, and cease not to labor like mighty men of God until the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

Should any thing of interest occur here or at Boston or New York I shall give you early notice, providing there is no one else upon whom the duty devolves, at present, to the best of my knowledge; and even for a year and a half past the feeble efforts of the saints in this section of country, including the New England States, have been completely paralyzed. The Brighamites have to perfection elucidated the saying that "one sinner can do much harm." The few letters that I have seen published in the Voree papers relative to the success of the gospel in this region appear well on paper to those who are unacquainted with the circumstances connected with the facts in the case, but to us they were puffs, and why the writer should have been induced to write as he did I am wholly at a loss to determine.

J. W. NICHOLS.

☛ We wish to hear from brother Nichols as often as he has any thing of interest to communicate. As he eschews puffs, we shall rely on the information he gives.

Bath Mills, July 9th, 1848.

Much Beloved Prophet:—Having a leisure moment I will intrude upon your time, but I hope not on your patience, while I inform you that we are well, and the brethren generally in this country are also well, and the cause of God is progressing and gaining friends in this region. But there is being exerted an influence against us by a Free Will Baptist priest who has just come from Voree, or within three miles. He says that Voree is all broken up and the Mormons have all left there. Please write to me and inform me as to your prospects at present in Voree. Brothers B. C. Willey and Hill expect to move to Voree this fall, as early as September. Brother Wait will be at Conference, and myself if possible. Brother Walter Ostrander is with me at present. He will travel with me as soon as my harvest is done till Conference.

I have not got any papers yet. I want the papers very much.—If my papers have been sent regular send from this time two copies and write on one, "let this go through." I would like to hear from you what is doing at the Island. Please write when this is received. If you cannot write at length, contradict the priest in reference to Voree. As ever, your brother in Christ,

SAMUEL GRAHAM.

☞ Of course we contradict the priest about Voree, and should like to know his name that we might hold him up to the scorn of all honest men. We don't know of any Free Will Baptist preacher who ever lived near Voree. But who ever says Voree is broken up or is breaking up, or that its population, business or prospects are diminishing, lies wilfully and maliciously. The population is materially increased since last April, and a large accession is expected this fall. We have never before had out as many elders as now.—Four families have left, and we pray God to make the number eight whenever we are strong enough to bear prosperity. It will make room for some of the many better men who are wishing to come.

ANNEXATION.

Jamaica—Cuba—Yucatan.

The above is the heading of an extended editorial in the N. O. Delta of the 14th. In the course of his examination of these countries to be annexed, the editor remarks on the first named :—

"Desparing of all relief from England, the whites of Jamaica have awoke to the immense advantages which would accrue to them from annexation to this Union, and they are seriously agitating the subject. We alluded a few days ago to the opinions openly avowed in that island by the Despatch newspaper; and, in further proof of the existence of this feeling, we refer to a communication in our paper of to-day, signed "Alpha," written by a gentleman just from Jamaica, who has resided there twelve years."

The editor thinks it a very favorable moment to strike for all these annexations, because the "powers of the old world, compelled to keep all their attention fixed and all their resources concentrated in resisting the popular will at home, are necessarily compelled to leave their distant colonies to take care of themselves." Truly, just the time for ambitious cowards to strike. The precious Jamaica correspondent of the Delta, a some time slave driver, probably, shows indubitably that lying is not exclusively the vice of slaves. He draws the following delightful picture of a parcel of starving blood-suckers :—

"The slaves were manumitted, and thousands who were once in affluence, having invested their all in slaves, are now houseless and pennyless. All, including the slave proprietors themselves, magnanimously conspired to strike the chains off the bondsmen, but the miserable expediency of Ministers in 1846 has riveted them afresh—has ruined the planter, and has consigned to irrevocable desolation—if not immediately placed under the United States Government to which she geographically belongs—the brightest jewel in the British Crown. Tax not the West India planters with want of energy; for through the years of "the Apprenticeship" they struggled on, hoping that high-minded, moral, religious England, would eventually prove propitious. 'Twas hoping against hope, and the event has proved so. Where now are the boasted promises of protection, by placing a protective duty on Cuban and Brazilian produce? Vanished! "Like the baseless fabric of a vision," they are not to be traced; and England stands now in the unenviable position of being held up to the contempt of the world, and pointed out as a low, truckling hypocrite. Be warned, ye nations of the earth, and let the "Great experiment" be a perpetual admonition to you."

Well, if these lazy fellows, the Jamaica Planters, had pocketed their $100,000,000 and gone honestly to work, it seems as if they might have managed to keep roofs over their heads and chickens in their pots. The former slaves have done it without any compensation or protection. We hear no complaints from them. They are tolerably well to do in the world, cultivating their own little homesteads, and finding their labor too valuable to themselves to sell it to the hungry white cormorants at a shilling a day. This, more than the want of duty on Cuba sugar, added to their own laziness and prodigality, has been the ruin of the white Jamaica Planters.—Emancipation has worked so well for the slaves, they are so much elevated by it in self-respect and independence, that the poor planters are positively dying for want of victims! So they want to be annexed to the United States. And what good will it do them?—None at all unless the United States system of piracy upon the negroes can be revived. Will it be? Leaving out of account the lion which half of Oregon couldn't tempt Polk to rouse, these same emancipated Jamaica slaves in their mountain homes will forever forbid it. The South could hire Northern cotten-bag statesmen, plenty of them, to approve the war for re-enslaving Jamaica: she could enlist northern Coot Singers and spooney regiments in plenty to fight the battles. But the negroes of Jamaica are not Mexicans. They would give Scott and Taylor what St. Domingo gave Le Clerc. They will never be re-enslaved. They will be annexed free if at all. And the coward South would as soon annex Hayti as to do that.

To give some idea of the dreams which runs in the heads of the petty plantation kings who reign over us, we copy the last paragraph of the Delta's editorial—not as particularly the Delta's thought do we take it, for the Delta is here but a mechanical mouth-piece of the lazy bullies who wield our destinies—none but tyrants can indulge such an ambition :—

"With Jamaica, Cuba and Yucatan, the United States will occupy a position like unto that of old Rome when with the Pillars of Hercules on the West, Syria and Egypt on the East, Italy and Germania on the North, and Lybia and Carthage on the South,—and thus commanding the great Mare Internum, she proudly claimed to be, and was universally recognized as, Mistress of the World.—Chronotype.

Estrangement.—Parents, forgetful at times of the ties which bind them to their children, do not encourage that freedom and liberty of intercourse which is so productive of their mutual happiness, but crush in their children that spirit of openness which is so conducive to their moral welfare. A father who never associates with his children, but who merely provides for their bodily wants, fulfills but poorly his mission. On his knee and at his side should their pratlings be heard, and a word from him would leave an endurable impression forever upon the young heart. All a mother's exertions are futile unless they meet with the hearty co-operation of the father. Children become too often estranged from their parents, keep their thoughts and feelings to themselves, and unaccustomed to seek advice, err perhaps from ignorance. "Not an orphan in the wide world can be so deserted as the child who is an outcast from a living parent's love."—Ex. paper.

☞ Nearly all Europe is in war. The U. S. troops are rapidly withdrawing from Mexico, and immediately in their rear the Indians are rising on the Mexicans. At home, political aspects are ominous. There is an extensive and enthusiastic rally of the North against Southern dictation.

CUT AND POLISHED STONE,

Of superior quality and finish, and of various sorts, constantly on hand and for sale at the Voree quarry. Caps, Sills, Tombstones, Doorsteps, Imposing stones, &c., made to order on short notice.

Voree, April 27th, 1848.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

☞ Of course we contradict the priest about Voree, and should like to know his name that we might hold him up to the scorn of all honest men. We don't know of any Free Will Baptist preacher who ever lived near Voree. But who ever says Voree is broken up or is breaking up, or that its population, business or prospects are diminishing, lies wilfully and maliciously. The population is materially increased since last April, and a large accession is expected this fall. We have never before had out as many elders as now.—Four families have left, and we pray God to make the number eight whenever we are strong enough to bear prosperity. It will make room for some of the many better men who are wishing to come.

ANNEXATION.

Jamaica—Cuba—Yucatan.

The above is the heading of an extended editorial in the N. O. Delta of the 14th. In the course of his examination of these countries to be annexed, the editor remarks on the first named :—

"Desparing of all relief from England, the whites of Jamaica have awoke to the immense advantages which would accrue to them from annexation to this Union, and they are seriously agitating the subject. We alluded a few days ago to the opinions openly avowed in that island by the Despatch newspaper; and, in further proof of the existence of this feeling, we refer to a communication in our paper of to-day, signed "Alpha," written by a gentleman just from Jamaica, who has resided there twelve years."

The editor thinks it a very favorable moment to strike for all these annexations, because the "powers of the old world, compelled to keep all their attention fixed and all their resources concentrated in resisting the popular will at home, are necessarily compelled to leave their distant colonies to take care of themselves." Truly, just the time for ambitious cowards to strike. The precious Jamaica correspondent of the Delta, a some time slave driver, probably, shows indubitably that lying is not exclusively the vice of slaves. He draws the following delightful picture of a parcel of starving blood-suckers :—

"The slaves were manumitted, and thousands who were once in affluence, having invested their all in slaves, are now houseless and pennyless. All, including the slave proprietors themselves, magnanimously conspired to strike the chains off the bondsmen, but the miserable expediency of Ministers in 1846 has riveted them afresh—has ruined the planter, and has consigned to irrevocable desolation—if not immediately placed under the United States Government to which she geographically belongs—the brightest jewel in the British Crown. Tax not the West India planters with want of energy; for through the years of "the Apprenticeship" they struggled on, hoping that high-minded, moral, religious England, would eventually prove propitious. 'Twas hoping against hope, and the event has proved so. Where now are the boasted promises of protection, by placing a protective duty on Cuban and Brazilian produce? Vanished! "Like the baseless fabric of a vision," they are not to be traced; and England stands now in the unenviable position of being held up to the contempt of the world, and pointed out as a low, truckling hypocrite. Be warned, ye nations of the earth, and let the "Great experiment" be a perpetual admonition to you."

Well, if these lazy fellows, the Jamaica Planters, had pocketed their $100,000,000 and gone honestly to work, it seems as if they might have managed to keep roofs over their heads and chickens in their pots. The former slaves have done it without any compensation or protection. We hear no complaints from them. They are tolerably well to do in the world, cultivating their own little homesteads, and finding their labor too valuable to themselves to sell it to the hungry white cormorants at a shilling a day. This, more than the want of duty on Cuba sugar, added to their own laziness and prodigality, has been the ruin of the white Jamaica Planters.—Emancipation has worked so well for the slaves, they are so much elevated by it in self-respect and independence, that the poor planters are positively dying for want of victims! So they want to be annexed to the United States. And what good will it do them?—None at all unless the United States system of piracy upon the negroes can be revived. Will it be? Leaving out of account the lion which half of Oregon couldn't tempt Polk to rouse, these same emancipated Jamaica slaves in their mountain homes will forever forbid it. The South could hire Northern cotten-bag statesmen, plenty of them, to approve the war for re-enslaving Jamaica: she could enlist northern Coot Singers and spooney regiments in plenty to fight the battles. But the negroes of Jamaica are not Mexicans. They would give Scott and Taylor what St. Domingo gave Le Clerc. They will never be re-enslaved. They will be annexed free if at all. And the coward South would as soon annex Hayti as to do that.

To give some idea of the dreams which runs in the heads of the petty plantation kings who reign over us, we copy the last paragraph of the Delta's editorial—not as particularly the Delta's thought do we take it, for the Delta is here but a mechanical mouth-piece of the lazy bullies who wield our destinies—none but tyrants can indulge such an ambition :—

"With Jamaica, Cuba and Yucatan, the United States will occupy a position like unto that of old Rome when with the Pillars of Hercules on the West, Syria and Egypt on the East, Italy and Germania on the North, and Lybia and Carthage on the South,—and thus commanding the great Mare Internum, she proudly claimed to be, and was universally recognized as, Mistress of the World.—Chronotype.

Estrangement.—Parents, forgetful at times of the ties which bind them to their children, do not encourage that freedom and liberty of intercourse which is so productive of their mutual happiness, but crush in their children that spirit of openness which is so conducive to their moral welfare. A father who never associates with his children, but who merely provides for their bodily wants, fulfills but poorly his mission. On his knee and at his side should their pratlings be heard, and a word from him would leave an endurable impression forever upon the young heart. All a mother's exertions are futile unless they meet with the hearty co-operation of the father. Children become too often estranged from their parents, keep their thoughts and feelings to themselves, and unaccustomed to seek advice, err perhaps from ignorance. "Not an orphan in the wide world can be so deserted as the child who is an outcast from a living parent's love."—Ex. paper.

☞ Nearly all Europe is in war. The U. S. troops are rapidly withdrawing from Mexico, and immediately in their rear the Indians are rising on the Mexicans. At home, political aspects are ominous. There is an extensive and enthusiastic rally of the North against Southern dictation.

CUT AND POLISHED STONE,

Of superior quality and finish, and of various sorts, constantly on hand and for sale at the Voree quarry. Caps, Sills, Tombstones, Doorsteps, Imposing stones, &c., made to order on short notice.

Voree, April 27th, 1848.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 20.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, AUG. 3, 1848. [WHOLE No. 84.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

BRIGHAMITE CONFERENCE.

We have been seeking for some time to get the minutes of the Conference of the Brighamites held at Winter Quarters last winter; more especially as we understood that it was their intention to change their organization. We have finally succeeded in getting their full minutes as taken down by their phonographer on the spot. It is certainly a curious document, and exhibits some most remarkable changes of position among the leaders. Indeed its positions are so different from the platform on which they have formerly stood that the scattered Brighamites will probably disbelieve that any such proceedings were had. However this may be, when they get to Council Bluffs they will learn the truth. Truly falsehood and imposition has run them in a devious way. It is not to be wondered at, the blunders that great body has made since, as they now acknowledge they have been over three years without a head.

It will be perceived that in one place they congratulate themselves on having the house full. Now as the house was 40 feet by 60 it would hold 600 persons closely seated. But in summing up they represent that the attendance was not less than 12,000. A very singular fact it is that they should notice the fact that on a particular day the house was full, but at some other time when 20 times that number were in attendance no notice was taken of it in the minutes. Believing that like other men they brag of their congregation when it is largest, we do not doubt theirs was full when they took pains to record the fact in their minutes. Had they simply stated that from 2,000 to 3,000 had attended we should not have questioned it. But when they have stated the brag measure of their congregation at 40 feet by 60, we can only give them credit for as many as that ground will contain. Here follows the Conference minutes:—

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE HELD DEC. 24TH, 1847, AT WINTER QUARTERS, COUNCIL BLUFFS, AS TAKEN BY JAS. FLANAGAN.

Conference opened Friday Dec. 24th, 1847, at 11 o'clock, and was first addressed by elder Woodruff, in preparing the minds of the people for the business and council of the meeting. He made many good preparatory remarks, and was followed by Orson Pratt, who addressed the Conference in a masterly style, on the Presidency of and progress of the church; stating that the church had progressed rapidly, although we had everything to contend with, poverty, persecution, priestcraft, demagoguery, the press, and, worst of all, the opposition of apostates; and that in our unorganized state, and we had beaten them all and had the best prospect we ever had. He asked, what the apostates had accomplished, and where are they? He said they could hardly be called to remembrance; they had gone to oblivion—to the shades of night. Still the church was rolling on rapidly, and now, at this period of the church, they had to select a First Presidency, and they would admit the first argument of the apostates (viz., that the organization was not complete) was correct. Yet in our unorganized state we have beaten them. There was nothing against the church being in that state for a time. At the rise of the church many years had passed before there was a quorum of Twelve or Seventies, and who would say that the church did not prosper then. But it was not necessary for any more ordinations then. There are those in the church who have been ordained to all power in the kingdom of God, and it only needs the voice of prophecy to say who the individual shall be who should preside over the church. The calling of the Twelve is not to stay at home when the nations are perishing for salvation, but to go and unlock the gospel to those who are in darkness.

At 2 o'clock the meeting was opened by prayer. A. Lyman addressed the meeting. He made some general remarks on the gathering of the saints, the animation with which they should lay hold of the work and turn the world right side up. He then read a revelation which President Young handed him, given in the spring of 1847 on the organization, plan and covenants which saints had gone into to move all the poor of the church to the place where God shall say. Geo. A. Smith followed on the locating of the saints on the east side of the river. He says a few days ago they came over here to hold a Conference; the house was not large enough to hold the people, so they adjourned till they could build a meeting house, in three weeks (and mostly bad weather at that) they had built the largest log cabin he ever saw, 40 by 60 feet, with a recess of 26 feet in the north side for a stand, a fire place in the west end and three stoves. He said all who could go to the valley in the spring should go, and those who could not should move on this side of the river and go to preparing as fast as they could and raise provisions for those who should come on from the east; for the elders were going out to gather up all creation, and they wanted to send as many to the mountains as they possibly could, to the place where God had appointed. They were not going down, but up to the highest low place on earth. He said we had great privileges indeed—that last spring while they were banished from their homes, and houses smoking with the fire of mobs, (for they put fire to them,) that the same government called on them to go and fight their battles; so we had to send five hundred men to serve the Devil (government) in order to get the chance to serve God. He then gave three significations of sin. 1st. Original. 2d. Unpardonable. 3d. Total depravity. Original sin was chewing tobacco. Unpardonable sin was spitting all over the floor. And total depravity was druling down on the bosom. He impressed the necessity of helping the First Presidency off to the mountains, and of the saints being industrious in all things. Pres. B. Young said, as the brethren had been industrious in building the house they would not hurry the business too much, but would try and pay them for their trouble in good meetings.

Sat. 25th, Christmas, 10 o'clock. Meeting opened by singing. Prayer by Geo. A. Smith, who made some remarks on the high council, its rights and power. B. Young said he would make some remarks on the same subject. There was no law of the land to protect our rights on the Potawatamie lands, and it was necessary for us to make such laws as would afford protection until such time as the laws of Iowa might be extended to us, and advised the brethren to empower the high council and bishop's court to enact and enforce all righteous laws. The clerk was called upon to read the epistle of the Twelve to the brethren off in the Great Salt Lake City, in the great basin of North America. It pointed out the proper course to pursue in all matters of business, both spiritual and temporal. Stating that those who could not obey the law of God should be visited with the judgments. Another epistle was read from the high council of the Salt Lake City to the council of the Twelve in Winter Quarters. It stated that their health was good; they had but 5 or 6 deaths. The weather had been mild and uniform, with two or three light frosts, which had done little or no injury, as the vegetation was all green and things prosperous. A let-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 20.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, AUG. 3, 1848. [WHOLE No. 84.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

BRIGHAMITE CONFERENCE.

We have been seeking for some time to get the minutes of the Conference of the Brighamites held at Winter Quarters last winter; more especially as we understood that it was their intention to change their organization. We have finally succeeded in getting their full minutes as taken down by their phonographer on the spot. It is certainly a curious document, and exhibits some most remarkable changes of position among the leaders. Indeed its positions are so different from the platform on which they have formerly stood that the scattered Brighamites will probably disbelieve that any such proceedings were had. However this may be, when they get to Council Bluffs they will learn the truth. Truly falsehood and imposition has run them in a devious way. It is not to be wondered at, the blunders that great body has made since, as they now acknowledge they have been over three years without a head.

It will be perceived that in one place they congratulate themselves on having the house full. Now as the house was 40 feet by 60 it would hold 600 persons closely seated. But in summing up they represent that the attendance was not less than 12,000. A very singular fact it is that they should notice the fact that on a particular day the house was full, but at some other time when 20 times that number were in attendance no notice was taken of it in the minutes. Believing that like other men they brag of their congregation when it is largest, we do not doubt theirs was full when they took pains to record the fact in their minutes. Had they simply stated that from 2,000 to 3,000 had attended we should not have questioned it. But when they have stated the brag measure of their congregation at 40 feet by 60, we can only give them credit for as many as that ground will contain. Here follows the Conference minutes:—

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE HELD DEC. 24TH, 1847, AT WINTER QUARTERS, COUNCIL BLUFFS, AS TAKEN BY JAS. FLANAGAN.

Conference opened Friday Dec. 24th, 1847, at 11 o'clock, and was first addressed by elder Woodruff, in preparing the minds of the people for the business and council of the meeting. He made many good preparatory remarks, and was followed by Orson Pratt, who addressed the Conference in a masterly style, on the Presidency of and progress of the church; stating that the church had progressed rapidly, although we had everything to contend with, poverty, persecution, priestcraft, demagoguery, the press, and, worst of all, the opposition of apostates; and that in our unorganized state, and we had beaten them all and had the best prospect we ever had. He asked, what the apostates had accomplished, and where are they? He said they could hardly be called to remembrance; they had gone to oblivion—to the shades of night. Still the church was rolling on rapidly, and now, at this period of the church, they had to select a First Presidency, and they would admit the first argument of the apostates (viz., that the organization was not complete) was correct. Yet in our unorganized state we have beaten them. There was nothing against the church being in that state for a time. At the rise of the church many years had passed before there was a quorum of Twelve or Seventies, and who would say that the church did not prosper then. But it was not necessary for any more ordinations then. There are those in the church who have been ordained to all power in the kingdom of God, and it only needs the voice of prophecy to say who the individual shall be who should preside over the church. The calling of the Twelve is not to stay at home when the nations are perishing for salvation, but to go and unlock the gospel to those who are in darkness.

At 2 o'clock the meeting was opened by prayer. A. Lyman addressed the meeting. He made some general remarks on the gathering of the saints, the animation with which they should lay hold of the work and turn the world right side up. He then read a revelation which President Young handed him, given in the spring of 1847 on the organization, plan and covenants which saints had gone into to move all the poor of the church to the place where God shall say. Geo. A. Smith followed on the locating of the saints on the east side of the river. He says a few days ago they came over here to hold a Conference; the house was not large enough to hold the people, so they adjourned till they could build a meeting house, in three weeks (and mostly bad weather at that) they had built the largest log cabin he ever saw, 40 by 60 feet, with a recess of 26 feet in the north side for a stand, a fire place in the west end and three stoves. He said all who could go to the valley in the spring should go, and those who could not should move on this side of the river and go to preparing as fast as they could and raise provisions for those who should come on from the east; for the elders were going out to gather up all creation, and they wanted to send as many to the mountains as they possibly could, to the place where God had appointed. They were not going down, but up to the highest low place on earth. He said we had great privileges indeed—that last spring while they were banished from their homes, and houses smoking with the fire of mobs, (for they put fire to them,) that the same government called on them to go and fight their battles; so we had to send five hundred men to serve the Devil (government) in order to get the chance to serve God. He then gave three significations of sin. 1st. Original. 2d. Unpardonable. 3d. Total depravity. Original sin was chewing tobacco. Unpardonable sin was spitting all over the floor. And total depravity was driving down on the bosom. He impressed the necessity of helping the First Presidency off to the mountains, and of the saints being industrious in all things. Pres. B. Young said, as the brethren had been industrious in building the house they would not hurry the business too much, but would try and pay them for their trouble in good meetings.

Sat. 25th, Christmas, 10 o'clock. Meeting opened by singing. Prayer by Geo. A. Smith, who made some remarks on the high council, its rights and power. B. Young said he would make some remarks on the same subject. There was no law of the land to protect our rights on the Potawatamie lands, and it was necessary for us to make such laws as would afford protection until such time as the laws of Iowa might be extended to us, and advised the brethren to empower the high council and bishop's court to enact and enforce all righteous laws. The clerk was called upon to read the epistle of the Twelve to the brethren off in the Great Salt Lake City, in the great basin of North America. It pointed out the proper course to pursue in all matters of business, both spiritual and temporal. Stating that those who could not obey the laws of God should be visited with the judgments. Another epistle was read from the high council of the Salt Lake City to the council of the Twelve in Winter Quarters. It stated that their health was good; they had but 5 or 6 deaths. The weather had been mild and uniform, with two or three light frosts, which had done little or no injury, as the vegetation was all green and things prosperous. In short, ter was read to Pres. Young concerning some persons who were inclined to make their own laws, and disobey the general laws. Adjourned to 2 P. M.

Meeting opened by prayer by elder Benson. After singing the Clerk was called upon to read the religion of Illinois, as Pres. Young termed it, being a report of the State Convention held at Springfield in July 1847, refering to mob violence in reference to some ministers of the gospel. At the close of the reading the response was, go it Illinois. The Clerk then read the general epistle of the Twelve to all the saints in all the world, and to all kings, rulers, &c., both high and low. A letter was read from O. Hyde to G. A. Smith, on the propriety of starting all kinds of business for farming on Potawatamie lands, and all who made and passed counterfeit money should be cursed, and should always be poor, them and their seed after them, and should beg their bread. Pres. Young said he was thankful for the house to meet in, and requested the brethren to put a roof on it of shingles for the April Conference. The high priests quorum was then organized. Wm. Snow was elected President. Williams and Moses Clawson Counselors. They next organized the elders quorum. Joseph Clark was chosen Pres. Brothers Hopkins and Neily Counselors. Jas. Crogan and Philander Merrills were appointed Marshals of the camp of Israel on the east side the river Missouri. G. A. Smith says they want some men appointed to go into Iowa and acquaint themselves with the laws of the State and report the same to the church. Pres. Young spoke on the organization. He referred to his division of the camp, to be organized for the mountains in the spring. He says, last spring he sent all his teams to the valley with those who had to be helped, and now he had no teams to help himself. The brethren agreed to assist him to the valley.

Sunday, Dec. 26th. Conference met at 10 o'clock. The house was filled full. Bro. H. Miller arranged the congregation, and when all was quiet the meeting commenced by singing, and prayer by elder W. Woodruff. Elder Appleby then addressed the meeting on the signs of the times, the political state of the world, the revolutions of the governments, and restoration of the Jews. England and the Rothchilds were taking an active part in the gathering of Judah; that some forty-five or fifty thousand had located in Palestine, and that two millions were on their way to the holy city to rear the same. Adjourned.

At 2 P. M. the meeting commenced, and Joseph Young spoke about the elders moving their families away from the saints; that it was not right to let their wives and daughters mingle in such company as the corrupt Gentiles, for he was adverse to the idea.—He was followed by elder Kimball, who gave much instruction in principles and doctrine. He said, they who had committed crimes in private would yet be called to account for their conduct; that the elders should work righteousness and restore confidence, and claim the blessings of God and the power thereof, which would yet rest upon them so that the earth would quake when they spoke by the spirit of God. He said the Gentiles had been rejected and cut off, and would remain so until they were grafted in. He said he never wanted to go among the Gentiles again, and that he would not hold up any man in unrighteousness; would not even sustain his only son, but would deliver him up to be dealt with as the judgments of Israel might direct. He said before he would go and work and have his family among the Gentiles, he would work his bones off up to the elbows. He asked if all the wrongs which had been done to us would be suffered to pass unnoticed. Verily they should not; and the wrongs which had been done by those professing to be saints, should be had in remembrance. He also said that the standard had been raised by us in Zion, and that he was done mingling with the Gentiles; they should come to us, and not for us to run after them. Many other things were said. He was followed by elder Benson, who said it was right, and he would not detain the people, but would bear testimony to the truth. He said he had a mission east and wanted the prayers of the saints. He was opposed to unrighteousness, and that he waged war with all the Devils in hell; that he and Snow was going together to block the wheels, and to help him up hill. With his remarks the meeting closed.

Monday 27th, 10 o'clock. The band played some lively tunes. Bro. Miller arranged the congregation so as to seat as many persons as possible. The house was filled to overflowing. The band was called on to play "Joseph the Seer," which was lively and spirited, and animated the congregation, and seemed as much like a heavenly place as I was ever in. The meeting opened by Joseph Young. Kimball said if the house would come to order he had a few things to say before the congregation. He said that he felt like a father to the saints; that he was deeply interested in their welfare, and all the officers of the church ought to feel the same; and those who had defiled their bodies would not be visited by angels (females;) that many who held the priesthood had defiled themselves by unlawful intercourse with females, and it would yet be known who they were (strange;) said he could not mention names, but such men should wither and die and be damned and go to hell; that no man had any right to interfere with such things without they had received it from authority, and those who had been guilty of such things had better come to head quarters and (be authorized) confess their sins, and see if there was any way to be saved to name it, and if it took off their heads to do it up, and let them go to heaven headless rather than to damnation with a head; and if they did not make it known it would yet be known and come to light, and they should be exposed, for he and his brethren were root diggers and such things should be atoned for by the blood of the guilty, both man and woman; and those who could not abide the law of God need never go to the valley. Those who had done such things had violated their membership in the church, and had defiled their right to the priesthood. All should attend to family prayer, and those who do not attend to their family duties and prayers should not have the spirit of God, and would yet die disaffected and find fault with every thing in the church, and would curse the Twelve and die and go to hell. He says that brother Miller was the first man he ever heard preach the gospel. He had fallen away, and yet he should plead hard that he might be saved. He said that every person would have to be saved by their good works, they would have to save themselves; that giving the Twelve some potatoes, a little corn, and a little butter would not save them; the Twelve paid for what they got, and canceled their debts as they went along, and all who had not hoed their row well would have to take it up again in the resurrection morn and commence it where they had left off and hoe it again, and as God lives these things are so.

Joseph Young followed, and gave the same instructions to the Seventies; that although they had many liberties, still they had not the liberty to do wrong; that a man had better be a little unassuming, than to assume liberties that do not belong to him. Many of the Seventies did not think much of their calling and office, but dishonored their office and standing in the church; but their actions spoke louder than their words. We are at work at the big wheel, which would in its revolutions turn up in its course all good and noble spirits, and all who had abused their power in the church should yet lose it, while the men who were humble and worthy should have their places, and the unworthy men would be in hell truly. Let none who preside over little branches set himself up as big I! and crooked little you! but always be ready and humble enough to wash each others feet. He said he wanted to go to the valley next spring for his health, but had not the means to go with, unless the Seventies and God helped him. He said that no Pres. had a right to counsel in the quorum without an appeal to the head of the whole. He said redress wrongs with a carnal spirit, but paralyze the moral courage of our enemies with the spirit of God. The names of the Seventies were called, and only about 200 were present. He said in case all of the First Presidents of the whole Seventies should move west, what course should be taken to preside over those remaining was a question he should like to have answered.

Brigham arose and said, there were some 30 quorums of Seventies, and there should be seventy in each quorum. The right to preside belongs to the First Presidents, and could not be held by any other till their absence by death or otherwise might happen; that in the absence of the Twelve the right to preside over the church belonged to the First Presidents of the Seventies. He said that an organization of the quorums was not wanted here, and could not be done until we got to the valley, and who wanted to be with the First Presidents would have to come where they were. He said the Twelve would soon be scattered in all the world, and would call the Seventies and High Priests to help them; that we had a right to organize the church, and would do it. The Seventies were the very boys to bear off the kingdom of God, for the voice of the people say so. He said that Marks had written a letter to his sister, stating that he thought that Strang was the man to lead this church, although all his followers have left him. Stating that Sidney was done, and was now begging bread, and he hoped after the old man had been humbled enough that he would come back and be saved. He said if he had time he would preach on many points to the people. He would say one word on the resurrection; that but very few knew any thing about it; that the time had not come to ter was read to Pres. Young concerning some persons who were inclined to make their own laws, and disobey the general laws. Adjourned to 2 P. M.

Meeting opened by prayer by elder Benson. After singing the Clerk was called upon to read the religion of Illinois, as Pres. Young termed it, being a report of the State Convention held at Springfield in July 1847, refering to mob violence in reference to some ministers of the gospel. At the close of the reading the response was, go it Illinois. The Clerk then read the general epistle of the Twelve to all the saints in all the world, and to all kings, rulers, &c., both high and low. A letter was read from O. Hyde to G. A. Smith, on the propriety of starting all kinds of business for farming on Potawatamie lands, and all who made and passed counterfeit money should be cursed, and should always be poor, them and their seed after them, and should beg their bread. Pres. Young said he was thankful for the house to meet in, and requested the brethren to put a roof on it of shingles for the April Conference. The high priests quorum was then organized. Wm. Snow was elected President. Williams and Moses Clawson Counselors. They next organized the elders quorum. Joseph Clark was chosen Pres. Brothers Hopkins and Neily Counselors. Jas. Crogan and Philander Merrills were appointed Marshals of the camp of Israel on the east side the river Missouri. G. A. Smith says they want some men appointed to go into Iowa and acquaint themselves with the laws of the State and report the same to the church. Pres. Young spoke on the organization. He referred to his division of the camp, to be organized for the mountains in the spring. He says, last spring he sent all his teams to the valley with those who had to be helped, and now he had no teams to help himself. The brethren agreed to assist him to the valley.

Sunday, Dec. 26th. Conference met at 10 o'clock. The house was filled full. Bro. H. Miller arranged the congregation, and when all was quiet the meeting commenced by singing, and prayer by elder W. Woodruff. Elder Appleby then addressed the meeting on the signs of the times, the political state of the world, the revolutions of the governments, and restoration of the Jews. England and the Rothchilds were taking an active part in the gathering of Judah; that some forty-five or fifty thousand had located in Palestine, and that two millions were on their way to the holy city to rear the same. Adjourned.

At 2 P. M. the meeting commenced, and Joseph Young spoke about the elders moving their families away from the saints; that it was not right to let their wives and daughters mingle in such company as the corrupt Gentiles, for he was adverse to the idea.—He was followed by elder Kimball, who gave much instruction in principles and doctrine. He said, they who had committed crimes in private would yet be called to account for their conduct; that the elders should work righteousness and restore confidence, and claim the blessings of God and the power thereof, which would yet rest upon them so that the earth would quake when they spoke by the spirit of God. He said the Gentiles had been rejected and cut off, and would remain so until they were grafted in. He said he never wanted to go among the Gentiles again, and that he would not hold up any man in unrighteousness; would not even sustain his only son, but would deliver him up to be dealt with as the judgments of Israel might direct. He said before he would go and work and have his family among the Gentiles, he would work his bones off up to the elbows. He asked if all the wrongs which had been done to us would be suffered to pass unnoticed. Verily they should not; and the wrongs which had been done by those professing to be saints, should be had in remembrance. He also said that the standard had been raised by us in Zion, and that he was done mingling with the Gentiles; they should come to us, and not for us to run after them. Many other things were said. He was followed by elder Benson, who said it was right, and he would not detain the people, but would bear testimony to the truth. He said he had a mission east and wanted the prayers of the saints. He was opposed to unrighteousness, and that he waged war with all the Devils in hell; that he and Snow was going together to block the wheels, and to help him up hill. With his remarks the meeting closed.

Monday 27th, 10 o'clock. The band played some lively tunes. Bro. Miller arranged the congregation so as to seat as many persons as possible. The house was filled to overflowing. The band was called on to play "Joseph the Seer," which was lively and spirited, and animated the congregation, and seemed as much like a heavenly place as I was ever in. The meeting opened by Joseph Young. Kimball said if the house would come to order he had a few things to say before the congregation. He said that he felt like a father to the saints; that he was deeply interested in their welfare, and all the officers of the church ought to feel the same; and those who had defiled their bodies would not be visited by angels (females;) that many who held the priesthood had defiled themselves by unlawful intercourse with females, and it would yet be known who they were (strange;) said he could not mention names, but such men should wither and die and be damned and go to hell; that no man had any right to interfere with such things without they had received it from authority, and those who had been guilty of such things had better come to head quarters and (be authorized) confess their sins, and see if there was any way to be saved to name it, and if it took off their heads to do it up, and let them go to heaven headless rather than to damnation with a head; and if they did not make it known it would yet be known and come to light, and they should be exposed, for he and his brethren were root diggers and such things should be atoned for by the blood of the guilty, both man and woman; and those who could not abide the law of God need never go to the valley. Those who had done such things had violated their membership in the church, and had defiled their right to the priesthood. All should attend to family prayer, and those who do not attend to their family duties and prayers should not have the spirit of God, and would yet die disaffected and find fault with every thing in the church, and would curse the Twelve and die and go to hell. He says that brother Miller was the first man he ever heard preach the gospel. He had fallen away, and yet he should plead hard that he might be saved. He said that every person would have to be saved by their good works, they would have to save themselves; that giving the Twelve some potatoes, a little corn, and a little butter would not save them; the Twelve paid for what they got, and canceled their debts as they went along, and all who had not hoed their row well would have to take it up again in the resurrection morn and commence it where they had left off and hoe it again, and as God lives these things are so.

Joseph Young followed, and gave the same instructions to the Seventies; that although they had many liberties, still they had not the liberty to do wrong; that a man had better be a little unassuming, than to assume liberties that do not belong to him. Many of the Seventies did not think much of their calling and office, but dishonored their office and standing in the church; but their actions spoke louder than their words. We are at work at the big wheel, which would in its revolutions turn up in its course all good and noble spirits, and all who had abused their power in the church should yet lose it, while the men who were humble and worthy should have their places, and the unworthy men would be in hell truly. Let none who preside over little branches set himself up as big I! and crooked little you! but always be ready and humble enough to wash each others feet. He said he wanted to go to the valley next spring for his health, but had not the means to go with, unless the Seventies and God helped him. He said that no Pres. had a right to counsel in the quorum without an appeal to the head of the whole. He said redress wrongs with a carnal spirit, but paralyze the moral courage of our enemies with the spirit of God. The names of the Seventies were called, and only about 200 were present. He said in case all of the First Presidents of the whole Seventies should move west, what course should be taken to preside over those remaining was a question he should like to have answered.

Brigham arose and said, there were some 30 quorums of Seventies, and there should be seventy in each quorum. The right to preside belongs to the First Presidents, and could not be held by any other till their absence by death or otherwise might happen; that in the absence of the Twelve the right to preside over the church belonged to the First Presidents of the Seventies. He said that an organization of the quorums was not wanted here, and could not be done until we got to the valley, and who wanted to be with the First Presidents would have to come where they were. He said the Twelve would soon be scattered in all the world, and would call the Seventies and High Priests to help them; that we had a right to organize the church, and would do it. The Seventies were the very boys to bear off the kingdom of God, for the voice of the people say so. He said that Marks had written a letter to his sister, stating that he thought that Strang was the man to lead this church, although all his followers have left him. Stating that Sidney was done, and was now begging bread, and he hoped after the old man had been humbled enough that he would come back and be saved. He said if he had time he would preach on many points to the people. He would say one word on the resurrection; that but very few know any thing about it; that the time had not come to understand it yet, for we had not yet come to it. He said we had the keys of the resurrection. The same angel who rolled away the stone from the sepulcher of Jesus and unlocked it to him and bade him arise, but when the Savior had arisen the angel would not suffer any body to touch him. Why was that? What has Jesus to do yet before his resurrection was completed? Answer it then, ye wise men. The same angel holds the keys of the resurrection now, and no man on earth had ever received them from him. If any inquire where Zion is, tell them it is America. If any ask what is Zion, tell them the pure in heart. He said that he felt to rejoice that it was one of the best days to him he ever saw in the world, as brother Kimball said yesterday, it should be the best the saints ever saw.

It was next proposed that we should have a day of jubilee in the big house on the last Saturday in January, and all (none excepted) are invited to attend. Joseph said that we had already commenced it, and time might say when it would end. Joseph asked if the Seventies on the east side of the river would bring him a bushel of corn each, and if so, bring it to the jubilee. The band gave another piece of music. "Come, come, ye saints," was then sung by brother Kay. G. A. Smith, after a recapitulation of the glorious doctrine, keys and music which we had received from the brethren, stated that he had to stay with those who stopped at Council Bluffs to preach the gospel, to gather to the great Salt Lake Valley of the mountains. He wanted those who remained to raise a tremendous large crop of potatoes, corn, wheat and buckwheat, &c. He wanted to see enterprise scare the people, and schools established in every neighborhood, and for all the young stock to be got and raise cattle, horses, pigs, and raise all that they possibly could; that the land on which we lived was a blessing from God, and should not be bought or sold nor any timber wasted; that we ought to act as honorable with each other as the Potawatamies had done with us when we came here, and all do right; he delighted in their duties, their interchange and labor, and the Lord would bless them in their crops and herds; for the brethren not to ask too great a price for their land, so as to oppress the poor; that there was many poor saints, who, if they had a little spot of land, could support themselves. G. A. Smith says he will do all in his power to help the brethren to the valley as fast as possible, and that he could preach or work as the case might be. The band played another tune, which was indeed good.

Elder G. A. Smith asked if they would lay him up a few log cabins at the time of the jubilee. It was moved that brother Henry Miller oversee the job, and carried. Brother Miller expressed himself on the subject, that it could be done, and electioneered in pretty good terms for help to accomplish the work, and have it done at the jubilee or not come to it at all. Elder O. Pratt said that there was some business to come before the Conference before it closed; that in connection with farming and raising grain that there would have to be some mills to grind it, and another item of business was to choose three First Presidents of the church, to preside over the whole church; the organization of the church should be completed, and so defeat the Devil and carry out the work of the Lord. He referred to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants to show how this was to be done; that the time had come when the hands of the Twelve must be liberated by the power and spirit of their calling, to go and push the people together from the ends of the earth to head quarters, and there would be men to lead and guide them to the great and glorious scenes which are yet to be unfolded to their view. G. A. Smith asked how Joseph Smith received his power to preside over the church. And answered, from Peter, James and John, and that power was conferred by him to the Twelve, and they had power to appoint First Presidents of the church. The question was then called for whether the people wanted their First Presidents or not. The house responded unanimously.

A. Lyman spoke on the subject, and said the idea of having their First Presidents in the church was nothing new; that it all had been arranged long since by the council, and there was no danger of going wrong; that all bodies must have a head, and all intelligence must come from the head. And the time had come when ends of the church could not be saved without a head, and the very man who was to be the head had been at the head all the time. He asked who the head was amenable to. And answered, to his head; for no bodies, however great, were so high that they had no head; and that the time had come when the Twelve must lead out the master spirits of the kingdom; must go to the east, west, north and south, and plant the seeds of eternal life. It was moved and seconded that Brigham Young should be our First President. It was carried unanimously. It was next moved and carried that Heber C. Kimball be the first Councilor of Pres. B. Young. Carried unanimously. It was next moved and seconded that Dr. W. Richards be appointed second Councilor. Carried unanimously. It was moved that John Smith be appointed a Patriarch over the whole church. Carried unanimously. The band played a choice piece of music.

Pres. B. Young said the time had come to dismiss the meeting; that the meeting had been of the best kind, the good spirits had been with us all the time; that joy and peace had filled every bosom, and that if any had come here with any animosity against us they had lost it before they were among us long. He blessed the saints in the name of the God of Israel, and that he had but little fault to find with any of the saints; that he would do the best he could for the church, and that he would not be burthened or trammeled by any body; that the moves of the church had all been directed right every time, and that our sufferings and trials had not come on account of our wickedness, but the hand of God had directed them in all of their moves, and that all of their moves were right, and if any one disputed it let him say wherein it was wrong, and say how it could be bettered. The band then played, when the Conference was dismissed to meet on the 6th of April, 1848. The number of the congregation was considered about 12,000. In the evening the brethren met to praise the Lord by making merry in the dance. After the house was arranged, the meeting was opened by singing and prayer. President Young led the first figure. The next the Presidents of the Seventies were called on. Then the High Priests, and the whole was conducted in the best order, and came off at 11 o'clock, P. M.

☞ As the best comment on the foregoing, we here insert the first Apostolic Letter of the Twelve after Joseph's martyrdom:—

BELOVED BRETHREN:—For as much as the saints have been called to suffer deep affliction and persecution, and also to mourn the loss of our beloved prophet, and also our patriarch, who have suffered a cruel martyrdom for the testimony of Jesus, have voluntarily yielded themselves to cruel murderers, who had sworn to take their lives, and thus like good shepherds have laid down their lives for the sheep, therefore it becomes necessary for us to address you at this time on several important subjects.

You are now without a prophet present with you in the flesh to guide you, but you are not without apostles, who hold the keys of power to seal on earth that which shall be sealed in heaven, and to preside over all the affairs of the church in all the world, being still under the direction of the same God, and being dictated by the same spirit, having the same manifestations of the Holy Ghost to dictate all the affairs of the church in all the world, to build up the kingdom upon the foundation that the prophet Joseph has laid, who still holds the keys of this last dispensation, and will hold them to all eternity, as a king and priest unto the most high God, ministering in heaven, on earth, or among the spirits of the departed dead, as seemeth good to him who sent him.

LET NO MAN PRESUME FOR A MOMENT THAT HIS PLACE WILL BE FILLED BY ANOTHER; FOR, REMEMBER, HE STANDS IN HIS OWN PLACE, AND ALWAYS WILL; AND THE TWELVE APOSTLES OF THIS DISPENSATION STAND IN THEIR OWN PLACE AND ALWAYS WILL, BOTH IN TIME AND IN ETERNITY, TO MINISTER, PRESIDE AND REGULATE THE AFFAIRS OF THE WHOLE CHURCH.

How vain are the imaginations of the children of men, to presume for a moment that the slaughter of one, two or a hundred of the leaders of this church could destroy an organization so perfect in itself and so harmoniously arranged that it will stand while one member of it is left alive upon the earth. Brethren, be not alarmed, for if the Twelve should be taken away, still there are powers and offices in existence which will bear the kingdom of God triumphantly victorious in all the world. This church may have prophets many, and apostles many, but they are all to stand in due time in their proper organization, under the direction of those who hold the keys.

On the subject of the gathering, let it be distinctly understood that the city of Nauvoo and the Temple of our Lord are to continue to be built up according to the pattern which has been commenced, and which has progressed with such rapidity thus far.

The city must be built up and supported by the gathering of those who have capital, and are willing to lay it out for the erection of every branch of industry and manufacture, which is necessary for the employment and support of the poor, or of those who depend wholly on their labor; while farmers who have capital must come on and purchase farms in the adjoining country, and improve and nderstand it yet, for we had not yet come to it. He said we had he keys of the resurrection. The same angel who rolled away the tone from the sepulcher of Jesus and unlocked it to him and bade im arise, but when the Savior had arisen the angel would not suf- r any body to touch him. Why was that? What has Jesus to o yet before his resurrection was completed? Answer it then, ye rise men. The same angel holds the keys of the resurrection now, nd no man on earth had ever received them from him. If any in- uire where Zion is, tell them it is America. If any ask what is ion, tell them the pure in heart. He said that he felt to rejoice hat it was one of the best days to him he ever saw in the world, as rother Kimball said yesterday, it should be the best the saints ev- r saw.

It was next proposed that we should have a day of jubilee in the ig house on the last Saturday in January, and all (none excepted) re invited to attend. Joseph said that we had already commenced , and time might say when it would end. Joseph asked if the eventies on the east side of the river would bring him a bushel of orn each, and if so, bring it to the jubilee. The band gave another iece of music. "Come, come, ye saints," was then sung by broth- r Kay. G. A. Smith, after a recapitulation of the glorious doctrine, eys and music which we had received from the brethren, stated hat he had to stay with those who stopped at Council Bluffs to reach the gospel, to gather to the great Salt Lake Valley of the mountains. He wanted those who remained to raise a tremendous arge crop of potatoes, corn, wheat and buckwheat, &c. He want- d to see enterprise scare the people, and schools established in ev- ry neighborhood, and for all the young stock to be got and raise attle, horses, pigs, and raise all that they possibly could; that the and on which we lived was a blessing from God, and should not e bought or sold nor any timber wasted; that we ought to act as onorable with each other as the Potawatamies had done with us when we came here, and all do right; he delighted in their duties, heir interchange and labor, and the Lord would bless them in their rops and herds; for the brethren not to ask too great a price for heir land, so as to oppress the poor; that there was many poor aints, who, if they had a little spot of land, could support them- elves. G. A. Smith says he will do all in his power to help the rethren to the valley as fast as possible, and that he could preach r work as the case might be. The band played another tune, hich was indeed good.

Elder G. A. Smith asked if they would lay him up a few log cab- ns at the time of the jubilee. It was moved that brother Henry iller oversee the job, and carried. Brother Miller expressed him- elf on the subject, that it could be done, and electioneered in pretty ood terms for help to accomplish the work, and have it done at the ubilee or not come to it at all. Elder O. Pratt said that there was ome business to come before the Conference before it closed; that n connection with farming and raising grain that there would have o be some mills to grind it, and another item of business was to hoose three First Presidents of the church, to preside over the whole hurch; the organization of the church should be completed, and so efeat the Devil and carry out the work of the Lord. He referred o the Book of Doctrine and Covenants to show how this was to be one; that the time had come when the hands of the Twelve must e liberated by the power and spirit of their calling, to go and push he people together from the ends of the earth to head quarters, and here would be men to lead and guide them to the great and glorious cenes which are yet to be unfolded to their view. G. A. Smith sked how Joseph Smith received his power to preside over the hurch. And answered, from Peter, James and John, and that pow- r was conferred by him to the Twelve, and they had power to ap- oint First Presidents of the church. The question was then called or whether the people wanted their First Presidents or not. The ouse responded unanimously.

A. Lyman spoke on the subject, and said the idea of having their irst Presidents in the church was nothing new; that it all had een arranged long since by the council, and there was no danger f going wrong; that all bodies must have a head, and all intelli- ence must come from the head. And the time had come when ends f the church could not be saved without a head, and the very man who was to be the head had been at the head all the time. He ask- d who the head was amenable to. And answered, to his head; for no bodies, however great, were so high that they had no head; nd that the time had come when the Twelve must lead out the aster spirits of the kingdom; must go to the east, west, north and outh, and plant the seeds of eternal life. It was moved and secon- ed that Brigham Young should be our First President. It was carried unanimously. It was next moved and carried that Heber C. Kimball be the first Councilor of Pres. B. Young. Carried unanimously. It was next moved and seconded that Dr. W. Richards be appointed second Councilor. Carried unanimously. It was moved that John Smith be appointed a Patriarch over the whole church. Carried unanimously. The band played a choice piece of music.

Pres. B. Young said the time had come to dismiss the meeting; that the meeting had been of the best kind, the good spirits had been with us all the time; that joy and peace had filled every bosom, and that if any had come here with any animosity against us they had lost it before they were among us long. He blessed the saints in the name of the God of Israel, and that he had but little fault to find with any of the saints; that he would do the best he could for the church, and that he would not be burthened or trammeled by any body; that the moves of the church had all been directed right every time, and that our sufferings and trials had not come on account of our wickedness, but the hand of God had directed them in all of their moves, and that all of their moves were right, and if any one disputed it let him say wherein it was wrong, and say how it could be bettered. The band then played, when the Conference was dismissed to meet on the 6th of April, 1848. The number of the congregation was considered about 12,000. In the evening the brethren met to praise the Lord by making merry in the dance. After the house was arranged, the meeting was opened by singing and prayer. President Young led the first figure. The next the Presidents of the Seventies were called on. Then the High Priests, and the whole was conducted in the best order, and came off at 11 o'clock, P. M.

☛ As the best comment on the foregoing, we here insert the first Apostolic Letter of the Twelve after Joseph's martyrdom:—

Beloved Brethren:—For as much as the saints have been called to suffer deep affliction and persecution, and also to mourn the loss of our beloved prophet, and also our patriarch, who have suffered a cruel martyrdom for the testimony of Jesus, have voluntarily yielded themselves to cruel murderers, who had sworn to take their lives, and thus like good shepherds have laid down their lives for the sheep, therefore it becomes necessary for us to address you at this time on several important subjects.

You are now without a prophet present with you in the flesh to guide you, but you are not without apostles, who hold the keys of power to seal on earth that which shall be sealed in heaven, and to preside over all the affairs of the church in all the world, being still under the direction of the same God, and being dictated by the same spirit, having the same manifestations of the Holy Ghost to dictate all the affairs of the church in all the world, to build up the kingdom upon the foundation that the prophet Joseph has laid, who still holds the keys of this last dispensation, and will hold them to all eternity, as a king and priest unto the most high God, ministering in heaven, on earth, or among the spirits of the departed dead, as seemeth good to him who sent him.

LET NO MAN PRESUME FOR A MOMENT THAT HIS PLACE WILL BE FILLED BY ANOTHER; for, remember, he stands in his own place, and always will; and the Twelve Apostles of this dispensation stand in their own place and always will, both in time and in eternity, to minister, preside and regulate the affairs of the whole church.

How vain are the imaginations of the children of men, to presume for a moment that the slaughter of one, two or a hundred of the leaders of this church could destroy an organization so perfect in itself and so harmoniously arranged that it will stand while one member of it is left alive upon the earth. Brethren, be not alarmed, for if the Twelve should be taken away, still there are powers and offices in existence which will bear the kingdom of God triumphantly victorious in all the world. This church may have prophets many, and apostles many, but they are all to stand in due time in their proper organization, under the direction of those who hold the keys.

On the subject of the gathering, let it be distinctly understood that the city of Nauvoo and the Temple of our Lord are to continue to be built up according to the pattern which has been commenced, and which has progressed with such rapidity thus far.

The city must be built up and supported by the gathering of those who have capital, and are willing to lay it out for the erection of every branch of industry and manufacture, which is necessary for the employment and support of the poor, or of those who depend wholly on their labor; while farmers who have capital must come on and purchase farms in the adjoining country, and improve and cultivate the same. In this way all may enjoy plenty, and our infant city may grow and flourish, and be strengthened an hundred fold; and unless this is done, it is impossible for the gathering to progress, because those who have no other dependence cannot live together without industry and employment.

Therefore, let capitalists hasten here, and they may be assured we have nerves, sinews, fingers, skill and ingenuity sufficient in our midst to carry on all the necessary branches of industry.

The Temple must be completed by a regular system of tithing, according to the commandments of the Lord, which he has given as a law unto this church, by the mouth of his servant Joseph.

Therefore, as soon as the TWELVE have proceeded to a full and complete organization of the branches abroad, let every member proceed immediately to tithe himself or herself a tenth of all their property and money, and pay it into the hands of such bishops as have been or shall be appointed by them to receive the same for the building of the Temple or the support of the priesthood, according to the scriptures, and the revelations of God; and then let them continue to pay in a tenth of their income from that time forth, for this is a law unto this church, as much binding on their consciences as any other law or ordinance. And let this law or ordinance be henceforth taught to all who present themselves for admission into this church, that they may know the sacrifice and tithing which the Lord requires, and perform it; or else not curse the church with a mock membership, as many have done heretofore. This will furnish a steady public fund for all sacred purposes, and save the leaders from constant debt and embarrassment, and members can then employ the remainder of their capital in every branch of industry, enterprise and charity, as seemeth them good; only holding themselves in readiness to be advised in such manner as shall be for the good of themselves and the whole society; and thus all things can move in harmony, and for the general benefit and satisfaction of all concerned.

The gospel in its fullness and purity must now roll forth through every neighborhood of this wide spread country, and to all the world; and MILLIONS WILL AWAKE to its truths and obey its precepts; and the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. BRIGHAM YOUNG, Pres. of the Twelve.

Nauvoo, August 15th, 1844.

☛ We are most happy to give place to the following excellent letter of brother Isaac Haven, late from Cheltenham, England:—

Voree, July 25th, 1848.

TO THE BRETHREN IN PHILADELPHIA:—As many of you requested me to give you information from Voree immediately after my arrival here, all about Voree, as to the country, its prospects, its business, the prosperity of the church, &c., I take this occasion to answer you all, as well as all the saints of my acquaintance by this communication. In the first place, Voree is just the best place in the world for a saint to dwell and get a living in. I do not offer you this as my judgment in particular, for if I had gone to choose the place it is quite likely I should have chosen some other. But as God has chosen it, and as he understands all these things better than any of us, I have no kind of doubt it is the very best place.—As to the prosperity of the church, it is perfectly satisfactory to me. We have no great show here. The men of unsound principle that rushed in here to be some great ones are gone. There are no hungry speculators here, getting rich by speculations in town lots. As a consequence, there is no great cry in the Gentile papers about the wonderful progress of Voree. But there are between 150 and 200 saints joined together in the order of Enoch, keeping the commandments of God in unity and confidence. There are also about the same number living about who are not in this order. And all together are keeping up the discipline and order of the church faithfully.

Around and among them are a good number who once belonged to the church, but who now make it their business to beset every new comer with all sorts of the vilest and most wicked accusations against the saints, especially the prophet, in which they not unfrequently succeed in destroying their faith. I apprehend that the faith thus destroyed is of that sort which rather believes in revelation, but at the same time can hardly take the word of God without an endorser. That is, cannot trust to obey the commandments of God unless some good honest man with whom they are acquainted can assure them that it is safe to do so, and that they can live by it. If any one thinks me such an honest man and wishes my opinion whether they can here realize what God has prommised to the faithful who gather here, I have no objection to saying that Voree is a very pleasent country place, hardly having the appearance of a town, and almost destitute of public houses. Dwelling houses and work shops stand in the midst of cultivated fields, some of them far distant from the roads, and the head quarters of the order of Enoch are on the top of the Hill of Promise surrounded by an ancient forest of oak and hickory. Stretching away to he north is Gardner's prairie, consisting of some four thousand acres of grain fields with scarcely a tree in the entire space. The White river meadows at the south are nearly as extensive. The whole are surrounded by hills of moderate height, generally covered with timber. The place is healthy. Men who have a moderate amount of capital can successfully pursue almost any honest business.—But as all kinds of work shops are not established, those who are not able to set up business might not find employ to their liking.

Good and faithful brethren, whether rich or poor, who are willing to give all they possess for the gospel can share all their possessions in common with their brethren of the order of Enoch. But any Ananias that wishes to keep back a part had better keep the whole and save his credit. The roads are good, and the country, though quite new, presents nearly all the advantages of old settled regions. But none of these facts have the least influence on me.—Were it the worst country I ever saw, as it is the place God has called the saints to, I should be equally satisfied, believing that all his works are well done, not having the least idea of sitting in judgment on his ways and commandments. ISAAC HAVEN.

☛ Railing words begets strife, strife begets enmity and enmity begets an open personal war in the church, and both expose themselves to the manifest contempt and disrespect of all reasonable men, to the great exultation of infidels, and all classes of sinners take occasion to say, we would not do worse.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

cultivate the same. In this way all may enjoy plenty, and our infant city may grow and flourish, and be strengthened an hundred fold; and unless this is done, it is impossible for the gathering to progress, because those who have no other dependence cannot live together without industry and employment.

Therefore, let capitalists hasten here, and they may be assured we have nerves, sinews, fingers, skill and ingenuity sufficient in our midst to carry on all the necessary branches of industry.

The Temple must be completed by a regular system of tithing, according to the commandments of the Lord, which he has given as a law unto this church, by the mouth of his servant Joseph.

Therefore, as soon as the TWELVE have proceeded to a full and complete organization of the branches abroad, let every member proceed immediately to tithe himself or herself a tenth of all their property and money, and pay it into the hands of such bishops as have been or shall be appointed by them to receive the same for the building of the Temple or the support of the priesthood, according to the scriptures, and the revelations of God; and then let them continue to pay in a tenth of their income from that time forth, for this is a law unto this church, as much binding on their consciences as any other law or ordinance. And let this law or ordinance be henceforth taught to all who present themselves for admission into this church, that they may know the sacrifice and tithing which the Lord requires, and perform it; or else not curse the church with a mock membership, as many have done heretofore. This will furnish a steady public fund for all sacred purposes, and save the leaders from constant debt and embarrassment, and members can then employ the remainder of their capital in every branch of industry, enterprise and charity, as seemeth them good; only holding themselves in readiness to be advised in such manner as shall be for the good of themselves and the whole society; and thus all things can move in harmony, and for the general benefit and satisfaction of all concerned.

The gospel in its fullness and purity must now roll forth through every neighborhood of this wide spread country, and to all the world; and MILLIONS WILL AWAKE to its truths and obey its precepts; and the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. BRIGHAM YOUNG, Pres. of the Twelve.

Nauvoo, August 15th, 1844.

☞ We are most happy to give place to the following excellent letter of brother Isaac Haven, late from Cheltenham, England:—

Voree, July 25th, 1848.

TO THE BRETHREN IN PHILADELPHIA:—As many of you requested me to give you information from Voree immediately after my arrival here, all about Voree, as to the country, its prospects, its business, the prosperity of the church, &c., I take this occasion to answer you all, as well as all the saints of my acquaintance by this communication. In the first place, Voree is just the best place in the world for a saint to dwell and get a living in. I do not offer you this as my judgment in particular, for if I had gone to choose the place it is quite likely I should have chosen some other. But as God has chosen it, and as he understands all these things better than any of us, I have no kind of doubt it is the very best place.—As to the prosperity of the church, it is perfectly satisfactory to me. We have no great show here. The men of unsound principle that rushed in here to be some great ones are gone. There are no hungry speculators here, getting rich by speculations in town lots. As a consequence, there is no great cry in the Gentile papers about the wonderful progress of Voree. But there are between 150 and 200 saints joined together in the order of Enoch, keeping the commandments of God in unity and confidence. There are also about the same number living about who are not in this order. And all together are keeping up the discipline and order of the church faithfully.

Around and among them are a good number who once belonged to the church, but who now make it their business to beset every new comer with all sorts of the vilest and most wicked accusations against the saints, especially the prophet, in which they not unfrequently succeed in destroying their faith. I apprehend that the faith thus destroyed is of that sort which rather believes in revelation, but at the same time can hardly take the word of God without an endorser. That is, cannot trust to obey the commandments of God unless some good honest man with whom they are acquainted can assure them that it is safe to do so, and that they can live by it. If any one thinks me such an honest man and wishes my opinion whether they can here realize what God has prommised to the faithful who gather here, I have no objection to saying that Voree is a very pleasent country place, hardly having the appearance of a town, and almost destitute of public houses. Dwelling houses and work shops stand in the midst of cultivated fields, some of them far distant from the roads, and the head quarters of the order of Enoch are on the top of the Hill of Promise surrounded by an ancient forest of oak and hickory. Stretching away to he north is Gardner's prairie, consisting of some four thousand acres of grain fields with scarcely a tree in the entire space. The White river meadows at the south are nearly as extensive. The whole are surrounded by hills of moderate height, generally covered with timber. The place is healthy. Men who have a moderate amount of capital can successfully pursue almost any honest business.—But as all kinds of work shops are not established, those who are not able to set up business might not find employ to their liking.

Good and faithful brethren, whether rich or poor, who are willing to give all they possess for the gospel can share all their possessions in common with their brethren of the order of Enoch. But any Ananias that wishes to keep back a part had better keep the whole and save his credit. The roads are good, and the country, though quite new, presents nearly all the advantages of old settled regions. But none of these facts have the least influence on me.—Were it the worst country I ever saw, as it is the place God has called the saints to, I should be equally satisfied, believing that all his works are well done, not having the least idea of sitting in judgment on his ways and commandments. ISAAC HAVEN.

☞ Railing words begets strife, strife begets enmity and enmity begets an open personal war in the church, and both expose themselves to the manifest contempt and disrespect of all reasonable men, to the great exultation of infidels, and all classes of sinners take occasion to say, we would not do worse.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 21.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, AUG. 10, 1848. [WHOLE No. 85.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Elizabeth, Ill., July 23d, 1848.

BROTHER BENJAMIN :—It is an old saying, three times and out. This is the third letter that I have commenced, and if this does not get finished it is doubtful whether you will not wait a while longer before you get an answer to your letter. Brother Samuel and Rebecca paid us a visit a few weeks since. Truly they were welcome visitors. I perceive that they are strong in the belief that Mr. Strang is Joseph's legal successor. From what I learn from them Mr. Strang considers no sacrifice too great for the cause in which he is engaged. His personal sacrifices certainly have been and are great, be the position true or false that he occupies. I have received a number of papers from Samuel, and you will please to present him my thanks for the same. Previous however to their reception I obtained several that came from Voree by way of L. George.—They, in connection with those your brother sent me, afford a good deal of interesting reading matter. I have looked them all over and over again and again. Mr. Strang's writings generally are bold and energetic. His controversy with the Catholics evinces a bold and daring spirit rare to find in this age, and must inevitably bring upon him the anathemas of those whose crafts are endangered by the same.

I have read his remarks on the epistle of the Twelve, together with his exposition of certain paragraphs from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and am satisfied that Mr. Strang has made the most out of them in his favor that can be made, and yet there is a something in the right of Presidency, the way and manner of appointment, how and what way a President of the high priesthood shall be ordained, has not as yet been told. In one of my former letters that I have not sent I dwelt considerably upon this, and as I saw it would exceed the limits of the sheet I thought best to throw it by and merely point out one error of Mr. Strang's, which may serve as a key to unlock the rest. This, brother Benjamin, I do with the best of feelings for you and Mr. Strang, (a gent. by the by I have never seen,) and whatever may be the result I sincerely hope that it may not mar the good feelings that have so long existed between us.

Mr. Strang, in his remarks on the Brighamite epistle as he calls it, after refering to sec. iii. par. 11 book of D. & C. and a number of other sections and paragraphs, sums up the whole in so many words as these: This puts the whole matter beyond successful controversy to the contrary, that the three high priests referred to are not and cannot be the First Presidency of the church. His reference to the Presidency of the high priests quorum, their names, manner of appointment, his exertions to palm them off as the three referred to in sec. iii. p. 11, D. & C., forcibly remind me of the exertions of a skillful crafty lawyer with a hard case on his hands. And let me tell you if the gent. is correct in all other positions (which by the by I question) he is most assuredly a long way astray in this.

My opinion in this matter is no better than Mr. Strang's without proof. And the test is, if we speak not according to the word of God, there is no light in us. Now, then, to the word of God, which is the alpha and omega of the matter. D. & C. sec. iii. p. 11 :—"Of the Melchisedec priesthood three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the Presidency of the church." This is what God says about it.—Mr. Strang says, refering to his arguments and references, this puts the whole matter beyond successful controversy, that they are not the First Presidency. Whilst God says, positively, they are the Presidency of the church. This I consider an assential point in Strangism, as it is called; for if it can be made apparent from the word that God has made a wise provision for any contingency that the church is or could be subject to, and that a revelation of more ancient date than Mr. Strang's particularizing and showing who of the Melchisedec priesthood had a right to the Presidency according to the oath and covenant of God, and that the manner of appointment should be by consent of the church, the ordination by the direction of the same, and this order never to be deviated from, it will certainly make against Strangism, so called. If you still doubt the three spoken of being the First Presidency, I would ask, are they not Presidents of the church? And if so, are they not of the Melchisedec priesthood? Most assuredly they are Presidents of the high priesthood, and not of one of the quorums of that priesthood, as Mr. Strang would have his followers believe. The Melchisedec priesthood has power, &c. See D. & C. sec. iii. p. 3 and 4.

Bro. Benjamin, as I told you at the commencement, I have hurried this through, and I sent it along just as it is. You can make any use of it you please. I am not particularly anxious to invite discussion, as my time will not permit if I get my health, if I do not I would as soon write as not. Benjamin, I candidly acknowledge that I do not believe the premises occupied by Mr. Strang to be tenable. And although he is a skillful lawyer, if I have time I am willing to exchange a few shots with him. If you have truth, I want it. If you have not, you ought to know it. You will please to write on the receipt of this. Give our love to all. Say to Phineas we sympathize with him in the loss of his excellent companion.

Good by. Z. H. GURLEY.

MR. Z. H. GURLEY :—Bro. Benjamin Wright has put your letter into my hands, and I most cheerfully accept the encounter you propose, and in justice must give you the credit of being the first man I have ever found who was willing to defend Brighamism—if indeed you mean so much by what you say. I have severally and personally met Orson Hyde, John Taylor, E. T. Benson and P. P. Pratt and done every thing that a gentleman could do to call them out, but in vain. In these gentlemen I recognized some of the best talent of the age, great experience in debating, and a commanding influence among the saints. Yet in the presence of their own converts when I was a total stranger they have positively, pertinaciously and rudely refused all discussion. I can attribute such conduct in them to nothing but conscious weakness of their cause.

Some of their friends have endeavored to excuse them on the pre-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 21.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, AUG. 10, 1848. [WHOLE No. 85.

GOSPEL HERALD.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Elizabeth, Ill., July 23d, 1848.

BROTHER BENJAMIN:—It is an old saying, three times and out. This is the third letter that I have commenced, and if this does not get finished it is doubtful whether you will not wait a while longer before you get an answer to your letter. Brother Samuel and Rebecca paid us a visit a few weeks since. Truly they were welcome visitors. I perceive that they are strong in the belief that Mr. Strang is Joseph's legal successor. From what I learn from them Mr. Strang considers no sacrifice too great for the cause in which he is engaged. His personal sacrifices certainly have been and are great, be the position true or false that he occupies. I have received a number of papers from Samuel, and you will please to present him my thanks for the same. Previous however to their reception I obtained several that came from Voree by way of L. George.—They, in connection with those your brother sent me, afford a good deal of interesting reading matter. I have looked them all over and [illegible] and energetic. His controversy with the Catholics evinces a bold and daring spirit rare to find in this age, and must inevitably bring upon him the anathemas of those whose crafts are endangered by the same.

I have read his remarks on the epistle of the Twelve, together with his exposition of certain paragraphs from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and am satisfied that Mr. Strang has made the most out of them in his favor that can be made, and yet there is a something in the right of Presidency, the way and manner of appointment, how and what way a President of the high priesthood shall be ordained, has not as yet been told. In one of my former letters that I have not sent I dwelt considerably upon this, and as I saw it would exceed the limits of the sheet I thought best to throw it by and merely point out one error of Mr. Strang's, which may serve as a key to unlock the rest. This, brother Benjamin, I do with the best of feelings for you and Mr. Strang, (a gent. by the by I have never seen,) and whatever may be the result I sincerely hope that it may not mar the good feelings that have so long existed between us.

Mr. Strang, in his remarks on the Brighamite epistle as he calls it, after refering to sec. iii. par. 11 book of D. & C. and a number of other sections and paragraphs, sums up the whole in so many words as these: This puts the whole matter beyond successful controversy to the contrary, that the three high priests referred to are not and cannot be the First Presidency of the church. His reference to the Presidency of the high priests quorum, their names, manner of appointment, his exertions to palm them off as the three referred to in sec. iii. p. 11, D. & C., forcibly remind me of the exertions of a skillful crafty lawyer with a hard case on his hands. And let me tell you if the gent. is correct in all other positions (which by the by I question) he is most assuredly a long way astray in this.

My opinion in this matter is no better than Mr. Strang's without proof. And the test is, if we speak not according to the word of God, there is no light in us. Now, then, to the word of God, which is the alpha and omega of the matter. D. & C. sec. iii. p. 11:—"Of the Melchisedec priesthood three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the Presidency of the church." This is what God says about it.—Mr. Strang says, refering to his arguments and references, this puts the whole matter beyond successful controversy, that they are not the First Presidency. Whilst God says, positively, they are the Presidency of the church. This I consider an assential point in Strangism, as it is called; for if it can be made apparent from the word that God has made a wise provision for any contingency that the church is or could be subject to, and that a revelation of more ancient date than Mr. Strang's particularizing and showing who of the Melchisedec priesthood had a right to the Presidency according to the oath and covenant of God, and that the manner of appointment should be by consent of the church, the ordination by the direction of the same, and this order never to be deviated from, it will certainly make against Strangism, so called. If you still doubt the three spoken of being the First Presidency, I would ask, are they not Presidents of the church? And if so, are they not of the Melchisedec [illegible] Presidents of the high priesthood, and not of one of the quorums of that priesthood, as Strang would have his followers believe. The Melchisedec priesthood has power, &c. See D. & C. sec. iii. p. 3 and 4.

Bro. Benjamin, as I told you at the commencement, I have hurried this through, and I sent it along just as it is. You can make any use of it you please. I am not particularly anxious to invite discussion, as my time will not permit if I get my health, if I do not I would as soon write as not. Benjamin, I candidly acknowledge that I do not believe the premises occupied by Mr. Strang to be tenable. And although he is a skillful lawyer, if I have time I am willing to exchange a few shots with him. If you have truth, I want it. If you have not, you ought to know it. You will please to write on the receipt of this. Give our love to all. Say to Phineas we sympathize with him in the loss of his excellent companion.

Z. H. GURLEY.

Good by.

MR. Z. H. GURLEY:—Bro. Benjamin Wright has put your letter into my hands, and I most cheerfully accept the encounter you propose, and in justice must give you the credit of being the first man I have ever found who was willing to defend Brighamism—if indeed you mean so much by what you say. I have severally and personally met Orson Hyde, John Taylor, E. T. Benson and P. P. Pratt and done every thing that a gentleman could do to call them out, but in vain. In these gentlemen I recognized some of the best talent of the age, great experience in debating, and a commanding influence among the saints. Yet in the presence of their own converts when I was a total stranger they have positively, pertinaciously and rudely refused all discussion. I can attribute such conduct in them to nothing but conscious weakness of their cause.

Some of their friends have endeavored to excuse them on the pre-

tence that the question was not one of sufficient importance. But to this excuse they have themselves given the lie, by more than 20 different publications, industriously circulated, for the purpose of defaming my character, and by sending elders throughout the U. S. and Great Britain on special missions to tell lies about me. I do not mention these facts to reproach you with them, but as simple facts, showing that they are conscious of the weakness of their cause, and, like mystery Babylon, depend on prejudice to maintain it. In controversy they are ever ready to meet the sectarians, us never.

In proceeding with this matter I shall endeavor to treat the subject with all candor, and yourself with all courtesy. I perceive by your style that your feelings are both kind and sensitive. You have commended my style in discussion. Still I doubt its being equally pleasing to those who are the subjects of it. I beg you to take no offence at any thing I may deem it necessary to say. If I should have occasion to say any thing unpleasant, I will endeavour to ascertain the facts first, and use the expletives afterwards. And whatever severity I may use to the subject, I apply none of it to the person.

You give me credit for making "the most" of D. & C. in my favor. It seems I have made enough; for no man has reviewed it, though it has diminished the Brighamites by thousands; but whether I have made the most of it or not, I made the same of my cause before I ever read the book. My position was taken before I ever read one of all the revelations in the D. & C. and has never been changed. It was formed simply on the facts that had really transpired, and I have since merely showed that those facts are such as that book calls for.

You intimate that there is something about the prerogative, calling and ordination of a First President which has not been told.—If so, I think you would do well to tell it, and I regret that you did not send the sheet in which you had dwelt upon it. Certainly if the cause of the Brighamites can be defended, it ought to, and I can assure you that if you can show that they are the Lord's anointed, I shall not oppose them by charges of personal misconduct, nor heap false accusations on them as they do on me.

I remark, that in what you have written you have altogether passed over the main question, not making the slightest allusion to it.—The numerous revelations contained in the D. & C. showing that the keys of mysteries and revelations belong to the First President, and to no body else, and that he must be appointed by revelation and ordained by the ministration of Angels, you have altogether passed by, and merely built up a negative position on a simple incident—the review of an objection. And in that, not one of the points contained in the review is answered, but the objection is simply reiterated with a misquotation of the law to sustain it.

You say "my reference to the Presideney, &c., Sec. iii. p. 11. D. & C., forcibly remind you of the exertions of a CRAFTY SKILLFUL LAWYER, with a hard case on his hands." I am very well aware that in giving evidence the value of the testimony depends much on the character of the witness. But I have ever understood that logic is logic let it come from who it may, and that an argument, if it proves any thing, equally proves it in the mouth of a fool, a knave, or a crafty skillful lawyer.

Probably had not the word gone out that I had been bred to the law, no man would have ever seen any thing of the lawyer in my style or logic. I certainly have no objection to the credit of legal acumen, but I would not appropriate to myself compliments justly due to others. I have accordingly turned over to my beloved Bro. J. E. Page, the author of the able critique you attributed to me the credit of, reminding you of the best efforts of a crafty skillful lawyer. You will see by looking at the head of the article (Gospel Herald, Vol. 3. No 5.) that he is the writer of the article you thus speak of. In his behalf I thank you. And add, that it reminds me of something higher—of the gift that is in him by the laying on of the hands of the Prophet. Legal lore is nothing to it.

Towards overthrowing that critique you have not advanced a single step. In order to do so you must show some words in D. & C. sec. iii. p. 11 which by reasonable construction will apply to the First Presidency.

"Of necessity there are Presidents, or presiding offices growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church." D. & C. sec. iii. p. 11.

In all this there is not one word said about "First Presidency." The necessity of the office grows out of the organization of the "two Priesthoods;" not out of the organization of the church.—The three presiding high priests are chosen by the body, and ordained to an office growing out of that body or priesthood. When so set apart they form "A QUORUM of the Presidency of the church." Not "THE Presidency of the church," as you have quoted it.—Now there are several quorums in the Presidency of the church, and if this is not the Presidency of the high priests quorum, it still remains to show affirmatively that it is some other particular quorum of the Presidency—a thing you have not advanced one step in accomplishing. Nor have you done what it behooved you as a debater to do first of all—given any answer whatever to the overwhelming arguments of Elder Page, showing that the three Presidents referred to are the Presidency of the high priests quorum.

You have not made any answer whatever to the fact that the three high priests referred to are only equal in their power to either the Twelve, any quorum of the Seventies, or a high council of a stake. D. & C. sec. iii. p. 11, 14. Whereas the First Presidency is superior to either; D. & C. sec. iii. p. 12, 42, sec. xlvi. p. 2, sec. civ. p. 6, 7, 11, 12; and consequently cannot be identical. You have not shown by what means these three could be ordained as the First Presidency. The three are to be chosen by the body, but the book does not tell how they are to be ordained. If they are the Presidents of the high priests quorum, it is very obvious how they are to be ordained, to wit: by their superiors, the First Presidency.—But if they are the First Presidency, they have no superiors on earth. Who shall ordain them? You say, "ordained by the direction of the church;" but where is the authority for it? Who could the church direct to ordain them? Can they direct the inferior to ordain the superior? The less to bless the greater? If they did assume to give any such direction, would it be valid? The First President of the church holds a single sole priesthood, presiding over all others, and having no fellow or equal on earth. Until the fountain can rise above its head, none on earth can ordain to that priesthood. Consequently God says to Joseph, "he shall be ordained as I have told you before." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2. Given Feb., 1831. And the only way he had told him before was, "I have sent unto you Peter, James and John, (angels,) by whom I have ordained you," &c. D. & C. sec. l. p. 2, 3. Given Sept., 1830. Common sense and revelation perfectly concur in this rule. Whatever amount and kind of authority it took to make the first First President and prophet, the same it takes to make his successors in all time. As the predecessor was called by revelation, so the successors must be; and as the predecessor was consecrated and set apart by the ministration of angels, so the successors must be.

You have treated the matter as though, if you could overthrow elder Page's construction of this passage, you made your point.—

tence that the question was not one of sufficient importance. But to this excuse they have themselves given the lie, by more than 20 different publications, industriously circulated, for the purpose of defaming my character, and by sending elders throughout the U. S. and Great Britain on special missions to tell lies about me. I do not mention these facts to reproach you with them, but as simple facts, showing that they are conscious of the weakness of their cause, and, like mystery Babylon depend on prejudice to maintain it. In controversy they are ever ready to meet the sectarians, us never.

In proceeding with this matter I shall endeavor to treat the subject with all candor, and yourself with all courtesy. I perceive by your style that your feelings are both kind and sensitive. You have commended my style in discussion. Still I doubt its being equally pleasing to those who are the subjects of it. I beg you to take no offence at any thing I may deem it necessary to say. If I should have occasion to say any thing unpleasant, I will endeavour to ascertain the facts first, and use the expletives afterwards. And whatever severity I may use to the subject, I apply none of it to the person.

You give me credit for making "the most" of D. & C. in my favor. It seems I have made enough; for no man has reviewed it, though it has diminished the Brighamites by thousands; but whether I have made the most of it or not, I made the same of my cause before I ever read the book. My position was taken before I ever read one of all the revelations in the D. & C. and has never been changed. It was formed simply on the facts that had really transpired, and I have since merely showed that those facts are such as that book calls for.

You intimate that there is something about the prerogative, calling and ordination of a First President which has not been told.—If so, I think you would do well to tell it, and I regret that you did not send the sheet in which you had dwelt upon it. Certainly if the [illegible] assure you that if you can shew that they are the Lord's anointed, I shall not oppose them by charges of personal misconduct, nor heap false accusations on them as they do on me.

I remark, that in what you have written you have altogether passed over the main question, not making the slightest allusion to it.—The numerous revelations contained in the D. & C. showing that the keys of mysteries and revelations belong to the First President, and to no body else, and that he must be appointed by revelation and ordained by the ministration of Angels, you have altogether passed by, and merely built up a negative position on a simple incident—the review of an objection. And in that, not one of the points contained in the review is answered, but the objection is simply reiterated with a misquotation of the law to sustain it.

You say "my reference to the Presideney, &c., Sec. iii. p. 11. D. & C., forcibly remind you of the exertions of a CRAFTY SKILLFUL LAWYER, with a hard case on his hands." I am very well aware that in giving evidence the value of the testimony depends much on the character of the witness. But I have ever understood that logic is logic let it come from who it may, and that an argument, if it proves any thing, equally proves it in the mouth of a fool, a knave, or a crafty skillful lawyer.

Probably had not the word gone out that I had been bred to the law, no man would have ever seen any thing of the lawyer in my style or logic. I certainly have no objection to the credit of legal acumen, but I would not appropriate to myself compliments justly due to others. I have accordingly turned over to my beloved Bro. J. E. Page, the author of the able critique you attributed to me the credit of, reminding you of the best efforts of a crafty skillful lawyer. You will see by looking at the head of the article (Gospel Herald, Vol. 3. No 5.) that he is the writer of the article you thus speak of. In his behalf I thank you. And add, that it reminds me of something higher—of the gift that is in him by the laying on of the hands of the Prophet. Legal lore is nothing to it.

Towards overthrowing that critique you have not advanced a single step. In order to do so you must show some words in D. & C. sec. iii. p. 11 which by reasonable construction will apply to the First Presidency.

"Of necessity there are Presidents, or presiding offices growing out of, or appointed of, or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two priesthoods. Of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests, chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith and prayer of the church, form a quorum of the presidency of the church." D. & C. sec. iii. p. 11.

In all this there is not one word said about "First Presidency." The necessity of the office grows out of the organization of the "two Priesthoods;" not out of the organization of the church.—The three presiding high priests are chosen by the body, and ordained to an office growing out of that body or priesthood. When so set apart they form "A QUORUM of the Presidency of the church." Not "THE Presidency of the church," as you have quoted it.—Now there are several quorums in the Presidency of the church, and if this is not the Presidency of the high priests quorum, it still remains to show affirmatively that it is some other particular quorum of the Presidency—a thing you have not advanced one step in accomplishing. Nor have you done what it behooved you as a debater to do first of all—given any answer whatever to the overwhelming arguments of Elder Page, showing that the three Presidents referred to are the Presidency of the high priests quorum.

You have not made any answer whatever to the fact that the three high priests referred to are only equal in their power to either the Twelve, any quorum of the Seventies, or a high council of a stake. D. & C. sec. iii. p. 11, 14. Whereas the First Presidency is superior to either; D. & C. sec. iii. p. 12, 42, sec. xlvi. p. 2, sec. civ. p. 6, 7, 11, 12; and consequently cannot be identical. You have not shown by what means these three could be ordained as the First Presidency. The three are to be chosen by the body, but the book does not tell how they are to be ordained. If they are the Presidents of the high priests quorum, it is very obvious how they are to be ordained, to wit: by their superiors, the First Presidency.—But if they are the First Presidency, they have no superiors on earth. Who shall ordain them? You say, "ordained by the direction of the church;" but where is the authority for it? Who could the church direct to ordain them? Can they direct the inferior to ordain the superior? The less to bless the greater? If they did assume to give any such direction, would it be valid? The First President of the church holds a single sole priesthood, presiding over all others, and having no fellow or equal on earth. Until the fountain can rise above its head, none on earth can ordain to that priesthood. Consequently God says to Joseph, "he shall be ordained as I have told you before." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2. Given Feb., 1831. And the only way he had told him before was, "I have sent unto you Peter, James and John, (angels,) by whom I have ordained you," &c. D. & C. sec. l. p. 2, 3. Given Sept., 1830. Common sense and revelation perfectly concur in this rule. Whatever amount and kind of authority it took to make the first First President and prophet, the same it takes to make his successors in all time. As the predecessor was called by revelation, so the successors must be; and as the predecessor was consecrated and set apart by the ministration of angels, so the successors must be.

You have treated the matter as though, if you could overthrow elder Page's construction of this passage, you made your point.—

Whereas in fact you have not advanced one step towards it. Nor would you advance a single step could you prove that the true application of that passage was to the First Presidency. Though you have quoted this as the word of God, it is not given as such. It is a simple synopsis of the organization of the priesthood and Presidencies of the church, not given by revelation, but drawn up by some of the members of the church. It is simply good authority as their construction of the law. If you show by such a digest or synopsis that any officer should be appointed in a particular manner, and the word of God gives us a different mode of appointment, you have shown the synopsis in error, not the word of God. But even this you have not shown, and cannot show. The church ever understood that the First President was appointed by revelation. D. & C. sec. v. p. 6.

Moreover if you could strike out of the word of God the entire law that the Prophet, Seer, Revelator and First President shall be appointed by revelation, and ordained by the ministration of Angels, and could substitute in the place of it the law "that of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests" should be chosen by the church, and ordained by their direction, to be the First Presidency, you would still altogether fail of supporting the pretensions of the Brighamites, or of showing that any one among them has authority from God as the President of the church, or as chief pastor of the flock of God. There is no one among them, or among any other party or division on earth, who has ever been thus chosen or thus ordained. There has never been a general assembly of the church held since the death of Joseph at which such an act could be done at all. Nor have the Brighamite leaders ever claimed authority on that ground. Their claim until last December, was founded on the following facts:—1st. The vote of the meeting of August 8th, 1844, that "the church WOULD NOT have a PROPHET," &c. 2d. The Apostolic letter of Brigham of August 15th, 1844, declaring that Joseph was not to have a successor at all; but that the Twelve (as a quorum) held the keys of power to dictate all the affairs of the church in all the world. 3d. The votes of three successive Conferences, Oct., 1844, April, 1845, and Oct., 1845, declaring that the quorum of the Twelve were the First Presidency of the church. Neither of which acts comes up in any sense to the body, choosing three from the Melchisedec priesthood and having them ordained by their direction. Their act was not the choosing of THREE or any other number. It was merely passing a vote to confer a new jurisdiction and additional and incongruous prerogatives on TWELVE or THIRTEEN, who had been long before chosen to another office.

In December last an attempt was made to patch up these matters by what the Brighamites please to call an election of a First Presidency. Can you recognize that act as a valid creation of a First Presidency? At another time than the regular time of holding Conferences, at a place that God had not appointed for the gathering of the saints, on grounds that he had not consecrated to them, there assembles together of this whole church the little few that can find room on the space of forty feet by sixty, and declaring themselves headless, acknowledging with unblushing effrontery that the truth is against them, (see their minutes, Herald Vol. iii. No. 21,) proceed to vote in Brigham Young, H. C. Kimball and Willard Richards First Presidents. Three years ago they boasted 200,000 members in the church. Now they boast of prosperity, and yet get together, only 600 men, women and children, to choose a First Presidency to preside over the whole church. If that is what is meant by being chosen by the body, I have the English language yet to learn. As for ordination, they had none at all. Of course not, there was no body to ordain them.

Do you not perceive, dear sir, that this whole proceeding is founded on an abandonment of the doctrine that a valid priesthood must be called by revelation? I will not raise a point against them on the score of their corrupt conduct. If they are the Lord's anointed, let me not do them harm. Though they commit every crime forbidden in the decalogue, and all the sins which are not named therein, yet if God has set them up, be they in his hands, not mine. He alone has power to make prophets, and he is abundantly powerful to unmake them. Be they in his hands, not the hands of man.—But I cannot forbear to press upon you this point, raised by elder Page, that upon your theory if a majority of the church should become corrupt (and more than once the whole church of God on earth has become corrupt and gone to the perdition of the ungodly) a veritable incarnate Devil might be elected by the body, 'to be like unto Moses, yea, to be a Seer, Revelator, Translator and a prophet.'

I shall be most happy to hear from you again. I wish you to meet the main point by showing how a prophet to stand instead of Joseph should be appointed, and how and by whom he should be ordained. And if you show any different rule than that contained in D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2, sec. l. p. 2, 3, sec. li. p. 1, will you please show when they ceased to be the word of God? A cause is sometimes rested on a single train of reasoning, an argument like the successive links of a chain, when, if you sever one, all falls to the ground. But ours is placed on a large number of cumulative proofs like collateral bolts, where you have every one to destroy before you can overthrow our position. A reiteration of old oft answered objections will not do, but a meeting of the whole question—an answer separately of each of the proofs put forth, and if an old objection is persisted in it is not sufficient to merely name it, but show by a review of our criticisms that we have not removed it.

Most sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

PAY YOUR POSTAGE!

Dear brethren and friends, I am sorry to say to you that, in justice to my family, I CANNOT PAY POSTAGE on your communications. Letters sent to me and my wife not post paid are left in the post office to be returned as dead letters to the general post office.—No person is more rejoiced to hear from a friend or a brother in the church than I am, and on this account I have paid out money enough on letters sent me since I have been in the ministry of the gospel to have purchased lumber sufficient to have built me a snug comfortable dwelling house; but instead of being thus humanly situated, while I write a blustering north-east storm is pelting on my lantern like cabin, which is not fit to stable a decent horse in, much less afford a comfortable shelter for a sick wife with a small infant child, while the rain is pouring in on every side.

These circumstances brings fresh to mind the saying of Paul:—"He that will not provide for his own, especially for his own household, is worse than an infidel, and denied the faith." "Ah!" say some, "you might perhaps miss of receiving some handsome present sent to you by some good friend, and surely you would be willing to pay postage on a present that might be sent you." Yes, true; but that fact is not apparent until the postage is paid, and thus I might pay postage on letters, as I have already done, to four times the amount I have received as presents sent in letters. I am thankful for the opportunity of saying I have received some presents in letters, but the most of them were post paid. The day is coming that will tell who has forsaken all for the gospel's sake. Yes, it will tell with tones on the ears of the assembled world louder than tenfold peals of thunder that will shake the earth to its centre, when the judge will say to those who have not, "depart from me ye cursed." Consequently to merely believe the simple theory of the gospel without carrying its precepts into practice is worse than to be left in heathanism, for where no law is there is no transgression, where there is no transgression there is no sin, and where there is no sin there is no condemnation.

Thousands are now perishing, saying, come over and preach to us, that are comparatively rolling in wealth, while at Voree there are High Priests, Seventies, and Elders, (say nothing of the Twelve Apostles whose special duty it is to lead and pioneer the way,) that are confined to the plough, plane or the shoemaker's bench to make a very plain living for their wives and children, that are competent in eloquence and language, with the aid of truth, to nail a Cisero to his seat and confound the most worldly wise of the age. What a pity it is then that those who have means will not put shoulder to the wheel and help in this way to save the souls of men, instead of taxing Elders with postage on letters in which they have no private interest whatever. When will the world learn that "those who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel?" O, be wise!—Ministers cannot suck the wind and chew their breath and live more than others can. Keep the day of judgement and the first resurrection in view and act accordingly. JOHN E. PAGE.

Whereas in fact you have not advanced one step towards it. Nor would you advance a single step could you prove that the true application of that passage was to the First Presidency. Though you have quoted this as the word of God, it is not given as such. It is a simple synopsis of the organization of the priesthood and Presidencies of the church, not given by revelation, but drawn up by some of the members of the church. It is simply good authority as their construction of the law. If you show by such a digest or synopsis that any officer should be appointed in a particular manner, and the word of God gives us a different mode of appointment, you have shown the synopsis in error, not the word of God. But even this you have not shown, and cannot show. The church ever understood that the First President was appointed by revelation. D. & C. sec. v. p. 6.

Moreover if you could strike out of the word of God the entire law that the Prophet, Seer. Revelator and First President shall be appointed by revelation, and ordained by the ministration of Angels, and could substitute in the place of it the law "that of the Melchisedec priesthood, three presiding high priests" should be chosen by the church, and ordained by their direction, to be the First Presidency, you would still altogether fail of supporting the pretensions of the Brighamites, or of showing that any one among them has authority from God as the President of the church, or as chief pastor of the flock of God. There is no one among them, or among any other party or division on earth, who has ever been thus chosen or thus ordained. There has never been a general assembly of the church held since the death of Joseph at which such an act could be done at all. Nor have the Brighamite leaders ever claimed authority on that ground. Their claim until last December, was founded on the following facts:—1st. The vote of the meeting of August 8th, 1844, that "the church WOULD NOT have a PROPHET," &c. 2d. The Apostolic letter of Brigham of August 15th, 1844, declaring that Joseph was not to have a successor at all; but that the Twelve (as a quorum) held the keys of power to dictate all the affairs of the church in all the world. 3d. The votes of three successive Conferences, Oct., 1844, April, 1845, and Oct., 1845, declaring that the quorum of the Twelve were the First Presidency of the church. Neither of which acts comes up in any sense to the body, choosing three from the Melchisedec priesthood and having them ordained by their direction. Their act was not the choosing of THREE or any other number. It was merely passing a vote to confer a new jurisdiction and additional and incongruous prerogatives on TWELVE or THIRTEEN, who had been long before chosen to another office.

In December last an attempt was made to patch up these matters by what the Brighamites please to call an election of a First Presidency. Can you recognize that act as a valid creation of a First Presidency? At another time than the regular time of holding Conferences, at a place that God had not appointed for the gathering of the saints, on grounds that he had not consecrated to them, there assembles together of this whole church the little few that can find room on the space of forty feet by sixty, and declaring themselves headless, acknowledging with unblushing effrontery that the truth is against them, (see their minutes, Herald Vol. iii. No. 21,) proceed to vote in Brigham Young, H. C. Kimball and Willard Richards First Presidents. Three years ago they boasted 200,000 members in the church. Now they boast of prosperity, and yet get together, only 600 men, women and children, to choose a First Presidency to preside over the whole church. If that is what is meant by being chosen by the body, I have the English language yet to learn. As for ordination, they had none at all. Of course not, there was no body to ordain them.

Do you not perceive, dear sir, that this whole proceeding is founded on an abandonment of the doctrine that a valid priesthood must be called by revelation? I will not raise a point against them on the score of their corrupt conduct. If they are the Lord's anointed, let me not do them harm. Though they commit every crime forbidden in the decalogue, and all the sins which are not named therein, yet if God has set them up, be they in his hands, not mine. He alone has power to make prophets, and he is abundantly powerful to unmake them. Be they in his hands, not the hands of man.—But I cannot forbear to press upon you this point, raised by elder Page, that upon your theory if a majority of the church should become corrupt (and more than once the whole church of God on earth has become corrupt and gone to the perdition of the ungodly) a veritable incarnate Devil might be elected by the body, 'to be like unto Moses, yea, to be a Seer, Revelator, Translator and a prophet.'

I shall be most happy to hear from you again. I wish you to meet the main point by showing how a prophet to stand instead of Joseph should be appointed, and how and by whom he should be ordained. And if you show any different rule than that contained in D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2, sec. l. p. 2, 3, sec. li. p. 1, will you please show when they ceased to be the word of God? A cause is sometimes rested on a single train of reasoning, an argument like the successive links of a chain, when, if you sever one, all falls to the ground. But ours is placed on a large number of cumulative proofs like collateral bolts, where you have every one to destroy before you can overthrow our position. A reiteration of old oft answered objections will not do, but a meeting of the whole question—an answer separately of each of the proofs put forth, and if an old objection is persisted in it is not sufficient to merely name it, but show by a review of our criticisms that we have not removed it.

Most sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

PAY YOUR POSTAGE!

Dear brethren and friends, I am sorry to say to you that, in justice to my family, I CANNOT PAY POSTAGE on your communications. Letters sent to me and my wife not post paid are left in the post office to be returned as dead letters to the general post office.—No person is more rejoiced to hear from a friend or a brother in the church than I am, and on this account I have paid out money enough on letters sent me since I have been in the ministry of the gospel to have purchased lumber sufficient to have built me a snug comfortable dwelling house, [illegible] while I write a blustering north-east storm is pelting on my [illegible] like cabin, which is not fit to stable a decent horse in, much [illegible] afford a comfortable shelter for a sick wife with a small infant child, while the rain is pouring in on every side.

These circumstances brings fresh to mind the saying of Paul:—"He that will not provide for his own, especially for his own household, is worse than an infidel, and denied the faith." "Ah!" say some, "you might perhaps miss of receiving some handsome present sent to you by some good friend, and surely you would be willing to pay postage on a present that might be sent you." Yes, true; but that fact is not apparent until the postage is paid, and thus I might pay postage on letters, as I have already done, to four times the amount I have received as presents sent in letters. I am thankful for the opportunity of saying I have received some presents in letters, but the most of them were post paid. The day is coming that will tell who has forsaken all for the gospel's sake. Yes, it will tell with tones on the ears of the assembled world louder than tenfold peals of thunder that will shake the earth to its centre, when the judge will say to those who have not, "depart from me ye cursed." Consequently to merely believe the simple theory of the gospel without carrying its precepts into practice is worse than to be left in heathanism, for where no law is there is no transgression, where there is no transgression there is no sin, and where there is no sin there is no condemnation.

Thousands are now perishing, saying, come over and preach to us, that are comparatively rolling in wealth, while at Voree there are High Priests, Seventies, and Elders, (say nothing of the Twelve Apostles whose special duty it is to lead and pioneer the way,) that are confined to the plough, plane or the shoemaker's bench to make a very plain living for their wives and children, that are competent in eloquence and language, with the aid of truth, to nail a Cisero to his seat and confound the most worldly wise of the age. What a pity it is then that those who have means will not put shoulder to the wheel and help in this way to save the souls of men, instead of taxing Elders with postage on letters in which they have no private interest whatever. When will the world learn that "those who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel?" O, be wise!—Ministers cannot suck the wind and chew their breath and live more than others can. Keep the day of judgement and the first resurrection in view and act accordingly. JOHN E. PAGE.

For the Gospel Herald.

WHO HATH MADE US DIFFER?

This is an important consideration. A question about which the present generation are much troubled. Differences of opinion are made walls of division to separate between man and man. We behold man in his person as he comes from the hand of his creator has enstamped upon him a distinguishing feature by which he may be recognized from his fellow man. This difference no doubt will be acknowledged by all is by decree, or purpose of the unchangeable eternal God. And whoso finds fault or despises his fellow man for any of the natural differences that exist in the creation of God, murmurs and would disturb the harmony of the universe and contend with Omnipotence. It is important here, to prevent confusion of thought, to take into consideration the changes that have been the result of man's disobedience, lest we confound natural differences with those which before were not so; for instance, we say it is natural for bears and lions to growl and fight, and some say God has made them so. But if this be true, then man may be justified in following out his vile inclinations, for such do we find to be his disposition and practice to a vast extent.

The same appeals may be made and the same or equally as good proofs brought to show that the lion and the tiger are corrupted by the fall, or by rebellion against some natural law, as that man is.—So that the differences that have resulted and continue to this present time are proofs of the consequences of violating natural laws, and a refutation of the doctrine that wrongs of long standing are justifiable or even natural. In these things God has not made us to differ, but man's violation of a known law has introduced all this disorder and confusion. So that evil cannot flow from a good fountain any more than God can lie. In few respects only God has made us to differ—in pleading the cause of truth and righteousness. This subject brings me in contact with all that stand opposed to God. In order to draw the line of distinction between right and wrong, and show the difference between Christ and Anti-Christ, it will require only to discern distinctly between natural law and laws originated with rebellious man. It must be admitted by all that the creator's works harmonize. This conclusion is safely drawn from the perfection of his attributes and the unchangeableness of his nature. So that where we behold any want of harmony, there God's works have been marred. And to say, as some do at present, that if this thing be of God ye cannot overthrow it, is to talk in doubt, and displays a mind not able to discern truth from error, but fears the result. How many have ventured since Eve tried the experiment of falsehood to see whether it would prove true or not; not aware of the danger, and often not caring. How many have slighted warnings and examples while they resist the Holy Ghost and disturb the harmony of natural order. Order being heaven's first law, of course confusion makes up no part of it. But the introduction of confusion into the order of God is the natural consequence of breaking God's law. God's law then is the root of the whole matter.

Here is man's whole duty made known. How important a study! How wise, how safe, how exceeding good. No wonder wise men and great men in all times made this their meditation by day and night. By this wisdom kings reign and princes decree justice.—Had man observed a known law no disorder or harm could ever have reached him. A wall of fire would have stood round about him.—Knowledge man had by or with his existence, or else he could not be accountable. A knowledge too of his maker's will, else if he kept it, it must be of necessity, having no inclination to do otherwise; or if he broke it, it would be the result of chance, which chance knowledge might prevent. Consequently the tree of knowledge is that fruit of knowledge out of God's law of which man has not, nor never had, nor never will have a right to use, nor cannot partake of without transgressing a plain commandment. Of course he that trusts to his own heart is a fool. To trust in the Lord is to believe and obey his word or law. His word is law, it is light, it is life; it is salvation to the obedient, to the disobedient damnation. Wherefore examine the word and keep it. Whoso hath my word, said Jesus, hath life, and he that hath not my word hath not life; he that walketh in God's law, in him verily is the love of God.—But out of that law or word there is no foundation in truth and safety. It may be that sectarianism is right, some say, notwithstanding the word of God says expressly that the body of Christ is one body, and we all know Anti-Christ is many bodies.

Now for an exposure of the man of sin before a gazing world and before the church of God, as it is in the light of eternal truth. And then we will tell who has made us to differ, and all can see wherein we differ. Christ and Anti-Christ at war. Christ speaking with one mouth through his ONE BODY, and speaking always one and the SAME THING; ONE GOSPEL unchanged, ONE FAITH in all ages, ONE BAPTISM, ONE LAW and ONE NAME. Anti-Christ hydra-headed, many mouths, even one to each body, 666 bodies, 666 mouths, all speaking differently, each contradicting the other, each saying I am the church, this is the way; another says this is the way, nay, says another, but this is the way; and so it jangles, while 665 contradictions are uttering their discordant sounds of blasphemous falsehood, while the old mother keeps up a constant cry, hush, my daughters, you are all heterodox; you cannot live longer than your mother, and you must submit to her authority or die. While at the same time the harlot daughters, unconscious of danger in rebelling against their own mother's authority, agree to hush their differences of opinion in minor points, and shake hands for a general defence. All this while thus these daughters, striving still together to show to the world the body of Christ, are constantly belying one another as separate bodies, every mouth speaks differently, while they pretend to say we are one. One what? One church? No, one body of confusion. So says their mother. And so far she says true, excepting one schism existing between the mother and children, which must be healed and then she will be perfect Anti-Christ, ripe for the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. What a vast difference. And I would inquire, who has made us to differ so widely? Has God? I ask, has this difference come about by God's decree or purpose? Where is the law upon which this difference is got up? In the law of the Lord all that is true is in perfect harmony. The church of Christ has in it one only living and true God, one living faith producing works as ever it did, one baptism of regeneration by water and renewing of the Holy Ghost and fire. Anti-Christ has an imaginary deity whose law, if necessary to be kept, is not easy to be understood.—The deity also of Anti-Christ is varied in person and character from the God of revelation. Need it be asked who made this difference. And O what a difference in the faith. Many, very many, opinions of doubt or don't believe. For baptism, several forms differing.—For Holy Ghost and fire, many false spirits and mental excitements. For commandments, traditions. For holiness, hypocrisy. For charity, swallow the whole body of Anti-Christ.

April 25th, 1848. JOHN S. COMSTOCK.

BE ONE, EQUAL AND ALIKE IN TEMPORAL THINGS.

It is quite a novel thing to hear some folks talk about their faith in the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints and Joseph Smith as a prophet of the living and true God, yet when any one presents the word of God through said prophet they will say, "But, and if, well, I must consider the matter, I have worked hard and so have my children to get what we have in possession, and if it is right to do

For the Gospel Herald.

WHO HATH MADE US DIFFER?

This is an important consideration. A question about which the present generation are much troubled. Differences of opinion are made walls of division to separate between man and man. We behold man in his person as he comes from the hand of his creator has enstamped upon him a distinguishing feature by which he may be recognized from his fellow man. This difference no doubt will be acknowledged by all is by decree, or purpose of the unchangeable eternal God. And whoso finds fault or despises his fellow man for any of the natural differences that exist in the creation of God, murmurs and would disturb the harmony of the universe and contend with Omnipotence. It is important here, to prevent confusion of thought, to take into consideration the changes that have been the result of man's disobedience, lest we confound natural differences with those which before were not so; for instance, we say it is natural for bears and lions to growl and fight, and some say God has made them so. But if this be true, then man may be justified in following out his vile inclinations, for such do we find to be his disposition and practice to a vast extent.

The same appeals may be made and the same or equally as good proofs brought to show that the lion and the tiger are corrupted by the fall, or by rebellion against some natural law, as that man is.—So that the differences that have resulted and continue to this present time are proofs of the consequences of violating natural laws, and a refutation of the doctrine that wrongs of long standing are justifiable or even natural. In these things God has not made us to differ, but man's violation of a known law has introduced all this disorder and confusion. So that evil cannot flow from a good fountain any more than God can lie. In few respects only God has made us to differ—in pleading the cause of truth and righteousness. The subject brings me in contact with all that stand opposed to God. In order to draw the line of distinction between right and wrong, and show the difference between Christ and Anti-Christ, it will require only to discern distinctly between natural law and laws originated with rebellious man. It must be admitted by all that the creator's works harmonize. This conclusion is safely drawn from the perfection of his attributes and the unchangeableness of his nature. So that where we behold any want of harmony, there God's works have been marred. And to say, as some do at present, that if this thing be of God ye cannot overthrow it, is to talk in doubt, and displays a mind not able to discern truth from error, but fears the result. How many have ventured since Eve tried the experiment of falsehood to see whether it would prove true or not; not aware of the danger, and often not caring. How many have slighted warnings and examples while they resist the Holy Ghost and disturb the harmony of natural order. Order being heaven's first law, of course confusion makes up no part of it. But the introduction of confusion into the order of God is the natural consequence of breaking God's law. God's law then is the root of the whole matter.

Here is man's whole duty made known. How important a study! How wise, how safe, how exceeding good. No wonder wise men and great men in all times made this their meditation by day and night. By this wisdom kings reign and princes decree justice.—Had man observed a known law no disorder or harm could ever have reached him. A wall of fire would have stood round about him.—Knowledge man had by or with his existence, or else he could not be accountable. A knowledge too of his maker's will, else if he kept it, it must be of necessity, having no inclination to do otherwise; or if he broke it, it would be the result of chance, which chance knowledge might prevent. Consequently the tree of knowledge is that fruit of knowledge out of God's law of which man has not, nor never had, nor never will have a right to use, nor cannot partake of without transgressing a plain commandment. Of course he that trusts to his own heart is a fool. To trust in the Lord is to believe and obey his word or law. His word is law, it is light, it is life; it is salvation to the obedient, to the disobedient damnation. Wherefore examine the word and keep it. Whoso hath my word, said Jesus, hath life, and he that hath not my word hath not life; he that walketh in God's law, in him verily is the love of God.—But out of that law or word there is no foundation in truth and safety. It may be that sectarianism is right, some say, nowithstanding the word of God says expressly that the body of Christ is one body, and we all know Anti-Christ is many bodies.

Now for an exposure of the man of sin before a gazing world and before the church of God, as it is in the light of eternal truth. And then we will tell who has made us to differ, and all can see wherein we differ. Christ and Anti-Christ at war. Christ speaking with one mouth through his ONE BODY, and speaking always one and the SAME THING; ONE GOSPEL unchanged, ONE FAITH in all ages, ONE BAPTISM, ONE LAW and ONE NAME. Anti-Christ hydra-headed, many mouths, even one to each body, 666 bodies, 666 mouths, all speaking differently, each contradicting the other, each saying I am the church, this is the way; another says this is the way, nay, says another, but this is the way; and so it jangles, while 665 contradictions are uttering their discordant sounds of blasphemous falsehood, while the old mother keeps up a constant cry, hush, my daughters, you are all heterodox; you cannot live longer than your mother, and you must submit to her authority or die. While at the same time the harlot daughters, unconscious of danger in rebelling against their own mother's authority, agree to hush their differences of opinion in minor points, and shake hands for a general defence. All this while thus these daughters, striving still together to show to the world the body of Christ, are constantly belying one another as separate bodies, every mouth speaks differently, while they pretend to say we are one. One what? One church? No, one body of confusion. So says their mother. And so far she says true, excepting one schism existing between the mother and children, which must be healed and then she will be perfect Anti-Christ, ripe for the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. What a vast difference. And I would inquire, who has made us to differ so widely? Has God? I ask, has this difference come about by God's decree or purpose? Where is the law upon which this difference is got up? In the law of the Lord all that is true is in perfect harmony. The church of Christ has in it one only living and true God, one living faith producing works as ever it did, one baptism of regeneration by water and renewing of the Holy Ghost and fire. Anti-Christ has an imaginary deity whose law, if necessary to be kept, is not easy to be understood.—The deity also of Anti-Christ is varied in person and character from the God of revelation. Need it be asked who made this difference. And O what a difference in the faith. Many, very many, opinions of doubt or don't believe. For baptism, several forms differing.—For Holy Ghost and fire, many false spirits and mental excitements. For commandments, traditions. For holiness, hypocrisy. For charity, swallow the whole body of Anti-Christ.

April 25th, 1848. JOHN S. COMSTOCK.

BE ONE, EQUAL AND ALIKE IN TEMPORAL THINGS.

It is quite a novel thing to hear some folks talk about their faith in the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints and Joseph Smith as a prophet of the living and true God, yet when any one presents the word of God through said prophet they will say, "But, and if, well, I must consider the matter, I have worked hard and so have my children to get what we have in possession, and if it is right to do with it as the Lord says, why, I will think of it and see." Here follows what the Lord has said relative to the appropriation of the properties of the saints, in revelations given January, May and Nov. of 1831:—

"And again I say unto you, let every man esteem his brother as himself; for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto the one, be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith I am just. Behold, this I have given unto you a parable, and it is even as I am: I say unto you, be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine." D. & C. sec. xii. p. 5, 6.

"And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one, even as I have commanded you." Sec. xxiii. p. 2.

"He who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the spirit: nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be EQUAL, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the spirit shall be withheld." Sec. xxvi. p. 3.

The above quotations are the words of the Lord given through the prophet Joseph as early as the 10th, 14th and 20th first months of the first rise of the church. Now, reader, my question is, how do you like the word of the Lord? Do you believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet as much as you thought you did? Our question only involves the general principles of equality, not the forms of reaching it. Can you answer the question without saying "if and if?" &c. The following extract was written by Joseph Smith in Liberty prison, Clay Co., Missouri, in the winter of 1838–9, and published in the July No. of the Times and Seasons of 1840:—

"We would suggest the propriety of the brethren settling in such places where they may find safety, which may be found between Kirtland and Far West, it will be necessary to do so for the present, until God shall open out a more effectual door. Again, we would suggest to the brethren that there be no organization of large bodies upon common stock principles, until the Lord shall signify it in a proper manner; as it opens such a field for the avaricious, the indolent, and the corrupt hearted, to prey upon the virtuous, the industrious, and the honest. We have reason to believe that many things were introduced among the saints, before God had signified the time, and notwithstanding the principles and the plans may have been good, yet aspiring men, who have the form of godliness but not the substance, by their aspiring notions brought trouble, both upon themselves and the saints at large. However the time is coming when God will signify many things, which are expected for the well being of the saints."

By the above I find it is strongly implied that the Lord would at some time "signify" to the church the propriety of organizing on "common stock principles," although it was not right at that time for certain reasons. I close by renewing my queston. How do you like the idea, dear brethren, of being "one," "equal" and "alike in temporal things," that "you may be ONE," and the prayer of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ may be granted in us as found in the 17th chapter of St. John? To be one in Christ as the Father and the Son are one, they having one common interest in all things, and their glory one, so may it be with us. Amen. J. E. PAGE.

New Bedford, July 18th, 1848.

PRESIDENT JAMES J. STRANG:—

DEAR BROTHER,—Inclosed are two dollars, the tithing of what I have received since the 4th inst. I have nothing of importance to communicate to you. The people in this section of country are of that class whom brother Paul spoke of, that could not endure sound doctrine, that should heap to themselves teachers, &c. These people reject the word of the Lord, following the vanities of the Gentiles. My desire is to do the will of the Lord while compelled to tarry with them, hoping for the time to come when my lot will be cast with the saints at one of the stakes of Zion. My present determination is to remit the one-tenth of my labor in money to Voree, that is, one-tenth of all that I receive, that I may stand before the Lord blameless. This I understand to be the law of the Lord. The way that I undertook to free myself from this ungodly generation and go to the place where God called his people has failed. I have labored and others enjoy, or rather possess the fruits of a large portion of my hard toil. The reason why things are thus I understand to be the withholding of the tithes and offerings to the Lord, that in all ages have been required to be observed by his people. I may be under a mistake, but think not. The saints are required to bring their tithes and offerings into the storehouse of the Lord by Malachi, by Joseph and by James, and this whole nation Malachi says, has robbed the Lord.

This being the state of things it is no wonder that eighteen years have rolled away since the organization of the latter day church and no house built to the name of our God. Let the saints arise in the might of Israel's God and obey the word of the Lord through the prophet, and the kingdom of darkness will shake like an aspen leaf and the victory be given to the saints. We should no longer be powerless, but mighty through the Lord to the pulling down of Satan's strong holds of superstition, ignorance and witchcrafts, that incubus that now broods over the nations of the earth. My love to the saints at Voree and Beaver Island. From your brother in the church, planted and built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone,

JESSE W. NICHOLS.

P. S. On the 4th inst. one dollar was remitted by me as tithing.
J. W. N.

☞ Both remittances were duly received, and we commend this letter as a most faithful exposition of the duty of the saints under the law of tithing, and the consequences of withholding.—While speaking of the subject we cannot forbear mentioning another case as an example to the saints in the keeping of this law.—Brother Butterfield, of Chicago, making sales of farm and garden production almost daily in market, separates out one-tenth of the money he realizes each day, puts it by in a bag by itself where it is always ready for the Lord's treasure. He assures us that he is blessed more than according to his faithfulness, and has a larger income left than before he paid tithing. We most sincerely regret that brother Nichols should toil and others possess the fruit of his labor. Such is the fate of man wherever Gentile oppression prevails. It is the consequences of the Ishmaelite or wages system. Nothing can cure it short of united interests and united possessions, in which all shall protect every one, and each shall be in reality a brother.

It is stated that the members of the Prov. Government of France had became ten years older during the first month they were in power. Ledru Rollin, who had a head of fine black hair, has become perfectly gray. M. Flacon has been at the point of death.—M. Louis Blanc, who had a fresh juvenile countenance, is no more recognizable. M. Lamartine and Garnier Pages spit blood. M. Cremiux has lost his voice.* M. Marrast seems worn out with fatigue. Arago alone has not quitted his post.—Ex. paper.

*He is a Jew.

with it as the Lord says, why, I will think of it and see." Here follows what the Lord has said relative to the appropriation of the properties of the saints, in revelations given January, May and Nov. of 1831:—

"And again I say unto you, let every man esteem his brother as himself; for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter to them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto the one, be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith I am just. Behold, this I have given unto you a parable, and it is even as I am: I say unto you, be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine." D. & C. sec. xii. p. 5, 6.

"And let every man deal honestly, and be alike among this people, and receive alike, that ye may be one, even as I have commanded you." Sec. xxiii. p. 2.

"He who is appointed to administer spiritual things, the same is worthy of his hire, even as those who are appointed to a stewardship, to administer in temporal things; yea, even more abundantly, which abundance is multiplied unto them through the manifestations of the spirit: nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be EQUAL, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the spirit shall be withheld." Sec. xxvi. p. 3.

The above quotations are the words of the Lord given through the prophet Joseph as early as the 10th, 14th and 20th first months of the first rise of the church. Now, reader, my question is, how do you like the word of the Lord? Do you believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet as much as you thought you did? Our question only involves the general principles of equality, not the forms of reaching it. Can you answer the question without saying "if and if?"

The following extract was written by Joseph Smith in Liberty prison, Clay Co., Missouri, in the winter of 1838–9, and published in the July No. of the Times and Seasons of 1840:—

"We would suggest the propriety of the brethren settling in such places where they may find safety, which may be found between Kirtland and Far West, it will be necessary to do so for the present, until God shall open out a more effectual door. Again, we would suggest to the brethren that there be no organization of large bodies upon common stock principles, until the Lord shall signify it in a proper manner; as it opens such a field for the avaricious, the indolent, and the corrupt hearted, to prey upon the virtuous, the industrious, and the honest. We have reason to believe that many things were introduced among the saints, before God had signified the same, and notwithstanding the principles and the plans may have been good, yet aspiring men, who have the form of godliness but not the substance, by their aspiring notions brought trouble, both upon themselves and the saints at large. However the time is coming when God will signify many things, which are expected for the well being of the saints."

By the above I find it is strongly implied that the Lord would at some time "signify" to the church the propriety of organizing on "common stock principles," although it was not right at that time for certain reasons. I close by renewing my queston. How do you like the idea, dear brethren, of being "one," "equal" and "alike in temporal things," that "you may be ONE," and the prayer of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ may be granted in us as found in the 17th chapter of St. John? To be one in Christ as the Father and the Son are one, they having one common interest in all things, and their glory one, so may it be with us. Amen. J. E. PAGE.

New Bedford, July 18th, 1848.

PRESIDENT JAMES J. STRANG:—

DEAR BROTHER,—Inclosed are two dollars, the tithing of what I have received since the 4th inst. I have nothing of importance to communicate to you. The people in this section of country are of that class whom brother Paul spoke of, that could not endure sound doctrine, that should heap to themselves teachers, &c. These people reject the word of the Lord, following the vanities of the Gentiles. My desire is to do the will of the Lord while compelled to tarry with them, hoping for the time to come when my lot will be cast with the saints at one of the stakes of Zion. My present determination is to remit the one-tenth of my labor in money to Voree, that is, one-tenth of all that I receive, that I may stand before the Lord blameless. This I understand to be the law of the Lord. The way that I undertook to free myself from this ungodly generation and go to the place where God called his people has failed. I have labored and others enjoy, or rather possess the fruits of a large portion of my hard toil. The reason why things are thus I understand to be the withholding of the tithes and offerings to the Lord, that in all ages have been required to be observed by his people. I may be under a mistake, but think not. The saints are required to bring their tithes and offerings into the storehouse of the Lord by Malachi, by Joseph and by James, and this whole nation Malachi says, has robbed the Lord.

This being the state of things it is no wonder that eighteen years have rolled away since the organization of the latter day church and no house built to the name of our God. Let the saints arise in the might of Israel's God and obey the word of the Lord through the prophet, and the kingdom of darkness will shake like an aspen leaf and the victory be given to the saints. We should no longer be powerless, but mighty through the Lord to the pulling down of Satan's strong holds of superstition, ignorance and witchcrafts, that incubus that now broods over the nations of the earth. My love to the saints at Voree and Beaver Island. From your brother in the church, planted and built upon the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone,

JESSE W. NICHOLS.

P. S. On the 4th inst. one dollar was remitted by me as tithing.
J. W. N.

☞ Both remittances were duly received, and we commend this letter as a most faithful exposition of the duty of the saints under the law of tithing, and the consequences of withholding.—While speaking of the subject we cannot forbear mentioning another case as an example to the saints in the keeping of this law.—Brother Butterfield, of Chicago, making sales of farm and garden production almost daily in market, separates out one-tenth of the money he realizes each day, puts it by in a bag by itself where it is always ready for the Lord's treasure. He assures us that he is blessed more than according to his faithfulness, and has a larger income left than before he paid tithing. We most sincerely regret that brother Nichols should toil and others possess the fruit of his labor. Such is the fate of man wherever Gentile oppression prevails. It is the consequences of the Ishmaelite or wages system. Nothing can cure it short of united interests and united possessions, in which all shall protect every one, and each shall be in reality a brother.

It is stated that the members of the Prov. Government of France had became ten years older during the first month they were in power. Ledru Rollin, who had a head of fine black hair, has become perfectly gray. M. Flacon has been at the point of death.—M. Louis Blanc, who had a fresh juvenile countenance, is no more recognizable. M. Lamartine and Garnier Pagès are hoarse. M. Cremieux has lost his voice.* M. Marrast seems worn out with fatigue. Arago alone has not quitted his post.—Ed. paper.

*He is a Jew.

LETTER FROM ESQ. FINLEY.

Centreville, Pa., April 30th, 1848.

DEAR BROTHER AND SISTER:—You inform us that you are Mormons. That surprises me a good deal, though it may be on account of prejudice. The accounts I have had of the Mormons has made me believe that the intelligent among them have some sinister motive in view, and that it is only the ignorant that are made to believe absurdities.1 This you may think is hard language, but when we hear in the nineteenth century and in this enlightened land such absurd doctrines put forth as are put forth by the Mormons, it really astonishes me that any person claiming any intelligence could be made to believe such stuff. You tell us that the Mormon church is the only true church, and there is no salvation out of it. Now I think it uncharitable to say there is no salvation out of the Mormon church.2 You allow but few to go to heaven.3 You must be more liberal than that. You must permit all good men to go to heaven of all churches.4 It is not more than fourteen or fifteen years since the Mormon church sprung up. How, I would like to know, were men saved before this faith was preached?5 Your idea of God being a corporeal being is really novel.6 My idea of the Deity was that he filled immensity; that he was every where present, and consequently he must be a spirit without a body, such as we could form an idea of. The Bible tells us he is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth, and I cannot help believing that they that worship him still as such, he will hear them.

Your doctrine that there is no salvation without baptism by immersion we also believe to be absurd.7 To say that the salvation of an immortal soul depends on this or any other outward form is contrary to reason and revelation. We believe that if the heart is right, whatever the forms are, the worship will be acceptable to God.8 You tell us that your church has the same gifts that was given unto the apostles. They can cast out Devils, heal the sick, make the lame to walk, the deaf to hear, and the blind to see.—Well, now, if they are able to do all these things it will certainly convince the unbelievers that they are the children of God.9 But if they are able to do these things, why is it that we do not hear of their performing more cures? There is enough of them to travel over the whole United States and work miracles. I would suppose that they, being the only true followers of Christ, would like him go about doing good. I would like you to inform me the use of speaking in tongues. If they are able to speak as correct in languages they never learned, that would be a useful accomplishment in this country where there are so many Dutch. Well, now, I have written a good deal and I hope you will not be angry at it, and I feel confident you will not; for I believe you are honest in your belief. But at the same time I believe that you are deep in error, and it would not be the mark of a good christian to get angry.

I remain as ever your brother, FRANCIS FINLEY.

Voree, August 3d, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—As the most convenient mode of answering your several points I furnish you the following notes to your letter. I shall be most happy to hear from you again. Most sincerely,

JOHN D. HARTLEY.

NOTE 1. It is only those who are ignorant of Mormonism who see any absurdities in it. Every other systems of religion requires its members to believe without a why or wherefore, and to believe in the face of the strongest possible demonstration. They have successively arrayed themselves against the sciences of astronomy, geology, physiology, ethics and even mathematics. The doctrine of the Trinity in unity is a standing mathematical lie, known to be a lie by mere school boys, and yet a leading article of faith in nearly all the churches. The respectable and influential among them having no reasons to give for their faith, have enforced the belief in their absurdities with fire and faggot. With the Mormons religion is a science, triable by the test of reason, and like all other sciences susceptible of demonstration. It has no stupendous follies which men are obliged to believe as a mystery, though contrary to their common sense. You would do well to ascertain the facts first, and apply your expletives afterwards.

2. Pray, how many churches do you think are true? You are doubtless aware that the church is called the Bride, the Lamb's wife. How many wives do you think he will have? Will you tell us how many true churches and how many different faiths Christ established?

3. True. Like Christ we say, "strait is the gate and narrow the way that leads to life, and few there be that find it." If we are in error, we are in very good company.

4. We are perfectly willing they should go there if they can find any such place. We only ask that they shall excuse us keeping them company. A curious heaven they would have with their 666 different creeds, and their endless variety of forms of worship. If they make a bedlam on earth with but one generation at a time, what would they not make when, from Simon Magus and Alexander the coppersmith to Alexander Campbell and Andrew J. Davis, they get all assembled together. No wonder they were called MYSTERY BABYLON by John the Revelator. You must understand that these several men were good men, according to their own standard of goodness, or according to the standards of their several churches, not according to God's standard. John Calvin was a most excellent saint and servant of God, according to the ideas of a large portion of christendom, but a very respectable number think Villenovius, whom he roasted for heresy, the better man of the two. Our Protestant ancestors, the English reformers, will of course take high rank among the the good men of all the churches. And the pilgrim fathers of this nation most certainly can have few superiors. But it would not look well in heaven to see the former ripping open women with child as they did in Ireland, or the latter hanging Quakers, as they did in Yankee land, merely because they did not serve God right. Would not "all the good men of all the churches," when they get together in heaven, have a happy time in talking over the days of their pilgrimage on earth where they earned their fame as good men, and their CROWNS in HEAVEN by hanging, beheading, whipping, burning and drawing and quartering one another.

The founders of each and every sect of all the churches were in their day persecuted, and generally persecuted to death by their contemporaries as impostors and blasphemers. Yet these founders are the good men of their several churches, as are their persecutors of the older churches, and if all the good men are going to the heaven of all the churches I am not without my fears that they will try their propensities again with inquisitions and tortures to produce that unity of faith in heaven which they have never attained to on earth. God has established his own standard of goodness. It consists in a strict obedience to his law. There is no such thing as obedience to his law short of obeying his commandments, such as to believe, repent, be baptized, &c. Whoever fails in these things is disobedient to God. Whoever is disobedient to God is not a good man, and cannot go to God's heaven, though I do not dispute he may to the heaven of all the sectarian churches. And equally true it is that whoever keeps these commandments is a member of God's only and true church, reproachfully called Mormons.

5. They were saved then as they are now. God is unchangeable. His law is immutable. There is none other name given under heaven or among men whereby we may be saved but the name of Jesus; the stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the cor-

LETTER FROM ESQ. FINLEY.

Centreville, Pa., April 30th, 1848.

DEAR BROTHER AND SISTER:—You inform us that you are Mormons. That surprises me a good deal, though it may be on account of prejudice. The accounts I have had of the Mormons has made me believe that the intelligent among them have some sinister motive in view, and that it is only the ignorant that are made to believe absurdities.1 This you may think is hard language, but when we hear in the nineteenth century and in this enlightened land such absurd doctrines put forth as are put forth by the Mormons, it really astonishes me that any person claiming any intelligence could be made to believe such stuff. You tell us that the Mormon church is the only true church, and there is no salvation out of it. Now I think it uncharitable to say there is no salvation out of the Mormon church.2 You allow but few to go to heaven.3 You must be more liberal than that. You must permit all good men to go to heaven of all churches.4 It is not more than fourteen or fifteen years since the Mormon church sprung up. How, I would like to know, were men saved before this faith was preached?5 Your idea of God being a corporeal being is really novel.6 My idea of the Deity was that he filled immensity; that he was every where present, and consequently he must be a spirit without a body, such as we could form an idea of. The Bible tells us he is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth, and I cannot help believing that they that worship him still as such, he will hear them.

Your doctrine that there is no salvation without baptism by immersion we also believe to be absurd.7 To say that the salvation of an immortal soul depends on this or any other outward form is contrary to reason and revelation. We believe that if the heart is right, whatever the forms are, the worship will be acceptable to God.8 You tell us that your church has the same gifts that was given unto the apostles. They can cast out Devils, heal the sick, make the lame to walk, the deaf to hear, and the blind to see.—Well, now, if they are able to do all these things it will certainly convince the unbelievers that they are the children of God.9 But if they are able to do these things, why is it that we do not hear of their performing more cures? There is enough of them to travel over the whole United States and work miracles. I would suppose that they, being the only true followers of Christ, would like him go about doing good. I would like you to inform me the use of speaking in tongues. If they are able to speak as correct in languages they never learned, that would be a useful accomplishment in this country where there are so many Dutch. Well, now, I have written a good deal and I hope you will not be angry at it, and I feel confident you will not; for I believe you are honest in your belief. But at the same time I believe that you are deep in error, and it would not be the mark of a good christian to get angry.

I remain as ever your brother, FRANCIS FINLEY.

Voree, August 3d, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—As the most convenient mode of answering your several points I furnish you the following notes to your letter. I shall be most happy to hear from you again. Most sincerely,

JOHN D. HARTLEY.

NOTE 1. It is only those who are ignorant of Mormonism who see any absurdities in it. Every other systems of religion requires its members to believe without a why or wherefore, and to believe in the face of the strongest possible demonstration. They have successively arrayed themselves against the sciences of astronomy, geology, physiology, ethics and even mathematics. The doctrine of the Trinity in unity is a standing mathematical lie, known to be a lie by mere school boys, and yet a leading article of faith in nearly all the churches. The respectable and influential among them having no reasons to give for their faith, have enforced the belief in their absurdities with fire and faggot. With the Mormons religion is a science, triable by the test of reason, and like all other sciences susceptible of demonstration. It has no stupendous follies which men are obliged to believe as a mystery, though contrary to their common sense. You would do well to ascertain the facts first, and apply your expletives afterwards.

2. Pray, how many churches do you think are true? You are doubtless aware that the church is called the Bride, the Lamb's wife. How many wives do you think he will have? Will you tell us how many true churches and how many different faiths Christ established?

3. True. Like Christ we say, "strait is the gate and narrow the way that leads to life, and few there be that find it." If we are in error, we are in very good company.

4. We are perfectly willing they should go there if they can find any such place. We only ask that they shall excuse us keeping them company. A curious heaven they would have with their 666 different creeds, and their endless variety of forms of worship. If they make a bedlam on earth with but one generation at a time, what would they not make when, from Simon Magus and Alexander the coppersmith to Alexander Campbell and Andrew J. Davis, they get all assembled together. No wonder they were called MYSTERY BABYLON by John the Revelator. You must understand that these several men were good men, according to their own standard of goodness, or according to the standards of their several churches, not according to God's standard. John Calvin was a most excellent saint and servant of God, according to the ideas of a large portion of christendom, but a very respectable number think Villeneovius, whom he roasted for heresy, the better man of the two. Our Protestant ancestors, the English reformers, will of course take high rank among the the good men of all the churches. And the pilgrim fathers of this nation most certainly can have few superiors. But it would not look well in heaven to see the former ripping open women with child as they did in Ireland, or the latter hanging Quakers, as they did in Yankee land, merely because they did not serve God right. Would not "all the good men of all the churches," when they get together in heaven, have a happy time in talking over the days of their pilgrimage on earth where they earned their fame as good men, and their CROWNS in HEAVEN by hanging, beheading, whipping, burning and drawing and quartering one another.

The founders of each and every sect of all the churches were in their day persecuted, and generally persecuted to death by their co-temporaries as impostors and blasphemers. Yet these founders are the good men of their several churches, as are their persecutors of the older churches, and if all the good men are going to the heaven of all the churches I am not without my fears that they will try their propensities again with inquisitions and tortures to produce that unity of faith in heaven which they have never attained to on earth. God has established his own standard of goodness. It consists in a strict obedience to his law. There is no such thing as obedience to his law short of obeying his commandments, such as to believe, repent, be baptized, &c. Whoever fails in these things is disobedient to God. Whoever is disobedient to God is not a good man, and cannot go to God's heaven, though I do not dispute he may to the heaven of all the sectarian churches. And equally true it is that whoever keeps these commandments is a member of God's only and true church, reproachfully called Mormons.

5. They were saved then as they are now. God is unchangeable. His law is immutable. There is none other name given under heaven or among men whereby we may be saved but the name of Jesus; the stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner of God's church or building, and there is salvation in no other. Acts iv. 11, 12. In old times without faith it was impossible to please God. Heb. xi. 6. He that believeth not shall be damned. Mark xvi. 16. I think you will hardly pretend that faith in an error is here spoken of, or that believing a lie will answer to avoid damnation. If this be correct, and if it be true also that there is one Lord, ONE FAITH, ONE BAPTISM, then there never was any salvation except by faith in the authority that God had established on the earth, nor without believing the things that God had revealed.—Those that were saved did believe as well as conform to the rest of God's law, and such as refused to do so were not saved. Now let me ask you, as there are 666 different faiths or beliefs among all the churches, all contradictory to one another, and of course all but one false, do you mean to be understood that the good men in all the churches will be saved by believing heresies and having faith in imposture?

7. It may seem to you very absurd that there is no salvation without baptism. But Christ saw no such absurdity in the doctrine.—If it is contrary to revelation, I desire to know where the revelation can be found. If contrary to reason, what reason? And if your reasons are good, it would be well to tell them to the Lord Jesus, that he may change his rule, and no longer say, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John iii. 5. If you can tell how a man can be "born of water" without being "baptized by immersion," I at least cannot.—Since you have taken pains to say that it is contrary to revelation to believe baptism necessary to salvation, I beg to assure you that there is not between the lids of the Bible one single promise of salvation to any sinner except on baptism for the remission of sins.—If you think there is any such, will you please point it out?

6. On this point I send you an article written by Elder Page, entitled, "Who are Idolatrous Worshippers?"

8. Not the least doubt that if the heart is right the worship will be acceptable. Do you know that when the heart is right the law of God is written on it? Deut. xxx. 6. Heb. viii. 10. Jer. xxxi. 33. And it will be the same on all hearts. And those whose hearts are thus right will keep the law of God, and worship him according to his forms and ordinances. Ps. xl. 8. Jer. xxxii. 38, 39, 40, 41. Ezek. xi. 19, 20. xxxvi. 26, 27, 28. However I understand you mean that if a man is sincere he will be saved, no matter what church he believes in and conforms to. If this is the idea, it is saying that error is as good as truth; that false religion, if sincerely practiced, is as good as true; that it is just as pleasing to God to disobey him and disregard his law, as to keep his law and regard his commandments, so a man does it heartily; and that sincere heathenism is just as good as true christanity. It is saying that instead of one straight and narrow way to life there are many broad devious ways, each of which is equally sure, so the man who travels it is no hypocrite.

As a judical officer of the commonwealth, what would you think if an offender should be brought before you and should ask you to exonorate him for the punishment of his crimes, because he had not kept the law of Pennsylvania, he had most sincerely and faithfully kept the law of some band of rebels, and was a first rate good man according to the rebel standard of goodness? Well, he would stand before you just as all the good men of all the churches (except the true) will stand before God, not having kept his law, but lived by the laws of rebels. It is because all the churches are in error with their numerous creeds and forms of worship that John the Revelator calls them Mystery Babylon, and the Lord sends an angel to cry, "come out of her my people, that ye be not PARTAKERS of her SINS, and that ye RECEIVE NOT of her PLAGUES;" and another angel said she is become the habitation of Devils, the hold of every foul spirit and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird, and that all nations had drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.—Rev. xviii. 2, 3, 4, 5. The good men of such a standard are welcome to their own place. I cannot conceive the idea of their hearts' being right.

9. If signs beget faith it will be a new fact in ecclesiastical history. When Moses wrought the power of God on the Egyptians they sought to destroy the whole house of Israel. When Moses stood in the mount in the midst of fire, thunderings and lightnings, and in the presence of God, and all the people saw the strange sight and heard the voices, they set to work to make a calf to worship.—When Elijah called down fire from heaven to consume his sacrifice before the false prophets, he had to flee the nation for life. After all the wondrous works of Jesus, the people among whom they were wrought rejected and slew him, leaving him but about 120 believers in a nation of many millions. His disciples, continuing in the same works, shared the same fate. We, doing the same works, have been persecuted from city to city, and from State to State; and notwithstanding our constitutional right to worship God as he has revealed himself to us, many of our brethren, have in this nation, died for the witness of Jesus.

You seem to have mistaken the whole doctrine of signs. The scriptures teach us that they are not intended to beget faith. Christ tells us expressly that they shall follow those that believe, not go before those that believe not. I do not question, however, that the time is coming that signs will be given expressly for the purpose of begetting faith, and that they will have that effect. The whole sectarian world, all the churches, have been for many years claiming for signs and miracles that power, and giving them as the evidence that Christ was truly sent from God. When they get this doctrine effectually instilled into the minds of their followers, the world will be prepared for the mission of the three UNCLEAN SPIRITS like frogs coming out of the mouth of the dragon, (Paganism,) the beast, (apostate christendom,) and the false prophet, (Mohammedanism,) going forth to the kings of the earth and to the whole world, working miracles to gather them together to battle against God in the great day. Rev. xvi. 13, 14. As Mystery Babylon is the habitation of every unclean spirit, these three must find a home in her, and will deceive them that dwell on the earth by means of their miracles. See Rev. xiii. 13, 14.

☞ We have several articles from correspondents that we intend to make room for soon. We cannot always insert them in the order of reception.

☞ A further notice of the Brighamite Conference will be contained in our next.

IN ATTACHMENT.

James A. Stevens and Andrew Sawyer, vs. David Patten. } In Justices Court, before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P.

NOTICE is hereby given to the above named defendant that a writ of attachment has been issued against him in the above entitled suit, and his property attached to satisfy the demand of the above named plaintiffs; and unless he appear before the above named Justice at his office in Hudson in the county of Walworth and State of Wisconsin, on the 26th day of August, 1848, at one o'clock, P. M., judgment will be rendered against him, and his property sold to pay the debt of the plaintiffs.

JAMES A. STEVENS.
ANDREW SAWYER.

July 22d, 1848. 21w.

ner of God's church or building, and there is salvation in no other. Acts iv. 11, 12. In old times without faith it was impossible to please God. Heb. xi. 6. He that believeth not shall be damned. Mark xvi. 16. I think you will hardly pretend that faith in an error is here spoken of, or that believing a lie will answer to avoid damnation. If this be correct, and if it be true also that there is one Lord, ONE FAITH, ONE BAPTISM, then there never was any salvation except by faith in the authority that God had established on the earth, nor without believing the things that God had revealed.—Those that were saved did believe as well as conform to the rest of God's law, and such as refused to do so were not saved. Now let me ask you, as there are 666 different faiths or beliefs among all the churches, all contradictory to one another, and of course all but one false, do you mean to be understood that the good men in all the churches will be saved by believing heresies and having faith in imposture?

7. It may seem to you very absurd that there is no salvation without baptism. But Christ saw no such absurdity in the doctrine.—If it is contrary to revelation, I desire to know where the revelation can be found. If contrary to reason, what reason? And if your reasons are good, it would be well to tell them to the Lord Jesus, that he may change his rule, and no longer say, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John iii. 5. If you can tell how a man can be "born of water" without being "baptized by immersion," I at least cannot.—Since you have taken pains to say that it is contrary to revelation to believe baptism necessary to salvation, I beg to assure you that there is not between the lids of the Bible one single promise of salvation to any sinner except on baptism for the remission of sins.—If you think there is any such, will you please point it out?

6. On this point I send you an article written by Elder Page, entitled, "Who are Idolatrous Worshippers?"

8. Not the least doubt that if the heart is right the worship will be acceptable. Do you know that when the heart is right the law of God is written on it? Deut. xxx. 6. Heb. viii. 10. Jer. xxxi. 33. And it will be the same on all hearts. And those whose hearts are thus right will keep the law of God, and worship him according to his forms and ordinances. Ps. xl. 8. Jer. xxxii. 38, 39, 40, 41. Ezek. xi. 19, 20. xxxvi. 26, 27, 28. However I understand you mean that if a man is sincere he will be saved, no matter what church he believes in and conforms to. If this is the idea, it is saying that error is as good as truth; that false religion, if sincerely practiced, is as good as true; that it is just as pleasing to God to disobey him and disregard his law, as to keep his law and regard his commandments, so a man does it heartily; and that sincere heathenism is just as good as true christanity. It is saying that instead of one straight and narrow way to life there are many broad devious ways, each of which is equally sure, so the man who travels it is no hypocrite.

As a judical officer of the commonwealth, what would you think if an offender should be brought before you and should ask you to exonorate him for the punishment of his crimes, because he had not kept the law of Pennsylvania, he had most sincerely and faithfully kept the law of some band of rebels, and was a first rate good man according to the rebel standard of goodness? Well, he would stand before you just as all the good men of all the churches (except the true) will stand before God, not having kept his law, but lived by the laws of rebels. It is because all the churches are in error with their numerous creeds and forms of worship that John the Revelator calls them Mystery Babylon, and the Lord sends an angel to cry, "come out of her my people, that ye be not PARTAKERS of her SINS, and that ye RECEIVE NOT of her PLAGUES;" and another angel said she is become the habitation of Devils, the hold of every foul spirit and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird, and that all nations had drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.—Rev. xviii. 2, 3, 4, 5. The good men of such a standard are welcome to their own place. I cannot conceive the idea of their hearts' being right.

9. If signs beget faith it will be a new fact in ecclesiastical history. When Moses wrought the power of God on the Egyptians they sought to destroy the whole house of Israel. When Moses stood in the mount in the midst of fire, thunderings and lightnings, and in the presence of God, and all the people saw the strange sight and heard the voices, they set to work to make a calf to worship.—When Elijah called down fire from heaven to consume his sacrifice before the false prophets, he had to flee the nation for life. After all the wondrous works of Jesus, the people among whom they were wrought rejected and slew him, leaving him but about 120 believers in a nation of many millions. His disciples, continuing in the same works, shared the same fate. We, doing the same works, have been persecuted from city to city, and from State to State; and notwithstanding our constitutional right to worship God as he has revealed himself to us, many of our brethren, have in this nation, died for the witness of Jesus.

You seem to have mistaken the whole doctrine of signs. The scriptures teach us that they are not intended to beget faith. Christ tells us expressly that they shall follow those that believe, not go before those that believe not. I do not question, however, that the time is coming that signs will be given expressly for the purpose of begetting faith, and that they will have that effect. The whole sectarian world, all the churches, have been for many years claiming for signs and miracles that power, and giving them as the evidence that Christ was truly sent from God. When they get this doctrine effectually instilled into the minds of their followers, the world will be prepared for the mission of the three UNCLEAN SPIRITS like frogs coming out of the mouth of the dragon, (Paganism,) the beast, (apostate christendom,) and the false prophet, (Mohammedanism,) going forth to the kings of the earth and to the whole world, working miracles to gather them together to battle against God in the great day. Rev. xvi. 13, 14. As Mystery Babylon is the habitation of every unclean spirit, these three must find a home in her, and will deceive them that dwell on the earth by means of their miracles. See Rev. xiii. 13, 14.

☞ We have several articles from correspondents that we intend to make room for soon. We cannot always insert them in the order of reception.

☞ A further notice of the Brighamite Conference will be contained in our next.

IN ATTACHMENT.

James A. Stevens and Andrew Sawyer, vs. David Patten. } In Justices Court, before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P.

NOTICE is hereby given to the above named defendant that a writ of attachment has been issued against him in the above entitled suit, and his property attached to satisfy the demand of the above named plaintiffs; and unless he appear before the above named Justice at his office in Hudson in the county of Walworth and State of Wisconsin, on the 26th day of August, 1848, at one o'clock, P. M., judgment will be rendered against him, and his property sold to pay the debt of the plaintiffs.

JAMES A. STEVENS.
ANDREW SAWYER.
2tw.

July 22d, 1848.

A FALSEHOOD DETECTED.

I am called upon to present one case of a prominent falsehood that is published in the books and pamphlets of those who have written against the Book of Mormon, which I had an occasion to refer to in a previous article. The following falsehood is one of E. D. Howe's of Painsville, Ohio. It is one of his very cool well studied and deliberate falsehoods, made up on purpose to deceive the candid public, as will be seen by every reader who reads and investigates for the sake of finding the truth of any matter. The falsehood occurs on the 89, 90 and 92 pages of Howe's "History of Mormonism," 1840 edition. The first edition came out in 1834. The Book of Mormon was published in 1830:—

"One Ether is the reputed author of the engravings on the gold plates, and in the translation by Moroni, alias Smith, we are presented with a genealogy of the fathers down to Jared, who left the great Tower, together with sundry other families and embarked for America. The genealogy is somewhat amusing; he gives us TWENTY-NINE generations down to the time of Jared, and the time when the Lord confounded the languages. According to the writings of Moses, the Tower was built in the days of Shem, the son of the patriarch Noah, and agreeably to the evangelist Luke, there were only TEN generations between Shem and Adam! If we are not allowed the Bible to prove the Book of Mormon false, we must resort to the reasonableness of the story and positions taken."

"Thus ends the Book of Ether, giving an account of the people of Jared, who were of a different race from the lineage of Adam, because we have their genealogy, which embraces twenty-nine generations, and begins to count back from the days of Shem. Neither Noah nor any other of the antedeluvian patriarchs are mentioned, consequently others must have been preserved from the flood than Noah and his family, if this history be true."

Mr. Howe says, in his advertisement: "The truth, and the whole truth, have been his constant aim." The following quotation from the Book of Mormon, first edition, page 539, sterotyped edition, page 524, will prove to the public that Mr. Howe's veracity is not as good as he would feign have us believe:—

"He that wrote this record was Ether, and he was a descendant of Coriantor; Coriantor was the son of Moron; and Moron was the son of Ethen; and Ethen was the son of Ahah; and Ahah was the son of Seth; and Seth was the son of Shiblon; and Shiblon was the son of Com; and Com was the son of Coriantum; and Coriantum was the son of Amnigaddah; and Amnigaddah was the son of Aaron; and Aaron was a descendant of Heth, who was the son of Hearthom; and Hearthom was the son of Lib; and Lib was the son of Kish; and Kish was the son of Corom; and Corom was the son of Levi; and Levi was the son of Kim; and Kim was the son of Morianton; and Morianton was a descendant of Riplakish; and Riplakish was the son of Shez; and Shez was the son of Heth; and Heth was the son of Com; and Com was the son of Coriantum; and Coriantum was the son of Emer; and Emer was the son of Omer; and Omer was the son of Shule; and Shule was the son of Kib; and Kib was the son of Orihah, which was the son of Jared; which Jared came forth with his brother and their families, with some others and their families, from the great tower, at the time the Lord confounded the languages of the people, and swear in his wrath that they should be scattered upon all the face of the earth."

The reader will discover clearly that Ether makes no reference to any genealogy further back than to the days of the confounding of the languages at the tower of Babel. Ether begins with himself some 1500 years after the confounding of the languages and traces the genealogy of his fathers back to Jared, who lived at the tower in the days of the confounding of the languages. There is not the least pretext on which to found a reasonable excuse for Mr. Howe for his catering so foul a falsehood as he has published concerning the Book of Mormon, in order to abuse the candid public mind by attempting to make the people believe that the Book of Mormon held out the idea that there was a distinct race of men that lived through the flood in the days of Noah, and that there was "TWENTY-NINE" generations from Shem to Adam instead of "TEN." I close by saying, of all the books and pamphlets I have read, of all that have written against the Book of Mormon, I have not yet found one but was guilty of some barefaced lie, equally as inexcusable as the one of the many of Mr. Howe's falsehoods noticed above. Yet, men have written, published and preached lies about the Book of Mormon and the Mormons, whose veracity is undoubted in every other matter. Whose faleshoods have resulted in the direct and indirect martyrdom of innocent men, women and children. What wont the judgments of God disclose, when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed?

JOHN E PAGE.

"ABORIGINAL INDUSTRY.—By the census of the Indian tribes, which is now in the process of being taken, says the Union, it is shown that the seven small bands of Ottawas, Michillimackinac, depend on agriculture for a subsistence, and raised, during the last season, 25,000 bushels of corn, and 40,000 bushels of potatoes.—They also made the past spring, 325,000 pounds, or over 147 tons, of maple sugar; which is worth, at the Mackinac market, seven cents per pound—making $22,750 on sugar alone. Corn is worth at the same place 50 cents, and potatoes 37½ cents per bushel.—This single example shows what the Indian tribes could do for themselves were they all to make a bold appeal to agriculture for a living and abandon the chase."

☞ These Indians reside in the vicinity of Beaver. Those at Beaver are equally successful in agriculture, besides doing a successful fishing business.

MARRIED,

In this place, on the 30th ult., by Pres. Strang, Bro. GILBERT WATSON, Bishop, to sister CYNTHIA COLE, both of Voree.

At Rochester, Wis., on the 13th ult., by Seth Warner, Esq., Bro. ELHANAN W. STRATTON, of this place, to Miss MARY A. LEWIS, of Burlington.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

A FALSEHOOD DETECTED.

I am called upon to present one case of a prominent falsehood that is published in the books and pamphlets of those who have written against the Book of Mormon, which I had an occasion to refer to in a previous article. The following falsehood is one of E. D. Howe's of Painsville, Ohio. It is one of his very cool well studied and deliberate falsehoods, made up on purpose to deceive the candid public, as will be seen by every reader who reads and investigates for the sake of finding the truth of any matter. The falsehood occurs on the 89, 90 and 92 pages of Howe's "History of Mormonism," 1840 edition. The first edition came out in 1834. The Book of Mormon was published in 1830:—

"One Ether is the reputed author of the engravings on the gold plates, and in the translation by Moroni, alias Smith, we are presented with a genealogy of the fathers down to Jared, who left the great Tower, together with sundry other families and embarked for America. The genealogy is somewhat amusing; he gives us TWENTY-NINE generations down to the time of Jared, and the time when the Lord confounded the languages. According to the writings of Moses, the Tower was built in the days of Shem, the son of the patriarch Noah, and agreeably to the evangelist Luke, there were only TEN generations between Shem and Adam! If we are not allowed the Bible to prove the Book of Mormon false, we must resort to the reasonableness of the story and positions taken."

"Thus ends the Book of Ether, giving an account of the people of Jared, who were of a different race from the lineage of Adam, because we have their genealogy, which embraces twenty-nine generations, and begins to count back from the days of Shem. Neither Noah nor any other of the antedeluvian patriarchs are mentioned, consequently others must have been preserved from the flood than Noah and his family, if this history be true."

Mr. Howe says, in his advertisement: "The truth, and the whole truth, have been his constant aim." The following quotation from the Book of Mormon, first edition, page 539, sterotyped edition, page 524, will prove to the public that Mr. Howe's veracity is not as good as he would feign have us believe:—

"He that wrote this record was Ether, and he was a descendant of Coriantor; Coriantor was the son of Moron; and Moron was the son of Ethen; and Ethen was the son of Ahah; and Ahah was the son of Seth; and Seth was the son of Shiblon; and Shiblon was the son of Com; and Com was the son of Coriantum; and Coriantum was the son of Amnigaddah; and Amnigaddah was the son of Aaron; and Aaron was a descendant of Heth, who was the son of Hearthom; and Hearthom was the son of Lib; and Lib was the son of Kish; and Kish was the son of Corom; and Corom was the son of Levi; and Levi was the son of Kim; and Kim was the son of Morianton; and Morianton was a descendant of Riplakish; and Riplakish was the son of Shez; and Shez was the son of Heth; and Heth was the son of Com; and Com was the son of Coriantum; and Coriantum was the son of Emer; and Emer was the son of Omer; and Omer was the son of Shule; and Shule was the son of Kib; and Kib was the son of Orihah, which was the son of Jared; which Jared came forth with his brother and their families, with some others and their families, from the great tower, at the time the Lord confounded the languages of the people, and swear in his wrath that they should be scattered upon all the face of the earth."

The reader will discover clearly that Ether makes no reference to any genealogy further back than to the days of the confounding of the languages at the tower of Babel. Ether begins with himself some 1500 years after the confounding of the languages and traces the genealogy of his fathers back to Jared, who lived at the tower in the days of the confounding of the languages. There is not the least pretext on which to found a reasonable excuse for Mr. Howe for his catering so foul a falsehood as he has published concerning the Book of Mormon, in order to abuse the candid public mind by attempting to make the people believe that the Book of Mormon held out the idea that there was a distinct race of men that lived through the flood in the days of Noah, and that there was "TWENTY-NINE" generations from Shem to Adam instead of "TEN." I close by saying, of all the books and pamphlets I have read, of all that have written against the Book of Mormon, I have not yet found one but was guilty of some barefaced lie, equally as inexcusable as the one of the many of Mr. Howe's falsehoods noticed above. Yet, men have written, published and preached lies about the Book of Mormon and the Mormons, whose veracity is undoubted in every other matter. Whose falsehoods have resulted in the direct and indirect martyrdom of innocent men, women and children. What wont the judgments of God disclose, when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed?

JOHN E PAGE.

"ABORIGINAL INDUSTRY.—By the census of the Indian tribes, which is now in the process of being taken, says the Union, it is shown that the seven small bands of Ottawas, Michillimackinac, depend on agriculture for a subsistence, and raised, during the last season, 25,000 bushels of corn, and 40,000 bushels of potatoes.—They also made the past spring, 325,000 pounds, or over 147 tons, of maple sugar; which is worth, at the Mackinac market, seven cents per pound—making $22,750 on sugar alone. Corn is worth at the same place 50 cents, and potatoes 37½ cents per bushel.—This single example shows what the Indian tribes could do for themselves were they all to make a bold appeal to agriculture for a living and abandon the chase."

☞ These Indians reside in the vicinity of Beaver. Those at Beaver are equally successful in agriculture, besides doing a successful fishing business.

MARRIED,

In this place, on the 30th ult., by Pres. Strang, Bro. GILBERT WATSON, Bishop, to sister CYNTHIA COLE, both of Voree.

At Rochester, Wis., on the 13th ult., by Seth Warner, Esq., Bro. ELHANAN W. STRATTON, of this place, to Miss MARY A. LEWIS, of Burlington.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cw.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 22.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, AUG. 17, 1848. [WHOLE No. 86.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

SO-CALLED CHRISTIANS HOLD SLAVES.

The holding of slaves and the trading in "slaves and souls of men" is one of the disgusting characteristics of "Mystery Babylon," the mother of all the abominations of the earth. Where then shall we go to find an exemplary feature of the church of Anti-Christ, so that when any persons wish to unite with the christian church they may not mistake and join themselves to Mystery Babylon? ANS. Go to any of the slave States and inquire for a church that professes to believe in Christ and pretends to observe his laws, keep his commandments and walk in all of the ordinances of the Lord's house blameless. And if you find any that hold, trade and traffic in "slaves and souls of men" as a religious right, set that church down as the old "whore" of Babylon or one of her daughters the "harlots."

Who does not know that the religious denominations of the southern States who hold slaves profess to believe in the same fundamental principles, rally around the same standard, subscribe to the same articles of faith, and profess to be converted, yea, sanctified, and get as shouting happy in the slave holding Holy Ghost religion that the professed christians of the same denominations do in the northern States? O fudge! Will the people let popular prejudice and popular sin, clothed in long gowns, broad phylacteries, long tunics, and disfigured faces, and long prayers, damn them at last?

JOHN E. PAGE.

FRANCE.

The numbers of the late insurgents are estimated at 50,000. It is perfectly idle to say that plunder and violence were their objects. They are the very same men who wrote death to thieves upon the walls of the Tuilleries during the revolution of Feb. Disappointment that certain theories of government had not been soon enough realized in practice could never have driven them to an armed insurrection. Such men are not theorists. The great questions of social reform are not with them matters of speculation in easy-chairs, but the stern lessons set every day by Poverty and Famine. Want, and not Wish, is at the bottom of armed insurrections. Here are the two horns of the dilemma: either these men had a definite object of radical change in the social system, or else there were 50,000 men in Paris, so degraded, that the mere love of bloodshed, or hope of plunder, could stir them to revolt. In either case society was to blame. The social order which starves 50,000 men cannot be of God; that which makes brutes of them must be of the Devil.

We have no kind of fellow feeling with the satisfaction we have heard and seen expressed, that the insurgents were put down. It would have been infinitely more joyous news to us to have heard that they had been raised up. The great problem of over-supply of labor is not to be settled by a decimation of the laboring class, whether by gunpowder or starvation. Society in a healthy condition, would feel the loss of every pair of willing and useful hands thrust violently out of it. That these Parisian ouvriers, or laborers, were driven to rebellion by desperation is palpable. That they had ideas in their heads is plain from their conduct immediately after the revolution. They were suffering then. It was they who had achieved the victory over the old order of things. In the then anarchic state of the Capital, rapine, had that been their object, was within easy reach. But the revolution of Feb. was not the chaotic movement of men to whom any change was preferable to the wretched present. Not so much subversion, as subversion for the sake of organization was what they aimed at. The giant Labor did not merely turn over from one side to the other for an easier position.—Rather he rose up

"Like blind Orion, hungry for the morn."

It was light which the people demanded. Social order was precisely the thing they wished for in place of social chaos. There is not in all history an instance of such heroic self-denial as that which was displayed by what is called the Mob of Paris, during the few days immediately following the flight of the Orleans dynasty. What was the shield which the noble Lamartine held up between the Provisional Government and the people? Simply the Idea of the Republic! And this Idea was respected by starving men with arms in their hands.

No, a mob is a body of men in whom the immediate passion or interest of the moment triumphs over reason. The Revolution of 1830 was the work of the Middle Class. Louis Philippe ceased to represent the idea of that revolution, and the throne crumbled away from under him. The Revolution of 1848 has been achieved by the Working Class. The Middle Class stand in the same relation toward the working class now that Louis Philippe did toward the middle class. Let the Middle Class not show themselves to be Bourbons in their blindness to the present, and their imperviousness to the experience of the past.

The rest of Europe seems destined to be convulsed by a struggle of races. The wounds of nationality are those which there smart the most keenly. In France the contest is between Classes. The present system of society seems like a raft put hastily together out of fragments of the wreck of Feudalism. It is so crazy that unless every one stand still, there is danger of all going overboard. It is so ill provisioned that a part of the crew must be thrown into the sea, or serve as food for the rest. In the war of Classes the concession must always be on the part of the least desperate. But unhappily concession is not and never will be a cure. It is not the particular fester of each city, country, or generation that must be got rid of. The disease itself which produced them must be conquered, and even this is of comparatively little avail while the cause of the disease remains ungrappled with. Patent disinfecters will answer a temporary purpose only, the pestilence remains. The experiment of driving in the disease which has just been tried in Paris, and which seems to give so much satisfaction to the regular Faculty of State doctors, is the most useless and most dangerous of all.

We do not profess to point out a remedy. But we have a right to demand that Governments and governing classes every where should diligently and honestly seek for one, and should examine the plans and propositions of those who have made social sciences the study of their lives, instead of sneering at them.—Belfast Jour.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 22.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. AUG. 17, 1848. [WHOLE No. 86.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

SO-CALLED CHRISTIANS HOLD SLAVES.

The holding of slaves and the trading in "slaves and souls of men" is one of the disgusting characteristics of "Mystery Babylon," the mother of all the abominations of the earth. Where then shall we go to find an exemplary feature of the church of Anti-Christ, so that when any persons wish to unite with the christian church they may not mistake and join themselves to Mystery Babylon? Ans. Go to any of the slave States and inquire for a church that professes to believe in Christ and pretends to observe his laws, keep his commandments and walk in all of the ordinances of the Lord's house blameless. And if you find any that hold, trade and traffic in "slaves and souls of men" as a religious right, set that church down as the old "whore" of Babylon or one of her daughters the "harlots."

Who does not know that the religious denominations of the southern States who hold slaves profess to believe in the same fundamental principles, rally around the same standard, subscribe to the same articles of faith, and profess to be converted, yea, sanctified, and get as shouting happy in the slave holding Holy Ghost religion that the professed christians of the same denominations do in the northern States? O fudge! Will the people let popular prejudice and popular sin, clothed in long gowns, broad phylacteries, long tunics, and disfigured faces, and long prayers, damn them at last?

JOHN E. PAGE.

FRANCE.

The numbers of the late insurgents are estimated at 50,000. It is perfectly idle to say that plunder and violence were their objects. They are the very same men who wrote death to thieves upon the walls of the Tuilleries during the revolution of Feb. Disappointment that certain theories of government had not been soon enough realized in practice could never have driven them to an armed insurrection. Such men are not theorists. The great questions of social reform are not with them matters of speculation in easy-chairs, but the stern lessons set every day by Poverty and Famine. Want, and not Wish, is at the bottom of armed insurrections. Here are the two horns of the dilemma: either these men had a definite object of radical change in the social system, or else there were 50,000 men in Paris, so degraded, that the mere love of bloodshed, or hope of plunder, could stir them to revolt. In either case society was to blame. The social order which starves 50,000 men cannot be of God; that which makes brutes of them must be of the Devil.

We have no kind of fellow feeling with the satisfaction we have heard and seen expressed, that the insurgents were put down. It would have been infinitely more joyous news to us to have heard that they had been raised up. The great problem of over-supply of labor is not to be settled by a decimation of the laboring class, whether by gunpowder or starvation. Society in a healthy condition, would feel the loss of every pair of willing and useful hands thrust violently out of it. That these Parisian ouvriers, or laborers, were driven to rebellion by desperation is palpable. That they had ideas in their heads is plain from their conduct immediately after the revolution. They were suffering then. It was they who had achieved the victory over the old order of things. In the then anarchic state of the Capital, rapine, had that been their object, was within easy reach. But the revolution of Feb. was not the chaotic movement of men to whom any change was preferable to the wretched present. Not so much subversion, as subversion for the sake of organization was what they aimed at. The giant Labor did not merely turn over from one side to the other for an easier position.—Rather he rose up

"Like blind Orion, hungry for the morn."

It was light which the people demanded. Social order was precisely the thing they wished for in place of social chaos. There is not in all history an instance of such heroic self-denial as that which was displayed by what is called the Mob of Paris, during the few days immediately following the flight of the Orleans dynasty. What was the shield which the noble Lamartine held up between the Provisional Government and the people? Simply the Idea of the Republic! And this Idea, was respected by starving men with arms in their hands.

No, a mob is a body of men in whom the immediate passion or interest of the moment triumphs over reason. The Revolution of 1830 was the work of the Middle Class. Louis Philippe ceased to represent the idea of that revolution, and the throne crumbled away from under him. The Revolution of 1848 has been achieved by the Working Class. The Middle Class stand in the same relation toward the working class now that Louis Philippe did toward the middle class. Let the Middle Class not show themselves to be Bourbons in their blindness to the present, and their imperviousness to the experience of the past.

The rest of Europe seems destined to be convulsed by a struggle of races. The wounds of nationality are those which there smart the most keenly. In France the contest is between Classes. The present system of society seems like a raft put hastily together out of fragments of the wreck of Feudalism. It is so crazy that unless every one stand still, there is danger of all going overboard. It is so ill provisioned that a part of the crew must be thrown into the sea, or serve as food for the rest. In the war of Classes the concession must always be on the part of the least desperate. But unhappily concession is not and never will be a cure. It is not the particular fester of each city, country, or generation that must be got rid of. The disease itself which produced them must be conquered, and even this is of comparatively little avail while the cause of the disease remains ungrappled with. Patent disinfecters will answer a temporary purpose only, the pestilence remains. The experiment of driving in the disease which has just been tried in Paris, and which seems to give so much satisfaction to the regular Faculty of State doctors, is the most useless and most dangerous of all.

We do not profess to point out a remedy. But we have a right to demand that Governments and governing classes every where should diligently and honestly seek for one, and should examine the plans and propositions of those who have made social sciences the study of their lives, instead of sneering at them.—Belfast Jour.

AN APPEAL.

It is seldom that I address the public concerning myself, and very seldom that I do so by way of complaint. On the whole I have great reason to be thankful for the kindnesses that I have received at the hands of those with whom I have associated and corresponded. I owe a debt of gratitude, great, but never unacknowledged for ten thousand acts of benevolence and generosity received at the hands of numerous strangers, both at home and on my various journies; which I am ever ready to reciprocate, both to the same persons and to the rest of mankind, whoever they may be. Asking a generous respect and kindness at the hands of all I meet, notwithstanding the peculiar views I represent, I endeavor always to show the same to all others. I have never treated with contumely or neglect any individual because his doctrines were unpopular or different from my own. Much less have I ever joined in the wholesale scandal which is usually heaped on the founders and representatives of new and unpopular theories. Even when they have been clearly shown guilty of offences against the order of society I have not trumpeted those things to raise prejudice against their doctrines, but have been content to oppose them by logical reasoning and trust every cause on fair common sense, rather than pique, prejudice or personal malfeasance. Though I claim exemption from these faults, I am far from professing perfection. And when I begin to complain, I hope it will not be supposed that I think injuries have blotted out kindnesses, or that I am in any respect destitute of friends. Considering the very arduous and difficult mission which God has committed to me, I have every reason to be thankful that my perils have not been greater. By a very large portion of my fellow creatures I have been treated full as well as I deserved, and my labors have been prized quite higher by most men than by myself. I never could see in myself the talent I have had the credit for.

But there is a class of injuries which have been for a few years past poured out upon me without measure or sparing, cruel and wicked in their import, and where successful, irreparable in their consequences, which I do not feel the least obligation to patiently submit to. And these injuries come much more from those who claim the name of saints than from mere Gentiles. These injuries consist principally in giving credit to every tale that may be put afloat, until it is proved false. The common and only just rule among men is that every man be held innocent until proved guilty. At a very early period after the organization of the church the community adopted the opposite rule in regard to the prophet Joseph, and always believing him guilty of every act that any foul mouthed slanderer saw fit to accuse him of, they had actually convinced themselves that he was the author of more crimes than one man could commit in a lifetime of five hundred years.

However ridiculous and unjust this course may have been, while confined to mere enemies, it was comparatively harmeless. But of late a great body of those calling themselves saints have adopted the same rule in regard to their prophet. I do not ask any immunity from personal public responsibility in all my actions.—But it is cruel and heartless beyond measure to adopt the rule, which has been acted on in my case, of holding every accusation upon me true till it is proved false. If a mere charge is put afloat upon me, without one word of proof to sustain it, vast numbers will take it up, as a settled truth, an undoubted fact. With no evidence against me, and as much to prove my absolute innocence, as if against me would be sufficient to show guilt, they still believe the charge. And though the whole course of my life, in addition, gives the lie to such an accusation, it is believed all the same.—There can be no reason for this course, except that men love lies more than the truth. To believe not only without evidence and contrary to ones whole life, but in defiance of strong testimony, every tale that malice may invent, is abominably unjust, and betrays deep corruption of heart in those who are the subjects of it.

There is no greater truth than that men usually judge of the conduct of others upon the standard of moral conduct, by which they are themselves governed. Whoever is ever ready to suspect the motives and conduct of others, becomes a lively witness of his own ill motives and vile conduct. The man who is ever fearful that another is doing wrong in any particular circumstances, proves that he would do the like wrong in the same circumstances. The fearful and the unbelieving go to the same end, and our Lord has classed together those that love and those that make lies.

I became a member of the church only a few months previous to the martyrdom of the prophet Joseph. It is very well known that about the time of, and immediately after his decease, certain doctrines of a most deleterious tendency were sown broad cast throughout the church, and cultivated with so skillful a hand as to become deep rooted. I believe no man denies that at that time I maintained an unstained moral character. It is a matter of universal notoriety that from the very beginning of my ministry I took high ground against those doctrines, and have maintained that opposition without one single change or shadow of turning. Numbers of persons who had drank in those errors have, professing to turn from them, joined the church under my leading, and after a short time, being overtaken in their former ways and cut off therefor, have gone off howling against me. It is a fact perfectly notorious throughout the land that my principal accusers are those whose life has been chiefly devoted to the same crimes which they charge me with, and for which they profess to abandon me. Those saints who credit their lies, have placed themselves in the ridiculous predicament of believing that a man whose character was always fair, whom they acknowledge as the Lord's anointed, and who is and has been during his ministry principally surrounded by men of exalted virtue and unsuspected reputation, is a vile scamp because those whom they know to be such, say he is like them, and that therefore they cannot endure him.

That men really respectable, and whose respectability I desire not to question, should both believe such tales and publish them as undoubted facts, in such manner that the world should believe they speak upon personal knowledge, is both ridiculous and outrageously wicked. For any one to fear that such things may be true is foolish. There is a naked possibility that any man may commit any crime known among men. But we ought not therefore to fear that he will do it. Such fears will produce neither safety, peace or happiness. It is better to risk the bare possibility of being sometime betrayed than never to trust.

Society never existed among men without confidence. Wherever confidence is reposed, there may be betrayed. It ought not to be reposed when betrayal is probable, nor refused because it is possible. Every man may be a great scamp if he prefers it. Should we, therefore, suspect him without evidence? And believe him guilty of every crime he might commit till he proves himself innocent?—And after he has proved his innocence begin to say, "if" and "but" and "I don't know but they lie to screen him?" And must a prophet in order to maintain a fair character among the saints, keep a band of witnesses to watch him hourly and inspect all his correspondence, to PROVE to the SAINTS that he commits no secret sins? Shame on the man, saint though he be, whose actions demand it! He is like a painted sepulcher, which, though the outside be clean, is within filled with dead mens' bones and all uncleanness. The pure are not so ready to think ill of human kind, nor the faithful of the ministers of God's word.

Scarcely a week passes by without some tale being put afloat up-

AN APPEAL.

It is seldom that I address the public concerning myself, and very seldom that I do so by way of complaint. On the whole I have great reason to be thankful for the kindnesses that I have received at the hands of those with whom I have associated and corresponded. I owe a debt of gratitude, great, but never unacknowledged for ten thousand acts of benevolence and generosity received at the hands of numerous strangers, both at home and on my various journies; which I am ever ready to reciprocate, both to the same persons and to the rest of mankind, whoever they may be. Asking a generous respect and kindness at the hands of all I meet, notwithstanding the peculiar views I represent, I endeavor always to show the same to all others. I have never treated with contumely or neglect any individual because his doctrines were unpopular or different from my own. Much less have I ever joined in the wholesale scandal which is usually heaped on the founders and representatives of new and unpopular theories. Even when they have been clearly shown guilty of offences against the order of society I have not trumpeted those things to raise prejudice against their doctrines, but have been content to oppose them by logical reasoning and trust every cause on fair common sense, rather than pique, prejudice or personal malfeasance. Though I claim exemption from these faults, I am far from professing perfection. And when I begin to complain, I hope it will not be supposed that I think injuries have blotted out kindnesses, or that I am in any respect destitute of friends. Considering the very arduous and difficult mission which God has committed to me, I have every reason to be thankful that my perils have not been greater. By a very large portion of my fellow creatures I have been treated full as well as I deserved, and my labors have been prized quite higher by most men than by myself. I never could see in myself the talent I have had the credit for.

The injuries which have been for a few years past poured out upon me without measure or sparing, cruel and wicked in their import, and where successful, irreparable in their consequences, which I do not feel the least obligation to patiently submit to. And these injuries come much more from those who claim the name of saints than from mere Gentiles. These injuries consist principally in giving credit to every tale that may be put afloat, until it is proved false. The common and only just rule among men is that every man be held innocent until proved guilty. At a very early period after the organization of the church the community adopted the opposite rule in regard to the prophet Joseph, and always believing him guilty of every act that any foul mouthed slanderer saw fit to accuse him of, they had actually convinced themselves that he was the author of more crimes than one man could commit in a lifetime of five hundred years.

However ridiculous and unjust this course may have been, while confined to mere enemies, it was comparatively harmeless. But of late a great body of those calling themselves saints have adopted the same rule in regard to their prophet. I do not ask any immunity from personal public responsibility in all my actions.—But it is cruel and heartless beyond measure to adopt the rule, which has been acted on in my case, of holding every accusation upon me true till it is proved false. If a mere charge is put afloat upon me, without one word of proof to sustain it, vast numbers will take it up, as a settled truth, an undoubted fact. With no evidence against me, and as much to prove my absolute innocence, as if against me would be sufficient to show guilt, they still believe the charge. And though the whole course of my life, in addition, gives the lie to such an accusation, it is believed all the same.—There can be no reason for this course, except that men love lies more than the truth. To believe not only without evidence and contrary to ones whole life, but in defiance of strong testimony, every tale that malice may invent, is abominably unjust, and betrays deep corruption of heart in those who are the subjects of it.

There is no greater truth than that men usually judge of the conduct of others upon the standard of moral conduct, by which they are themselves governed. Whoever is ever ready to suspect the motives and conduct of others, becomes a lively witness of his own ill motives and vile conduct. The man who is ever fearful that another is doing wrong in any particular circumstances, proves that he would do the like wrong in the same circumstances. The fearful and the unbelieving go to the same end, and our Lord has classed together those that love and those that make lies.

I became a member of the church only a few months previous to the martyrdom of the prophet Joseph. It is very well known that about the time of, and immediately after his decease, certain doctrines of a most deleterious tendency were sown broad cast throughout the church, and cultivated with so skillful a hand as to become deep rooted. I believe no man denies that at that time I maintained an unstained moral character. It is a matter of universal notoriety that from the very beginning of my ministry I took high ground against those doctrines, and have maintained that opposition without one single change or shadow of turning. Numbers of persons who had drank in those errors have, professing to turn from them, joined the church under my leading, and after a short time, being overtaken in their former ways and cut off therefor, have gone off howling against me. It is a fact perfectly notorious throughout the land that my principal accusers are those whose life has been chiefly devoted to the same crimes which they charge me with, and for which they profess to abandon me. Those saints who credit their lies, have placed themselves in the ridiculous predicament of believing that a man whose character was always fair, whom they acknowledge as the Lord's anointed, and who is and has been during his ministry principally surrounded by men of exalted virtue and unsuspected reputation, is a vile scamp because those whom they know to be such, say he is like them, and that therefore they cannot endure him.

That men really respectable, and whose respectability I desire not to question, should both believe such tales and publish them as undoubted facts, in such manner that the world should believe they speak upon personal knowledge, is both ridiculous and outrageously wicked. For any one to fear that such things may be true is foolish. There is a naked possibility that any man may commit any crime known among men. But we ought not therefore to fear that he will do it. Such fears will produce neither safety, peace or happiness. It is better to risk the bare possibility of being sometime betrayed than never to trust.

Society never existed among men without confidence. Wherever confidence is reposed, there may be betrayed. It ought not to be reposed when betrayal is probable, nor refused because it is possible. Every man may be a great scamp if he prefers it. Should we, therefore, suspect him without evidence? And believe him guilty of every crime he might commit till he proves himself innocent?—And after he has proved his innocence begin to say, "if" and "but" and "I don't know but they lie to screen him?" And must a prophet in order to maintain a fair character among the saints, keep a band of witnesses to watch him hourly and inspect all his correspondence, to PROVE to the SAINTS that he commits no secret sins? Shame on the man, saint though he be, whose actions demand it! He is like a painted sepulcher, which, though the outside be clean, is within filled with dead mens' bones and all uncleanness. The pure are not so ready to think ill of human kind, nor the faithful of the ministers of God's word.

Scarcely a week passes by without some tale being put afloat upon me, charging me with some offence against public law, on which, if convicted, I should be subject to imprisonment. A triumphant cry is raised among apostates, very frequently, that they have got Strang now where he can't wiggle out of their hands, and they shall put him through. Yet no prosecution has ever been commenced against me. Several times they have threatened to try me in their self-constituted tribunals, and once went so far as to advertise in the secular press a long string of charges on which I was to be tried at a fixed day. But then, as on every other occasion, when the day came my accusers and their witnesses were no where. The witnesses were a chimera, and accusers hid their heads. I will not inflict on your patience a long list of scandal, but to show to what littleness men will stoop, and by what folly men professing the faith are overthrown, I name a few of the thousand and one falsehoods which have been both published and believed against me.

The Voree Herald contained articles from other papers, representing that White River would afford a water power at Voree by means of dam and race of from 20 to 25 feet fall. It has been published far and near that this is a lie; that there is no water power here, and that six feet fall cannot be obtained. Men of respectability have taken it up and repeated it as an undoubted fact, by means of which real injury has been done to the growth of the place. On what authority is this slander put afloat? None at all. Not a man of all who dispute the existence of 25 feet fall ever walked along the river, much less made a survey of it. William Aldrich, who has circulated it very industriously, and probably done more than any other man in giving it currency, had but barely crossed the river at a single point, and on that boldly puts forth a statement in the face of careful observations of engineers that a dam and race crossing a bend and bringing to one point the fall of a rapid river for three miles would not produce 25 feet fall. I care not what a man's character may be, his guessing cannot stand against engineers measurements. Yet such is the best they have against me.

Reuben Miller accuses me of lying in saying that in my ordination the angel touched me, and brings a certificate of two or three who were present at our interview to prove that I did not then say so, &c. But a majority of those present certify that I did say so at that time. If I said it, his witnesses might not have heard it.— But if I did not say it, the others COULD NOT. Yet several persons have apostatized on it. They believed the negative of a few, stronger evidence than the affirmative of several, and enough stronger to convict a gentleman of good character of falsehood. And that falsehood utterly objectless, contrary to what he had said and written many times a day both before and after. Such a charge would not be worthy of notice on any testimony and unopposed. It proves its own falsehood.

It is very well known that the second day of January, 1847, some 24 of the saints met at my house and some ordinances of some kind were administered. As the meeting was not public, much curiosity has always been felt to know what they were. The transaction is usually spoken of by the name of "ILLUMINATION." Immediately after it occurred a rumor was put afloat that some terrible imposition had been practiced by me. It was alledged that I had gathered the saints in a lower room with a loose floor overhead, and causing a bright light to shine through the cracks, had pretended that it came from heaven! And that by burning pitch or other combustibles in the chimney had caused a pillar of light to rise up as the channel of communication! Men were found to believe that two dozen respectable gentlemen and ladies could be imposed on by such means! And that one in any circumstances was capable of stooping to it!

Directly the Elkhorn Star and the New Era published that fire was produced on the heads of the saints by the use of a galvanic battery, secretly concealed in another room. All scietific men know very well that the battery would destroy human life before it produced an illumination. Yet E. A. Utter, an editor and an M. D. was willing to give his sanction to it. Every man of science wil say it is impossible. Yet the saint says, "I don't know. It i best to look out for deception," and makes shipwreck of faith becaus possibly the prophet has done what no man on earth could do.

William Smith has published far and near and got it in the religious papers generally that I got a house built on the promise of a heavenly illumination, which I then gave by anointing the heads of the saints with phosphorus and oil. He goes on to say that he discovered the cheat and accused me of it on the spot, and that I both acknowledged it and justified it by saying that all miracles are similar cheats. Had such a story been told on any body else, the U. S. would not have furnished seven fools to credit it. But being on the Mormon prophet, it must be true. I have no reason to doubt that it is generally believed. The saints are filled with fears that it may be so.

Now I ask, in all candor, I put it to the good sense of every man, could the church have been preserved under my leading a single day after such an act? Would it not have produced universal indignation and denunciation, immediate and unqualified? Would even a man's person be safe among those who had been subjected to such base imposture? William Smith spent that winter in Knox county, Ill., and was not within 150 miles of Voree, within some three months of that time. But several others, men of a very different character from Wm. Smith, assert that the illumination was really an imposition by the use of phosphorus and oil, and as a few of them are men who are usually credited in other matters, it may be expected of me to show a reason why they should not in this. I have cheerfully done it as often as requested.

Phosphorus and oil only produces a dim light in a warm dark room. It barely makes itself visible, and could not possibly for a single moment be mistaken for the glory of God. So if such an imposition was practiced, it must have been detected on the spot.— If an impostor, could I be such a fool? Why did not these men expose it? Within three days of that meeting the whole band of apostates in the place, amounting to some forty, were continually accusing the saints of having been imposed on in the illumination, and every soul of them denied it, and scouted the very naming of it. In order to believe that they TELL THE TRUTH NOW, we MUST BELIEVE that they LIED THEN. It was the principal topic of conversation in Voree for some weeks, and every person present in the most pointed and positive manner constantly denied that there had been any attempt at imposition. They are therefore estopped from asserting it, and as often as they say so stultify themselves and impeach their own testimony. They ask you to believe them NOW, because they LIED BEFORE. I cannot conceive that such testimony proves any thing, only that the AUTHOR of it is a SCAMP and an UNBLUSHING LIAR.

Amos Fuller, the first one of the number who asserted the use of phosphorus, gave me on the tenth day of February following a letter directed to Mrs. Emma Smith, in which he expressed the most unqualified confidence in me as the prophet of God and as an honest man. The very day of his apostacy he scouted the least suggestion of imposition, and declared that it had never been pretended that the glory of God was more manifest in the illumination than in the eucharist. Those who have since gone out from among us and taken up this calumny, then treated it the same as I do now. The principal men among them stood up at the April Conference following and expressed their faith and confidence in me as the Lord's anointed, faithful and true, not only in the strongest language that they could command, but many of them (including J. M. Adams, William Smith and U. C. H. Nickerson) added that they knew these facts by revelation. U. C. H. Nickerson took a mission to the western camp, visiting on the way most of the saints in Illinois and Iowa, and meeting this scandal wherever he went, perfectly laughed it down on its own innate folly. Yet such a man has become now the principal representative of my opponents, and chief accuser in the premises. To such shifts are men driven to make me vile. As I expect to return to the subject again, I forbear remarks. Most sincerly, on me, charging me with some offence against public law, on which, if convicted, I should be subject to imprisonment. A triumphant cry is raised among apostates, very frequently, that they have got Strang now where he can't wiggle out of their hands, and they shall put him through. Yet no prosecution has ever been commenced against me. Several times they have threatened to try me in their self-constituted tribunals, and once went so far as to advertise in the secular press a long string of charges on which I was to be tried at a fixed day. But then, as on every other occasion, when the day came my accusers and their witnesses were no where. The witnesses were a chimera, and accusers hid their heads. I will not inflict on your patience a long list of scandal, but to show to what littleness men will stoop, and by what folly men professing the faith are overthrown, I name a few of the thousand and one falsehoods which have been both published and believed against me.

JAMES J. STRANG.

The Voree Herald contained articles from other papers, representing that White River would afford a water power at Voree by means of dam and race of from 20 to 25 feet fall. It has been published far and near that this is a lie; that there is no water power here, and that six feet fall cannot be obtained. Men of respectability have taken it up and repeated it as an undoubted fact, by means of which real injury has been done to the growth of the place. On what authority is this slander put afloat? None at all. Not a man of all who dispute the existence of 25 feet fall ever walked along the river, much less made a survey of it. William Aldrich, who has circulated it very industriously, and probably done more than any other man in giving it currency, had but barely crossed the river at a single point, and on that boldly puts forth a statement in the face of careful observations of engineers that a dam and race crossing a bend and bringing to one point the fall of a rapid river for three miles would not produce 25 feet fall. I care not what a man's character may be, his guessing cannot stand against engineers measurements. Yet such is the best they have against me.

Reuben Miller accuses me of lying in saying that in my ordination the angel touched me, and brings a certificate of two or three who were present at our interview to prove that I did not then say so, &c. But a majority of those present certify that I did say so at that time. If I said it, his witnesses might not have heard it.— But if I did not say it, the others COULD NOT. Yet several persons have apostatized on it. They believed the negative of a few, stronger evidence than the affirmative of several, and enough stronger to convict a gentleman of good character of falsehood. And that falsehood utterly objectless, contrary to what he had said and written many times a day both before and after. Such a charge would not be worthy of notice on any testimony and unopposed. It proves its own falsehood.

It is very well known that the second day of January, 1847, some 24 of the saints met at my house and some ordinances of some kind were administered. As the meeting was not public, much curiosity has always been felt to know what they were. The transaction is usually spoken of by the name of "ILLUMINATION." Immediately after it occurred a rumor was put afloat that some terrible imposition had been practiced by me. It was alledged that I had gathered the saints in a lower room with a loose floor overhead, and causing a bright light to shine through the cracks, had pretended that it came from heaven! And that by burning pitch or other combustibles in the chimney had caused a pillar of light to rise up as the channel of communication! Men were found to believe that two dozen respectable gentlemen and ladies could be imposed on by such means! And that one in any circumstances was capable of stooping to it!

Directly the Elkhorn Star and the New Era published that fire was produced on the heads of the saints by the use of a galvanic battery, secretly concealed in another room. All scietific men know very well that the battery would destroy human life before it produced an illumination. Yet E. A. Utter, an editor and an M. D., was willing to give his sanction to it. Every man of science will say it is impossible. Yet the saint says, "I don't know. It is best to look out for deception," and makes shipwreck of faith because possibly the prophet has done what no man on earth could do.

William Smith has published far and near and got it in the religious papers generally that I got a house built on the promise of a heavenly illumination, which I then gave by anointing the heads of the saints with phosphorus and oil. He goes on to say that he discovered the cheat and accused me of it on the spot, and that I both acknowledged it and justified it by saying that all miracles are similar cheats. Had such a story been told on any body else, the U. S. would not have furnished seven fools to credit it. But being on the Mormon prophet, it must be true. I have no reason to doubt that it is generally believed. The saints are filled with fears that it may be so.

Now I ask, in all candor, I put it to the good sense of every man, could the church have been preserved under my leading a single day after such an act? Would it not have produced universal indignation and denunciation, immediate and unqualified? Would even a man's person be safe among those who had been subjected to such base imposture? William Smith spent that winter in Knox county, Ill., and was not within 150 miles of Voree, within some three months of that time. But several others, men of a very different character from Wm. Smith, assert that the illumination was really an imposition by the use of phosphorus and oil, and as a few of them are men who are usually credited in other matters, it may be expected of me to show a reason why they should not in this. I have cheerfully done it as often as requested.

Phosphorus and oil only produces a dim light in a warm dark room. It barely makes itself visible, and could not possibly for a single moment be mistaken for the glory of God. So if such imposition was practiced, it must have been detected on the spot.— If an impostor, could I be such a fool? Why did not these men expose it? Within three days of that meeting the whole band of apostates in the place, amounting to some [illegible], were continually accusing the saints of having been imposed on in the illumination, and every soul of them denied it, and scouted the very naming of it. In order to believe that they TELL THE TRUTH NOW, we MUST BELIEVE that they LIED THEN. It was the principal topic of conversation in Voree for some weeks, and every person present in the most pointed and positive manner constantly denied that there had been any attempt at imposition. They are therefore estopped from asserting it, and as often as they say so stultify themselves and impeach their own testimony. They ask you to believe them NOW, because they LIED BEFORE. I cannot conceive that such testimony proves any thing, only that the AUTHOR of it is a SCAMP and an UNBLUSHING LIAR.

Amos Fuller, the first one of the number who asserted the use of phosphorus, gave me on the tenth day of February following a letter directed to Mrs. Emma Smith, in which he expressed the most unqualified confidence in me as the prophet of God and as an honest man. The very day of his apostacy he scouted the least suggestion of imposition, and declared that it had never been pretended that the glory of God was more manifest in the illumination than in the eucharist. Those who have since gone out from among us and taken up this calumny, then treated it the same as I do now. The principal men among them stood up at the April Conference following and expressed their faith and confidence in me as the Lord's anointed, faithful and true, not only in the strongest language that they could command, but many of them (including J. M. Adams, William Smith and U. C. H. Nickerson) added that they knew these facts by revelation. U. C. H. Nickerson took a mission to the western camp, visiting on the way most of the saints in Illinois and Iowa, and meeting this scandal wherever he went, perfectly laughed it down on its own innate folly. Yet such a man has become now the principal representative of my opponents, and chief accuser in the premises. To such shifts are men driven to make me vile. As I expect to return to the subject again, I forbear remarks. Most sincerly,

JAMES J. STRANG.

REMARKS ON THE BRIGHAMITE CONFERENCE.

PRESIDENT STRANG,—SIR :—Please indulge me on the subject of the Brighamite Conference, its perversions, inconsistencies and contradictions. To some of our readers the subject may seem somewhat stale and worn out, but still every shot seems to tell, to the convincing of some, of the fooleries and inconsistencies of those men. Consequently the following may not be in vain—it may serve to open the eyes of the understanding of some sincere and yet deceived heart, who desires to see the truth. If after what I present below of the perversions, inconsistencies and contradictions of the Brighamite faction does not effect the design for which it is written, I shall feel that I have at least discharged a duty which I owe to God and all good men.

On the 27th day of June, 1844, Joseph Smith, the Prophet, Revelator, Translator and Seer of God to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, was martyred by a ruthless cowardly mob, which gave rise to an occasion for Almighty God to fulfill one of the most important revelations he ever gave to Joseph Smith; which if left unfulfilled would have left Joseph's character as a prophet subject to all that just execration that an offended God and all just men could stamp upon him as a vile impostor, for saying "thus saith the Lord," when, albeit, the Lord had not spoken. Here follows one revelation given Dec., 1830, the ninth month of the age of the church :—"And the poor and the meek shall have the gospel preached unto them, and they shall be looking forth for the time of my coming, for it is nigh at hand ; and they shall learn the parable of the fig tree : for even now already summer is nigh, and I have sent forth the fullness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph : and in weakness have I blessed him, and I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me, and if not, another will I plant in his stead." D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4.

The above revelation is neither complex or ambiguous to the most simple mind of him or her that wishes to understand the true sense of any matter. The plain straight forward sense is, if Joseph had continued faithful in Christ in all things he would have continued in person on the earth "until" the coming of Christ, to meet the Lord in the air, with all the faithful and worthy of the church, continuing to receive by revelation a knowledge of the "mysteries" of things "sealed" for the church, except he should be "taken" by martyrdom. But as the church could not receive revelations without a revelator the Lord provided that if Joseph did not abide in Christ, he (God) would "plant another in his (Joseph's) stead" to hold the keys of mysteries and revelations. In Feb., 1831, in the eleventh month of the age of the church, the Lord says to the church :—"And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead : and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments : and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived ; that you may know they are not of me." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2.

By the above authorities I find the Lord provided for two alternates. The first was, that none other was to be appointed to receive commandments and revelations until Joseph was "taken," if he abided in Christ. The second was, that if the "gift" of receiving revelations and commandments was taken from him, he should still have "power" to appoint another in his stead as his last official act, and that none other should be appointed except it be through him, (Joseph.) The above quotations are so clear and definite on the subject it seems to me the Lord had in view the present condition of the church, so that when the emergency that has now come upon the saints relative to Joseph's successor that the most simple minded need not be deceived on this subject. Yea, verily, the Lord said, "This I say unto you, (the church,) that you may not be deceived ;" that if any one comes before you teaching revelations as coming from any other quarter than through Joseph or him whom he should appoint is deceived, after all the Lord has said to the contrary.

It is as bright a laurel as hangs on the temples of Joseph's character as a prophet that the word of the Lord through Joseph has been fulfilled in this case ; that the Lord did, nine days before Joseph was "taken," reveal to him James J. Strang as being the man to take Joseph's place on earth in his (Joseph's) "stead." This fact, all circumstances considered in which Joseph was "taken," ought to convince every mobocrat in Missouri and Illinois that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and that James J. Strang is his successor. Emma Smith, the prophet's widow, has told me and many others that the remarks that stand at the head of the letter of appointment to J. J. Strang transpired in her hearing while Joseph held the letter in his hand which he had received from Strang, dated the 24th of May, 1844. The post office stamp at Nauvoo on the letter to Strang is the same that is on a letter to me that I received from Brigham Young when I was in Boston, in the winter of 1843. Who then can say, under these circumstances, that the letter of appointment to Strang is a forgery ? If it is a forgery, who forged it ? Suppose, for the sake of the argument, that it is a forgery, who is the man that Joseph did appoint ? It was not Brigham Young, as we will see, judging him out of his own mouth. If it cannot be found that Joseph appointed a man to stand in his stead in the prophetic office, amen to Mormonism with all its high sounding pretensions. It is virtually buried in everlasting oblivion, execrated to the lowest hell, the abode of all false prophets and liars, Brigham Young not excepted ; for if he was appointed, he lied like a coward and published it in the Times and Seasons, Aug. No. of 1844, page 618, saying to the church throughout the world, "You are now without a prophet present with you in the flesh to guide you." If he had continued and said, consequently Joseph was a vile impostor and I am done with Mormonism, he would have shown forth a little logical consistency, instead of a usurping hypocrite. Hear him again :—

"On the 8th of August, 1844, at a special meeting of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, convened at the stand in the city of Nauvoo, President Brigham Young called the audience to order, and arranged the several quorums according to their standing and the rules of the church. The meeting had been previously called, as stated, to choose a guardian, or trustee for said church."—And Brigham said : "Do you want a guardian, a prophet, a spokesman, or what do you want ? If you want any of these officers, signify it by raising the right hand. Not a hand was raised." Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 637.

Here then the church virtually voted that there should be no more a Prophet, Revelator, Translator or Seer in the church, and Christ not come yet, which was as much as to say that Joseph Smith was one of the most damnable impostors that ever cursed mankind with imposition ; for we have found above that Joseph said the Lord said, the keys of mysteries and receiving commandments and revelations was to abide with him or one planted in his stead until the coming of Christ. Now hear Amasa Lyman on the same occasion :

"Elder Amasa Lyman followed, and fully accorded with the instructions and views of elder Young. I have been at the back of

REMARKS ON THE BRIGHAMITE CONFERENCE.

PRESIDENT STRANG,—SIR :—Please indulge me on the subject of the Brighamite Conference, its perversions, inconsistencies and contradictions. To some of our readers the subject may seem somewhat stale and worn out, but still every shot seems to tell, to the convincing of some, of the fooleries and inconsistencies of those men. Consequently the following may not be in vain—it may serve to open the eyes of the understanding of some sincere and yet deceived heart, who desires to see the truth. If after what I present below of the perversions, inconsistencies and contradictions of the Brighamite faction does not effect the design for which it is written, I shall feel that I have at least discharged a duty which I owe to God and all good men.

On the 27th day of June, 1844, Joseph Smith, the Prophet, Revelator, Translator and Seer of God to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, was martyred by a ruthless cowardly mob, which gave rise to an occasion for Almighty God to fulfill one of the most important revelations he ever gave to Joseph Smith; which if left unfulfilled would have left Joseph's character as a prophet subject to all that just execration that an offended God and all just men could stamp upon him as a vile impostor, for saying "thus saith the Lord," when, albeit, the Lord had not spoken. Here follows one revelation given Dec., 1830, the ninth month of the age of the church :—"And the poor and the meek shall have the gospel preached unto them, and they shall be looking forth for the time of my coming, for it is nigh at hand ; and they shall learn the parable of the fig tree : for even now already summer is nigh, and I have sent forth the fullness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph : and in weakness have I blessed him, and I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me, and if not, another will I plant in his stead." D. & C, sec. xi. p. 4.

The above revelation is neither complex or ambiguous to the most simple mind of him or her that wishes to understand the true sense of any matter. The plain straight forward sense is, if Joseph had continued faithful in Christ in all things he would have continued in person on the earth "until" the coming of Christ, to meet the Lord in the air, with all the faithful and worthy of the church, continuing to receive by revelation a knowledge of the "mysteries" of things "sealed" for the church, except he should be "taken" by martyrdom. But as the church could not receive revelations without a revelator the Lord provided that if Joseph did not abide in Christ, he (God) would "plant another in his (Joseph's) stead" to hold the keys of mysteries and revelations. In Feb., 1831, in the eleventh month of the age of the church, the Lord says to the church :—"And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead : and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments : and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived ; that you may know they are not of me." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2.

By the above authorities I find the Lord provided for two alternates. The first was, that none other was to be appointed to receive commandments and revelations until Joseph was "taken," if he abided in Christ. The second was, that if the "gift" of receiving revelations and commandments was taken from him, he should still have "power" to appoint another in his stead as his last official act, and that none other should be appointed except it be through him, (Joseph.) The above quotations are so clear and definite on the subject it seems to me the Lord had in view the present condition of the church, so that when the emergency that has now come upon the saints relative to Joseph's successor that the most simple minded need not be deceived on this subject. Yea, verily, the Lord said, "This I say unto you, (the church,) that you may not be deceived ;" that if any one comes before you teaching revelations as coming from any other quarter than through Joseph or him whom he should appoint is deceived, after all the Lord has said to the contrary.

It is as bright a laurel as hangs on the temples of Joseph's character as a prophet that the word of the Lord through Joseph has been fulfilled in this case ; that the Lord did, nine days before Joseph was "taken," reveal to him James J. Strang as being the man to take Joseph's place on earth in his (Joseph's) "stead." This fact, all circumstances considered in which Joseph was "taken," ought to convince every mobocrat in Missouri and Illinois that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and that James J. Strang is his successor. Emma Smith, the prophet's widow, has told me and many others that the remarks that stand at the head of the letter of appointment to J. J. Strang transpired in her hearing while Joseph held the letter in his hand which he had received from Strang, dated the 24th of May, 1844. The post office stamp at Nauvoo on the letter to Strang is the same that is on a letter to me that I received from Brigham Young when I was in Boston, in the winter of 1843. Who then can say, under these circumstances, that the letter of appointment to Strang is a forgery ? If it is a forgery, who forged it ? Suppose, for the sake of the argument, that it is a forgery, who is the man that Joseph did appoint ? It was not Brigham Young, as we will see, judging him out of his own mouth. If it cannot be found that Joseph appointed a man to stand in his stead in the prophetic office, amen to Mormonism with all its high sounding pretensions. It is virtually buried in everlasting oblivion, execrated to the lowest hell, the abode of all false prophets and liars, Brigham Young not excepted ; for if he was appointed, he lied like a coward and published it in the Times and Seasons, Aug. No. of 1844, page 618, saying to the church throughout the world, "You are now without a prophet present with you in the flesh to guide you." If he had continued and said, consequently Joseph was a vile impostor and I am done with Mormonism, he would have shown forth a little logical consistency, instead of a usurping hypocrite. Hear him again :—

"On the 8th of August, 1844, at a special meeting of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, convened at the stand in the city of Nauvoo, President Brigham Young called the audience to order, and arranged the several quorums according to their standing and the rules of the church. The meeting had been previously called, as stated, to choose a guardian, or trustee for said church."—And Brigham said : "Do you want a guardian, a prophet, a spokesman, or what do you want ? If you want any of these officers, signify it by raising the right hand. Not a hand was raised." Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 637.

Here then the church virtually voted that there should be no more a Prophet, Revelator, Translator or Seer in the church, and Christ not come yet, which was as much as to say that Joseph Smith was one of the most damnable impostors that ever cursed mankind with imposition ; for we have found above that Joseph said the Lord said, the keys of mysteries and receiving commandments and revelations was to abide with him or one planted in his stead until the coming of Christ. Now hear Amasa Lyman on the same occasion :

"Eldor Amasa Lyman followed, and fully accorded with the instructions and views of elder Young. I have been at the back of the prophet Joseph, and I shall be at the back of the Twelve. THERE IS NO NEED OF CHOOSING a guardian or head, the apostles have the power, as they had anciently."

But hear this same Amasa Lyman now, at the Brighamite Conference at Council Bluffs, Dec. 24th, 1847:—

"A. Lyman spoke on the subject, and said the idea of having the First Presidents in the church was nothing new; that it all had been arranged long since by the council, and there was no danger of going wrong; that all bodies must have a head, and all intelligence must come from the head. And the time had come when ends of the church could not be saved without a head, and the very man who was to be the head had been at the head all the time. He asked who the head was amenable to. And answered, to his head; for no bodies, however great, were so high that they had no head; and that the time had come when the Twelve must lead out the master spirits of the kingdom; must go to the east, west, north and south, and plant the seeds of eternal life. It was moved and seconded that Brigham Young should be our First President. It was carried unanimously. It was next moved and carried that Heber C. Kimball be the first Councilor of Pres. B. Young. Carried unanimously. It was next moved and seconded that Dr. W. Richards be appointed second Councilor. Carried unanimously."

Ah! Amasa, a body live almost four years without a head, of which God said it should not be without a head until the coming of Christ, the great head of the church. O consistency! where hast thou gone? If the twelve apostles have had the power to lead the church four years "without a head," why not always? Why, Amasa, you contradict your venerable President, and throw the lie right smack in his face. Brigham Young, in his apostolic epistle of August 15th, 1844, says:—

"LET NO MAN PRESUME FOR A MOMENT THAT HIS (JOSEPH'S) PLACE WILL BE FILLED BY ANOTHER; FOR, REMEMBER, HE STANDS IN HIS OWN PLACE, AND ALWAYS WILL; AND THE TWELVE APOSTLES OF THIS DISPENSATION STAND IN THEIR OWN PLACE AND ALWAYS WILL, BOTH IN TIME AND IN ETERNITY, TO MINISTER, PRESIDE AND REGULATE THE AFFAIRS OF THE WHOLE CHURCH."—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 618.

Now Amasa has become wolf hungry for a prophet, and he nor the church cannot live without one. And how, pray, shall we make one? Why, we will call on the same people who once, at the beck of B. Young, virtually voted that they would not have a prophet, to vote for this same B. Young and make him a prophet. Infidels, don't laugh, I beg of you, while fools, hypocrites and usurpers play peep and booh with each other. Let me tell you there is a divine reality in religion yet, and that too in genuine Mormonism. Rather lend us your sympathy to help us pity poor frail mortal man when left to himself, and he steals the livery of heaven to serve the Devil in. Now let us hear from Orson Pratt. Orson says:—"At this period of the church they had to select a First Presidency." And further, he "admits the first argument of" Mr. Strang, whom he denominates with others "apostates, (viz., that the organization was not complete,) was correct."

Who would have thought such language could ever fall from the lips of Orson Pratt, once the Principal of the Nauvoo University, who W. W. Phelps calls "the gauge of philosophy." Orson, where and when did you learn that God ever called on a people who had "no head" or prophet to make a prophet for him? If you will allow me to answer for you, I think it originated at Council Bluffs among a set of aspiring usurpers, who had been driven from the city of Joseph under the "cursings, wrath, indignation and judgments" of God "upon your own heads, by your follies and by all your abominations which you practiced before the Lord." For the Lord told the saints at Nauvoo through Joseph in 1841, that if they would do his will "THEY SHOULD NOT BE MOVED OUT OF THEIR PLACE," (Nauvoo.) Let us have the whole sentence of the law on this point, and then judge whether you left Nauvoo under a blessing or a fiery curse:—

"If ye labor with all your mights, I will consecrate that spot, (the temple ground, Nauvoo,) that it shall be made holy; and if my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place. But if they will not hearken to my voice, nor unto the voice of these men whom I have appointed, they shall not be blest, because they pollute mine holy grounds, and mine holy ordinances, and charters, and my holy words, which I give unto them. And it shall come to pass, that if you build a house unto my name, and do not do the things that I say, I will not perform the oath which I make unto you, neither fulfill the promises which ye expect at my hands, saith the Lord; for instead of blessings, ye, by your own works, bring cursings, wrath, indignation, and judgments, upon your own heads, by your follies, and by all your abominations, which you practice before me, saith the Lord." D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 13, 14.

For proof that the Twelve were apprised of the fact that Joseph Smith had appointed James J. Strang as his (Joseph's) successor, I copy an entire article from the Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 631:—

"Whereas Elders James J. Strang and Aaron Smith have been circulating a 'revelation,' (falsely called,) purporting to have been received by Joseph Smith on the 18th of June, 1844; and through the influence of which they have attempted and are attempting to establish a stake, called Voree, in Wisconsin Territory, thereby leading the saints astray: therefore, the said James J. Strang and Aaron Smith are cut off from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, this 26th day of August, 1844. By order of the Council of the Twelve. W. RICHARDS, Clerk."

When did any one notify Strang to appear and answer to any charges? NEVER! Before what tribunal of the church was he tried? NONE!! Who ever heard before of the idea of the quorum of the Twelve sitting in judgment on the First President of the church? NO BODY! The notice proves that Strang had given you due notice of his appointment, and that too at the earliest date possible. It also proves to a demonstration that you rejected God and all the laws that he had given to the church providing for the appointment of Joseph's successor, in case of his martyrdom, which was "that none other should be appointed, except through him," (Joseph.) And thus has God lavished his four fold curses on you, and left you to do as you are doing. In the Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 718, W. W. Phelps says:—

"Have the quorum of the Twelve the same power and authority of the full quorum of the three First Presidents? Yes, they have.—Well, then, do they not become the First Presidency, inasmuch as the first quorum of the Presidency has ceased to be? Nothing can be more clear and certain than that they do."

Mr. Phelps, where and when did you learn that the quorum of the Twelve have the same "power" and "authority" of the full quorum of the First Presidents? Not in all the books of God. A greater perversion I should not expect from the simplest child in the church that can read the alphabet. The Twelve are a Presidency in the church in all the world abroad, and not at the seat of the First Presidents of the church at home, acting under the direction of the First Presidency of the church. The Twelve are also amenable to the high council of the church, over which the First Presidents of the church preside. "There is not any person belonging to the church, who is exempt from this council of the church." D. & C. sec. iii. p. 36. Mr. Phelps, I advise you to never again pour forth he prophet Joseph, and I shall be at the back of the Twelve. THERE S NO NEED OF CHOOSING a guardian or head, the apostles have the ower, as they had anciently."

But hear this same Amasa Lyman now, at the Brighamite Conference at Council Bluffs, Dec. 24th, 1847:—

"A. Lyman spoke on the subject, and said the idea of having the First Presidents in the church was nothing new; that it all had been arranged long since by the council, and there was no danger of going wrong; that all bodies must have a head, and all intelligence must come from the head. And the time had come when ends of the church could not be saved without a head, and the very man who was to be the head had been at the head all the time. He asked who the head was amenable to. And answered, to his head for no bodies, however great, were so high that they had no head; and that the time had come when the Twelve must lead out the master spirits of the kingdom; must go to the east, west, north and south, and plant the seeds of eternal life. It was moved and seconded that Brigham Young should be our First President. It was carried unanimously. It was next moved and carried that Heber C. Kimball be the first Councilor of Pres. B. Young. Carried unanimously. It was next moved and seconded that Dr. W. Richards be appointed second Councilor. Carried unanimously."

Ah! Amasa, a body live almost four years without a head, of which God said it should not be without a head until the coming of Christ, the great head of the church. O consistency! where hast thou gone? If the twelve apostles have had the power to lead the church four years "without a head," why not always? Why, Amasa, you contradict your venerable President, and throw the lie right smack in his face. Brigham Young, in his apostolic epistle of August 15th, 1844, says:—

"LET NO MAN PRESUME FOR A MOMENT THAT HIS (JOSEPH'S) PLACE WILL BE FILLED BY ANOTHER; FOR, REMEMBER, HE STANDS IN HIS OWN PLACE, AND ALWAYS WILL; AND THE TWELVE APOSTLES OF THIS DISPENSATION STAND IN THEIR OWN PLACE AND ALWAYS WILL, BOTH IN TIME AND IN ETERNITY, TO MINISTER, PRESIDE AND REGULATE THE AFFAIRS OF THE WHOLE CHURCH."—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 618.

Now Amasa has become wolf hungry for a prophet, and he nor the church cannot live without one. And how, pray, shall we make one? Why, we will call on the same people who once, at the beck of B. Young, virtually voted that they would not have a prophet, to vote for this same B. Young and make him a prophet. Infidels, don't laugh, I beg of you, while fools, hypocrites and usurpers play peep and boob with each other. Let me tell you there is a divine reality in religion yet, and that too in genuine Mormonism. Rather send us your sympathy to help us pity poor frail mortal man when left to himself, and he steals the livery of heaven to serve the Devil in. Now let us hear from Orson Pratt. Orson says:—"At this period of the church they had to select a First Presidency." And further, he "admits the first argument of" Mr. Strang, whom he denominates with others "apostates, (viz., that the organization was not complete,) was correct."

Who would have thought such language could ever fall from the lips of Orson Pratt, once the Principal of the Nauvoo University, who W. W. Phelps calls "the gauge of philosophy." Orson, where and when did you learn that God ever called on a people who had "no head" or prophet to make a prophet for him? If you will allow me to answer for you, I think it originated at Council Bluffs among a set of aspiring usurpers, who had been driven from the city of Joseph under the "cursings, wrath, indignation and judgments" of God "upon your own heads, by your follies and by all your abominations which you practiced before the Lord." For the Lord told the saints at Nauvoo through Joseph in 1841, that if they would do his will "THEY SHOULD NOT BE MOVED OUT OF THEIR PLACE," (Nauvoo.) Let us have the whole sentence of the law on this point, and then judge whether you left Nauvoo under a blessing or a fiery curse:—

"If ye labor with all your mights, I will consecrate that spot, (the temple ground, Nauvoo,) that it shall be made holy; and if my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place. But if they will not hearken to my voice, nor unto the voice of these men whom I have appointed, they shall not be blest, because they pollute mine holy grounds, and mine holy ordinances, and charters, and my holy words, which I give unto them. And it shall come to pass, that if you build a house unto my name, and do not do the things that I say, I will not perform the oath which I make unto you, neither fulfill the promises which ye expect at my hands, saith the Lord; for instead of blessings, ye, by your own works, bring cursings, wrath, indignation, and judgments, upon your own heads, by your follies, and by all your abominations, which you practice before me, saith the Lord." D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 13, 14.

For proof that the Twelve were apprised of the fact that Joseph Smith had appointed James J. Strang as his (Joseph's) successor, I copy an entire article from the Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 631:—

"Whereas Elders James J. Strang and Aaron Smith have been circulating a 'revelation,' (falsely called,) purporting to have been received by Joseph Smith on the 18th of June, 1844; and through the influence of which they have attempted and are attempting to establish a stake, called Voree, in Wisconsin Territory, thereby leading the saints astray: therefore, the said James J. Strang and Aaron Smith are cut off from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, this 26th day of August, 1844. By order of the Council of the Twelve. W. RICHARDS, Clerk."

When did any one notify Strang to appear and answer to any charges? NEVER! Before what tribunal of the church was he tried? NONE!! Who ever heard before of the idea of the quorum of the Twelve sitting in judgment on the First President of the church? NO BODY! The notice proves that Strang had given you due notice of his appointment, and that too at the earliest date possible. It also proves to a demonstration that you rejected God and all the laws that he had given to the church providing for the appointment of Joseph's successor, in case of his martyrdom, which was "that none other should be appointed, except through him," (Joseph.) And thus has God lavished his four fold curses on you, and left you to do as you are doing. In the Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 718, W. W. Phelps says:—

"Have the quorum of the Twelve the same power and authority of the full quorum of the three First Presidents? Yes, they have.—Well, then, do they not become the First Presidency, inasmuch as the first quorum of the Presidency has ceased to be? Nothing can be more clear and certain than that they do."

Mr. Phelps, where and when did you learn that the quorum of the Twelve have the same "power" and "authority" of the full quorum of the First Presidents? Not in all the books of God. A greater perversion I should not expect from the simplest child in the church that can read the alphabet. The Twelve are a Presidency in the church in all the world abroad, and not at the seat of the First Presidents of the church at home, acting under the direction of the First Presidency of the church. The Twelve are also amenable to the high council of the church, over which the First Presidents of the church preside. "There is not any person belonging to the church, who is exempt from this council of the church." D. & C. sec. iii. p. 36. Mr. Phelps, I advise you to never again pour forth any more of your sarcasm on sectarians for their perversions of the Bible, it is time for you to hush! Mr. Phelps, it appears that your work did not stay done:—

"Elder W. W. Phelps moved that we uphold Brigham Young, the President of the quorum of the Twelve, as one of the Twelve and First Presidency of the church. This motion was duly seconded, and put to the church by elder John Smith, and carried unanimously." Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 692.

The above transpired at the Nauvoo Oct. Conference of 1844.—Here, then, the same people, at the same place, voted to make B. Young prophet, that virtually voted only the August before that they "did not want a prophet, a guardian, or any such thing;" but here they try to make him a kind of a mongrel officer that I cannot find words to describe, therefore I shall call him a nondescript, a kind of a stay-at-home, and at the same time travel in all the world, to stay at home as "the First Presidency" of the church and the President of the quorum of the Twelve, or traveling high council to travel into all the world. But as Brigham's transmogrification has not resulted in the purpose for which it was designed, these same people who at one time did not want a prophet, have transformed him into an entire stay-at-home toady, to be a man-made prophet to fill the shoes of a God-made one. Poh! Does God thus belie himself in making a prophet at one time and in about three years after, as a farmer would an old ox sled, make him over again? Nonsense in the extreme! Saints of common sense, is the above described prophet the one? and is such a prophet one that God indulges with the keys of mysteries and revelations to lead a people into all truth, and sanctify them for the bride of Christ, and exalt them to the glory of the church of the first born? If so, let common sense blush and hide her face.

One may ask, how is the First President of the church constituted? That Moses, Joshua, John the Baptist, Jesus Christ, Peter and Joseph Smith were made prophets by the will and power of God no consistent Latter Day Saint will dispute, and the case never was heard of before the rise of the Brighamite faction that a prophet bearing the keys of mysteries and revelations was ever constituted by the elective franchise of the church of God. The Popes of the Roman church and the Bishops and Presidents of the several Protestant churches are constituted such by the elective voice of their several bodies, but not so in the true church of God. God always makes his own prophets and takes them away when and for what purpose he pleases, independent of the voice of the people.—The authorities of the church can only require a prophet to make repairs to others if he has done wrong in any case where the sense of such authority requires it, but there is no authority in the heavens above nor on the earth beneath nor under the earth that can either grant or take away his priesthood or touch the keys of his ministry short of God himself, who called, qualified and granted such priesthood and keys, perfectly independent and aside from the voice of any other.

Orson Pratt appeals to the circumstances of the church not being perfectly organized under Joseph in its first rise, and afterwards grew into a perfect organization. Yes, Orson, I admit all that true. So it was in the former day church. God first makes the head, and then sets the head to work to constitute the other members of the body, but never did the Lord yet make the other members of the body and then set them to work to make the head, neither is it the law God has established in the things of all nature; but no doubt Brigham will make his ignorant dupes believe they cannot unmake him now they have made him a prophet, other than to make him over in the course of two or three or four years. It is said that A. Lyman "read a revelation which Pres. Young handed him, given in the spring of 1847." Well, I suppose the audience of 60 by 40 feet swallowed it all down as good, sacred and divine, and that too right in the face and eyes of the plain, definite word of God to the contrary, which says:—"Ye shall not receive the teachings of any that come before you as revelations or commandments, except it be through Joseph, or him who he shall appoint; and this I (God) say unto you, that you may not be deceived; that you may know they are not of me." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2.

In the Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 638, Brigham Young says:—"We have no new commandments, but beseech the brethren to honor and obey the old ones." In one month and four days after (page 683) Brigham says:—"Every member has the right of receiving revelations for themselves, both male and female." According to the above idea every member of the church, "both male and female," was forever exonerated from the responsibility or duty of receiving revelations from any other. On the same page, in the same speech, he says:—"You are not going to be led without revelation. The prophet has stepped behind the vail, and you have the right to obtain revelations for your own salvation."

On the next page, at the same Conference, John Taylor (one of the Twelve) says:—"We are in possession of the same principles, the same priesthood, (of Joseph,) the same medium of communication and intelligence, and of those things which not only secure our happiness here, but hereafter. When we speak of these matters, we speak of things which we know assuredly." Now, John, you did not "know" any such thing, you either told a willful falsehood or you was as ignorant of one of the first rudiments of the Latter Day Saints' faith concerning the priesthood as a Gentile sectarian. Joseph Smith as Prophet, Revelator, Translator and Seer held a sole priesthood like unto Moses, which constituted him a legislator or law-giver to the church of God, which B. Young nor yourself nor any other man on earth held but Joseph in his day, which could not be conferred on any other man in any other way than the way God had ordained, as I have quoted above; i. e., be appointed of God through Joseph, and ordained by angels. Had the idea been stated by you or any other man in the church in Joseph's hearing which you have stated, he would have been turned over to the buffetings of Satan in a hurry if he did not repent. I should like to be favored with a copy of Brigham's "new revelation," although he has as much as said no person is held responsible by it, because he says, "every male and female has a right to obtain revelations for themselves."

"O what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to deceive."

G. A. Smith asks the question, "How was Joseph made a prophet? Ans. Peter, James and John (angels) ordained him." Yes, George, that is right. But I ask, how did God say Joseph's successor should be ordained? Ans. He is to be appointed by revelation of God through Joseph, and ordained as the Lord told you (Joseph) before; i. e., be ordained by angels, as Joseph was ordained before. D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2.

"But," says one, "does not the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, sec. iii. p. 11, say that three high priests chosen and set apart, ordained and upheld by the faith, confidence and prayers of the church, constitute the quorum of the First Presidency of the church?" No, it says no such a thing. It says they "form a quorum of the Presidency of the church." The term first is not there as it happens.—There is quite a difference between a definite and an indefinite article. The is definite, a is indefinite. Go back to the words of the question and strike out the article the before quorum and put a in its stead, and then strike out the word first entirely, and then it will read as it is in the book quoted. There are quite a number of quorums of Presidencies in the church, to wit:—

The prophet, &c., and his two Councilors

any more of your sarcasm on sectarians for their perversions of the Bible, it is time for you to hush! Mr. Phelps, it appears that your work did not stay done:—

"Elder W. W. Phelps moved that we uphold Brigham Young, the President of the quorum of the Twelve, as one of the Twelve and First Presidency of the church. This motion was duly seconded, and put to the church by elder John Smith, and carried unanimously." Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 692.

The above transpired at the Nauvoo Oct. Conference of 1844.—Here, then, the same people, at the same place, voted to make B. Young prophet, that virtually voted only the August before that they "did not want a prophet, a guardian, or any such thing;" but here they try to make him a kind of a mongrel officer that I cannot find words to describe, therefore I shall call him a nondescript, a kind of a stay-at-home, and at the same time travel in all the world, to stay at home as "the First Presidency" of the church and the President of the quorum of the Twelve, or traveling high council to travel into all the world. But as Brigham's transmogrification has not resulted in the purpose for which it was designed, these same people who at one time did not want a prophet, have transformed him into an entire stay-at-home toady, to be a man-made prophet to fill the shoes of a God-made one. Poh! Does God thus belie himself in making a prophet at one time and in about three years after, as a farmer would an old ox sled, make him over again? Nonsense in the extreme! Saints of common sense, is the above described prophet the one? and is such a prophet one that God indulges with the keys of mysteries and revelations to lead a people into all truth, and sanctify them for the bride of Christ, and exalt them to the glory of the church of the first born? If so, let common sense blush and hide her face.

One may ask, how is the First President of the church constituted? That Moses, Joshua, John the Baptist, Jesus Christ, Peter and Joseph Smith were made prophets by the will and power of God no consistent Latter Day Saint will dispute, and the case never was heard of before the rise of the Brighamite faction that a prophet bearing the keys of mysteries and revelations was ever constituted by the elective franchise of the church of God. The Popes of the Roman church and the Bishops and Presidents of the several Protestant churches are constituted such by the elective voice of their several bodies, but not so in the true church of God. God always makes his own prophets and takes them away when and for what purpose he pleases, independent of the voice of the people.—The authorities of the church can only require a prophet to make repairs to others if he has done wrong in any case where the sense of such authority requires it, but there is no authority in the heavens above nor on the earth beneath nor under the earth that can either grant or take away his priesthood or touch the keys of his ministry short of God himself, who called, qualified and granted such priesthood and keys, perfectly independent and aside from the voice of any other.

Orson Pratt appeals to the circumstances of the church not being perfectly organized under Joseph in its first rise, and afterwards grew into a perfect organization. Yes, Orson, I admit all that true. So it was in the former day church. God first makes the head, and then sets the head to work to constitute the other members of the body, but never did the Lord yet make the other members of the body and then set them to work to make the head, neither is it the law God has established in the things of all nature; but no doubt Brigham will make his ignorant dupes believe they cannot unmake him now they have made him a prophet, other than to make him over in the course of two or three or four years. It is said that A. Lyman "read a revelation which Pres. Young handed him, given in the spring of 1847." Well, I suppose the audience of 60 by 40 feet swallowed it all down as good, sacred and divine, and that too right in the face and eyes of the plain, definite word of God to the contrary, which says:—"Ye shall not receive the teachings of any that come before you as revelations or commandments, except it be through Joseph, or him who he shall appoint; and this I (God) say unto you, that you may not be deceived; that you may know they are not of me." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2.

In the Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, page 638, Brigham Young says:—"We have no new commandments, but beseech the brethren to honor and obey the old ones." In one month and four days after (page 683) Brigham says:—"Every member has the right of receiving revelations for themselves, both male and female." According to the above idea every member of the church, "both male and female," was forever exonerated from the responsibility or duty of receiving revelations from any other. On the same page, in the same speech, he says:—"You are not going to be led without revelation. The prophet has stepped behind the vail, and you have the right to obtain revelations for your own salvation."

On the next page, at the same Conference, John Taylor (one of the Twelve) says:—"We are in possession of the same principles, the same priesthood, (of Joseph,) the same medium of communication and intelligence, and of those things which not only secure our happiness here, but hereafter. When we speak of these matters, we speak of things which we know assuredly." Now, John, you did not "know" any such thing, you either told a willful falsehood or you was as ignorant of one of the first rudiments of the Latter Day Saints' faith concerning the priesthood as a Gentile sectarian. Joseph Smith as Prophet, Revelator, Translator and Seer held a sole priesthood like unto Moses, which constituted him a legislator or law-giver to the church of God, which B. Young nor yourself nor any other man on earth held but Joseph in his day, which could not be conferred on any other man in any other way than the way God had ordained, as I have quoted above; i. e., be appointed of God through Joseph, and ordained by angels. Had the idea been stated by you or any other man in the church in Joseph's hearing which you have stated, he would have been turned over to the buffetings of Satan in a hurry if he did not repent. I should like to be favored with a copy of Brigham's "new revelation," although he has as much as said no person is held responsible by it, because he says, "every male and female has a right to obtain revelations for themselves."

"O what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to deceive."

G. A. Smith asks the question, "How was Joseph made a prophet? Ans. Peter, James and John (angels) ordained him." Yes, George, that is right. But I ask, how did God say Joseph's successor should be ordained? Ans. He is to be appointed by revelation of God through Joseph, and ordained as the Lord told you (Joseph) before; i. e., be ordained by angels, as Joseph was ordained before. D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2.

"But," says one, "does not the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, sec. iii. p. 11, say that three high priests chosen and set apart, ordained and upheld by the faith, confidence and prayers of the church, constitute the quorum of the First Presidency of the church?" No, it says no such a thing. It says they "form a quorum of the Presidency of the church." The term first is not there as it happens.—There is quite a difference between a definite and an indefinite article. The is definite, a is indefinite. Go back to the words of the question and strike out the article the before quorum and put a in its stead, and then strike out the word first entirely, and then it will read as it is in the book quoted. There are quite a number of quorums of Presidencies in the church, to wit:—

The prophet, &c., and his two Councilors

are the quorum of the First Presidency of the church.
The three High Priests referred to
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
The Twelve are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
A President of a Stake and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
The seven Presidents of the Seventies
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
An Elder and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
A Bishop and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
A Priest (Aaronic) and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
A Teacher and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
A Deacon and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.

These all constitute the Presidency of the church. And all of these are chosen and set apart by the voice of the church except THE FIRST PRESIDENCY, which is called and set apart by direct revelation, and no other way.

"The President of the church, who is also the President of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged, in his administration, by the voice of the church; and it is according to the dignity of his office, that he should preside over the high council of the church; and it is his privilege to be assisted by two other Presidents, appointed after the same manner that he himself was appointed; and in case of the absence of one or both of those who are appointed to assist him, he has power to preside over the council without an assistant; and in case that he himself is absent, the other Presidents have power to preside in his stead, both or either of them." D. & C. sec. v. p. 6.

To this council every other quorum of the Presidency of the church is accountable. The three High Priests referred to above are a quorum of the Presidency of the church. Their priesthood and Presidency growing out of or appointed of or from among those who have already received the priesthood given of God to the First President or Presidency of the church. Therefore as these three High Priests could not grow out of a priesthood before there was a priesthood given, and as there could be no church to choose them, it remains as a matter of course that the three High Priests referred to are not and cannot be the First Presidency of the church, but rather "a quorum of the Presidency of the church," of the High Priests quorum, not presiding over the whole church as the First Presidency of the church, but of the church, presiding over a part of it.

Thus I close with a consciousness I have discharged a duty which I owed to God and those who were once my companions in the gospel of Christ. And the time has been when the views I have presented above were the views of these very men whom I have noticed so lengthy, and they know as well as I that the above views were their views and the views of the whole church, at least that part of it that made any considerable advance in the knowledge of the doctrine and discipline of the church. And further, if the disciplinary practice of those men nowhad been taught in the church in the days of Pres. Smith, he would have hurled them over its battlements as broken pieces of pot metal are hurled from a bursting bombshell, except they retracted. JOHN E. PAGE.

PRESERVE YOUR PAPERS.

Every Latter Day Saint who is as interested in this last dispensation as he ought to be will seek, not only to inform himself of its nature, design and consequences, but will endeavor to communicate the same to all others; consequently they will in the first place, after obtaining a feasible subsistence for himself and his family, if he has any, subscribe for a paper which is advocating and heralding that faith to the world at large. Yes, it is one of the most confirmatory characterestics of an interested saint, that proves to all men that such person is really desiring to be what he professes, to subscribe for the paper that publishes and contends earnestly for the faith delivered to him. If he does not, it is direct proof to the contrary, and such neglect always throws such person behind the times, and he remains ignorant of present facts concerning the church, the signs of the times & the events which are daily transpiring.

Scarce any thing is more annoying to a traveling Elder, when he calls to enjoy the hospitalities of a saint, when he calls for the paper or organ of the church, to hear it said in rather a whining or reluctant tone, "we don't take the paper." This reply or answer itself rather savors of the fact that he is ashamed of his uninterested neglect. But still more annoying it is to see the papers scattered about the floor or given to the children to tare to pieces, or used for some indifferent purpose, such as wiping razors or wrapping up garden seeds, &c., &c. Let me tell you dear saints, the day is coming when you or your children will want the reading of every No. of the paper ever published in the church. The traveling Elders will always want them.

Many no doubt apostatize merely because they are ignorant of facts as they are, and depending on the wind of report as a criterion for their present action. A body clothed in rags, bearing about a wise brain and a regenerate heart is far preferable to a body clothed in broadcloth or satin bearing about an ignorant brain decorated with jewels, and a heart lusting after the soul destroying maxims, customs, fashions, and, worse than all, the contradicting religious theories of the age, of a people who are ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Subscribe for the paper, and then preserve it for present and future use. JOHN E. PAGE.

Daily Wisconsin of 29th inst. gives an extract from Dr. Baird's travels in Sweden and Norway. Naturally curious when we see the names of our early homes mentioned, we gave the extract an attentive perusal. It concludes thus: "If a man becomes a Roman Catholic in Sweden, he may be put in prison or banished; and, in Denmark, no Jesuit is allowed to enter, &c. This is in the nineteenth century!" Now, allowing that Dr. BAIRD was right, we would say, that such and similar Laws, made many of us heartily sick of the Institutions there, and hence we have sought a new Fatherland and a free Country. But still we have to regret that the same tyrannical spirit is exercised and sanctioned in this free West. It is but a short time since our Sister state adopted, by the voluntary sanction of her liberty loving people, a Law, which, taking all circumstances thereby connected into consideration—is even more barbarous. Illinois has by constitutional enactment prohibited free, moral, and well behaving men, from enjoying a Dwelling place on that part of God's Footstool!—not on account of Religion, nor of conscientious aversion to their principles; but on account of their Skin,—merely because God created them black instead of white, and this is in America! in the nineteenth century!! in the year 1848!!!—Nordlyset, (Norwegian.)

☞ Yes, and the whole land is filled with the same spirit.—And on account of religion as well as color. The only reason that Mormons are not legally banished from Ill. and Mo., is the constitutional provision. And they do without law, what they cannot do by it. There is more religious persecution in the American States than in the Scandinavian. [ED.

are the quorum of the First Presidency of the church.
The three High Priests referred to
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
The Twelve are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
A President of a Stake and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
The seven Presidents of the Seventies
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
An Elder and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
A Bishop and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
A Priest (Aaronic) and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
A Teacher and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.
A Deacon and his two Councilors
are a quorum of the Presidency of the church.

These all constitute the Presidency of the church. And all of these are chosen and set apart by the voice of the church except THE FIRST PRESIDENCY, which is called and set apart by direct revelation, and no other way.

"The President of the church, who is also the President of the Council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged, in his administration, by the voice of the church; and it is according to the dignity of his office, that he should preside over the high council of the church; and it is his privilege to be assisted by two other presidents, appointed after the same manner that he himself was appointed; and in case of the absence of one or both of those who are appointed to assist him, he has power to preside over the council without an assistant; and in case that he himself is absent, the other Presidents have power to preside in his stead, both or either of them." D. & C. sec. v. p. 6.

To this council every other quorum of the Presidency of the church is accountable. The three High Priests referred to above as a quorum of the Presidency of the church. Their priesthood and presidency growing out of or appointed of or from among those who have already received the priesthood given of God to the First President or Presidency of the church. Therefore as these three High Priests could not grow out of a priesthood before there was a priesthood given, and as there could be no church to choose them, it remains as a matter of course that the three High Priests referred to are not and cannot be the First Presidency of the church, but rather "a quorum of the Presidency of the church," of the High Priests quorum, not presiding over the whole church as the First Presidency of the church, but of the church, presiding over a part of it.

Thus I close with a consciousness I have discharged a duty which I owed to God and those who were once my companions in the gospel of Christ. And the time has been when the views I have presented above were the views of these very men whom I have now so lengthy, and they know as well as I that the above views are their views and the views of the whole church, at least that part of it that made any considerable advance in the knowledge of the doctrine and discipline of the church. And further, if the disciplinary practice of those men nowhad been taught in the church in the days of Pres. Smith, he would have hurled them over its battlements as broken pieces of pot metal are hurled from a bursting bombshell, but they retracted.

JOHN E. PAGE.

PRESERVE YOUR PAPERS.

Every Latter Day Saint who is as interested in this last dispensation as he ought to be will seek, not only to inform himself of its nature, design and consequences, but will endeavor to communicate the same to all others; consequently they will in the first place, after obtaining a feasible subsistence for himself and his family, if he has any, subscribe for a paper which is advocating and heralding that faith to the world at large. Yes, it is one of the most confirmatory characterestics of an interested saint, that proves to all men that such person is really desiring to be what he professes, to subscribe for the paper that publishes and contends earnestly for the faith delivered to him. If he does not, it is direct proof to the contrary, and such neglect always throws such person behind the times, and he remains ignorant of present facts concerning the church, the signs of the times & the events which are daily transpiring.

Scarce any thing is more annoying to a traveling Elder, when he calls to enjoy the hospitalities of a saint, when he calls for the paper or organ of the church, to hear it said in rather a whining or reluctant tone, "we don't take the paper." This reply or answer itself rather savors of the fact that he is ashamed of his uninterested neglect. But still more annoying it is to see the papers scattered about the floor or given to the children to tare to pieces, or used for some indifferent purpose, such as wiping razors or wrapping up garden seeds, &c., &c. Let me tell you dear saints, the day is coming when you or your children will want the reading of every No. of the paper ever published in the church. The traveling Elders will always want them.

Many no doubt apostatize merely because they are ignorant of facts as they are, and depending on the wind of report as a criterion for their present action. A body clothed in rags, bearing about a wise brain and a regenerate heart is far preferable to a body clothed in broadcloth or satin bearing about an ignorant brain decorated with jewels, and a heart lusting after the soul destroying maxims, customs, fashions, and, worse than all, the contradicting religious theories of the age, of a people who are ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Subscribe for the paper, and then preserve it for present and future use. JOHN E. PAGE.

Daily Wisconsin of 29th inst. gives an extract from Dr. Baird's travels in Sweden and Norway. Naturally curious when we see the names of our early homes mentioned, we gave the extract an attentive perusal. It concludes thus: "If a man becomes a Roman Catholic in Sweden, he may be put in prison or banished; and, in Denmark, no Jesuit is allowed to enter, &c. This is in the nineteenth century!" Now, allowing that Dr. BAIRD was right, we would say, that such and similar Laws, made many of us heartily sick of the Institutions there, and hence we have sought a new Fatherland and a free Country. But still we have to regret that the same tyrannical spirit is exercised and sanctioned in this free West. It is but a short time since our Sister state adopted, by the voluntary sanction of her liberty loving people, a Law, which, taking all circumstances thereby connected into consideration—is even more barbarous. Illinois has by constitutional enactment prohibited free, moral, and well behaving men, from enjoying a Dwelling place on that part of God's Footstool!—not on account of Religion, nor of conscientious aversion to their principles; but on account of their Skin,—merely because God created them black instead of white, and this is in America! in the nineteenth century!! in the year 1848!!!—Nordlyset, (Norwegian.)

☞ Yes, and the whole land is filled with the same spirit.—And on account of religion as well as color. The only reason that Mormons are not legally banished from Ill. and Mo., is the constitutional provision. And they do without law, what they cannot do by it. There is more religious persecution in the United States than in the Scandinavian.

"FULLNESS OF THE GENTILES."

I am often asked, what is meant by the fullness of the Gentiles, as spoken of by Paul? Rom. xi. 12. Ans. Paul evidently had reference to the fullness of the iniquity of the Gentiles, instead of their righteousness, as some vainly suppose. Those that read with care the whole chapter above quoted will, no doubt, see that the apostle was treating upon the blessed consequences that happened to the Gentiles as a distinct people, when natural Israel were cut off for a season, in consequence of having reached the fullness of their iniquity, the Gentiles were grafted into the stump of the spiritual covenant from which Israel had been severed. The apostle continues and warns the Gentiles against their falling into the like apostacy of which Israel had been guilty, for which the "severity" of God had fallen on them. But the "goodness" of God was promised to continue to the Gentiles on the only condition of their continuing in the goodness of God, otherwise "they should be cut off."

The all absorbing question now is, have the Gentiles continued in the goodness of God by which they were ingrafted? If so, all is well. Then we will see in the characteristics of the Gentile church a full development of the keeping and carrying out of the next chapter, viz., the twelfth. Please read it. Also the full organization of the church with its officers, gifts and blessings of the 12th chapter of 1st Cor., and Eph. 4th chapter. If not, it is self-evident that the church of Christ (professedly so called) are nothing more or less than "Mystery Babylon," as foretold by the apostle John; Rev. 12th, 13th, 17th and 18th chapters; and is fast reaching the fullness of their iniquity, ripening for the same severities of the fierce judgments of God to fall on them that once fell on old Israel for their unbelief and consummate wickedness, who practiced the same things that an apostate Gentile church does now.

All the Bible abounds with the fact that the light of present revelation is the peculiar characteristic of the true church of God, by which she is distinguished from the church of Anti-Christ. The true church of Christ always did, has and always will have apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers, immediately inspired with the light of present direct revelation, "for the perfecting of the saints." And inasmuch as the present Gentile apostate church possesses all the necessary facilities to suppress the true gospel, as Israel did once before, they undoubtedly will avail themselves of the opportunity until their fullness of iniquity is finished, as natural Israel's once was, and then, and not till then, Israel will be grafted in again to the same root from which they have been severed.

JOHN E. PAGE.

For the Gospel Herald.

"THOU SHALT LOVE THY NEIGHBOR AS THYSELF,"

Is the second commandment in the decalogue. But it seems to us that its importance is seldom appreciated, from the fact that mankind in general act so little upon that principle. Almost every man is seeking his own individual interest, to the exclusion of every thing else. Society is so constituted that one man's prosperity is another's adversity. The principle of selfishness is acted upon so universally that every act of benevolence is suspected of having originated in selfish motives. This is a very bad feature in society. It shows that men have stooped to the low, mean and degrading principle of performing acts of apparent benevolence from selfishness, till every benevolent act is attributed to selfish motives.

Such a state of things ought not to be, for all men, of whatever rank, kindred or tribe, are the offspring of the great Parent of the universe. We all derived our origin, as to our bodies, from the same physical principles, and from the same earthly parent. "Of the dust of the ground" the body of the first man was formed, and from Adam, the primogenitor of the human race, have descended all the generations of man which now exist or will hereafter exist, till the close of time. We all require substantially the same pleasures and enjoyments. The pleasures derived from the movements of the system of nature, from the beauties which adorn the heavens and the earth, the rising sun, the smiling day, the flowery landscape, the purling streams, the lofty mountains, the fertile vale, the ruddy hues of the evening clouds, the rainbow, adorned with the colors of light, the music of the groves, the return of spring, the fruits of harvest, the azure sky, the fairness of the moon, the brightness of the sun, and all the radiant host of stars, convey to the mind of all thousands of delightful images and sensations. We all have the same wants, and are exposed to similar troubles and afflictions.

Hunger and thirst, cold and heat, motion and rest, are common to all; and in order to supply and alleviate such wants the aid of our fellow men is indispensably requisite to enable us to obtain food, raiment, light, warmth, comfortable accommodation, and shelter from the blasts of the tempests. We all stand in need of comfort and advice in the hour of difficulty and danger; we all long for the love and friendship and good offices of those around us; and we all thirst for an increase of knowledge, happiness and joy.—Those wants and desires can be supplied and gratified only by the kindly intercourse and affection of kindred spirits. How essential it is that we should act upon the heavenly principle, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

G. W.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

IN ATTACHMENT.

James A. Stevens and Andrew Sawyer, vs. David Patten. } In Justices Court, before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P.

NOTICE is hereby given to the above named defendant that a writ of attachment has been issued against him in the above entitled suit, and his property attached to satisfy the demand of the above named plaintiffs; and unless he appear before the above named Justice at his office in Hudson in the county of Walworth and State of Wisconsin, on the 26th day of August, 1848, at one o'clock, P. M., judgment will be rendered against him, and his property sold to pay the debt of the plaintiffs.

JAMES A. STEVENS.
ANDREW SAWYER.

July 22d, 1848. 21u.

"FULLNESS OF THE GENTILES."

I am often asked, what is meant by the fullness of the Gentiles, as spoken of by Paul? Rom. xi. 12. Ans. Paul evidently had reference to the fullness of the iniquity of the Gentiles, instead of their righteousness, as some vainly suppose. Those that read with care the whole chapter above quoted will, no doubt, see that the apostle was treating upon the blessed consequences that happened to the Gentiles as a distinct people, when natural Israel were cut off for a season, in consequence of having reached the fullness of their iniquity, the Gentiles were grafted into the stump of the spiritual covenant from which Israel had been severed. The apostle continues and warns the Gentiles against their falling into the like apostacy of which Israel had been guilty, for which the "severity" of God had fallen on them. But the "goodness" of God was promised to continue to the Gentiles on the only condition of their continuing in the goodness of God, otherwise "they should be cut off."

The all absorbing question now is, have the Gentiles continued in the goodness of God by which they were ingrafted? If so, all is well. Then we will see in the characteristics of the Gentile church a full development of the keeping and carrying out of the next chapter, viz., the twelfth. Please read it. Also the full organization of the church with its officers, gifts and blessings of the 12th chapter of 1st Cor., and Eph. 4th chapter. If not, it is self-evident that the church of Christ (professedly so called) are nothing more or less than "Mystery Babylon," as foretold by the apostle John; Rev. 12th, 13th, 17th and 18th chapters; and is fast reaching the fullness of their iniquity, ripening for the same severities of the fierce judgments of God to fall on them that once fell on old Israel for their unbelief and consummate wickedness, who practiced the same things that an apostate Gentile church does now.

All the Bible abounds with the fact that the light of present revelation is the peculiar characteristic of the true church of God, by which she is distinguished from the church of Anti-Christ. The true church of Christ always did, has and always will have apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers, immediately inspired with the light of present direct revelation, "for the perfecting of the saints." And inasmuch as the present Gentile apostate church possesses all the necessary facilities to suppress the true gospel, as Israel did once before, they undoubtedly will avail themselves of the opportunity until their fullness of iniquity is finished, as natural Israel's once was, and then, and not till then, Israel will be grafted in again to the same root from which they have been severed.

JOHN E. PAGE.

For the Gospel Herald.

"THOU SHALT LOVE THY NEIGHBOR AS THYSELF,"

Is the second commandment in the decalogue. But it seems to us that its importance is seldom appreciated, from the fact that mankind in general act so little upon that principle. Almost every man is seeking his own individual interest, to the exclusion of every thing else. Society is so constituted that one man's prosperity is another's adversity. The principle of selfishness is acted upon so universally that every act of benevolence is suspected of having originated in selfish motives. This is a very bad feature in society. It shows that men have stooped to the low, mean and degrading principle of performing acts of apparent benevolence from selfishness, till every benevolent act is attributed to selfish motives.

Such a state of things ought not to be, for all men, of whatever rank, kindred or tribe, are the offspring of the great Parent of the universe. We all derived our origin, as to our bodies, from the same physical principles, and from the same earthly parent. "Of the dust of the ground" the body of the first man was formed, and from Adam, the primogenitor of the human race, have descended all the generations of man which now exist or will hereafter exist, till the close of time. We all require substantially the same pleasures and enjoyments. The pleasures derived from the movements of the system of nature, from the beauties which adorn the heavens and the earth, the rising sun, the smiling day, the flowery landscape, the purling streams, the lofty mountains, the fertile vale, the ruddy hues of the evening clouds, the rainbow, adorned with the colors of light, the music of the groves, the return of spring, the fruits of harvest, the azure sky, the fairness of the moon, the brightness of the sun, and all the radiant host of stars, convey to the mind of all thousands of delightful images and sensations. We all have the same wants, and are exposed to similar troubles and afflictions.

Hunger and thirst, cold and heat, motion and rest, are common to all; and in order to supply and alleviate such wants the aid of our fellow men is indispensably requisite to enable us to obtain food, raiment, light, warmth, comfortable accommodation, and shelter from the blasts of the tempests. We all stand in need of comfort and advice in the hour of difficulty and danger; we all long for the love and friendship and good offices of those around us; and we all thirst for an increase of knowledge, happiness and joy.—Those wants and desires can be supplied and gratified only by the kindly intercourse and affection of kindred spirits. How essential it is that we should act upon the heavenly principle, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

G. W.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 99 and 201, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cn.

IN ATTACHMENT.

James A. Stevens and Andrew Sawyer, vs. David Patten. } In Justices Court, before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P.

NOTICE is hereby given to the above named defendant that a writ of attachment has been issued against him in the above entitled suit and his property attached to satisfy the demand of the above named plaintiffs; and unless he appear before the above named Justice at his office in Hudson in the county of Walworth and State of Wisconsin, on the 26th day of August, 1848, at one o'clock, P. M., judgment will be rendered against him, and his property sold to pay the debt of the plaintiffs.

JAMES A. STEVENS.
ANDREW SAWYER.

July 22d, 1848. 21n.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 23.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, AUG. 24, 1848. [WHOLE No. 87.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, and a voice to mankind by and through Andrew Jackson Davis, the Poughkeepsie Seer and Clairvoyant, New York, S. S. Lyon and William Fishbough, 1847. This work is a greatly improved system of sectarian skepticism, or christian infidelity, and purports to have been got up as follows: S. S. Lyon mesmerized A. J. Davis, upon which Davis talked off the book in successive lectures and Fishbough wrote it down. Great pains is taken to prove that Davis really spoke the things contained in the book, a matter very easily believed, but not of the least consequence whatever. But not the slightest evidence is offered to show that Davis spoke by authority of God, the all important point in the matter. So far as we can see, the author has never yet conceived the idea of Divine authority, and would not understand what was meant by the word priesthood or authority.

As these divine revelations do not even purport to be given from God, it would seem superfluous to prove that they are not; except for the fact that some persons of real talent profess faith in them! Surely men are more ready to believe in defiance of all testimony than in accordance with it. The general character of the sentiments of the book is that of the Atheistical writers of the socialist school, containing a vast amount of popular science and just sentiment, but resolving all religion into about an equal amount of MESMERISM and LIES. Its author is evidently possessed of an extensive but superficial knowledge of both the natural and moral sciences, and some little of history and antiquity.

And as great pains is taken in the introduction to show that A. J. Davis is unacquainted with all these things, and therefore a divine revelator, it is not amiss to say that in the manner in which the book was produced he was no more the author of it than were the types upon which it was printed. Being mesmerized by S. S. Lyon, his organs became subject to the will of Lyon, so that what Lyon thought or willed Davis spoke. And the book is merely the work of Lyon, revised perhaps and improved by Fishbough, his accomplice and partner. This view of the matter does not impugn the motives or integrity of Davis, who is represented as an honest and inoffensive young man, destitute of any particular characteristic or objects of life. We cannot forbear to remark, however, that a facsimile of Davis' hand writing is given in the frontispiece, which, if just, shows him an active, energetic man, of deep thought, towering ambition and persevering industry. Certainly any thing but such a man as he is represented.

So much humbug is practiced in connection with mesmerism that very few understand its real operation. But, like all humbug, it is built up on some few real facts, produced so as to lead the mind astray on a false track The connection of mind and matter is always mysterious. In its ordinary operation it does not astonish us, because we are familiar with it. But to see the mind of one person act upon the matter or physical system of another does astonish us, because we are not familiar with it. Nevertheless, we do not understand the principles involved in the former case a whit better than in the latter. This is what the mesmerizer does. He makes his subject act in subjection to his own will, and speak what he thinks or wills him to say.

Acting upon this principle a celebrated professor using a small boy as his subject in some country place caused him to describe Greenhow's statue of Washington in the rotunda of the capitol of the United States. Another who had visited the mineral region of Wisconsin and Iowa caused some subject who was known to have never been in the west to give a particular and minute description of several lead mines in the vicinity of Potosi and Dubuque. Many have caused those who are known to have spent their days in particular neighborhoods to describe distant cities, buildings, &c., which the operator had seen or read a description of, but of which the subject was totally ignorant. After an exhibition of these marvels the operator is prepared to launch off to the moon or any other unvisited place and give fictitious or imaginary descriptions, which of course no body can prove false.

Physicians have turned it to account by prescribing through a subject in a similar manner, who of course gives the prescription which the physician wills. The marvel surrounding so extraordinary a process and its influence in assuring the patient are the only effects produced by it other than the ordinary effects of the same medicines. This book is a production of the same sort, in which the manipulator has given his own lectures through his subject.—The manipulator could have caused his subject to give any other lectures instead of these. He could have caused him to describe the moon as a mass of fire, a sea of water or a skim milk cheese as easy as any other way, if he had desired it. But intending to produce a halo of sacredness around his work, the real author has brought in all his scientific attainments to sustain his feeble pretensions as a divine legislator.

(To be continued.)

AN APPEAL.

I find that in what I wrote last week I have occupied more space concerning myself than I at first contemplated, and yet have not said what I intended. Since then U. C. H. Nickerson, finding that his own character was not good enough to rally a party around him, has gone and brought into Voree B. C. Elsworth to stand as leader of the apostates. The same men who denied the faith because he was not cut off without trial or testimony, are now, since he was cut off on the strongest testimony of guilt, willing to take him as a leader in a crusade against me. Fit leader in such a war. May such men ever speak against me.

I shall not trouble you further with the detail of the falsehoods told on me. Suffice it to say, that less than five years since I became a member of the church; having an unblemished moral character; I have labored faithfully in preaching the gospel; I have kept myself unspotted from the world; I have sought no persons!

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 23.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. AUG. 24, 1848. [WHOLE No. 87.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, and a voice to mankind by and through Andrew Jackson Davis, the Poughkeepsie Seer and Clairvoyant, New York, S. S. Lyon and William Fishbough, 1847. This work is a greatly improved system of sectarian skepticism, or christian infidelity, and purports to have been got up as follows: S. S. Lyon mesmerized A. J. Davis, upon which Davis talked off the book in successive lectures and Fishbough wrote it down. Great pains is taken to prove that Davis really spoke the things contained in the book, a matter very easily believed, but not of the least consequence whatever. But not the slightest evidence is offered to show that Davis spoke by authority of God, the all important point in the matter. So far as we can see, the author has never yet conceived the idea of Divine authority, and would not understand what was meant by the word priesthood or authority.

As these divine revelations do not even purport to be given from God, it would seem superfluous to prove that they are not; except for the fact that some persons of real talent profess faith in them! Surely men are more ready to believe in defiance of all testimony than in accordance with it. The general character of the sentiments of the book is that of the Atheistical writers of the socialist school, containing a vast amount of popular science and just sentiment, but resolving all religion into about an equal amount of MESMERISM and LIES. Its author is evidently possessed of an extensive but superficial knowledge of both the natural and moral sciences, and some little of history and antiquity.

And as great pains is taken in the introduction to show that A. J. Davis is unacquainted with all these things, and therefore a divine revelator, it is not amiss to say that in the manner in which the book was produced he was no more the author of it than were the types upon which it was printed. Being mesmerized by S. S. Lyon, his organs became subject to the will of Lyon, so that what Lyon thought or willed Davis spoke. And the book is merely the work of Lyon, revised perhaps and improved by Fishbough, his accomplice and partner. This view of the matter does not impugn the motives or integrity of Davis, who is represented as an honest and inoffensive young man, destitute of any particular characteristic or objects of life. We cannot forbear to remark, however, that a facsimile of Davis' hand writing is given in the frontispiece, which, if just, shows him an active, energetic man, of deep thought, towering ambition and persevering industry. Certainly any thing but such a man as he is represented.

So much humbug is practiced in connection with mesmerism that very few understand its real operation. But, like all humbug, it is built up on some few, real facts, produced so as to lead the mind astray on a false track. The connection of mind and matter is always mysterious. In its ordinary operation it does not astonish us, because we are familiar with it. But to see the mind of one person act upon the matter or physical system of another does astonish us, because we are not familiar with it. Nevertheless, we do not understand the principles involved in the former case a whit better than in the latter. This is what the mesmerizer does. He makes his subject act in subjection to his own will, and speak what he thinks or wills him to say.

Acting upon this principle a celebrated professor using a small boy as his subject in some country place caused him to describe Greenhow's statue of Washington in the rotunda of the capitol of the United States. Another who had visited the mineral region of Wisconsin and Iowa caused some subject who was known to have never been in the west to give a particular and minute description of several lead mines in the vicinity of Potosi and Dubuque. Many have caused those who are known to have spent their days in particular neighborhoods to describe distant cities, buildings, &c., which the operator had seen or read a description of, but of which the subject was totally ignorant. After an exhibition of these marvels the operator is prepared to launch off to the moon or any other unvisited place and give fictitious or imaginary descriptions, which of course no body can prove false.

Physicians have turned it to account by prescribing through a subject in a similar manner, who of course gives the prescription which the physician wills. The marvel surrounding so extraordinary a process and its influence in assuring the patient are the only effects produced by it other than the ordinary effects of the same medicines. This book is a production of the same sort, in which the manipulator has given his own lectures through his subject.—The manipulator could have caused his subject to give any other lectures instead of these. He could have caused him to describe the moon as a mass of fire, a sea of water or a skim milk cheese as easy as any other way, if he had desired it. But intending to produce a halo of sacredness around his work, the real author has brought in all his scientific attainments to sustain his feeble pretensions as a divine legislator.

(To be continued.)

AN APPEAL.

I find that in what I wrote last week I have occupied more space concerning myself than I at first contemplated, and yet have not said what I intended. Since then U. C. H. Nickerson, finding that his own character was not good enough to rally a party around him has gone and brought into Voree B. C. Elsworth to stand as leader of the apostates. The same men who denied the faith because he was not cut off without trial or testimony, are now, since he was cut off on the strongest testimony of guilt, willing to take him as a leader in a crusade against me. Fit leader in such a war. May such men ever speak against me.

I shall not trouble you further with the detail of the falsehoods told on me. Suffice it to say, that less than five years since I became a member of the church; having an unblemished moral character; I have labored faithfully in preaching the gospel; I have kept myself unspotted from the world; I have sought no personal indulgence or immunity; I have cut myself off from all the luxuries and most of the comforts of life; I have denied myself nearly all the ordinary pleasures of society; I have, by precept and example, set my face as flint against every kind of immorality; I have not shuned to declare the whole counsel of God; I have endeavored as much as possible to avoid offending the follies of the prudish; I have not so much confidence in myself as to flatter myself that I ever can do better or conduct more prudently for the same length of time, than I have during the time that has elapsed. Yet I cannot conceal from myself that a feeling of suspicion deep and broad pervades the land, of a kind which, if just, should exile me from society.

Forging is resorted to unblushingly and without stint or measurement, for the purpose of rendering me infamous. Apostates in Voree have joined hands with apostates in numerous other directions, and keeping up constant correspondence are prepared with slander and falsehood of every imaginable kind, constantly pouring it out without stint. Persons who have a name to be saints, but are willing to keep company with such, are constantly picking up the filth of these scavengers of society and communicating it to their acquaintance as proved facts. It is perfectly vain for me to struggle against this course of procedure. Every lie invented, no matter how ridiculous, is taken for true till proved false. When the most indubitable proof of falsehood is given, it is perfectly lost in the smoke of a dozen still later slanders, and the best answer of the fearful and unbelieving is, "Well, I don't know, I hope you are not guilty; but there has been a great deal of iniquity; we must be careful who we trust in these last days."

At the time I began my ministry the name of Mormon had, by some means, become generally infamous. But this was believed to be the work of Gentile persecutors. The public press throughout the land spoke well of those who gathered at Voree, and the whole community treated them with the respect due to a virtuous people. Now the whole scene is changed. We are as evilly entreated as were our brethren in other places. It is not the work of Gentile persecutors, for our unbelieving neighbors neither originated these slanders nor believe them when apostates tell them, and fearful saints sigh over them. Neither is it the work of apostates; for, with very few exceptions, they are despised at home and infamous wherever known. It is the work of our brethren; of those who have a name and a place with us, but, nevertheless, keep company with heretics. Apostates! They never had power to do us injury. Their friendship is a blighting curse, not their enmity. I have been cursed with the friendship of such men as Wm. Smith, Nickerson and Ellsworth a thousand times more than I possibly can be with their hate.

I last year spent six days in Jefferson county, N. Y., engaged three days in public preaching, & all the time, so that I scarcely got opportunity to sleep at all, with crowds of saints and strangers, and during that time saw but three persons that I had ever seen before. There are certain doctrines of devils which I had occasion to treat of, and which I set my face against as flint, publicly and privately, on all occasions. I never, by word or by sign, or by silence, varied from the same unswerving testimony which I usually and publicly gave. And never in a single act, for a single moment, did my example come short of my testimony. Yet I have now letters laying before me, written in that region, in which I am accused of criminal intercourse with more than forty different saints there, including every sister in the church in that region, of whom I have the slightest recollection, and several of whom I do not so much as know that they exist.

Here in Voree my footsteps are dogged as with a shadow. I cannot step into a house but in a half hour it is known by half the neighborhood. And kindred spirits of saints and apostates congregate together. And the saint begins, what do you suppose brother Strang has gone there for? To which he gets the looked for answer. Any body might know what a man goes where there is a woman for, (as though there was not usully a woman in every house,) and pleased with the wit of such ribaldry, after a chuckle, or, if very sanctimonious, a groan replies, Oh, I don't know. I don't think brother Strang is quite so bad as that; do you really think so?—But I wish he would be more prudent. And before the day is out perhaps is urging me to call at his house, and complaining that I don't visit more. God speed the time when such wretches will go to their own place. It must needs be that offences come, but wo to him by whom the offence cometh.

I have treated such with all forbearance and long suffering, but I am worn out with them. I cannot deceive myself so far as not to see that on me they have done their work too well. I am now reaping the bitter reward of their friendship, in the blasting of that fair fame over which apostates and open enemies were powerless; and in the disgrace and infamy which by some means has been heaped on all God's prophets, but on none more bitterly. Henceforth I SPURN THEM and ALL WHO HEAR THEIR LIES as GOD'S and MY MOST BITTER ENEMIES. I WILL KNOW NO DISTINCTION between THOSE WHO MAKE and THOSE WHO LOVE LIES. And when any one fears that an obvious LIE is the TRUTH, I WILL KNOW THAT IT IS BECAUSE HE LOVES IT.

JAMES J. STRANG.

REVELATION TO BE CONTINUED.

A more popular idea is not extant in christendom than that divine revelation to man closed with the communication of God to the apostle John on the isle of Patmos, in the year of our Lord 96. This delusive notion is drawn from a perverted understanding of the following texts of holy writ:—

"For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." Rev. xxii. 18, 19.

If I am to understand that the above texts are significant of the final close of divine revelation to man on earth, I am bound by every principle of reason, logic and philosophy to say amen to the scriptures of the Old and New Testament as being but a bundle of the most consummate nonsense, a tissue of lies, and incomprehensible jargon. The topic of the literal gathering and return of Israel (the ten tribes) from the "north country," and Judah (the Jews) "from the four corners of the earth," is the grand frontispiece of the Bible and the principal burden of all the prophets from Moses to John the Revelator. The above named topic constitutes near one half of the reading matter of the Old Testament and a respectable portion of the New. I mean that part which is considered to be divine revelation aside from the mere historical part.

The above named topic engrosses so much of the prophets that the greatest and most notable events spoken of by the prophets are yet in the future to be fulfilled to prove the Bible true as a whole. While the topic of the gathering of Israel and Judah stands out in the scriptures as one of the plainest points on the face of the Bible, and one too that is fraught with the greatest consequences to the Gentile nations, yet there is not a point in the sacred word that is less heeded, or one more contemptuously disregarded. One may ask, why is it so? I answer, because the present religious Gentile world "inherit lies and things wherein there is no profit." Consequently they are daily and hourly, yea, momentarily, enforcing an indulgence or immunity; I have cut myself off from all the luxuries and most of the comforts of life; I have denied myself nearly all the ordinary pleasures of society; I have, by precept and example, set my face as flint against every kind of immorality; I have not shuned to declare the whole counsel of God; I have endeavored as much as possible to avoid offending the follies of the prudish; I have not so much confidence in myself as to flatter myself that I ever can do better or conduct more prudently for the same length of time, than I have during the time that has elapsed. Yet I cannot conceal from myself that a feeling of suspicion deep and broad pervades the land, of a kind which, if just, should exile me from society.

Forging is resorted to unblushingly and without stint or measurement, for the purpose of rendering me infamous. Apostates in Voree have joined hands with apostates in numerous other directions, and keeping up constant correspondence are prepared with slander and falsehood of every imaginable kind, constantly pouring it out without stint. Persons who have a name to be saints, but are willing to keep company with such, are constantly picking up the filth of these scavengers of society and communicating it to their acquaintance as proved facts. It is perfectly vain for me to struggle against this course of procedure. Every lie invented, no matter how ridiculous, is taken for true till proved false. When the most indubitable proof of falsehood is given, it is perfectly lost in the smoke of a dozen still later slanders, and the best answer of the fearful and unbelieving is, "Well, I don't know, I hope you are not guilty; but there has been a great deal of iniquity; we must be careful who we trust in these last days."

At the time I began my ministry the name of Mormon had, by some means, become generally infamous. But this was believed to be the work of Gentile persecutors. The public press throughout the land spoke well of those who gathered at Voree, and the whole community treated them with the respect due to a virtuous people. Now the whole scene is changed. We are as evilly entreated as were our brethren in other places. It is not the work of Gentile persecutors, for our unbelieving neighbors neither originated these slanders nor believe them when apostates tell them, and fearful saints sigh over them. Neither is it the work of apostates; for, with very few exceptions, they are despised at home and infamous wherever known. It is the work of our brethren; of those who have a name and a place with us, but, nevertheless, keep company with heretics. Apostates! They never had power to do us injury. Their friendship is a blighting curse, not their enmity. I have been cursed with the friendship of such men as Wm. Smith, Nickerson and Ellsworth a thousand times more than I possibly can be with their hate.

I last year spent six days in Jefferson county, N. Y., engaged three days in public preaching, & all the time, so that I scarcely got opportunity to sleep at all, with crowds of saints and strangers, and during that time saw but three persons that I had ever seen before. There are certain doctrines of devils which I had occasion to treat of, and which I set my face against as flint, publicly and privately, on all occasions. I never, by word or by sign, or by silence, varied from the same unswerving testimony which I usually and publicly gave. And never in a single act, for a single moment, did my example come short of my testimony. Yet I have now letters laying before me, written in that region, in which I am accused of criminal intercourse with more than forty different saints there, including every sister in the church in that region, of whom I have the slightest recollection, and several of whom I do not so much as know that they exist.

Here in Voree my footsteps are dogged as with a shadow. I cannot step into a house but in a half hour it is known by half the neighborhood. And kindred spirits of saints and apostates congregate together. And the saint begins, what do you suppose brother Strang has gone there for? To which he gets the looked for answer. Any body might know what a man goes where there is a woman for, (as though there was not usully a woman in every house,) and pleased with the wit of such ribaldry, after a chuckle, or, if very sanctimonious, a groan replies, Oh, I don't know. I don't think brother Strang is quite so bad as that; do you really think so?—But I wish he would be more prudent. And before the day is out perhaps is urging me to call at his house, and complaining that I don't visit more. God speed the time when such wretches will go to their own place. It must needs be that offences come, but wo to him by whom the offence cometh.

I have treated such with all forbearance and long suffering, but I am worn out with them. I cannot deceive myself so far as not to see that on me they have done their work too well. I am now reaping the bitter reward of their friendship, in the blasting of that fair fame over which apostates and open enemies were powerless; and in the disgrace and infamy which by some means has been heaped on all God's prophets, but on none more bitterly. Henceforth I SPURN THEM and ALL WHO HEAR THEIR LIES as GOD'S and MY MOST BITTER ENEMIES. I WILL KNOW NO DISTINCTION between THOSE WHO MAKE and THOSE WHO LOVE LIES. And when any one fears that an obvious LIE is the TRUTH, I WILL KNOW THAT IT IS BECAUSE HE LOVES IT. JAMES J. STRANG.

REVELATION TO BE CONTINUED.

A more popular idea is not extant in christendom than that divine revelation to man closed with the communication of God to the apostle John on the isle of Patmos, in the year of our Lord 96. This delusive notion is drawn from a perverted understanding of the following texts of holy writ:—

"For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." Rev. xxii. 18, 19.

If I am to understand that the above texts are significant of the final close of divine revelation to man on earth, I am bound by every principle of reason, logic and philosophy to say amen to the scriptures of the Old and New Testament as being but a bundle of the most consummate nonsense, a tissue of lies, and incomprehensible jargon. The topic of the literal gathering and return of Israel (the ten tribes) from the "north country," and Judah (the Jews) "from the four corners of the earth," is the grand frontispiece of the Bible and the principal burden of all the prophets from Moses to John the Revelator. The above named topic constitutes near one half of the reading matter of the Old Testament and a respectable portion of the New. I mean that part which is considered to be divine revelation aside from the mere historical part.

The above named topic engrosses so much of the prophets that the greatest and most notable events spoken of by the prophets are yet in the future to be fulfilled to prove the Bible true as a whole. While the topic of the gathering of Israel and Judah stands out in the scriptures as one of the plainest points on the face of the Bible and one too that is fraught with the greatest consequences to the Gentile nations, yet there is not a point in the sacred word that is less heeded, or one more contemptuously disregarded. One may ask, why is it so? I answer, because the present religious Gentile world "inherit lies and things wherein there is no profit." Consequently they are daily and hourly, yea, momentarily, enforcing interpretation and falsified construction to the prophecies that throws the following texts into the dark and out of use to the most critical reader. The few passages which I copy below are but a few of the hundreds of others that embrace the same event, and are substantially the same in point of doctrine, which, if true, of which I have no doubt, when fulfilled will prove the fallacy of the position assumed by our sectarian doctors of divinity. But I awfully fear when those scriptures are fulfilled the day of grace will be over with them, as it was to the Jewish high priests who said of Christ, "let his blood be on our heads and the heads of our children."

"And now, therefore, thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, concerning this city, whereof ye say, It shall be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence; Behold, I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely: And they shall be my people, and I will be their God: And I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me forever, for the good of them, and of their children after them: And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart, and with my whole soul.—For thus saith the Lord, Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them." Jer. xxxii. 36 to 42 inclusive.

Notice the term REVEAL in the following verses:—

"Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, and will REVEAL unto them the abundance of peace and truth. And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first." Jer. xxxiii. 6, 7.

If, then, the Lord God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob is yet to gather their posterity to build Jerusalem, it is equally true that it yet remains that God is to do it by the gift of revelation as declared in the above texts, and as clearly appears in the following, when he pleads with them face to face, as he did in the days of Moses, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt:—

"As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you: And I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant." Ezek. xx. 33, 34, 35, 36, 37.

"And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea: and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dry shod. And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt." Isaiah xi. 15, 16.

I conclude it will be as much of a miracle to smite the tongue of the Egyptian sea and dry up the seven streams thereof as it did in the days of Moses, and if it is to be to the Assyrian captivity as it was then, surely it will not only be a day of miracles but of revelation also. And to seal the whole matter as a thing yet future, I present the following texts:—

"And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them: and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God." Amos ix. 14, 15.

Surely there is none so stupid as to say that Israel is not now plucked up out of the land given to their fathers; then if the above quoted scriptures be true in their import it is most certainly true that this thing is yet future to this year, 1848. Then down falls the popular perverted idea that God closed the heavens to no more speak to man on earth by divine revelation ever after the year 96 of the first christian century. One may ask, what then is the sense of the first quoted text? Why, it means just what it says; that every man that heard the words of the prophecy of that book, i. e., the book of Revelations, which John wrote on the isle of Patmos; for it cannot be supposed that John had reference to the Old Testament scriptures, which must have been quite an unwieldy thing at that time all in manuscript. If by chance John had such a thing, no doubt the heathen Romans would have rent it from him, because he was both a Jew and a christian, and either profession was as hideous in the mind of a heathen Roman prince as Mormonism is now to a heathen sectarian priest in this christian land. I say heathen because of the fact that the Bible knows nothing of any church but one as the church of God at the same time. All others being Anti-Christ, consequently heathens. As for the New Testament, it was not in being as a compiled book in the days of John the apostle of Christ. The matter it now contains was in A. D. 96 lying in manuscript scattered throughout Corinth, Ephesus, Galatia, Rome and other parts of the world, and some of it was in the keeping of the private hands of Timothy, Titus and others, so that it was impossible for John to have had the New Testament in his possession at the time of his banishment by Domitian the Roman emperor.

From the consideration of the above facts, when John says "this book" he has reference not to the Old and New Testament as a whole, but to the book which he had been writing; forbidding any man as a mere man, not called or authorized of God, to "take away" or "add" to the words of the prophecy of that book. Neither has God by so saying abrogated his own prerogative to add in his own time as many revelations as he pleases. And further, if the Lord Jesus Christ meant to be understood in the light (darkness) that the Rev. divines of this the nineteenth century would have us do, that the revelation to John was the last and winding up scene of his word to his people, he (Christ) has flatly contradicted himself in the book which he commanded John to write; for he told John, "Thou must prophecy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings."

And I know not that if God should command him to write the "prophecy" which John should deliver, that he would transcend his limits. Again, in the 5th and 6th chapters of the book under consideration the Lord has told us that he would open a book having seven seals. This was also to take place in future to John. I read also in the 8th, 9th and 10th chapters something concerning seven angels sounding seven trumpets, and in the days of the sounding of the seventh trumpet "the mystery of God was to be finished." I understand that the mysteries of God are not mysteries to himself, but to man; and when they are finished, to man it is, because they are revealed to man's understanding. And I know no reason why they should not be written for the benefit of all God's people. But I do see a reason why they should be written, because God has told me so in so many words, that his "doctrine" should be given by "precept upon precept, precept upon precept, line upon line, line interpretation and falsified construction to the prophecies that throws the following texts into the dark and out of use to the most critical reader. The few passages which I copy below are but a few of the hundreds of others that embrace the same event, and are substantially the same in point of doctrine, which, if true, of which I have no doubt, when fulfilled will prove the fallacy of the position assumed by our sectarian doctors of divinity. But I awfully fear when those scriptures are fulfilled the day of grace will be over with them, as it was to the Jewish high priests who said of Christ, "let his blood be on our heads and the heads of our children."

(Concluded on page 103.)

"And now, therefore, thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, concerning this city, whereof ye say, It shall be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence; Behold, I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely: And they shall be my people, and I will be their God: And I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me forever, for the good of them, and of their children after them: And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart, and with my whole soul.—For thus saith the Lord, Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them." Jer. xxxii. 36 to 42 inclusive.

Notice the term REVEAL in the following verses:—

"Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, and will REVEAL unto them the abundance of peace and truth. And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first." Jer. xxxiii. 6, 7.

If, then, the Lord God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob is yet to gather their posterity to build Jerusalem, it is equally true that it yet remains that God is to do it by the gift of revelation as declared in the above texts, and as clearly appears in the following, when he pleads with them face to face, as he did in the days of Moses, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt:—

"As I live, saith the Lord God, surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you: And I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with fury poured out. And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face. Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I plead with you, saith the Lord God. And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant." Ezek. xx. 33, 34, 35, 36, 37.

"And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea: and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dry shod. And there shall be a highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt." Isaiah xi. 15, 16.

I conclude it will be as much of a miracle to smite the tongue of the Egyptian sea and dry up the seven streams thereof as it did in the days of Moses, and if it is to be to the Assyrian captivity as it was then, surely it will not only be a day of miracles but of revelation also. And to seal the whole matter as a thing yet future, I present the following texts:—

"And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them: and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God." Amos ix. 14, 15.

Surely there is none so stupid as to say that Israel is not now plucked up out of the land given to their fathers; then if the above quoted scriptures be true in their import it is most certainly true that this thing is yet future to this year, 1848. Then down falls the popular perverted idea that God closed the heavens to no more speak to man on earth by divine revelation ever after the year 96 of the first christian century. One may ask, what then is the sense of the first quoted text? Why, it means just what it says; that every man that heard the words of the prophecy of that book, i. e., the book of Revelations, which John wrote on the isle of Patmos; for it cannot be supposed that John had reference to the Old Testament scriptures, which must have been quite an unwieldy thing at that time all in manuscript. If by chance John had such a thing, no doubt the heathen Romans would have rent it from him, because he was both a Jew and a christian, and either profession was as hideous in the mind of a heathen Roman prince as Mormonism is now to a heathen sectarian priest in this christian land. I say heathen because of the fact that the Bible knows nothing of any church but one as the church of God at the same time. All others being Anti-Christ, consequently heathens. As for the New Testament, it was not in being as a compiled book in the days of John the apostle of Christ. The matter it now contains was in A. D. 96 lying in manuscript scattered throughout Corinth, Ephesus, Galatia, Rome and other parts of the world, and some of it was in the keeping of the private hands of Timothy, Titus and others, so that it was impossible for John to have had the New Testament in his possession at the time of his banishment by Domitian the Roman emperor.

From the consideration of the above facts, when John says "this book" he has reference not to the Old and New Testament as a whole, but to the book which he had been writing; forbidding any man as a mere man, not called or authorized of God, to "take away" or "add" to the words of the prophecy of that book. Neither has God by so saying abrogated his own prerogative to add in his own time as many revelations as he pleases. And further, if the Lord Jesus Christ meant to be understood in the light (darkness) that the Rev. divines of this the nineteenth century would have us do, that the revelation to John was the last and winding up scene of his word to his people, he (Christ) has flatly contradicted himself in the book which he commanded John to write; for he told John, "Thou must prophecy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings."

And I know not that if God should command him to write the "prophecy" which John should deliver, that he would transcend his limits. Again, in the 5th and 6th chapters of the book under consideration the Lord has told us that he would open a book having seven seals. This was also to take place in future to John. I read also in the 8th, 9th and 10th chapters something concerning seven angels sounding seven trumpets, and in the days of the sounding of the seventh trumpet "the mystery of God was to be finished." I understand that the mysteries of God are not mysteries to himself, but to man; and when they are finished, to man it is, because they are revealed to man's understanding. And I know no reason why they should not be written for the benefit of all God's people. But I do see a reason why they should be written, because God has told me so in so many words, that his "doctrine" should be given by "precept upon precept, precept upon precept, line upon line, line

(Concluded on page 103.)

REORGANIZED CHURCH HISTORICAL DEPT.

NATIONAL REFORM.

An unknown friend in Ohio has sent us the address of a convention of national reformers, held at Macedon Lock, N. Y., together with two letters of the friend of that human race, Gerrit Smith, so eminently just that we cannot forbear making the following extracts :—

"INTRODUCTION.

"To the Friends of Liberty, Justice and Good Government in the United States :—

"We take the liberty to address you in respect to the objects we have in view, in convening together and nominating candidates for President and Vice President of the United States. Those objects are not partizan in the ordinary acceptation of that term. We have no interests to promote distinct from the interests of each and all of our fellow citizens. We espouse no other principles of government than those which our entire nation has declared to be self-evident. We only ask that the rights of all shall be equally and impartially protected—that the fundamental and acknowledged principles of civil government shall be, at all times, on all occasions, every where, and in every direction, applied and carried out into consistent and undeviating practice. If there are some who solicit your aid in protecting the rights of the white man—and if there are others who ask you to assist them in protecting the rights of the colored man, we agree with them both, and we differ from them both, in desiring you to co-operate with us in securing the equal protection of the rights of all men. If there are some who wish to enlist you in a political contest against one form of injustice and oppression—if there are others who would have you combine against another form of injustice and of oppression, or another, or yet another, we agree with them all, and we differ from them all, in asking you to assist us in securing an administration of government that shall protect all its subjects alike, from all forms of injustice and oppression, so far as civil government can apply the remedy, in the appropriate exercise of its characteristic powers.

"Civil Government we understand to be that degree and description of authoritative control which the Common Father of all men has committed to society, to be exercised in accordance with equity and justice, over each one of its members, for the protection of all and of each, in the safe possession and full enjoyment and use of all their original and heaven-conferred rights unimpaired ; forbidding nothing but the infringement of those rights, and requiring and enforcing nothing but what is requisite for their protection and enjoyment.

"Assuming, as it does, the essential equality of all, and being committed to all, it imposes equal restraints upon all, and affords equal and impartial protection for all. It recognizes no caste. It knows no distinction of birth, property, nativity, avocation, condition or color. It punishes nothing but crime. It infringes no original, natural rights. It permits no such infringement. It recognizes no man's right to infringe the equal rights of his neighbor. It creates and allows no monopolies. It confers no exclusive privileges. It has no power to frame a valid and binding law that violates any original right, or conflicts with natural equity and justice. And all its courts, magistrates and jurors are bound to consider all legislative enactments or judicial precedents or usages, which are contrary to natural justice, null and void.

"We hold slavery to be illegal and unconstitutional. We demand for the injured aborigines of this country the same protection, mercy and justice that we demand for the injured slave. Along with the abolition of all other monopolies we would restrict within reasonable bounds the extent to which individuals, corporations, or the government, should hold property in land, providing an opportunity for all to become possessors of the soil, and thus enjoy (without its being contested) the original right of every human being to occupy a portion of the earth's surface, and breathe its free air. To this end, we would also have the public lands thrown open to actual settlers, free of costs, and every man's homestead held inalienable, except with his own consent, not being liable to seizure and sale for debt.

"APPLICATION OF PRINCIPLES A DUTY.

"Abolitionists in general, and Liberty party men in particular, have been accustomed to maintain that it is always safe to do right, and safe as well as obligatory to do right at the present time—that it is morally wrong to defer doing right—and that it is holding the truth in unrighteousness to acknowledge a truth in the abstract, and yet decline, on prudential considerations, reducing that truth to practice. On this ground it is that Abolitionists persist in applying the epithet pro-slavery to that portion of the community, who, while they acknowledge the moral wrong of slavery, excuse themselves on the ground of expediency, from reducing their convictions to practice, in the bestowment of their votes.

"We cannot perceive why we are not bound to reason in the same manner and to act in accordance with the same considerations in respect to all other moral evils within the admitted sphere and province of political action. Admitting that chattel slavery is the greatest moral and political evil upheld and sanctioned by the government, (though the moral and political evils of intemperance are scarcely less,) we cannot feel ourselves, as moral and accountable beings, at liberty to undertake the mensuration and guaging of the moral and political evils upheld by the government, with a view of ascertaining which is greatest, and thus determining which moral evil we will select as our antagonist, and which we will enter into a truce with, at present, and virtually support, by not making opposition to it a test, in the bestowment of our votes.

"The proclamation of neutrality in respect to one or more moral evils, amounting to a truce with them, and a co-operation with their supporters, is but a lame preparation for an onset with another moral evil, admitting it to be the parent and chief support of all the others. Such a policy resembles too closely—nay, is it not in substance, a proposition to enter into an alliance, offensive and defensive, with all the lesser devils of the pit, in the hope of decoying them into a successful campaign against the Prince and Father of them all? The friends of temperance were thus seduced, for a time, to hold a truce with the lesser demons of inebriation, the wine, the beer, and the cider, while they concentrated their energies against the Giant Fiend, Distilled Spirit. The result proved that a truce with the subalterns and privates of the army of intemperance, was a truce with the Commander-in-Chief of that army himself, and the world's history fails to furnish us with any other instance of better success in the attempt to cast out the Prince of the Devils by a truce or co-operation with his legions.

"LAW OF FREE TRADE AND INALIENABLE HOMESTEAD, A MORAL LAW.

"It is an easy and cheap mode of argument to assume, as is sometimes done, the main point in debate, or rather, to assume as true, what is commonly admitted, in reality, on both sides, to be false.—It is easy to represent, and take for granted, that whereas the slave question is a great moral question, all the other great questions before the nation, are mere questions of policy, involving no moral principles at all. The questions of free trade, of monopolies, of the public lands, &c., are treated as being of this character. But there is no solid ground for this representation. It stands contradicted by the almost universal sentiment that the law of free trade is an original law of nature, and consequently, a law of God, founded on the original and inalienable right of every man to the products of his own labor, including the right to dispose of the same, wherever he can find a brother man to become the free purchaser.

NATIONAL REFORM.

An unknown friend in Ohio has sent us the address of a convention of national reformers, held at Macedon Lock, N. Y., together with two letters of the friend of that human race, Gerrit Smith, so eminently just that we cannot forbear making the following extracts :—

"INTRODUCTION.

"To the Friends of Liberty, Justice and Good Government in the United States :—

"We take the liberty to address you in respect to the objects we have in view, in convening together and nominating candidates for President and Vice President of the United States. Those objects are not partizan in the ordinary acceptation of that term. We have no interests to promote distinct from the interests of each and all of our fellow citizens. We espouse no other principles of government than those which our entire nation has declared to be self-evident. We only ask that the rights of all shall be equally and impartially protected—that the fundamental and acknowledged principles of civil government shall be, at all times, on all occasions, every where, and in every direction, applied and carried out into consistent and undeviating practice. If there are some who solicit your aid in protecting the rights of the white man—and if there are others who ask you to assist them in protecting the rights of the colored man, we agree with them both, and we differ from them both, in desiring you to co-operate with us in securing the equal protection of the rights of all men. If there are some who wish to enlist you in a political contest against one form of injustice and oppression—if there are others who would have you combine against another form of injustice and of oppression, or another, or yet another, we agree with them all, and we differ from them all, in asking you to assist us in securing an administration of government that shall protect all its subjects alike, from all forms of injustice and oppression, so far as civil government can apply the remedy, in the appropriate exercise of its characteristic powers.

"Civil Government we understand to be that degree and description of authoritative control which the Common Father of all men has committed to society, to be exercised in accordance with equity and justice, over each one of its members, for the protection of all and of each, in the safe possession and full enjoyment and use of all their original and heaven-conferred rights unimpaired ; forbidding nothing but the infringement of those rights, and requiring and enforcing nothing but what is requisite for their protection and enjoyment.

"Assuming, as it does, the essential equality of all, and being committed to all, it imposes equal restraints upon all, and affords equal and impartial protection for all. It recognizes no caste. It knows no distinction of birth, property, nativity, avocation, condition or color. It punishes nothing but crime. It infringes no original, natural rights. It permits no such infringement. It recognizes no man's right to infringe the equal rights of his neighbor. It creates and allows no monopolies. It confers no exclusive privileges. It has no power to frame a valid and binding law that violates any original right, or conflicts with natural equity and justice. And all its courts, magistrates and jurors are bound to consider all legislative enactments or judicial precedents or usages, which are contrary to natural justice, null and void.

"We hold slavery to be illegal and unconstitutional. We demand for the injured aborigines of this country the same protection, mercy and justice that we demand for the injured slave. Along with the abolition of all other monopolies we would restrict within reasonable bounds the extent to which individuals, corporations, or the government, should hold property in land, providing an opportunity for all to become possessors of the soil, and thus enjoy (without its being contested) the original right of every human being to occupy a portion of the earth's surface, and breathe its free air. To this end, we would also have the public lands thrown open to actual settlers, free of costs, and every man's homestead held inalienable, except with his own consent, not being liable to seizure and sale for debt.

"APPLICATION OF PRINCIPLES A DUTY.

"Abolitionists in general, and Liberty party men in particular, have been accustomed to maintain that it is always safe to do right, and safe as well as obligatory to do right at the present time—that it is morally wrong to defer doing right—and that it is holding the truth in unrighteousness to acknowledge a truth in the abstract, and yet decline, on prudential considerations, reducing that truth to practice. On this ground it is that Abolitionists persist in applying the epithet pro-slavery to that portion of the community, who, while they acknowledge the moral wrong of slavery, excuse themselves on the ground of expediency, from reducing their convictions to practice, in the bestowment of their votes.

"We cannot perceive why we are not bound to reason in the same manner and to act in accordance with the same considerations in respect to all other moral evils within the admitted sphere and province of political action. Admitting that chattel slavery is the greatest moral and political evil upheld and sanctioned by the government, (though the moral and political evils of intemperance are scarcely less,) we cannot feel ourselves, as moral and accountable beings, at liberty to undertake the mensuration and guaging of the moral and political evils upheld by the government, with a view of ascertaining which is greatest, and thus determining which moral evil we will select as our antagonist, and which we will enter into a truce with, at present, and virtually support, by not making opposition to it a test, in the bestowment of our votes.

"The proclamation of neutrality in respect to one or more moral evils, amounting to a truce with them, and a co-operation with their supporters, is but a lame preparation for an onset with another moral evil, admitting it to be the parent and chief support of all the others. Such a policy resembles too closely—nay, is it not in substance, a proposition to enter into an alliance, offensive and defensive, with all the lesser devils of the pit, in the hope of decoying them into a successful campaign against the Prince and Father of them all ? The friends of temperance were thus seduced, for a time, to hold a truce with the lesser demons of inebriation, the wine, the beer, and the cider, while they concentrated their energies against the Giant Fiend, Distilled Spirit. The result proved that a truce with the subalterns and privates of the army of intemperance, was a truce with the Commander-in-Chief of that army himself, and the world's history fails to furnish us with any other instance of better success in the attempt to cast out the Prince of the Devils by a truce or co-operation with his legions.

"LAW OF FREE TRADE AND INALIENABLE HOMESTEAD, A MORAL LAW.

"It is an easy and cheap mode of argument to assume, as is sometimes done, the main point in debate, or rather, to assume as true, what is commonly admitted, in reality, on both sides, to be false.—It is easy to represent, and take for granted, that whereas the slave question is a great moral question, all the other great questions before the nation, are mere questions of policy, involving no moral principles at all. The questions of free trade, of monopolies, of the public lands, &c., are treated as being of this character. But there is no solid ground for this representation. It stands contradicted by the almost universal sentiment that the law of free trade is an original law of nature, and consequently, a law of God, founded on the original and inalienable right of every man to the products of his own labor, including the right to dispose of the same, wherever he can find a brother man to become the free purchaser.

"Similar remarks might be made concerning man's right to occupy a portion of the earth's surface, and the consequent unrighteousness of the legislation and the arrangements by which that original and fundamental law of nature and of nature's God, is contemptuously set aside. To talk of man's inalienable right to self-ownership, without the right to the products of his own skill and industry—to talk of his right to those products without the right to exchange or sell them, wherever he can find the best market—to talk of a man's right to self-ownership without a right to an inch of the earth's soil, without a right to be in the world where he was born, is to talk self-contradiction and nonsense. Whoever succeeds in proving that the legal sanction of an unlimited land monopoly, and that commercial restrictions, are morally right, will have done more than the slaveholders and their apologists have ever yet been able to do, towards proving that chattel enslavement is not essentially and inherently wicked. That man's claim to the right of self-ownership must be in a sad predicament, who has neither a right to be nor to do—to exercise his faculties or to occupy space! The principle of illimitable land ownership, if admitted, covers the one predicament—the principle of commercial restrictions the other. If one white man, or if fifty, or if two hundred, may own all the soil of the slave States, what becomes of the colored man's right to freedom in the land of his birth, for which Abolitionists have so long contended? And if, in addition to this, the government may restrict commercial intercourse by a tariff, then it may prohibit, and not merely cripple, the commercial intercourse of the laboring population with the rest of the world, and render labor unavailing for its great ends. The mockery of a nominal self-ownership is all that then stands between them and their re-enslavement, in case they had been previously enfranchised. This very position, according to the most reliable information, is already coming to be recognized as the present lot of the lately emancipated slaves in the British West Indies.

"THE BIBLE vs. CLASS LEGISLATION.

"Those who draw nice moral distinctions between different modes of oppression—who insist that no moral question is involved in any of the class legislations and monopolies of modern times, except chattel enslavement, and who therefore insist on our confining our political action to that one form of oppression alone, proclaiming our neutrality in respect to all others, must find some other code of morals than that found in the Bible, for the guidance of their conduct. Very little of what is there said against oppression, against oppressive governments, of the duty of the people and of their rulers to execute judgment and deliver the spoiled out of the hands of the oppressor, to cry aloud and spare not, to undo the heavy burdens—very little of all this language was originally uttered in direct reference to chattel enslavement, in the modern sense of the term.

"It was directed against minor oppressions, such as those that we are now invited to pass over without noticing, to be neutral about, nay, to support, by the bestowment of our votes upon their apologists and advocates! When our Savior upbraided the Pharisees with binding heavy burdens, grievous to be borne, laying them on mens' shoulders, and not touching them with one of their fingers, he made no direct and immediate allusion to chattel enslavement. Of that degree of barbarity they could not be charged, for they held no slaves, and voted for no slaveholders. Such a climax of impiety they never reached. They only devoured the houses of the widows, not the widows themselves. They resembled those who, according to some of our modern teachers, only take away their clothing from the poor, depriving them of comfortable shelter from the cold, and who, therefore, are to be let alone, in consideration of the fact that the 'cloak is of less value than the man,' and under the motto of 'the man first and the cloak afterwards!' Was there, therefore, no moral principle involved? Are we indeed to proclaim impunity to the plunderers of cloaks, the stealers of sheep, and the mere robbers of the poor, because there are men thieves yet in the land? Or shall we not rather claim 'the man and his cloak!—the cloak because of the man that must suffer without it?' The humanity that begins by yielding up to the robber the poor man's cloak as a price of the robber's co-operation against the man-stealer, will be likely to end in a compromise with the man-thief himself, for a fleece of wool. The experiment has proved it so in our own land. He only who is faithful in the LEAST can be trusted in MUCH; while he who, when he saw a cloak-thief, consented with him, is in a fair way to become an accomplice of man-thieves, in the end.

"The terrible overthrow of Pharaoh and his hosts in the Red Sea, was not for the sin of chattel enslavement. The Hebrews were never held as chattels. They were never forbidden to marry or to read. Their families were never separated by sale, like brute beasts. Yet they were grievously oppressed. A land monopoly had perpetuated the right of the soil in the royal family of the reigning dynasty.—An onerous tax upon the province of Goshen, payable in brick (and for 'revenue purposes' and 'internal improvements' doubtless) had been imposed and levied, about as burdensome, we may suppose, as that similar tax, payable in coffee (the almost entire product of the island) which the Dutch Government of India now levies upon the natives of Java—'a mere financial measure,' of course! [A 'mere question of dollars and cents!' as the slave question is with the slaveholders!] To this was added at length, a prohibition (by tariff or otherwise) of the necessary supplies of straw for the brick makers! The whole effect of these measures combined, including the limited and temporary slaughter of the Hebrew male children, must have been less terrible than the oppressions of the British Government in famishing Ireland; for, at the termination of their bondage, the Hebrews, so far from being in a starving condition, like the people of Ireland, or penniless, like the tariff-scourged operatives of Manchester, Birmingham and some districts already, even of our own country, were rich in the possession of flocks and herds!

"But in the oppression of the Hebrews in Egypt, was there 'no moral principle involved' because it was 'a mere measure of political economy and of finance?' So Moses and Aaron, as well as Pharaoh and his statesmen, might have concluded, had they been privileged to listen confidingly to our modern teachers, who could have instructed them that the heaven-imposed duty of delivering the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor was all comprised in the 'one idea' of securing them from chattel enslavement! The mystery of Pharaoh's hardening his heart, were readily solved, might we suppose him to have listened to such teachings! The terrible overthrow of that great financier and political economist, with the deluded people who supported him, the Bible records as a striking specimen of the divine displeasure against oppressive governments, and those who voluntarily support them in their oppressions. The 'one idea' it inculcates in respect to this subject is 'total abstinence' from all forms of oppression, the immediate abolition of all enactments sustaining them.

"ALL DUTIES ALIKE OBLIGATORY.

"This notion that men have a moral right to select one field of moral, religious or benevolent effort, and on the ground of their activity in that department, withdraw themselves from open public sympathy and co-operation in other fields of moral, religious or benevolent effort—that they may be neutral in respect to the existence of one class of moral evils, because they have concluded it best to expend all their energies against another class of moral evils, is one of the most subtle, delusive and mischievous of all the devices of the Arch Tempter. All men imagine they are discharging some of their duties, and most men think they are very faithful in the dis-

"Similar remarks might be made concerning man's right to occupy a portion of the earth's surface, and the consequent unrighteousness of the legislation and the arrangements by which that original and fundamental law of nature and of nature's God, is contemptuously set aside. To talk of man's inalienable right to self-ownership, without the right to the products of his own skill and industry—to talk of his right to those products without the right to exchange or sell them, wherever he can find the best market—to talk of a man's right to self-ownership without a right to an inch of the earth's soil, without a right to be in the world where he was born, is to talk self-contradiction and nonsense. Whoever succeeds in proving that the legal sanction of an unlimited land monopoly, and that commercial restrictions, are morally right, will have done more than the slaveholders and their apologists have ever yet been able to do, towards proving that chattel enslavement is not essentially and inherently wicked. That man's claim to the right of self-ownership must be in a sad predicament, who has neither a right to be nor to do—to exercise his faculties or to occupy space! The principle of illimitable land ownership, if admitted, covers the one predicament—the principle of commercial restrictions the other. If one white man, or if fifty, or if two hundred, may own all the soil of the slave States, what becomes of the colored man's right to freedom in the land of his birth, for which Abolitionists have so long contended? And if, in addition to this, the government may restrict commercial intercourse by a tariff, then it may prohibit, and not merely cripple, the commercial intercourse of the laboring population with the rest of the world, and render labor unavailing for its great ends. The mockery of a nominal self-ownership is all that then stands between them and their re-enslavement, in case they had been previously enfranchised. This very position, according to the most reliable information, is already coming to be recognized as the present lot of the lately emancipated slaves in the British West Indies.

"THE BIBLE vs. CLASS LEGISLATION.

"Those who draw nice moral distinctions between different modes of oppression—who insist that no moral question is involved in any of the class legislations and monopolies of modern times, except chattel enslavement, and who therefore insist on our confining our political action to that one form of oppression alone, proclaiming our neutrality in respect to all others, must find some other code of morals than that found in the Bible, for the guidance of their conduct. Very little of what is there said against oppression, against oppressive governments, of the duty of the people and of their rulers to execute judgment and deliver the spoiled out of the hands of the oppressor, to cry aloud and spare not, to undo the heavy burdens—very little of all this language was originally uttered in direct reference to chattel enslavement, in the modern sense of the term.

"It was directed against minor oppressions, such as those that we are now invited to pass over without noticing, to be neutral about, nay, to support, by the bestowment of our votes upon their apologists and advocates! When our Savior upbraided the Pharisees with binding heavy burdens, grievous to be borne, laying them on mens' shoulders, and not touching them with one of their fingers, he made no direct and immediate allusion to chattel enslavement. Of that degree of barbarity they could not be charged, for they held no slaves, and voted for no slaveholders. Such a climax of impiety they never reached. They only devoured the houses of the widows, not the widows themselves. They resembled those who, according to some of our modern teachers, only take away their clothing from the poor, depriving them of comfortable shelter from the cold, and who, therefore, are to be let alone, in consideration of the fact that the 'cloak is of less value than the man,' and under the motto of 'the man first and the cloak afterwards!' Was there, therefore, no moral principle involved? Are we indeed to proclaim impunity to the plunderers of cloaks, the stealers of sheep, and the mere robbers of the poor, because there are men thieves yet in the land? Or shall we not rather claim 'the man and his cloak!—the cloak because of the man that must suffer without it!' The humanity that begins by yielding up to the robber the poor man's cloak as a price of the robber's co-operation against the man-stealer, will be likely to end in a compromise with the man-thief himself, for a fleece of wool. The experiment has proved it so in our own land! He only who is faithful in the LEAST can be trusted in MUCH; while he who, when he saw a cloak-thief, consented with him, is in a fair way to become an accomplice of man-thieves, in the end.

"The terrible overthrow of Pharaoh and his hosts in the Red Sea, was not for the sin of chattel enslavement. The Hebrews were never held as chattels. They were never forbidden to marry or to read. Their families were never separated by sale, like brute beasts. Yet they were grievously oppressed. A land monopoly had perpetuated the right of the soil in the royal family of the reigning dynasty.—An onerous tax upon the province of Goshen, payable in brick (and for 'revenue purposes' and 'internal improvements' doubtless) had been imposed and levied, about as burdensome, we may suppose, as that similar tax, payable in coffee (the almost entire product of the island) which the Dutch Government of India now levies upon the natives of Java—'a mere financial measure,' of course! [A 'mere question of dollars and cents!' as the slave question is with the slaveholders!] To this was added at length, a prohibition (by tariff or otherwise) of the necessary supplies of straw for the brick makers! The whole effect of these measures combined, including the limited and temporary slaughter of the Hebrew male children, must have been less terrible than the oppressions of the British Government in famishing Ireland; for, at the termination of their bondage, the Hebrews, so far from being in a starving condition, like the people of Ireland, or penniless, like the tariff-scourged operatives of Manchester, Birmingham and some districts already, even of our own country, were rich in the possession of flocks and herds!

"But in the oppression of the Hebrews in Egypt, was there 'no moral principle involved' because it was 'a mere measure of political economy and of finance?' So Moses and Aaron, as well as Pharaoh and his statesmen, might have concluded, had they been privileged to listen confidingly to our modern teachers, who could have instructed them that the heaven-imposed duty of delivering the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor was all comprised in the 'one idea' of securing them from chattel enslavement! The mystery of Pharaoh's hardening his heart, were readily solved, might we suppose him to have listened to such teachings! The terrible overthrow of that great financier and political economist, with the deluded people who supported him, the Bible records as a striking specimen of the divine displeasure against oppressive governments, and those who voluntarily support them in their oppressions. The 'one idea' it inculcates in respect to this subject is 'total abstinence' from all forms of oppression, the immediate abolition of all enactments sustaining them.

"ALL DUTIES ALIKE OBLIGATORY.

"This notion that men have a moral right to select one field of moral, religious or benevolent effort, and on the ground of their activity in that department, withdraw themselves from open public sympathy and co-operation in other fields of moral, religious or benevolent effort—that they may be neutral in respect to the existence of one class of moral evils, because they have concluded it best to expend all their energies against another class of moral evils, is one of the most subtle, delusive and mischievous of all the devices of the Arch Tempter. All men imagine they are discharging some of their duties, and most men think they are very faithful in the discharge of the duties they have selected as the most incumbent upon them, in the position they occupy. To take care of himself and his family, is the grand idea of duty with the sordid wordling. When other duties to God and mankind, growing out of other relations, are urged upon his attention, he is too much engrossed with his 'one idea,' to give heed. One man is very earnest against prodigality—that is his 'one idea,'—do not ask him to beware of penuriousness. Another is absorbed with the 'one idea' of generosity—do not expect the virtue of frugality in him.

"Highway robbers have plumed themselves on their almsgiving, and the man that bolts his door upon the houseless, thanks God that he has never defrauded any one. The very worst of men have selected something good, in which they may glory, and few are so abandoned as not to congratulate themselves that they are not so bad as some others. Precisely upon this principle the slaveholder claims the praise of hospitality and other kindred virtues, and bids defiance to the reprovers of his injustice.

"The Missionary Board is absorbed in its 'one idea' of sending the gospel to the heathen; the Bible Society with supplying the world with Bibles; each has staked out his ground. Do not ask them to CONSIDER WHAT THE GOSPEL IS, OR HOW OR BY WHOM IT IS TO BE TAUGHT—NOR WHERE THE HEATHEN ARE TO BE FOUND—nor whether slaves are to be furnished with Bibles or no. The Moral Reform Society is occupied with the seventh commandment; do not ask its attention to the eighth—nor point its lecturers and writers to the great national brothel of slavery. It cannot turn aside from its great 'one idea' of moral purity, to inquire how it is violated. The man who devotes his time to the Temperance Society, in like manner imagines it will not do for him to espouse the cause of the enslaved, lest he should forfeit his influence in the temperance cause. The ministry must 'know nothing but Christ and him crucified;' do not inquire of them what was Christ's mission on the earth, nor how he fulfilled it—how he treated oppressors, or how he was treated by them.—The church must promote religion, and cannot stop to define what pure and undefiled religion is.

"All this comes of an imaginary devotedness to some great 'one idea,' without understanding distinctly and fully what that idea is—how much it includes, and with what it is indissolubly allied.—Political activity follows in the same track, and builds, unceasingly, and every where, its forever unbuilt edifice, by laying its 'stones of emptiness' and 'stretching out upon it the line of confusion.'—One party has its 'one idea' of this measure—another of that—but none of them embracing the 'one idea' of a just government. One has its one idea of white men's liberty, another its one idea of colored men's enfranchisement—some are for removing one evil and another another, but none are for removing all, and, consequently, all continue to receive the support of the majority, and none are removed!

"MORALITY OF 'ONE IDEAISM.'

"It is appalling to witness the inroads made upon the consciences and moral sensibilities of men, by the operation of the 'one idea' theory, as it is commonly understood and applied. 'As a Missionary Board,' it seems, we can take no cognizance of God's commandments, out of the area that we have staked out for ourselves and occupied! 'As temperance men,' we can look no farther than 'our pledge,' whatever it may be, in avoiding and opposing intemperance! To our 'Anti-Slavery platform,' we must welcome every body that cries out lustily against chattel slavery, wordwise, tho', at the very next opportunity, the orator may cast his vote for a slaveholder, or for a slaveholder's advocate, and may lend his aid to any other system of oppression, without forfeiting his reputation for a 'great moral reformer.' As 'Liberty party men,' we have no right to inquire further concerning a proposed candidate for civil office than whether he can pronounce the shibboleth of 'immediate emancipation.' Whatever moral duty or divine precept is urged upon our attention, we have only to ensconce ourselves within the narrow limits of our 'one idea,' whatever it may be—we have only to say that the distinctive object of our favorite society or organization, or political party, did not include that particular duty or precept, and we make a merit of casting it to the winds! Just as though we expected to be judged, at the last final award, as members of a Missionary Board, or of a Temperance Society, or of an Anti-Slavery society, or of a Liberty party, and not rather AS MEN, with all the relations, responsibilities and duties of MEN, attaching to us, not in virtue of our own compacts, and pledges, and organizations, and platforms, all of our own devising, but in consequence of our moral natures, and of the relations which, so long as we remain men, we are obliged, whether we desire it or not, to sustain!

"The British Government that abolished chattel slavery in the West Indies is starving the people of Ireland, is crushing the operatives of Birmingham, is enforcing upon dissenters in England the payment of church tithes, is excluding large masses of the people from the right of suffrage, is building up a bloated aristocracy, is grinding the faces of the poor, is consenting to the oppression, by tariffs, of the lately emancipated West India negroes, is lending its aid to the importation of East India coolies to compete with them, and reduce still lower their wages, entailing hopeless destitution upon both negroes and coolies, thus reviving, though without chattelhood, the closest possible resemblance to the slave trade!

"When called upon to define the 'one idea' to which we would render homage, we say that the great, all-comprehensive idea, with us, is the idea of pursuing, steadfastly and undeviatingly, wherever they are revealed to us, the TRUE and the RIGHT. In the department of Civil Government and of political responsibility, it takes the form of 'THE PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS.' This one idea we would honor by the prompt, impartial and uniform application of it to all classes of men, and the redress of all the wrongs of which Civil Government may take cognizance. With moral principle for our foundation and our polar star, we hope to shape our measures in accordance with them, desiring no other policy than adherence to the right.

"And let us be distinctly understood. To no men, or class of men, upon any unprincipled basis of 'log rolling,' have we any offers to make—nor can we receive any. But to all men, and to all classes of men, who have any real wrongs to be addressed, or threatened rights to be secured, we tender, now, and henceforward, whatever of open handed and hones aid we can impart. We ask not who they are that are wronged—how few, how many—how popular, how unpopular—how rich, how poor—how black, how white—how orthodox, how heterodox—whether they vote with our party or vote against it, or not at all, but simply whether they are WRONGED, what redress justice requires—what security the case needs."

☞ We can only make room for the following paragraph of Mr. Smith's letter, expressing his wish not to be made a candidate for the Presidency:—

"I would have our army, navy, and whole military system, broken up; and, by an example so impressive and controlling, have all nations persuaded that it is high time for men to cease to be wolves and tigers; and high time for them to spread over this blood-stained earth the peace of heaven, in exchange for the wars of hell.

"Although opposed to wars, I would have government prompt to put down and punish mobs and insurrections. In those cases, where the insurrections consist in the rising of oppressors to conquer the every where rightful attempt of the oppressed to regain their liberty, I would have the punishment of the insurgents so signal and effeccharge of the duties they have selected as the most incumbent upon them, in the position they occupy. To take care of himself and his family, is the grand idea of duty with the sordid wordling. When other duties to God and mankind, growing out of other relations, are urged upon his attention, he is too much engrossed with his 'one idea,' to give heed. One man is very earnest against prodigality—that is his 'one idea,'—do not ask him to beware of penuriousness. Another is absorbed with the 'one idea' of generosity—do not expect the virtue of frugality in him.

"Highway robbers have plumed themselves on their almsgiving, and the man that bolts his door upon the houseless, thanks God that he has never defrauded any one. The very worst of men have selected something good, in which they may glory, and few are so abandoned as not to congratulate themselves that they are not so bad as some others. Precisely upon this principle the slaveholder claims the praise of hospitality and other kindred virtues, and bids defiance to the reprovers of his injustice.

"The Missionary Board is absorbed in its 'one idea' of sending the gospel to the heathen; the Bible Society with supplying the world with Bibles; each has staked out his ground. Do not ask them to CONSIDER WHAT THE GOSPEL IS, OR HOW OR BY WHOM IT IS TO BE TAUGHT—NOR WHERE THE HEATHEN ARE TO BE FOUND—nor whether slaves are to be furnished with Bibles or no. The Moral Reform Society is occupied with the seventh commandment; do not ask its attention to the eighth—nor point its lecturers and writers to the great national brothel of slavery. It cannot turn aside from its great 'one idea' of moral purity, to inquire how it is violated. The man who devotes his time to the Temperance Society, in like manner imagines it will not do for him to espouse the cause of the enslaved, lest he should forfeit his influence in the temperance cause. The ministry must 'know nothing but Christ and him crucified;' do not inquire of them what was Christ's mission on the earth, nor how he fulfilled it—how he treated oppressors, or how he was treated by them.—The church must promote religion, and cannot stop to define what pure and undefiled religion is.

"All this comes of an imaginary devotedness to some great 'one idea,' without understanding distinctly and fully what that idea is—how much it includes, and with what it is indissolubly allied.—Political activity follows in the same track, and builds, unceasingly, and every where, its forever unbuilt edifice, by laying its 'stones of emptiness' and 'stretching out upon it the line of confusion.'—One party has its 'one idea' of this measure—another of that—but none of them embracing the 'one idea' of a just government. One has its one idea of white men's liberty, another its one idea of colored men's enfranchisement—some are for removing one evil and another another, but none are for removing all, and, consequently, all continue to receive the support of the majority, and none are removed!

"MORALITY OF 'ONE IDEAISM.'

"It is appalling to witness the inroads made upon the consciences and moral sensibilities of men, by the operation of the 'one idea' theory, as it is commonly understood and applied. 'As a Missionary Board,' it seems, we can take no cognizance of God's commandments, out of the area that we have staked out for ourselves and occupied! 'As temperance men,' we can look no farther than 'our pledge,' whatever it may be, in avoiding and opposing intemperance! To our 'Anti-Slavery platform,' we must welcome every body that cries out lustily against chattel slavery, wordwise, tho', at the very next opportunity, the orator may cast his vote for a slaveholder, or for a slaveholder's advocate, and may lend his aid to any other system of oppression, without forfeiting his reputation for a 'great moral reformer.' As 'Liberty party men,' we have no right to inquire further concerning a proposed candidate for civil office than whether he can pronounce the shibboleth of 'immediate emancipation.' Whatever moral duty or divine precept is urged upon our attention, we have only to ensconce ourselves within the narrow limits of our 'one idea,' whatever it may be—we have only to say that the distinctive object of our favorite society or organization, or political party, did not include that particular duty or precept, and we make a merit of casting it to the winds! Just as though we expected to be judged, at the last final award, as members of a Missionary Board, or of a Temperance Society, or of an Anti-Slavery society, or of a Liberty party, and not rather AS MEN, with all the relations, responsibilities and duties of MEN, attaching to us, not in virtue of our own compacts, and pledges, and organizations, and platforms, all of our own devising, but in consequence of our moral natures, and of the relations which, so long as we remain men, we are obliged, whether we desire it or not, to sustain!

"The British Government that abolished chattel slavery in the West Indies is starving the people of Ireland, is crushing the operatives of Birmingham, is enforcing upon dissenters in England the payment of church tithes, is excluding large masses of the people from the right of suffrage, is building up a bloated aristocracy, is grinding the faces of the poor, is consenting to the oppression, by tariffs, of the lately emancipated West India negroes, is lending its aid to the importation of East India coolies to compete with them, and reduce still lower their wages, entailing hopeless destitution upon both negroes and coolies, thus reviving, though without chattelhood, the closest possible resemblance to the slave trade!

"When called upon to define the 'one idea' to which we would render homage, we say that the great, all-comprehensive idea, with us, is the idea of pursuing, steadfastly and undeviatingly, wherever they are revealed to us, the TRUE and the RIGHT. In the department of Civil Government and of political responsibility, it takes the form of 'THE PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS.' This one idea we would honor by the prompt, impartial and uniform application of it to all classes of men, and the redress of all the wrongs of which Civil Government may take cognizance. With moral principle for our foundation and our polar star, we hope to shape our measures in accordance with them, desiring no other policy than adherence to the right.

"And let us be distinctly understood. To no men, or class of men, upon any unprincipled basis of 'log rolling,' have we any offers to make—nor can we receive any. But to all men, and to all classes of men, who have any real wrongs to be addressed, or threatened rights to be secured, we tender, now, and henceforward, whatever of open handed and hones aid we can impart. We ask not who they are that are wronged—how few, how many—how popular, how unpopular—how rich, how poor—how black, how white—how orthodox, how heterodox—whether they vote with our party or vote against it, or not at all, but simply whether they are WRONGED, what redress justice requires—what security the case needs."

☞ We can only make room for the following paragraph of Mr. Smith's letter, expressing his wish not to be made a candidate for the Presidency:—

"I would have our army, navy, and whole military system, broken up; and, by an example so impressive and controlling, have all nations persuaded that it is high time for men to cease to be wolves and tigers; and high time for them to spread over this blood-stained earth the peace of heaven, in exchange for the wars of hell.

"Although opposed to wars, I would have government prompt to put down and punish mobs and insurrections. In those cases, where the insurrections consist in the rising of oppressors to conquer the every where rightful attempt of the oppressed to regain their liberty, I would have the punishment of the insurgents so signal and effectual, that, instead of being disposed to repeat their crime, they would be glad to let the oppressed go free.

"Land monopoly, whether on the part of the government or of individuals, I would disfavor. Hence, I would have the public lands thrown open to actual settlers, free of cost. I would add, under this head, that every man's home should be inalienable, except with his own consent.

"Finally, were I President of the United States, I would act upon the never-to-be-shaken conviction that 'RIGHTEOUSNESS EXALTETH A NATION;' and that this nation, now in a 'galloping consumption,' because of its unrighteousness, can be saved only by its speedy return to righteousness. The profane, unprincipled and base, I would, therefore, to my utmost ability, thrust out, and keep out, of places of power and trust.

"May God hasten that truly 'good time,' when the chief magistrate of every nation shall have a heart to say, in the words of the chief magistrate of Israel:—

"'I WILL NOT KNOW A WICKED PERSON. MINE EYE SHALL BE UPON THE FAITHFUL OF THE LAND, THAT THEY MAY DWELL WITH ME; HE THAT WALKETH IN A PERFECT WAY, HE SHALL SERVE ME.'

GERRIT SMITH."

(Continued from page 99.)

upon line, here a little and there a little," and that too when he gathers Israel and Judah, as I have found above and is quoted below:—

"In that day shall the Lord of hosts be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty, unto the residue of his people, And for a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and for strength to them that turn the battle to the gate. But they also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way; the priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink, they are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in judgment. For all tables are full of vomit and filthiness, so that there is no place clean. Whom shall he teach knowlege? and whom shall he make to understand doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts. For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept: line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little: For with stammering lips & another tongue will he speak to this people. To whom he said, This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear. But the word of the Lord was unto them, precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken. Wherefore hear the word of the Lord, ye scornful men, that rule this people which is in Jerusalem. Because ye have said, We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us: for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste. Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place.—And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it. For the time that it goeth forth it shall take you: for morning by morning shall it pass over, by day and by night: and it shall be a vexation only to understand the report. For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it: and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it. For the Lord shall rise up as in mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act. Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong: for I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth." Isa. xxviii. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22.

And what is all this for, says one? The next quotation will tell you:—

"But fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel; for, behold, I will save thee from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid. Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the Lord; for I am with thee: for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee; but I will not make a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure: yet will I not leave thee wholly unpunished." Jer. xlvi. 27, 28.

Ye sectarian perverters of the Bible, with all this before you, you had better look about yourselves; for if the Bible is true, your case is a desperate one. The following passages are of like nature and force of Rev. 22d chapter, 18th and 19th verses:—

"Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you." Deut. iv. 2.

"Every word of God is pure: he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him. Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar." Prov. xxx. 5, 6.

From Moses until Solomon (the authorities of these passages) we have some 450 years, in which we have Samuel, David and other prophets giving us the word of the Lord, in which time God has "added" to the words given through Moses as he pleased. From Solomon until John the Revelator we have 1,100 years, in which time we have more than twenty prophets giving the word of the Lord, and "adding" other words of God besides those given by either Moses or Solomon—Jesus and his apostles in the number.—No doubt the Jews put Jesus to death on the strength of their perverted understanding of the law of Moses given in Deut. 13th chap. 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th and 5th verses and the passages before quoted, the same as this generation are treating the prophets and apostles of this dispensation, in which God has "set his hand the second time to gather Israel and Judah, and reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth."

JOHN E. PAGE.

MR. EDITOR,—SIR:—Brother P. B. Barter, of Chicago, Ill., writes to his step-son Alpheus Lawrence, of Voree, as follows:—

"Strangism is gaining, whilst the Twelveites (Brighamites) are dwindling away. Mr. Rice has left them, and Mrs. Andrews has got sick of them. And I believe that brother Page has done more good here than all the rest that have been here for three years.—Most of the saints will be to Conference the 6th of Oct. next.

August 6th, 1848."

Sister A. Andrews writes on the same sheet to the same effect, and confesses that when my brother F. Page and myself were there in June last she "was hard hearted and prejudiced against the truth," but now she says, "I shall be happy to meet them (the saints) in Zion (Voree) and embrace the truth." If we did do good in the salvation of any, not unto us but to God be ascribed all the glory forever. The Lord can strike straight blows with crooked sticks, (frail men,) but the word of God, the "stick of Judah," (the Bible,) and the "stick of Joseph in the hands of Ephraim," (the Book of Mormon,) are straight sticks and are mighty, and will prevail over every honest self-denying heart. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the law of the church, is as sure to obliterate Brighamism as it is a book, and the word of God to Pres. J. Smith for the discipline of the church of this last "dispensation of the fullness of times."

JOHN E. PAGE.

tual, that, instead of being disposed to repeat their crime, they would be glad to let the oppressed go free.

"Land monopoly, whether on the part of the government or of individuals, I would disfavor. Hence, I would have the public lands thrown open to actual settlers, free of cost. I would add, under this head, that every man's home should be inalienable, except with his own consent.

"Finally, were I President of the United States, I would act upon the never-to-be-shaken conviction that 'RIGHTEOUSNESS EXALTETH A NATION;' and that this nation, now in a 'galloping consumption,' because of its unrighteousness, can be saved only by its speedy return to righteousness. The profane, unprincipled and base, I would, therefore, to my utmost ability, thrust out, and keep out, of places of power and trust.

"May God hasten that truly 'good time,' when the chief magistrate of every nation shall have a heart to say, in the words of the chief magistrate of Israel:—

"'I WILL NOT KNOW A WICKED PERSON. MINE EYE SHALL BE UPON THE FAITHFUL OF THE LAND, THAT THEY MAY DWELL WITH ME; HE THAT WALKETH IN A PERFECT WAY, HE SHALL SERVE ME.'

GERRIT SMITH."

(Continued from page 99.)

upon line, here a little and there a little," and that too when he gathers Israel and Judah, as I have found above and is quoted below:—

"In that day shall the Lord of hosts be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty, unto the residue of his people, And for a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and for strength to them that turn the battle to the gate. But they also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way; the priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink, they are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in judgment. For all tables are full of vomit and filthiness, so that there is no place clean. Whom shall he teach knowlege? and whom shall he make to understand doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts. For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept: line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little: For with stammering lips & another tongue will he speak to this people. To whom he said, This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear. But the word of the Lord was unto them, precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little; that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken. Wherefore hear the word of the Lord, ye scornful men, that rule this people which is in Jerusalem. Because ye have said, We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us: for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste. Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place.—And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it. For the time that it goeth forth it shall take you: for morning by morning shall it pass over, by day and by night: and it shall be a vexation only to understand the report. For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it: and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it. For the Lord shall rise up as in mount Perazim, he shall be wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that he may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act. Now therefore be ye not mockers, lest your bands be made strong: for I have heard from the Lord God of hosts a consumption, even determined upon the whole earth." Isa. xxviii. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22.

And what is all this for, says one? The next quotation will tell you:—

"But fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel; for, behold, I will save thee from afar off, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and be in rest and at ease, and none shall make him afraid. Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the Lord; for I am with thee: for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee; but I will not make a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure: yet will I not leave thee wholly unpunished." Jer. xlvi. 27, 28.

Ye sectarian perverters of the Bible, with all this before you, you had better look about yourselves; for if the Bible is true, your case is a desperate one. The following passages are of like nature and force of Rev. 22d chapter, 18th and 19th verses:—

"Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you." Deut. iv. 2.

"Every word of God is pure: he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him. Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar." Prov. xxx. 5, 6.

From Moses until Solomon (the authorities of these passages) we have some 450 years, in which we have Samuel, David and other prophets giving us the word of the Lord, in which time God has "added" to the words given through Moses as he pleased. From Solomon until John the Revelator we have 1,100 years, in which time we have more than twenty prophets giving the word of the Lord, and "adding" other words of God besides those given by either Moses or Solomon—Jesus and his apostles in the number.—No doubt the Jews put Jesus to death on the strength of their perverted understanding of the law of Moses given in Deut. 13th chap. 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th and 5th verses and the passages before quoted, the same as this generation are treating the prophets and apostles of this dispensation, in which God has "set his hand the second time to gather Israel and Judah, and reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth."

JOHN E. PAGE.

MR. EDITOR,—SIR:—Brother P. B. Barter, of Chicago, Ill., writes to his step-son Alpheus Lawrence, of Voree, as follows:—

"Strangism is gaining, whilst the Twelveites (Brighamites) are dwindling away. Mr. Rice has left them, and Mrs. Andrews has got sick of them. And I believe that brother Page has done more good here than all the rest that have been here for three years.—Most of the saints will be to Conference the 6th of Oct. next.

August 6th, 1848."

Sister A. Andrews writes on the same sheet to the same effect, and confesses that when my brother F. Page and myself were there in June last she "was hard hearted and prejudiced against the truth," but now she says, "I shall be happy to meet them (the saints) in Zion (Voree) and embrace the truth." If we did do good in the salvation of any, not unto us but to God be ascribed all the glory forever. The Lord can strike straight blows with crooked sticks, (frail men,) but the word of God, the "stick of Judah," (the Bible,) and the "stick of Joseph in the hands of Ephraim," (the Book of Mormon,) are straight sticks and are mighty, and will prevail over every honest self-denying heart. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants, the law of the church, is as sure to obliterate Brighamism as it is a book, and the word of God to Pres. J. Smith for the discipline of the church of this last "dispensation of the fullness of times."

JOHN E. PAGE.

JOSEPH SMITH WAS A PROPHET.

MR. EDITOR,—Permit me to present to your numerous readers a few extracts from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, containing the revelations of God to Joseph Smith, in which the wars of our own country and foreign nations are foretold. It may serve to induce some untrammeled truth seeking soul to further investigate the principles of our faith as a church. On the sixth day of April, 1830, Joseph Smith and five other persons were organized as a religious body, and Joseph Smith was acknowledged to be a Prophet, Revelator, Translator and Seer of the Most High God to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. In the next Jan. following the prophet Smith gave out to the church and the world by revelation the following words: "There will soon be great wars in far countries." D. & C. sec. xii. p. 6. "Behold I (God) say unto you, they are nigh, even at your doors, and not many years hence ye shall hear of WARS in your OWN LANDS." D. & C. sec. xv. p. 11. Comment is unnecessary. The late war with Mexico and the present wars in far countries fully demonstrate the truth of the above revelations.

"I the Lord am angry with the wicked; I am holding my spirit from the inhabitants of the earth. I have sworn in my wrath and decreed wars upon the face of the earth, and the wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man, and the saints also shall hardly escape: nevertheless, I the Lord am with them, and will come down in heaven from the presence of my Father, and consume the wicked with unquenchable fire. And, behold, this is not yet, but by and by; wherefore, seeing that I the Lord have decreed all these things upon the face of the earth, I willeth that my saints should be assembled upon the land of Zion; and that every man should take righteousness in his hands, and faithfulness upon his loins, and lift a warning voice unto the inhabitants of the earth, and declare both by word and by flight that desolation shall come upon the wicked." D. & C. sec. xx. p. 9.

Ye saints of God, how stands the case with you? Are you seeking to assemble yourselves upon the land of Zion? Are you warning the inhabitants according to the above commandments, "both by word and by flight that desolation shall come upon the wicked?"—Or are your interests in these things become dormant, and your love of God and his truth waxing cold BECAUSE INIQUITY IS ABOUNDING, and BROTHER IS BETRAYING BROTHER TO DEATH? I exhort you to bestir yourselves for the good and safety of yourselves and YOUR LITTLE ONES. The seeds of terrible and awful destruction are now vegetating in our political horizon. A hint to the righteously wise is sufficient, for they can understand, but none of the wicked shall understand except they repent, but like the Jews at the destruction of Jerusalem they will plot their own overthrow, curse God and die wallowing in their own blood.

JOHN E. PAGE.

"THE BARNBURNER," published at No. 18 Nassau st., New York, Wm. J. Tenney editor, is the leading campaign paper of the free territory party. We do not know the terms. But a dollar sent to that direction would doubtless fetch a good store of political reading to those who like that sort. It is well to read, but again we advise the saints to take no part in elections. They talk of freedom, but God only can give us deliverance. It is well to advocate the right, but who has protected the right of the saints? Not one.—No party. Never.

☞ Letters intended for Voree should not be directed to Burlington. They are very sure to be miscarried. Direct to "Voree, Wisconsin."

BEAR WITH ONE ANOTHER.—Paul says, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." I will add, bear ye each other's weaknesses, and so show yourselves saints and men of fortitude, that are not discouraged at trifles. Remember, the church of God is a great moral hospital, in which mankind are to be healed of their constitutional and moral infirmities, weaknesses and disabilities. It is often a manifest weakness in one to take offence or be offended with the weakness of another. Soundness of moral fortitude is one of the noble principles of manhood. He that is destitute of it is not fit to be a king or priest in the kingdom of God.

J. E. PAGE.

GOLD AND SILVER.—It is stated in Jacobs' essay on the precious metals, that in the ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeli, which were destroyed by an eruption of Vesuvius, more than seventeen centuries ago, no ornaments of gold and silver have been found. In some of the houses of Pompeii skeletons of the inhabitants have been discovered—in all, domestic utensils, and personal ornaments—but those for which in the present day, the precious metals are almost exclusively adopted by the middle class of persons, are composed of iron or brass. If gold and silver had been in the dwellings of the inhabitants at the time the eruption took place, they would be found there at the present time, as the iron and bronze have been, of which their spoons and forks were made, and which have retained their shape after the lapse of so many years.—Ex. paper.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

IN ATTACHMENT.

James A. Stevens and Andrew Sawyer, vs. David Patten. } In Justices Court, before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P.

NOTICE is hereby given to the above named defendant that a writ of attachment has been issued against him in the above entitled suit, and his property attached to satisfy the demand of the above named plaintiffs; and unless he appear before the above named Justice at his office in Hudson in the county of Walworth and State of Wisconsin, on the 26th day of August, 1848, at one o'clock, P. M., judgment will be rendered against him, and his property sold to pay the debt of the plaintiffs.

JAMES A. STEVENS.
ANDREW SAWYER.

July 22d, 1848. 21u.

JOSEPH SMITH WAS A PROPHET.

MR. EDITOR,—Permit me to present to your numerous readers a few extracts from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, containing the revelations of God to Joseph Smith, in which the wars of our own country and foreign nations are foretold. It may serve to induce some untrammeled truth seeking soul to further investigate the principles of our faith as a church. On the sixth day of April, 1830, Joseph Smith and five other persons were organized as a religious body, and Joseph Smith was acknowledged to be a Prophet, Revelator, Translator and Seer of the Most High God to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. In the next Jan. following the prophet Smith gave out to the church and the world by revelation the following words: "There will soon be great wars in far countries." D. & C. sec. xii. p. 6. "Behold I (God) say unto you, they are nigh, even at your doors, and not many years hence ye shall hear of WARS in your OWN LANDS." D. & C. sec. xv. p. 11. Comment is unnecessary. The late war with Mexico and the present wars in far countries fully demonstrate the truth of the above revelations.

"I the Lord am angry with the wicked; I am holding my spirit from the inhabitants of the earth. I have sworn in my wrath and decreed wars upon the face of the earth, and the wicked shall slay the wicked, and fear shall come upon every man, and the saints also shall hardly escape: nevertheless, I the Lord am with them, and will come down in heaven from the presence of my Father, and consume the wicked with unquenchable fire. And, behold, this is not yet, but by and by; wherefore, seeing that I the Lord have decreed all these things upon the face of the earth, I willeth that my saints should be assembled upon the land of Zion; and that every man should take righteousness in his hands, and faithfulness upon his loins, and lift a warning voice unto the inhabitants of the earth, and declare both by word and by flight that desolation shall come upon the wicked." D. & C. sec. xx. p. 9.

Ye saints of God, how stands the case with you? Are you seeking to assemble yourselves upon the land of Zion? Are you warning the inhabitants according to the above commandments, "both by word and by flight that desolation shall come upon the wicked?"—Or are your interests in these things become dormant, and your love of God and his truth waxing cold BECAUSE INIQUITY IS ABOUNDING, and BROTHER IS BETRAYING BROTHER TO DEATH? I exhort you to bestir yourselves for the good and safety of yourselves and YOUR LITTLE ONES. The seeds of terrible and awful destruction are now vegetating in our political horizon. A hint to the righteously wise is sufficient, for they can understand, but none of the wicked shall understand except they repent, but like the Jews at the destruction of Jerusalem they will plot their own overthrow, curse God and die wallowing in their own blood.

JOHN E. PAGE.

"THE BARNBURNER," published at No. 18 Nassau st., New York, Wm. J. Tenney editor, is the leading campaign paper of the free territory party. We do not know the terms. But a dollar sent to that direction would doubtless fetch a good store of political reading to those who like that sort. It is well to read, but again we advise the saints to take no part in elections. They talk of freedom, but God only can give us deliverance. It is well to advocate the right, but who has protected the right of the saints? Not one.—No party. Never.

☞ Letters intended for Voree should not be directed to Burlington. They are very sure to be miscarried. Direct to "Voree, Wisconsin."

BEAR WITH ONE ANOTHER.—Paul says, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." I will add, bear ye each other's weaknesses, and so show yourselves saints and men of fortitude, that are not discouraged at trifles. Remember, the church of God is a great moral hospital, in which mankind are to be healed of their constitutional and moral infirmities, weaknesses and disabilities. It is often a manifest weakness in one to take offence or be offended with the weakness of another. Soundness of moral fortitude is one of the noble principles of manhood. He that is destitute of it is not fit to be a king or priest in the kingdom of God.

J. E. PAGE.

GOLD AND SILVER.—It is stated in Jacobs' essay on the precious metals, that in the ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeii, which were destroyed by an eruption of Vesuvius, more than seventeen centuries ago, no ornaments of gold and silver have been found. In some of the houses of Pompeii skeletons of the inhabitants have been discovered—in all, domestic utensils, and personal ornaments—but those for which in the present day, the precious metals are almost exclusively adopted by the middle class of persons, are composed of iron or brass. If gold and silver had been in the dwellings of the inhabitants at the time the eruption took place, they would be found there at the present time, as the iron and bronze have been, of which their spoons and forks were made, and which have retained their shape after the lapse of so many years.—Ex. paper.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

IN ATTACHMENT.

James A. Stevens and Andrew Sawyer, vs. David Patten. } In Justices Court, before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P.

NOTICE is hereby given to the above named defendant that a writ of attachment has been issued against him in the above entitled suit, and his property attached to satisfy the demand of the above named plaintiffs; and unless he appear before the above named Justice at his office in Hudson in the county of Walworth and State of Wisconsin, on the 26th day of August, 1848, at one o'clock, P. M., judgment will be rendered against him, and his property sold to pay the debt of the plaintiffs.

JAMES A. STEVENS.
ANDREW SAWYER.

July 22d, 1848. 21u.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 24.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, AUG. 31, 1848. [WHOLE No. 88.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

LYMAN WIGHT AND HIS POSITION.

PRES. STRANG—SIR:—I have just taken a squint at a pamphlet entitled "An Address to the Latter Day Saints, by Lyman Wight, by way of an abridged account of his life from Feb., 1844, up to April, 1848." This Lyman Wight was one of the quorum of the Twelve Apostles, who was appointed of God to fill the vacancy in that quorum caused by the martyrdom of David W. Patten in Missouri, in the fall season of 1838. I have nothing to say concerning that man (Wight) as a man, only that he is one of the most noble, generous, brave, persevering, whole hearted men that I was ever acquainted with. Many and many a time has he offered his life as a willing sacrifice for his brethren; and that, too, when my life was jeopardized, for which, as a man, he is riveted to my affection, remembrance and high regard that time and distance never, no never, can obliterate; and I know no temporal sacrifice so great that I would withhold it to save him from peril.

Yet, as an apostle in the faith of the Latter Day Saints' church, believing, as he does, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the most high God, and appealing to the book of Doctrine and Covenants of said church as the word of God, I wonder with great astonishment at the position he has assumed. With some few exceptions one would almost conclude from the eloquence of his language, the zeal he has manifested, and the very energetic and solemn appeal he has made to God, the church, and the world at large, that he was, or is, inspired from heaven. As I have just been over some part of the ground in my remarks on the "Brighamite Conference," I shall only refer the reader to section and paragraph of the book of D. & C. and not insert at full length.

I look upon the position Lyman has assumed as far preferable to any other that has assumed to take the lead of a party or faction of the church; for he no where assumes to be a prophet filling the ecclesiastical shoes of Joseph Smith. But he evidently widely errs on the same point that many, very many of the church have; i. e., he has not kept up or understood the proper distinction between the "keys of the kingdom of God" and the "keys of mysteries and revelations," as will appear in the extract I take from his pamphlet, p. 9, 10:—

"In the first place then I am justified upon this mission being given me by him (Joseph) who holds the keys of the kingdom of God, as also the fate and destiny of all flesh from the 6th of April, 1830, until the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. Much has been said concerning the keys of the kingdom of God; and I appeal to God, men and angels to bear record that Joseph Smith, that was of the pure blood of Joseph who was sold into Egypt, established the kingdom of the most high God on earth, unlocked the heavens, brought salvation to the children of men, opened the door of the kingdom, laid down his life for the salvation of men, left the door OPEN, wafted his way to heaven, is seated at the right hand of God.

"Of the fact that he has ever locked this kingdom, and taken away this priesthood, and given the keys unto any man, I have no knowledge. Therefore I feel perfectly indemnified in proclaiming to the world of mankind, the high, the low, the noble and the ignoble, with a loud voice, that the prayer of the Savior is answered, The Kingdom of Christ has come—the will of God is done on earth as it is in heaven—and the door is open never to be closed again until the master of the house shall come and close the door against all who have been invited, and have excused themselves in consequence of riches and the honors of this world. For I consider that the wedding guests have been invited, and the feast is now preparing. And the house is the kingdom of the last dispensation—the priesthood is the door—Joseph Smith is the master of the house—and those who shall enter in will be such as have done as it was said unto one of old, sell all thou hast and give it unto the poor, and come and follow me, and thou shalt be my disciple. This is a principle that was taught by all ancient prophets and apostles."

The above idea is undoubtedly derived from a perverted view of the following words:—

"Verily I say unto you, (Joseph,) the keys of this kingdom shall never be taken from you, while thou art in the world, neither in the world to come: nevertheless, through you shall the oracles be given to another; yea, even unto the church. And all they who receive the oracles of God, let them beware how they hold them, lest they are accounted as a light thing, and are brought under condemnation thereby, and stumble and fall, when the storms descend, and the winds blow, and the rains descend, and beat upon their house." D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 2.

By this I find that "the keys of the kingdom of God" was to continue with Joseph in time and eternity, yet it does not impair the idea that God would confer like keys on his successor. Undoubtedly Moses, Jesus and Peter bear the same keys of the kingdom of God at this time that they ever did. The confering of the keys of the kingdom of God on one does not take them away from another who received them before, consequently all that receive those keys on earth at any time may hold them in eternity at the same time, but not so with the "keys of mysteries and revelations." These are keys that belong to a prophet of God while on earth, and when he leaves the earth he leaves the keys behind him, to be held by another as a revelator to the church on earth; for it is on earth that the mysteries of God are to commence and be finished, and without these keys men are left to grope their way in heathenish darkness, ever learning the things of the world and "never able to come to a knowledge of truth" as it is in God. Therefore, should this church be left destitute of these keys, it would that moment become sectarian in its relation to God. Therefore the Lord provided for that case in the following saying:—

"For I (God) have given him (Joseph) the keys of the mysteries and the revelations which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead." D. & C. sec. li. p. 2.

Read my remarks on the Brighamite Conference to find my ap-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 24.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, AUG. 31, 1848. [WHOLE No. 88.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

LYMAN WIGHT AND HIS POSITION.

PRES. STRANG—SIR:—I have just taken a squint at a pamphlet entitled "An Address to the Latter Day Saints, by Lyman Wight, by way of an abridged account of his life from Feb., 1844, up to April, 1848." This Lyman Wight was one of the quorum of the Twelve Apostles, who was appointed of God to fill the vacancy in that quorum caused by the martyrdom of David W. Patten in Missouri, in the fall season of 1838. I have nothing to say concerning that man (Wight) as a man, only that he is one of the most noble, generous, brave, persevering, whole hearted men that I was ever acquainted with. Many and many a time has he offered his life as a willing sacrifice for his brethren; and that, too, when my life was jeopardized, for which, as a man, he is riveted to my affection, remembrance and high regard that time and distance never, no never, can [illegible] and I know no temporal sacrifice so great that I would withhold it to save him from peril.

Yet, as an apostle in the faith of the Latter Day Saints' church, believing, as he does, that Joseph Smith was a prophet of the most high God, and appealing to the book of Doctrine and Covenants of said church as the word of God, I wonder with great astonishment at the position he has assumed. With some few exceptions one would almost conclude from the eloquence of his language, the zeal he has manifested, and the very energetic and solemn appeal he has made to [illegible] the church, and the world at large, that he was, or is, inspired from heaven. As I have just been over some part of the ground in my remarks on the "Brighamite Conference," I shall only refer the reader to section and paragraph of the book of D. & C. and not insert at full length. John E. Page on Lo Wight

I look upon the position Lyman has assumed as far preferable to any other that has assumed to take the lead of a party or faction of the church; for he no where assumes to be a prophet filling the ecclesiastical shoes of Joseph Smith. But he evidently widely errs on the same point that many, very many of the church have; i. e., he has not kept up or understood the proper distinction between the "keys of the kingdom of God" and the "keys of mysteries and revelations," as will appear in the extract I take from his pamphlet, p. 9, 10:—~~Lyman Wight says~~

"In the first place then I am justified upon this mission being given me by him (Joseph) who holds the keys of the kingdom of God, as also the fate and destiny of all flesh from the 6th of April, 1830, until the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. Much has been said concerning the keys of the kingdom of God; and I appeal to God, men and angels to bear record that Joseph Smith, that was of the pure blood of Joseph who was sold into Egypt, established the kingdom of the most high God on earth, unlocked the heavens, brought salvation to the children of men, opened the door of the kingdom, laid down his life for the salvation of men, left the door OPEN, wafted his way to heaven, is seated at the right hand of God.

"Of the fact that he has ever locked this kingdom, and taken away this priesthood, and given the keys unto any man, I have no knowledge. Therefore I feel perfectly indemnified in proclaiming to the world of mankind, the high, the low, the noble and the ignoble, with a loud voice, that the prayer of the Savior is answered, The Kingdom of Christ has come—the will of God is done on earth as it is in heaven—and the door is open never to be closed again until the master of the house shall come and close the door against all who have been invited, and have excused themselves in consequence of riches and the honors of this world. For I consider that the wedding guests have been invited, and the feast is now preparing. And the house is the kingdom of the last dispensation—the priesthood is the door—Joseph Smith is the master of the house—and those who shall enter in will be such as have done as it was said unto one of old, sell all thou hast and give it unto the poor, and come and follow me, and thou shalt be my disciple. This is a principle that was taught by all ancient prophets and apostles."

The above idea is undoubtedly derived from a perverted view of the following words:—

"Verily I say unto you, (Joseph,) the keys of this kingdom shall never be taken from you, while thou art in the world, neither in the world to come: nevertheless, through you shall the oracles be given to another; yea, even unto the church. And all they who receive the oracles of God, let them beware how they hold them, lest they are accounted as a light thing, and are brought under condemnation thereby, and stumble and fall, when the storms descend, and the winds blow, and the rains descend, and beat upon their house." D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 2.

By this I find that "the keys of the kingdom of God" was to continue with Joseph in time and eternity, yet it does not impair the idea that God would confer like keys on his successor. Undoubtedly Moses, Jesus and Peter bear the same keys of the kingdom of God at this time that they ever did. The confering of the keys of the kingdom of God on one does not take them away from another who received them before, consequently all that receive those keys on earth at any time may hold them in eternity at the same time, but not so with the "keys of mysteries and revelations." These are keys that belong to a prophet of God while on earth, and when he leaves the earth he leaves the keys behind him, to be held by another as a revelator to the church on earth; for it is on earth that the mysteries of God are to commence and be finished, and without these keys men are left to grope their way in heathenish darkness, ever learning the things of the world and "never able to come to a knowledge of truth" as it is in God. Therefore, should this church be left destitute of these keys, it would that moment become sectarian in its relation to God. Therefore the Lord provided for that case in the following saying:—

"For I (God) have given him (Joseph) the keys of the mysteries and the revelations which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead." D. & C. sec. li. p. 2.

Read my remarks on the Brighamite Conference to find my application of a like saying in sec. xi. p. 4. By the above I find the Lord had decreed by the immutability of his own word that this church should not be left without some one appointed of God through Joseph, and ordained of God by angels, to bear the keys of MYSTERIES and REVELATIONS UNTIL the COMING of CHRIST. With all this law before him, Wight confesses that he knew not that a man was appointed to fill Joseph's shoes. I am both glad and sorry to hear this. Glad that you have not willfully turned your back on the Lord's anointed, as did many of our brethren of the Twelve, and sorry that you did not both hear of the appointment of another and follow him as your lawgiver in the place of Joseph. The death of Joseph neither enlarged or diminished your priesthood. It neither made you head of the church, nor took away your apostleship.

You have appealed to the book of D. & C. for a warrant of your priesthood and mission as an apostle of the church. Why not look for the word of God to be as strictly important in other matters, and that too in such an important point as the one under consideration, viz., the appointment of one as Joseph's successor to hold the "keys of mysteries and revelations" as your and my director and lawgiver to the church "until the coming of Christ." You call upon your brethren, the apostles, to go to the nations of the earth, to all kings, emperors, presidents and governors, and bid them and their subjects to come to the "marriage supper of the Lamb." But, I ask you, Lyman, how shall they do this without their director? as called for in the following words:—

"The Twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the Presidency of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven; to build up the church, and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations: first unto the Gentiles, and secondly unto the Jews." D. & C. sec. iii. p. 12.

You might as well talk about a watch going without a main spring or a clock without weights, or motion without power or gravity, as talk about the Twelve building up the kingdom of God and regulating the affairs of the church in all the world, independent of the direction of the First Presidency, who are placed in the church "to receive the ORACLES for the whole church," according to the following provision or their regular successors:—

"I give unto you my servant Joseph, to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer and prophet.—I give unto him for councilors my servant Sidney Rigdon, and my servant William Law, that these may constitute a quorum and First Presidency, to receive the oracles for the whole church."

With all this law of God before me, which is as plain as the alphabet, I wonder with astonishment what mature men can see that is so fascinating in the principles of Lyman Wight or Brigham Young to even once think of following them either to Salt Lake Valley or to Texas, up the Colorado river, where Wight is; thinking by so doing they are carrying out original primitive Mormonism, in gathering to Zion. Dear saints, do you not know that if the word of the Lord has utterly failed in the case of the appointment of Joseph's successor, Mormonism is dead and damned long ago? I have before me at this time Brigham Young's epistle, of which there were 1,000 copies printed in Chicago while I was there last June, the same that was published in the Herald a short time since; I have Lyman Wight's pamphlet also, one calls the saints to Salt Lake, the other to Texas, until they can go to Jackson county, Mo., and build the temple of God; and both of these calls claim to be from God. And who are these men that are thus speculating with God and his saints? Why, they are men who once were members of the church of Christ, and apostles, too, at that. Their priesthood was the same one as the other. Lyman is now spurning the idea of Brigham Young having power to cut him off from the church, and calls Brigham Young and his associated Twelve "long eared jack asses." Read it for yourselves. Here it is:—

"Therefore, I appeal to all those of a like ordination unto myself that they have neither power nor authority given them to move me from this station, nor to place any long eared jack ass to fill a place which has never been vacated. Notwithstanding their long ears and slanderous tongue, they will find them too short and too feeble to compete with a man who has gained his right and inheritance by passing through the sufferings which I have passed through. And should they come up before the throne of God, when my name is called as one of the Twelve, and they should answer to the same, I shall be there; and they will find that, instead of dancing over the ashes of our beloved brethren Joseph and Hyrum, they will be dancing to the tune of Jack. And the only tune that he could play, was Over the Hills and Far Away."

I suppose when Brigham reads this he will retort, and say, by the authority of my priesthood received by the election of a body of poor ignorant dupes, who have made me a man-made prophet to fill the shoes of a God-made one, Lyman is a "wild ram of the mountains," and cut off from the church. And yet one has as much law as the other, to do as they are doing. Brigham and his associates have been cut off from the church by a due course of the discipline of the church, under the Presidency of Pres. James J. Strang long ago, he being the only man that presents a legal claim to the prophetic office as called for by the word of Almighty God to Joseph Smith. And Lyman Wight, though he has been duly ordained an apostle and received a regular mission from Joseph, has no authority so much as to carry the gospel to the nations, except under the direction of the Presidency of the church. D. & C. sec. iii. p. 12.

Lyman seems to cherish the idea that is ignorantly held out by some others, that Joseph, the prophet's son, will yet come up and take his father's original place in the church, as the prophet to the church; whereas there is not one single word in all the book of D. & C. to warrant the idea. It is true, the son is warranted a claim to the priesthood that was conferred on his father by lineal descent, but not the Presidency of the church, that depends entirely on the appointment of his father. And as Joseph's son has made no such claim, it is to be reasonably presumed that he does not recognize any such appointment. If he does, God has been slack concerning his promises, and left his people to wander like sheep without a shepherd in a dark and cloudy night, subject to the practice of the most damnable impostures that ever cursed the earth with imposition, without an exception in the annals of ecclesiastical history.—Can the mind of man once conceive of the idea in the character of the God of heaven that if Joseph Smith was his prophet to gather such a mighty host into his church as 40,000 in and about Nauvoo, and as many as 200,000 in all the world in about 14 years, and this to build up Zion in the last days preparatory to the second advent of the Son of God, and then leave them to be deceived as much as they have been by impostors, in case Joseph's son is the only true successor to his father in the prophetic Presidency of the church?—O no! NO!! NO!!! Again I say NO! God forbid that for one moment I should cherish such an idea of my heavenly Father and his Son Jesus Christ.

Reader, are you a saint professedly, and still willing to swallow down one of two heretical ideas? One is that Joseph Smith is taken from the church on earth and did not appoint his successor, and the church still lives in a legal point of light. The other is that the Presidency of the church belongs to family lineage, independent of appointment by revelation through the predecessor to each successive successor. The first is assumed by Brigham Young, the second by Lyman Wight. Now as heresy is heresy, and heresy is a plication of a like saying in sec. xi. p. 4. By the above I find the Lord had decreed by the immutability of his own word that this church should not be left without some one appointed of God through Joseph, and ordained of God by angels, to bear the keys of MYSTERIES and REVELATIONS UNTIL the COMING of CHRIST. With all this law before him, Wight confesses that he knew not that a man was appointed to fill Joseph's shoes. I am both glad and sorry to hear this. Glad that you have not willfully turned your back on the Lord's anointed, as did many of our brethren of the Twelve, and sorry that you did not both hear of the appointment of another and follow him as your lawgiver in the place of Joseph. The death of Joseph neither enlarged or diminished your priesthood. It neither made you head of the church, nor took away your apostleship.

You have appealed to the book of D. & C. for a warrant of your priesthood and mission as an apostle of the church. Why not look for the word of God to be as strictly important in other matters, and that too in such an important point as the one under consideration, viz., the appointment of one as Joseph's successor to hold the "keys of mysteries and revelations" as your and my director and lawgiver to the church "until the coming of Christ." You call upon your brethren, the apostles, to go to the nations of the earth, to all kings, emperors, presidents and governors, and bid them and their subjects to come to the "marriage supper of the Lamb." But, I ask you, Lyman, how shall they do this without their director? as called for in the following words:—

"The Twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the Presidency of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven; to build up the church, and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations: first unto the Gentiles, and secondly unto the Jews." D. & C. sec. iii. p. 12.

You might as well talk about a watch going without a main-spring or a clock without weights, or motion without power or gravity, as talk about the Twelve building up the kingdom of God and regulating the affairs of the church in all the world, independent of the direction of the First Presidency, who are placed in the church "to receive the ORACLES for the whole church," according to the following provision or their regular successors:—

"I give unto you my servant Joseph, to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer and prophet.—I give unto him for councilors my servant Sidney Rigdon, and my servant William Law, that these may constitute a quorum and First Presidency, to receive the oracles for the whole church."

With all this law of God before me, which is as plain as the alphabet, I wonder with astonishment what mature men can see that is so fascinating in the principles of Lyman Wight or Brigham Young to even once think of following them either to Salt Lake Valley or to Texas, up the Colorado river, where Wight is; thinking by so doing they are carrying out original primitive Mormonism, in gathering to Zion. Dear saints, do you not know that if the word of the Lord has utterly failed in the case of the appointment of Joseph's successor, Mormonism is dead and damned long ago? I have before me at this time Brigham Young's epistle, of which there were 1,000 copies printed in Chicago while I was there last June, the same that was published in the Herald a short time since; I have Lyman Wight's pamphlet also, one calls the saints to Salt Lake, the other to Texas, until they can go to Jackson county, Mo., and build the temple of God; and both of these calls claim to be from God. And who are these men that are thus speculating with God and his saints? Why, they are men who once were members of the church of Christ, and apostles, too, at that. Their priesthood was the same one as the other. Lyman is now spurning the idea of Brigham Young having power to cut him off from the church, and calls Brigham Young and his associated Twelve "long eared jack asses." Read it for yourselves. Here it is:—

"Therefore, I appeal to all those of a like ordination unto myself that they have neither power nor authority given them to move me from this station, nor to place any long eared jack ass to fill a place which has never been vacated. Notwithstanding their long ears and slanderous tongue, they will find them too short and too feeble to compete with a man who has gained his right and inheritance by passing through the sufferings which I have passed through. And should they come up before the throne of God, when my name is called as one of the Twelve, and they should answer to the same, I shall be there; and they will find that, instead of dancing over the ashes of our beloved brethren Joseph and Hyrum, they will be dancing to the tune of Jack. And the only tune that he could play, was Over the Hills and Far Away."

I suppose when Brigham reads this he will retort, and say, by the authority of my priesthood received by the election of a body of poor ignorant dupes, who have made me a man-made prophet to fill the shoes of a God-made one, Lyman is a "wild ram of the mountains," and cut off from the church. And yet one has as much law as the other, to do as they are doing. Brigham and his associates have been cut off from the church by a due course of the discipline of the church, under the Presidency of Pres. James J. Strang long ago, he being the only man that presents a legal claim to the prophetic office as called for by the word of Almighty God to Joseph Smith. And Lyman Wight, though he has been duly ordained an apostle and received a regular mission from Joseph, has no authority so much as to carry the gospel to the nations, except under the direction of the Presidency of the church. D. & C. sec. iii. p. 12.

Lyman seems to cherish the idea that is ignorantly held out by some others, that Joseph, the prophet's son, will yet come up and take his father's original place in the church, as the prophet to the church; whereas there is not one single word in all the book of D. & C. to warrant the idea. It is true, the son is warranted a claim to the priesthood that was conferred on his father by lineal descent, but not the Presidency of the church, that depends entirely on the appointment of his father. And as Joseph's son has made no such claim, it is to be reasonably presumed that he does not recognize any such appointment. If he does, God has been slack concerning his promises, and left his people to wander like sheep without a shepherd in a dark and cloudy night, subject to the practice of the most damnable impostures that ever cursed the earth with imposition, without an exception in the annals of ecclesiastical history.—Can the mind of man once conceive of the idea in the character of the God of heaven that if Joseph Smith was his prophet to gather such a mighty host into his church as 40,000 in and about Nauvoo, and as many as 200,000 in all the world in about 14 years, and this to build up Zion in the last days preparatory to the second advent of the Son of God, and then leave them to be deceived as much as they have been by impostors, in case Joseph's son is the only true successor to his father in the prophetic Presidency of the church?—O no! NO!! NO!!! Again I say NO! God forbid that for one moment I should cherish such an idea of my heavenly Father and his Son Jesus Christ.

Reader, are you a saint professedly, and still willing to swallow down one of two heretical ideas? One is that Joseph Smith is taken from the church on earth and did not appoint his successor, and the church still lives in a legal point of light. The other is that the Presidency of the church belongs to family lineage, independent of appointment by revelation through the predecessor to each successive successor. The first is assumed by Brigham Young, the second by Lyman Wight. Now as heresy is heresy, and heresy is a damnable delusion, in the name of humanity I exhort you to choose the one (if one you are resolved to choose) that is subject to the least human misery while on earth. Brigham says, in his epistle, that the Salt Lake Valley "must be irrigated," i. e., watered by some artificial means in order to produce; that "the valley is surrounded by mountains capped with perpetual snow," and the climate is so cold as to require winter apparel instead of summer. It is one thousand miles from the white man's settlements. There is no timber in the valley, and a mere scanty supply in the mountains until they can raise it. Now let us hear from the country where Lyman is, p. 8, 9 :—

"We landed in Texas on the 16th November, 1845, destitute of clothing and out of provisions. We concluded to stop, and in the short space of five months we had made ourselves tolerably comfortable for clothing, and had procured means sufficient to pursue our journey three hundred miles, to the falls of the Colorado river. We stopped five miles above the capital of this State, where we built a grist mill and a saw mill. Here we tarried and became acquainted with the Governor, and all the most noted officers of State, whose friendship was and is extended towards us, even unto the present day.

"This place being too limited for our society, (having had frequent accessions,) we concluded to sell it, and move seventy-five miles up in the Valley of the Piedernales River: where we now have first rate water privileges, mills, turning lathes, and mchinery not to be surpassed by any inland place in the old States.

"They are valued, by the inhabitants of this country, at ten thousand dollars. We have a two story house nearly enclosed and painted, which is sufficiently large in the upper story to accommodate our whole community. We also have a daily school of about sixty scholars. The lower room of this house is dedicated for the express purpose of storing food, raiment and the necessary comforts of life for those who by misfortune, have been debilitated, of the exercise of power to support themselves. In addition to this, we have about 60 horses and mules, which are most of the time in daily service; one hundred milch cows, two hundred head of oxen and loose cattle; about five hundred acres of land under fence, rich and fertile prairies, with an abundance of timber to fence the same, and about thirty-five comfortable dwelling houses.

"This valley is from fifty to seventy-five miles in length, and about ten in width. The most crystal streams of water flow from these mountains that I ever beheld. Here we have nothing to impede our progress in farming, nor our cattle from grazing during the twelve months which forms the year. The two last years of my life I have not seen the first flake of snow. We planted from fifty to seventy-five acres in corn about the middle of February, which is, at this time, undergoing the third ploughing and is nearly ready to lay by.

"These beautiful valleys in Texas, on either side of the Colorado, and in the street thereof, reminds me of Ezekiel's vision of the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruit and yielded its fruit every month; and the leaves were for the healing of the nations; for, truly, in this country we have the evergreen oak, the bay tree, muskeet and various other kinds of timber, which you have never seen in the north; in fine there are many kinds of vegetation that grows full better in the winter season than in the summer.

"I feel perfectly happy on my mission, and thankful I am to God, that he ever put it into the heart of brother Joseph to assign me this mission, that so many good and honest hearted souls might be led from the stern inclement climate of the north, and from the low sickly valleys of the Mississippi river to a climate so congenial to the health, nature and disposition of man.

"The country near the mountains produces all kinds of vegetables of the northern climate in great abundance. Near the Gulf, and in the interior, sugar cane, cotton and sweet potatoes are the staple commodities of the country; although coffe, with many northern vegetables, can be raised."

On another page of his pamphlet I learn that Lyman has adopted the "common stock principle," which he pleases to call "the order of Enoch," as found in the book of D. & C. For my part I see no difficulty whatever in making a decisive choice in the two delusions. I say hurrah for Lyman. And could I believe that Joseph Smith did not appoint James J. Strang as his (Joseph's) successor, I would say amen to Mormonism for the present and go to Lyman for the sake of the climate and country; for I know that Lyman is neither proud nor lazy, and is content to enjoy an even slice with his friends. But I think I am too well informed in the genuine doctrine and theory of what is vulgarly called Mormonism to go either of the above measures. But were I left to choose one of the two, and the aggregate advantages and disadvantages of the two countries were the same, I would still choose Lyman for my captain and leader, because of the great superiority of the man over the other; for Lyman (as the saying is) has a pluck as big as an ox, and is willing to live, fare and die on an equal footing with his friends.—And yet, like all other men, he is not perfect in some things. But was the destiny of our country wielded by such men as Lyman Wight, these United States might become an earthly paradise, instead, as it is now, a region of the most accursed oppression.

Aside from my religious faith, I bid Lyman God speed. But as God in his infinite mercy has not suffered his word to fall, but has carefully watched over all and every word he has revealed to Joseph Smith, and according to the conditions proposed has faithfully fulfilled on his part, I still feel unshaken in the faith; and as an apostle of the most high God, I say to Lyman Wight, Brigham Young, and all their followers, together with all others of the human race, to turn their eyes towards Voree and seek to obey the council of God instead of the wisdom of man, and gather to the place which God has appointed, and keep the commandments of God, that you may be saved and exalted in the great day of the Lord Jesus Christ, when all men will be judged according to the deeds done in the flesh by the law of God and not man.

JOHN E. PAGE.

DEATH WITHOUT THE BENEFIT OF CLERGY.—Lord Brougham has recommended to the English Executive Government, the adoption of the practice of Napoleon, and refuses to allow murderers and other great criminals to receive absolution from their priests. It would be a waste of words to dwell upon the notorious fact, that the belief in the power of a priest to give absolution, and the knowledge that absolution can always be obtained, are fearful incentives to crime. He knows nothing of human nature who would question the fact.—Advent Herald.

☞ This barbarity is constantly practiced on the American Indians by hanging them by the neck. The christian (of several sects) believes that in dying without absolution, he loses salvation. The Indian that, if hanged by the neck, the spirit cannot escape, but dies with the body, and therefore that he loses immortality. It is a terrible tyranny to make the administration of a government even seem to effect salvation.

CONFERENCE.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Voree Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next. By order of the Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

damnable delusion, in the name of humanity I exhort you to choose the one (if one you are resolved to choose) that is subject to the least human misery while on earth. Brigham says, in his epistle, that the Salt Lake Valley "must be irrigated," i. e., watered by some artificial means in order to produce; that "the valley is surrounded by mountains capped with perpetual snow," and the climate is so cold as to require winter apparel instead of summer. It is one thousand miles from the white man's settlements. There is no timber in the valley, and a mere scanty supply in the mountains until they can raise it. Now let us hear from the country where Lyman is, p. 8, 9:—

"We landed in Texas on the 16th November, 1845, destitute of clothing and out of provisions. We concluded to stop, and in the short space of five months we had made ourselves tolerably comfortable for clothing, and had procured means sufficient to pursue our journey three hundred miles, to the falls of the Colorado river. We stopped five miles above the capital of this State, where we built a grist mill and a saw mill. Here we tarried and became acquainted with the Governor, and all the most noted officers of State, whose friendship was and is extended towards us, even unto the present day.

"This place being too limited for our society, (having had frequent accessions,) we concluded to sell it, and move seventy-five miles up in the Valley of the Piedernales River: where we now have first rate water privileges, mills, turning lathes, and mchinery not to be surpassed by any inland place in the old States.

"They are valued, by the inhabitants of this country, at ten thousand dollars. We have a two story house nearly enclosed and painted, which is sufficiently large in the upper story to accommodate our whole community. We also have a daily school of about sixty scholars. The lower room of this house is dedicated for the express purpose of storing food, raiment and the necessary comforts of life for those who by misfortune, have been debilitated, of the exercise of power to support themselves. In addition to this, we have about 60 horses and mules, which are most of the time in daily service; one hundred milch cows, two hundred head of oxen and loose cattle; about five hundred acres of land under fence, rich and fertile prairies, with an abundance of timber to fence the same, and about thirty-five comfortable dwelling houses.

"This valley is from fifty to seventy-five miles in length, and about ten in width. The most crystal streams of water flow from these mountains that I ever beheld. Here we have nothing to impede our progress in farming, nor our cattle from grazing during the twelve months which forms the year. The two last years of my life I have not seen the first flake of snow. We planted from fifty to seventy-five acres in corn about the middle of February, which is, at this time, undergoing the third ploughing and is nearly ready to lay by.

"These beautiful valleys in Texas, on either side of the Colorado, and in the street thereof, reminds me of Ezekiel's vision of the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruit and yielded its fruit every month; and the leaves were for the healing of the nations; for, truly, in this country we have the evergreen oak, the bay tree, muskeet and various other kinds of timber, which you have never seen in the north; in fine there are many kinds of vegetation that grows full better in the winter season than in the summer.

"I feel perfectly happy on my mission, and thankful I am to God, that he ever put it into the heart of brother Joseph to assign me this mission, that so many good and honest hearted souls might be led from the stern inclement climate of the north, and from the low sickly valleys of the Mississippi river to a climate so congenial to the health, nature and disposition of man.

"The country near the mountains produces all kinds of vegetables of the northern climate in great abundance. Near the Gu... and in the interior, sugar cane, cotton and sweet potatoes are the staple commodities of the country; although coffe, with many northern vegetables, can be raised."

On another page of his pamphlet I learn that Lyman has adopted the "common stock principle," which he pleases to call "the order of Enoch," as found in the book of D. & C. For my part I see no difficulty whatever in making a decisive choice in the two delusions. I say hurrah for Lyman. And could I believe that Joseph Smith did not appoint James J. Strang as his (Joseph's) successor, I would say amen to Mormonism for the present and go to Lyman for the sake of the climate and country; for I know that Lyman is neither proud nor lazy, and is content to enjoy an even slice with his friends. But I think I am too well informed in the genuine doctrine and theory of what is vulgarly called Mormonism to go either of the above measures. But were I left to choose one of the two, and the aggregate advantages and disadvantages of the two countries were the same, I would still choose Lyman for my captain and leader, because of the great superiority of the man over the other; for Lyman (as the saying is) has a pluck as big as an ox, and is willing to live, fare and die on an equal footing with his friends.—And yet, like all other men, he is not perfect in some things. But was the destiny of our country wielded by such men as Lyman Wight, these United States might become an earthly paradise, instead, as it is now, a region of the most accursed oppression.

Aside from my religious faith, I bid Lyman God speed. But as God in his infinite mercy has not suffered his word to fall, but has carefully watched over all and every word he has revealed to Joseph Smith, and according to the conditions proposed has faithfully fulfilled on his part, I still feel unshaken in the faith; and as an apostle of the most high God, I say to Lyman Wight, Brigham Young, and all their followers, together with all others of the human race, to turn their eyes towards Voree and seek to obey the council of God instead of the wisdom of man, and gather to the place which God has appointed, and keep the commandments of God, that you may be saved and exalted in the great day of the Lord Jesus Christ, when all men will be judged according to the deeds done in the flesh by the law of God and not man.

JOHN E. PAGE.

DEATH WITHOUT THE BENEFIT OF CLERGY.—Lord Brougham has recommended to the English Executive Government, the adoption of the practice of Napoleon, and refuses to allow murderers and other great criminals to receive absolution from their priests. It would be a waste of words to dwell upon the notorious fact, that the belief in the power of a priest to give absolution, and the knowledge that absolution can always be obtained, are fearful incentives to crime. He knows nothing of human nature who would question the fact.—Advent Herald.

☞ This barbarity is constantly practiced on the American Indians by hanging them by the neck. The christian (of several sects) believes that in dying without absolution, he loses salvation. The Indian that, if hanged by the neck, the spirit cannot escape, but dies with the body, and therefore that he loses immortality. It is a terrible tyranny to make the administration of a government even seem to effect salvation.

CONFERENCE.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Voree Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next. By order of the Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

For the Gospel Herald.

In my review of Mormonism I took the position that we should go on increasing in the scale of intelligence until we should eventually possess as much power, glory and dominion as Christ now does. Perhaps there may be a few who would take exceptions to this doctrine. I shall, therefore, proceed to make good my assertions. I shall first call your attention to the second chapter and 28th verse of Joel: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh." Then turn and take in connection what Isaiah says, lx. 21, 22: "Thy people also shall all be righteous; they shall inherit the land forever. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation." The apostle says, that, "when Christ appears he will change our vile bodies, and they shall be fashioned like his most glorious body," (that is, speaking of his second coming.) John, when in a vision, and was caught up into the heavens, heard the heavenly hosts sing a new song. He says: "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. v. 9, 10.

It was thus that the heavenly hosts sung praises to the Lord God, because he promised them that they should become kings and priests and reign on earth. We learn from the above that the saints will be made kings and priests to the most high God. The inquiry might arise, are the wicked also to rise in the scale of intelligence? The book of Revelations, speaking of the second coming of Christ, and the righteous that were on earth at his coming, says: "And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Rev. xx. 4, 5. Thus they lay in dead oblivion troughout the thousand years reign of righteousness, which certainly is a great blessing to be deprived of. It further says: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." What is the second death? Perhaps after the thousand years of rest is ended they again take bodies and live upon earth the second time, and so on, until they will obey the gospel and keep the commandments of God. But that question I shall leave to the inquirer, or some person better informed than myself.

But it is evident from the above that we are to become kings and priests to God. And from the following it will be seen that they are to share in the glory with Christ. Christ, while praying to the Father for his disciples, said: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me." John xvii. 20 to 23.

This explains what Paul says: "But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. xv. 23. And further, Christ tells us to "go on to perfection, even as our Father in heaven is perfect." I might thus go on bringing passage after passage from holy writ, but I think I have produced an abundance of evidence to convince the most skeptical, after a candid investigation. At all events I have proved that we are to become kings and priests unto God, and reign on the earth. Now it would be nonsense to talk of reigning without power, subjects and dominion.

R. F. MILLS.

COLLATERAL TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTH AND DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.—No. 1.

For want of room I cannot make many comments to introduce this subject at this time, I shall therefore leave my readers to make their own comments and draw their own conclusions. I have many corroborating facts to lay before a candid public, of traditions and the developments of American antiquities, that have come forth to the reading world since the year 1830, the date of the first edition of the Book of Mormon.

According to the Book of Mormon there was a prophet who dwelt in the city of Jerusalem cotemporary with Jeremiah the prophet, by the name of Lehi. His family consisted of a wife and four sons, Laman, Lemuel, Sam and Nephi. Nephi, although the youngest of the four sons, became the prophetic leader of the company, consisting of his father's family and a number of others. By the commandment of the God of Israel they left Jerusalem "in the commencement of the first year of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah," (600 years before Christ,) and started for this land, (America.)—They traveled to the Red Sea, and then "on the borders thereof," an eastwardly direction, until they were commanded to stop and "build a ship to cross the great waters," (the ocean.) They landed on the Pacific side of the southern part of Central America. Read Book of Mormon, 7th, 8th and 9th pages, stereotyped edition. As collateral testimony to the truth of the above, I present the following, copied from the "incidents of travels in Central America, Chiapas and Yucatan, by John L. Stephens, Vol. 2, 1841, page 172:—

"According to the manuscript of Don Juan Torres, the grandson of the last king of the Quiches, which was in the possession of the lieutenant-general appointed by Pedro de Alvarado, and which Fuentes says he obtained by means of Father Francis Vasques, the historian of the order of San Francis, the Toltecas themselves descended from the house of Israel, who were released by Moses from the tyranny of Pharaoh, and after crossing the Red Sea, fell into idolatry. To avoid the reproofs of Moses, or from fear of his inflicting upon them some chastisement, they seperated from him and his brethren, and under the guidance of Tanub, their chief, passed from one continent to the other, to a place which they called the seven caverns, a part of the kingdom of Mexico, where they founded the celebrated city of Tula. From Tanub sprang the families of the kings of Tula and Quiche, and the first monarch of the Toltecas.—Nimaquiche, the fifth king of that line, and more beloved than any of his predecessors, was directed by an oracle to leave Tula, with his people, who had by this time multiplied greatly, and conduct them from the kingdom of Mexico to that of Guatimala. In performing this journey they consumed many years, suffered extraordinary hardships, and wandered over an immense tract of country, until they discovered the Lake of Atitan, and resolved to settle near it in a country which they called Quiche. Nimaquiche was accompanied by his three brothers."

The reader will doubtless make all necessary allowances for whatever deviations or corruptions of facts which might have taken place in the traditions that have been handed down through savage hands of the American Indians for so long a period of time.

JOHN E. PAGE.

JERUSALEM—A MORNING'S WALK.

BY H. MARTINEAU.

There is little pleasure in visiting the places within the walls of Jerusalem which are reported by the monks to be the scenes of the acts and sufferings of Christ. There is no certainty about these; and the spots regarding which there can be no mistake are so interesting that the mind and heart of the traveler turn away from such

For the Gospel Herald.

In my review of Mormonism I took the position that we should go on increasing in the scale of intelligence until we should eventually possess as much power, glory and dominion as Christ now does. Perhaps there may be a few who would take exceptions to this doctrine. I shall, therefore, proceed to make good my assertions. I shall first call your attention to the second chapter and 28th verse of Joel: "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh." Then turn and take in connection what Isaiah says, lx. 21, 22: "Thy people also shall all be righteous; they shall inherit the land forever. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation." The apostle says, that, "when Christ appears he will change our vile bodies, and they shall be fashioned like his most glorious body," (that is, speaking of his second coming.) John, when in a vision, and was caught up into the heavens, heard the heavenly hosts sing a new song. He says: "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. v. 9, 10.

It was thus that the heavenly hosts sung praises to the Lord God, because he promised them that they should become kings and priests and reign on earth. We learn from the above that the saints will be made kings and priests to the most high God. The inquiry might arise, are the wicked also to rise in the scale of intelligence? The book of Revelations, speaking of the second coming of Christ, and the righteous that were on earth at his coming, says: "And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Rev. xx. 4, 5. Thus they lay in dead oblivion troughout the thousand years reign of righteousness, which certainly is a great blessing to be deprived of. It further says: "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." What is the second death? Perhaps after the thousand years of rest is ended they again take bodies and live upon earth the second time, and so on, until they will obey the gospel and keep the commandments of God. But that question I shall leave to the inquirer, or some person better informed than myself.

But it is evident from the above that we are to become kings and priests to God. And from the following it will be seen that they are to share in the glory with Christ. Christ, while praying to the Father for his disciples, said: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me." John xvii. 20 to 23.

This explains what Paul says; "But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. xv. 23. And further, Christ tells us to "go on to perfection, even as our Father in heaven is perfect." I might thus go on bringing passage after passage from holy writ, but I think I have produced an abundance of evidence to convince the most skeptical, after a candid investigation. At all events, I have proved that we are to become kings and priests unto God, and reign on the earth. Now it would be nonsense to talk of reigning without power, subjects and dominion.

R. F. MILLS.

COLLATERAL TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTH AND DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.—No. 1.

For want of room I cannot make many comments to introduce this subject at this time, I shall therefore leave my readers to make their own comments and draw their own conclusions. I have many corroborating facts to lay before a candid public, of traditions and the developments of American antiquities, that have come forth to the reading world since the year 1830, the date of the first edition of the Book of Mormon.

According to the Book of Mormon there was a prophet who dwelt in the city of Jerusalem cotemporary with Jeremiah the prophet, by the name of Lehi. His family consisted of a wife and four sons, Laman, Lemuel, Sam and Nephi. Nephi, although the youngest of the four sons, became the prophetic leader of the company, consisting of his father's family and a number of others. By the commandment of the God of Israel they left Jerusalem "in the commencement of the first year of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah," (600 years before Christ,) and started for this land, (America.)—They traveled to the Red Sea, and then "on the borders thereof," an eastwardly direction, until they were commanded to stop and "build a ship to cross the great waters," (the ocean.) They landed on the Pacific side of the southern part of Central America. Read Book of Mormon, 7th, 8th and 9th pages, stereotyped edition. As collateral testimony to the truth of the above, I present the following, copied from the "incidents of travels in Central America, Chiapas and Yucatan, by John L. Stephens, Vol. 2, 1841, page 172:—

"According to the manuscript of Don Juan Torres, the grandson of the last king of the Quiches, which was in the possession of the lieutenant-general appointed by Pedro de Alvarado, and which Fuentes says he obtained by means of Father Francis Vasques, the historian of the order of San Francis, the Toltecas themselves descended from the house of Israel, who were released by Moses from the tyranny of Pharaoh, and after crossing the Red Sea, fell into idolatry. To avoid the reproofs of Moses, or from fear of his inflicting upon them some chastisement, they seperated from him and his brethren, and under the guidance of Tanub, their chief, passed from one continent to the other, to a place which they called the seven caverns, a part of the kingdom of Mexico, where they founded the celebrated city of Tula. From Tanub sprang the families of the kings of Tula and Quiche, and the first monarch of the Toltecas.—Nimaquiche, the fifth king of that line, and more beloved than any of his predecessors, was directed by an oracle to leave Tula, with his people, who had by this time multiplied greatly, and conduct them from the kingdom of Mexico to that of Guatimala. In performing this journey they consumed many years, suffered extraordinary hardships, and wandered over an immense tract of country, until they discovered the Lake of Atitan, and resolved to settle near it in a country which they called Quiche. Nimaquiche was accompanied by his three brothers."

The reader will doubtless make all necessary allowances for whatever deviations or corruptions of facts which might have taken place in the traditions that have been handed down through savage hands of the American Indians for so long a period of time.

JOHN E. PAGE.

JERUSALEM—A MORNING'S WALK.

BY H. MARTINEAU.

There is little pleasure in visiting the places within the walls of Jerusalem which are reported by the monks to be the scenes of the acts and sufferings of Christ. There is no certainty about these; and the spots regarding which there can be no mistake are so interesting that the mind and heart of the traveler turn away from such as may be fabulous. About the site of the Temple there is no doubt; and beyond the walls one meets at every turn assurance of being where Christ walked and taught, and where the great events of Jewish history took place. Let us go over what I found in one ramble; and then my readers will see what it must be to take walks in the neighborhood of Jerusalem.

Leaving the city by the Bethlehem Gate, we descended into the valley of Hinnom or Gehenna. Here there are many tombs cut in the rock, with entrances like door-ways. When I speak of Bethany, I shall have occasion to describe the tombs of the Jews. It was in this valley, and close by the fountain of Siloam, that, in the days of Jewish idolatry, children passed through the fire, in honor of Moloch. Here, in this place of corruption and cruelty, where fires hovered about living bodies, and worms preyed on the dead—here was the imagery of terror—"the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched." The scene is very different now. The slopes are terraced, that the winter rains may not wash away the soil; and these terraces were to-day green with springing wheat; and the spreading olives and fig trees cast their shadows on the rich though stony soil. Streams were led from the pool of Siloam among the fields and gardens; and all looked cool and fresh in the once hellish spot. On the top of the opposite hill was the Field of Blood—the field bought as a burial place for strangers, by the priests to whom Judas returned his bribe. For the burial of strangers it was used in subsequent ages; for pilgrims who died at the Holy City were laid there. It is now no longer inclosed; but a charnel house marks the spot.

The pools all round Jerusalem are beautiful; the cool arching rock roof of some, the weed-tufted sides and clear waters of all, are delicious. The pool of Siloam is still pretty—though less so, no doubt, than when the blind man, sent to wash there, opened his eyes on its sacred stream. The fountain of Siloam is more beautiful than the pool. It lies deep in a cave, and must be reached by broad steps which wind down in the shadow. A woman sat to-day in the dim light of reflected sunshine, washing linen in the pool.—Here it was that in days of old the priest came down with his golden pitcher to draw water for the temple service; and hither it was that the thought of Milton came when he sang of

Siloa's brook that flowed
Fast by the oracle of God.

We were now in the Valley of Jehoshaphat; and we crossed the bottom of it, where the brook Kedron must run when it runs at all; but it seems to be now merely a winter torrent, and never to have been a constant stream. When we had ascended the opposite side of the valley, we were on the Mount of Olives. The ascent was steep—now among tombs, and now past fields of waving barley, flecked with the shade of olive trees. As we ascended, the opposite hill seemed to rise, and the city to spread. Two horsemen in the valley below, and a woman with a burden on her head, mounting to the city by a path up Moriah, looked so suprisingly small as to prove the grandeur of the scenery. Hereabouts it was, as it is said, and may reasonably be believed, that Jesus mourned over Jerusalem, and told his followers what would become of the noble city which here rose upon their view, crowning the sacred mount, and shining clear against the cloudless sky. Dwellers in our climate cannot conceive of such a sight as Jerusalem seen from the summit of the Mount of Olives. The Moab mountains over towards the Dead Sea, are dressed in the softest hues of purple, lilac and grey. The hill country to the north is almost gaudy with its contrasts of color; its white or grey stones, red soil, and crops of vivid green. But the city is the glory—aloft on the steep—its long lines of wall clearly defining it to the sight, and every minaret and cupola, and almost every stone marked out by the billiant sunshine against the deep blue sky. In the spaces unbuilt on within the walls, are tufts of verdure; and cypresses spring here and there from some convent garden. The green lawns of the Mosque of Omar are spread out small before the eye, with their groups of tiny, gay moving people. If it is now so glorious a place to the eye, what must it have been in the days of its pride! Yet in that day, when every one looked for the exulting blessing, "Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces!" there came instead the lamentation over the Jerusalem that killed the prophets and stoned the messengers of Jehovah, and whose house must be therefore left desolate.

The disciples, looking from hence upon the strength of the walls, the massiveness of the Temple buildings, then springing 480 feet from the bed of the brook below, and the depth and ruggedness of the ravines surrounding the city on three sides, might well ask how these things should be, and how they should be accomplished. On the fourth side, the north, where there is no ravine, the Roman army was encamped. We could now see that rising ground, once covered with the Roman tents, but to-day with corn fields and olive grounds. The Romans encamped one legion on the Mount of Olives; but it could not do any harm to the city; and the only available point of attack—the north side—was guarded by a moat and three walls. The seige was long; so long that men's hearts failed them for fear, and at least one famished woman ate her own child: and at last the city was taken and nearly destroyed; and of the Temple, not one stone was left upon another. How we were in the midst of these scenes to-day! We stood where the doom was pronounced; below us was the camp of the single legion I have mentioned; opposite was the humbled city, with the site of the temple courts; and over to the north was the camp of the enemy.—Here was the whole scene of that "great tribulation, such as was not known from the beginning of the world."

From the summit of Olivet we went down to the scene of that other tribulation—that anguish of mind which had perhaps never been surpassed from the beginning of the world. "When Jesus had spoken these words" (his words of cheer after the last supper) "he went forth," we are told, "with his disciples over the brook Kedron, where was a garden." This garden we entered to-day from the other direction, and left it by crossing the bed of the brook. It is a dreary place now, very unlike what it must have been when "Jesus ofttimes resorted thither with his disciples." It is a plot of ground on a slope above the brook, inclosed with fences of loose stones, and occupied by eight extremely old olive trees—the oldest, I should think, that we saw in all our travels. I do not mean that they could have been growing in the days of Christ. That is supposed to be impossible; though I never could learn what is the greatest age known to be attained by the olive tree. The roots of these trees were supported by little terraces of stones, that neither trees nor soil might be washed down the slope by the winter torrents. But little remains of these once fine trees but hollow trunks and a few straggling branches.

It is with the mind's eye that we must see the filling up of this garden inclosure where Jesus "ofttimes resorted thither"—its orchard of fig, pomegranate and olive trees, and the grass or young springing corn under foot. From every part of it the approach of Judas and his party must have been visible. By their "lanterns and torches and weapons," gleaming in the light, they must have been seen descending the hill from the city gate. The sleeping disciples may not have heeded the lights and footsteps of the multitude; but step by step as it wound down the steep, and then crossed the brook, and turned up to the garden, the victim knew that the hour of his fate drew on.

s may be fabulous. About the site of the Temple there is no oubt; and beyond the walls one meets at every turn assurance of eing where Christ walked and taught, and where the great events f Jewish history took place. Let us go over what I found in one amble; and then my readers will see what it must be to take walks n the neighborhood of Jerusalem.

Leaving the city by the Bethlehem Gate, we descended into the alley of Hinnom or Gehenna. Here there are many tombs cut in he rock, with entrances like door-ways. When I speak of Betha-y, I shall have occasion to describe the tombs of the Jews. It was n this valley, and close by the fountain of Siloam, that, in the days f Jewish idolatry, children passed through the fire, in honor of Mo-loch. Here, in this place of corruption and cruelty, where fires hov-ered about living bodies, and worms preyed on the dead—here was he imagery of terror—"the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched." The scene is very different now. The slopes are erraced, that the winter rains may not wash away the soil; and hese terraces were to-day green with springing wheat; and the spreading olives and fig trees cast their shadows on the rich though stony soil. Streams were led from the pool of Siloam among the fields and gardens; and all looked cool and fresh in the once hellish spot. On the top of the opposite hill was the Field of Blood—the field bought as a burial place for strangers, by the priests to whom Judas returned his bribe. For the burial of strangers it was used in subsequent ages; for pilgrims who died at the Holy City were laid there. It is now no longer inclosed; but a charnel house marks the spot.

The pools all round Jerusalem are beautiful; the cool arching rock roof of some, the weed-tufted sides and clear waters of all, are delicious. The pool of Siloam is still pretty—though less so, no doubt, than when the blind man, sent to wash there, opened his eyes on its sacred stream. The fountain of Siloam is more beauti-ful than the pool. It lies deep in a cave, and must be reached by broad steps which wind down in the shadow. A woman sat to-day in the dim light of reflected sunshine, washing linen in the pool.—Here it was that in days of old the priest came down with his gold-en pitcher to draw water for the temple service; and hither it was that the thought of Milton came when he sang of

Siloa's brook that flowed
Fast by the oracle of God.

We were now in the Valley of Jehoshaphat; and we crossed the bottom of it, where the brook Kedron must run when it runs at all; but it seems to be now merely a winter torrent, and never to have been a constant stream. When we had ascended the opposite side of the valley, we were on the Mount of Olives. The ascent was steep—now among tombs, and now past fields of waving barley, decked with the shade of olive trees. As we ascended, the oppo-site hill seemed to rise, and the city to spread. Two horsemen in the valley below, and a woman with a burden on her head, mount-ing to the city by a path up Moriah, looked so suprisingly small as to prove the grandeur of the scenery. Hereabouts it was, as it is said, and may reasonably be believed, that Jesus mourned over Je-rusalem, and told his followers what would become of the noble city which here rose upon their view, crowning the sacred mount, and shining clear against the cloudless sky. Dwellers in our climate cannot conceive of such a sight as Jerusalem seen from the summit of the Mount of Olives. The Moab mountains over towards the Dead Sea, are dressed in the softest hues of purple, lilac and grey. The hill country to the north is almost gaudy with its contrasts of color; its white or grey stones, red soil, and crops of vivid green. But the city is the glory—aloft on the steep—its long lines of wall clearly defining it to the sight, and every minaret and cupola, and almost every stone marked out by the brilliant sunshine against the deep blue sky. In the spaces unbuilt on within the walls, are tufts of verdure; and cypresses spring here and there from some convent garden. The green lawns of the Mosque of Omar are spread out small before the eye, with their groups of tiny, gay moving people. If it is now so glorious a place to the eye, what must it have been in the days of its pride! Yet in that day, when every one looked for the exulting blessing, "Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces!" there came instead the lamentation over the Jerusalem that killed the prophets and stoned the messengers of Jehovah, and whose house must be therefore left desolate.

The disciples, looking from hence upon the strength of the walls, the massiveness of the Temple buildings, then springing 480 feet from the bed of the brook below, and the depth and ruggedness of the ravines surrounding the city on three sides, might well ask how these things should be, and how they should be accomplished. On the fourth side, the north, where there is no ravine, the Roman army was encamped. We could now see that rising ground, once cov-ered with the Roman tents, but to-day with corn fields and olive grounds. The Romans encamped one legion on the Mount of Olives; but it could not do any harm to the city; and the only available point of attack—the north side—was guarded by a moat and three walls. The seige was long; so long that men's hearts failed them for fear, and at least one famished woman ate her own child: and at last the city was taken and nearly destroyed; and of the Temple, not one stone was left upon another. How we were in the midst of these scenes to-day! We stood where the doom was pronounced; below us was the camp of the single legion I have mentioned; opposite was the humbled city, with the site of the temple courts; and over to the north was the camp of the enemy.—Here was the whole scene of that "great tribulation, such as was not known from the beginning of the world."

From the summit of Olivet we went down to the scene of that other tribulation—that anguish of mind which had perhaps never been surpassed from the beginning of the world. "When Jesus had spoken these words" (his words of cheer after the last supper) "he went forth," we are told, "with his disciples over the brook Kedron, where was a garden." This garden we entered to-day from the other direction, and left it by crossing the bed of the brook. It is a dreary place now, very unlike what it must have been when "Jesus ofttimes resorted thither with his disciples." It is a plot of ground on a slope above the brook, inclosed with fences of loose stones, and occupied by eight extremely old olive trees—the oldest, I should think, that we saw in all our travels. I do not mean that they could have been growing in the days of Christ. That is sup-posed to be impossible; though I never could learn what is the greatest age known to be attained by the olive tree. The roots of these trees were supported by little terraces of stones, that neither trees nor soil might be washed down the slope by the winter tor-rents. But little remains of these once fine trees but hollow trunks and a few straggling branches.

It is with the mind's eye that we must see the filling up of this garden inclosure where Jesus "ofttimes resorted thither"—its orch-ard of fig, pomegranate and olive trees, and the grass or young springing corn under foot. From every part of it the approach of Judas and his party must have been visible. By their "lanterns and torches and weapons," gleaming in the light, they must have been seen descending the hill from the city gate. The sleeping dis-ciples may not have heeded the lights and footsteps of the multi-tude; but step by step as it wound down the steep, and then cross-ed the brook, and turned up to the garden, the victim knew that the hour of his fate drew on.

REORGANIZED CHURCH HISTORICAL DEPT.

By the way the crowd came down we now ascended towards the city, turning aside, however, to skirt the northern wall, instead of returning home through the streets. Not to mention now other things that we saw, we noted much connected with the seige:—the nature of the ground—favorable for the encampment of an army, and the shallow moat under the walls, where the Romans brought two great wooden towers on wheels, that the men in the towers might fight on a level with those on the walls, and throw missiles into the town. This scene of conflict is very quiet now. A crop of barley was ripening under the very walls; and an Arab, with a soft, mild countenance, was filling his water skins at the pool, called the sheep pool, near the Damascus gate. The proud Roman and the despairing Jew were not more unlike each other than this Arab, with his pathetic face, was unlike them both. As he stooped under the dim arches of the rock, and his red cap came into contrast with the dark grey of the still water below, and the green of the dangling weeds over his head, our thoughts were recalled to our own day, and to a sense of the beanty we meet in every nook and corner of the Holy Land.

From this ramble, my readers may see something of what it is to take walks in the neighborhood of Jerusalem.

TRIAL OF THE HEART AND FAITH OF RELIGIONISTS.

By a critical study of the nature of man, it is evident that he is as naturally inclined to be religious as to love life. Consequently there are as many systems of religious faith among men as there are arbitrary powers to enforce them. And as all religion is enforced by power, it becomes one of the first duties of men to search close and know that the only power that is valid is ordained of God, aside from the speculative chicanery of men. First of all, then, to know whether or not a religion is of the true God, it is necessary to inquire into its results. If it terminates in the exaltation and felicity of only a part, not all, of the faithful and obedient, say at once it is not of God, either in temporal or spiritual things.

All mankind at present find this world as full of religion and of as many names and systems as there are crafty, cunning heads to invent them. We try them and find that the more faithful and perseveringly we seek to establish them the stronger we rivet the bands of oppression to the necks of our fellow men, say the great majority of them; while the minor number are the only participants of the facilities or benefits of what is said to be the blessings or advantages of that religion. It is obvious to all observing men that corruption and oppression has given occasion for the rise of so many diversified religious systems of faith, while each successive system has in turn plunged itself into the same or like enormities of its predecessor; and like former religionists have given occasion for some one to say, "there is an Achacan in the camp," and we must reform. And then up starts a new system of faith, and equally as unauthorized of God, to effect a reform from a deform, and each in turn has proved to be as much deformed one as the other, until our world is sickening at the very heart, and the general tendency is to infidelity, and saying there is no God but nature.

Stop, my reader, and consider once more. Don't be too hasty, lest you make rash conclusions. The very ground on which you found your skepticism may be the ground on which you ought to predicate your faith in God, and believe in the truth of divine revelation, as found in the scriptures of the Old and New Testament.—If you will read carefully those sacred books, you will see that the very characteristics of wickedness which you see so prevalent in our world has long since been foretold by the Jewish prophets, Christ and his apostles. Christ says, "by their fruits ye shall know them." Is it now among the people "as it was in the days of Noah?" So Christ said it should be. Is it now as it was in Sodom and Gomorrah in the days of Lot? So Christ said it should be in the days of his coming. Is it now as the apostle Peter foretold, 2d Peter 2d chapt., and as Jude foretold, and as Paul foretold, 2d Thes. 2d chapter? Then set Christ, Peter, Paul and Jude down as prophets and apostles, foretelling events as we live to behold them. Yes, there is John the revelator also worthy of a place in the rank of the rest of the prophets, for he also foretold the present character of things as we behold them; denominating all nations "the beast," (Anti-Christ,) and the first general church "the whore of Babylon," and all Protestant dissenters "harlots," because they (the whore and harlots) have given birth to all the slavery, persecution, oppression and all "the abominations of the earth." Read Rev. 12th, 13th, 14th, 17th and 18th chapters.

Consequently look earnestly for the fulfillment and full accomplishment of the 24th chapter of Isaiah. The world, by the power of God, is to be "turned upside down, and the inhabitants of the earth scattered abroad and burned and few men left; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, and broken the everlasting covenant," (gospel.) Then while the ministers of Babylon are preaching for hire, and her diviners are divining for money, remember that they are only fattening themselves like the bullock for the day of slaughter. And while I write thus saith the spirit, "the day of their calamity is nigh, in which I will speedily rid me of mine enemies."

What then is pure religion? It is to first know that God is, and that he is the framer of all things, and that man is only an agent to administer in things God has ordained for the comfort, felicity and exaltation of all men, with equal handed justice according to their capacity and wants; the minister not to oppress the dependent receiver, or the receiver to oppress the minister. Territory to subsist in, air to breathe, water to drink, and bread to eat, and the time appointed of God to live, are the inalienable rights of every man that God ever caused a mother to give birth to. And whatever earthly power, either political or ecclesiastical, that withholds either or all of the above named rights or any portion of them, so that any one does not enjoy a competent portion thereof, in consequence of the powers that be withholding them, the power is of Anti-Christ, and not of God, who made the world and caused it to be inhabited. To talk of christian landlords, and christian breadlords, (merchants,) who are speculating on the provisions of life to gain a superabundance of that that God has created for the equal enjoyments of all men, you might as well talk of christian waterlords, or christian airlords. They that speculate in land and bread would speculate in air and water if it was possible, and make it as necessary to buy our breath and water by the quart as they do that we should buy our land by the acre or our bread by the pound.

The above named speculations are as righteous a traffic and no more so than it was with the Devil to offer to traffic off the kingdoms of the earth to Christ, tempting him to fall down and worship the Devil, the first great landlord who had gained a clandestine possession by speculative means. Who is so stupid as not to know that the spirit of the love of the "almighty dollar" is the almost only stimulating gas that gives life and energy to all departments of enterprise, both in the political, mechanical and religious world? Take away the love of monopoly and the transcending power known in the avaricious desire of possessing one or many dollars more than another, what would become of all the religion that now dresses the landlords, merchantlords, breadlords, lawlords and religiouslords in silk, scarlet and fine twined linen, with gold neck laces and finger rings, and furnishes them with an extra number of prancing steeds and a great quantity of negro and white slaves to wait on

By the way the crowd came down we now ascended towards the city, turning aside, however, to skirt the northern wall, instead of returning home through the streets. Not to mention now other things that we saw, we noted much connected with the seige:—the nature of the ground—favorable for the encampment of an army, and the shallow moat under the walls, where the Romans brought two great wooden towers on wheels, that the men in the towers might fight on a level with those on the walls, and throw missiles into the town. This scene of conflict is very quiet now. A crop of barley was ripening under the very walls; and an Arab, with a soft, mild countenance, was filling his water skins at the pool, called the sheep pool, near the Damascus gate. The proud Roman and the despairing Jew were not more unlike each other than this Arab, with his pathetic face, was unlike them both. As he stooped under the dim arches of the rock, and his red cap came into contrast with the dark grey of the still water below, and the green of the dangling weeds over his head, our thoughts were recalled to our own day, and to a sense of the beauty we meet in every nook and corner of the Holy Land.

From this ramble, my readers may see something of what it is to take walks in the neighborhood of Jerusalem.

TRIAL OF THE HEART AND FAITH OF RELIGIONISTS.

By a critical study of the nature of man, it is evident that he is as naturally inclined to be religious as to love life. Consequently there are as many systems of religious faith among men as there are arbitrary powers to enforce them. And as all religion is enforced by power, it becomes one of the first duties of men to search close and know that the only power that is valid is ordained of God, aside from the speculative chicanery of men. First of all, then, to know whether or not a religion is of the true God, it is necessary to inquire into its results. If it terminates in the exaltation and felicity of only a part, not all, of the faithful and obedient, say at once it is not of God, either in temporal or spiritual things.

All mankind at present find this world as full of religion and of as many names and systems as there are crafty, cunning heads to invent them. We try them and find that the more faithful and perseveringly we seek to establish them the stronger we rivet the bands of oppression to the necks of our fellow men, say the great majority of them; while the minor number are the only participants of the facilities or benefits of what is said to be the blessings or advantages of that religion. It is obvious to all observing men that corruption and oppression has given occasion for the rise of so many diversified religious systems of faith, while each successive system has in turn plunged itself into the same or like enormities of its predecessor; and like former religionists have given occasion for some one to say, "there is an Achacan in the camp," and we must reform. And then up starts a new system of faith, and equally as unauthorized of God, to effect a reform from a deform, and each in turn has proved to be as much deformed one as the other, until our world is sickening at the very heart, and the general tendency is to infidelity, and saying there is no God but nature.

Stop, my reader, and consider once more. Don't be too hasty, lest you make rash conclusions. The very ground on which you found your skepticism may be the ground on which you ought to predicate your faith in God, and believe in the truth of divine revelation, as found in the scriptures of the Old and New Testament.—If you will read carefully those sacred books, you will see that the very characteristics of wickedness which you see so prevalent in our world has long since been foretold by the Jewish prophets, Christ and his apostles. Christ says, "by their fruits ye shall know them." Is it now among the people "as it was in the days of Noah?" So Christ said it should be. Is it now as it was in Sodom and Gomorrah in the days of Lot? So Christ said it should be in the days of his coming. Is it now as the apostle Peter foretold, 2d Peter 2d chapt., and as Jude foretold, and as Paul foretold 2d Thes. 2d chapter? Then set Christ, Peter, Paul and Jude down as prophets and apostles, foretelling events as we live to behold them. Yes, there is John the revelator also worthy of a place in the rank of the rest of the prophets, for he also foretold the present character of things as we behold them; denominating all nations "the beast," (Anti-Christ,) and the first general church "the whore of Babylon," and all Protestant dissenters "harlots," because they (the whore and harlots) have given birth to all the slavery, persecution, oppression and all "the abominations of the earth." Read Rev. 12th, 13th, 14th, 17th and 18th chapters.

Consequently look earnestly for the fulfillment and full accomplishment of the 24th chapter of Isaiah. The world, by the power of God, is to be "turned upside down, and the inhabitants of the earth scattered abroad and burned and few men left; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, and broken the everlasting covenant," (gospel.) Then while the ministers of Babylon are preaching for hire, and her diviners are divining for money, remember that they are only fattening themselves like the bullock for the day of slaughter. And while I write thus saith the spirit, "the day of their calamity is nigh, in which I will speedily rid me of mine enemies."

What then is pure religion? It is to first know that God is, and that he is the framer of all things, and that man is only an agent to administer in things God has ordained for the comfort, felicity and exaltation of all men, with equal handed justice according to their capacity and wants; the minister not to oppress the dependent receiver, or the receiver to oppress the minister. Territory to subsist in, air to breathe, water to drink, and bread to eat, and the time appointed of God to live, are the inalienable rights of every man that God ever caused a mother to give birth to. And whatever earthly power, either political or ecclesiastical, that withholds either or all of the above named rights or any portion of them, so that any one does not enjoy a competent portion thereof, in consequence of the powers that be withholding them, the power is of Anti-Christ, and not of God, who made the world and caused it to be inhabited. To talk of christian landlords, and christian breadlords, (merchants,) who are speculating on the provisions of life to gain a superabundance of that that God has created for the equal enjoyments of all men, you might as well talk of christian waterlords, or christian airlords. They that speculate in land and bread would speculate in air and water if it was possible, and make it as necessary to buy our breath and water by the quart as they do that we should buy our land by the acre or our bread by the pound.

The above named speculations are as righteous a traffic and no more so than it was with the Devil to offer to traffic off the kingdoms of the earth to Christ, tempting him to fall down and worship the Devil, the first great landlord who had gained a clandestine possession by speculative means. Who is so stupid as not to know that the spirit of the love of the "almighty dollar" is the almost only stimulating gas that gives life and energy to all departments of enterprise, both in the political, mechanical and religious world? Take away the love of monopoly and the transcending power known in the avaricious desire of possessing one or many dollars more than another, what would become of all the religion that now dresses the landlords, merchantlords, breadlords, lawlords and religiouslords in silk, scarlet and fine twined linen, with gold neck laces and finger rings, and furnishes them with an extra number of prancing steeds and a great quantity of negro and white slaves to wait on them? Ah, me thinks if their religion did not do all this it would be abandoned at once as of no worth. Consequently it originated in the love of gold and not of God, which proves to a fraction that such religionists are "lovers of pleasure" and not lovers of God.—God and his ways are not in all their ways. The abject heathen have approximated as near to God as such religionists who write the name of Christ on all they do.

Who does not know (historically) that the inhabitants of old ancient Babylon, Egypt, Tyre, Syria, Sidon or Nineveh were as happy a people, and tyranny and oppression was no more known among them in their day than it now is in the best so called christian nations on the earth? What real good moral reform has the (falsely so called) christian religion done for our world? I say NONE!—Christian nations oppress their own subjects, and one christian nation declares an offensive and aggressive war against another christian nation to slaughter one another. What do the heathens more? Christian nations enslave one another and their own subjects.—Shame! Christians enact laws to legalize a brother christian aristocrat to oppress a christian peasant. Ridiculous!! Christians pretend to love God, and not love his brother as he loves himself.—Hypocrisy!!! Christians say that the gospel is not, in its priesthood, experience, ordinances, practice and power, what it was 1800 years ago. A slander on the Father, Son and Holy Ghost!!!!—Oh! damnation, why slumberest thou!! Ye angels who hold the keys of judgment and the seven vials of the wrath of God to pour out on "Mystery Babylon," hold! hold!! until the servants of God are sealed in their foreheads by the priesthood of God, and their hearts are "sealed with the holy spirit of promise unto the day of redemption."

JOHN E. PAGE.

"The Olive Branch," &c.—This is a very small paper just issued from Kirtland, Ohio, by H. Aldrich, to be published monthly, at one dollar a year. We presume it is devoted to Brewsterism, and it exhibits more talent and better manners than McLellin's defunct Ensign, and will probably be published longer than that was. Though it is the representative of some fundamental errors, it is at least in the hands of men who have some degree of moral honesty. And though we cannot bid them God speed, we wish them no mishap.

Better to be alone than in bad company.—No doubt of that, but the trouble is that many people are not certain of avoiding bad company by being alone. Indeed solitude, with them, makes the bad company quite unavoidable.

The Principles of Nature, her Divine Revelations, and a voice to mankind by and through Andrew Jackson Davis, the Poughkeepsie Seer and Clairvoyant, New York, S. S. Lyon and William Fishbough, 1847.

(Continued from last week.)

The doctrine of this work is, that God is no God at all, but only a kind of magnetic influence pervading all space: following the idea of Pope that he is merely the soul of the universe, and of the Deistical philosophers that he is mere intelligence or mind, of which the material world is the body. Following tradition, and guessing when tradition is silent or contradictory, it locates the cradle of the human race in Asia; page 352; whereas its true location in fact, and according to the true interpretation of Genesis, is in the Mississippi valley.

Discarding altogether the account of the creation of man, it holds forth the idea that he is only an improvement of the lower order of animals by material progression; that men are but an improved stock of baboons and monkeys. Yet pretending to give credit to the early Mosaic records, treats the history of Cain and Abel as a history of two early nations. Having learned by "Stephens' incidents," &c., that a vast amount of remains of antiquity exist in Yucatan, &c., he accounts for that by planting a great and highly civilized nation there in a very early age. The learned and religious will doubtless give him credit for it, and it will help to confirm them in the faith of his work. But Joseph Smith, who wrote and published the origin of those antiquities and the history of their authors ten years before Stephens ever visited them, or civilized men knew of their existence, will be looked on by the same men as an impostor, because he got his knowledge not by mesmerism, but by the direct power of God.

If Mr. S. S. Lyon, or his man Davis, had given a description of extensive cities and populous nations at some early day in a remote part of the earth unvisited by civilized man in modern times, and at a period subsequent to the publication of his book some distinguished statesman, artist, or antiquarian had found the ruins of their temples, palaces, fortresses and architectural works of all kinds, and found painted and sculptured on their walls the history of them concording with the book thus previously written, then he would have presented one evidence of divine revelation, the same which Joseph Smith did present. On page 446 he says:—

"The book that follows Judges appears to have been written by the same person who wrote Judges and Joshua; because the connexion is clear, and the composition uniform and historical. As to its truthfulness, nothing needs to be said; for I find NO SUCH DISCREPANCIES in the expressions and PUNCTUATION between the ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPTS of this book and our present mutilated versions, as appear so conspicuous in other books."

The originals had no punctuation whatever. Punctuation is a modern improvement in writing, and not found in any ancient manuscript. All ancient writings were written continuous, without points, distinction of capital letters, or division of words, and gives the first verse of Ruth in English print, as follows:—

"nowitcametopassinthedayswhenthejudgesruledthattherewasafaminein thelandandacertainmanofbethlehemjudahwenttosojourninthecountryofmoabheandhiswifeandhistwosons"

Consequently Mr. Davis' divine revelations are founded on a falsehood. It is so difficult to write a book purporting to be of ancient origin, or to treat solely of ancient times without any allusion to modern facts, discoveries or sciences, that when the Book of Mormon was published the literati challenged its trial on that test.—There are many hundred volumes of historic novels and drama, written by the best writers of the age and of various countries, laying all their scenes in ancient times, but every one betrays the age in which it was written by its allusions to discoveries in science and customs of men peculiar to that particular age. Well did they say if Shakspeare, Pope, Addison, Bulwer, James and Scott could not write a book that should appear to be ancient, Joseph Smith could not.

On this trial, this battle ground thus selected by opponents, the Book of Mormon stood. It stood because it was a real antiquity.—But A. J. Davis, professing to give divine revelations, undertakes to decide the canon of Hebrew scriptures, & gives as a reason in favor of the book of Ruth that the present punctuation corresponds with the original: whereas there is not in existence a copy that comes within 1,600 years of an original, and neither originals or any ancient copies are punctuated at all.

(To be continued.)

☞ The apostates say prophet Strang is about to conquer the Canadas and set up his kingdom, raising a rout with every thing along the lakes. Good! Let their words be true for once, hem? Ah, me thinks if their religion did not do all this it would e abandoned at once as of no worth. Consequently it originated n the love of gold and not of God, which proves to a fraction that uch religionists are "lovers of pleasure" and not lovers of God.— od and his ways are not in all their ways. The abject heathen ave approximated as near to God as such religionists who write he name of Christ on all they do.

Who does not know (historically) that the inhabitants of old ancient Babylon, Egypt, Tyre, Syria, Sidon or Nineveh were as happy a people, and tyranny and oppression was no more known among hem in their day than it now is in the best so called christian nations on the earth? What real good moral reform has the (falsely so alled) christian religion done for our world? I say NONE!— Christian nations oppress their own subjects, and one christian nation declares an offensive and aggressive war against another christian nation to slaughter one another. What do the heathens more? Christian nations enslave one another and their own subjects.— Shame! Christians enact laws to legalize a brother christian aristocrat to oppress a christian peasant. Ridiculous!! Christians pretend to love God, and not love his brother as he loves himself.— Hypocrisy!!! Christians say that the gospel is not, in its priesthood, experience, ordinances, practice and power, what it was 1800 years ago. A slander on the Father, Son and Holy Ghost!!!!— Oh! damnation, why slumberest thou!! Ye angels who hold the keys of judgment and the seven vials of the wrath of God to pour out on "Mystery Babylon," hold! hold!! until the servants of God are sealed in their foreheads by the priesthood of God, and their hearts are "sealed with the holy spirit of promise unto the day of redemption."

JOHN E. PAGE.

"The Olive Branch," &c.—This is a very small paper just issued from Kirtland, Ohio, by H. Aldrich, to be published monthly, at one dollar a year. We presume it is devoted to Brewsterism, and it exhibits more talent and better manners than McLellin's defunct Ensign, and will probably be published longer than that was. Though it is the representative of some fundamental errors, it is at least in the hands of men who have some degree of moral honesty. And though we cannot bid them God speed, we wish them no mishap.

Better to be alone than in bad company.—No doubt of that, but the trouble is that many people are not certain of avoiding bad company by being alone. Indeed solitude, with them, makes the bad company quite unavoidable.

The Principles of Nature, her Divine Revelations, and a voice to mankind by and through Andrew Jackson Davis, the Poughkeepsie Seer and Clairvoyant, New York, S. S. Lyon and William Fishbough, 1847.

(Continued from last week.)

The doctrine of this work is, that God is no God at all, but only a kind of magnetic influence pervading all space: following the idea of Pope that he is merely the soul of the universe, and of the Deistical philosophers that he is mere intelligence or mind, of which the material world is the body. Following tradition, and guessing when tradition is silent or contradictory, it locates the cradle of the human race in Asia; page 352; whereas its true location in fact, and according to the true interpretation of Genesis, is in the Mississippi valley.

Discarding altogether the account of the creation of man, it holds forth the idea that he is only an improvement of the lower order of animals by material progression; that men are but an improved stock of baboons and monkeys. Yet pretending to give credit to the early Mosaic records, treats the history of Cain and Abel as a history of two early nations. Having learned by "Stephens' incidents," &c., that a vast amount of remains of antiquity exist in Yucatan, &c., he accounts for that by planting a great and highly civilized nation there in a very early age. The learned and religious will doubtless give him credit for it, and it will help to confirm them in the faith of his work. But Joseph Smith, who wrote and published the origin of those antiquities and the history of their authors ten years before Stephens ever visited them, or civilized men knew of their existence, will be looked on by the same men as an impostor, because he got his knowledge not by mesmerism, but by the direct power of God.

If Mr. S. S. Lyon, or his man Davis, had given a description of extensive cities and populous nations at some early day in a remote part of the earth unvisited by civilized man in modern times, and at a period subsequent to the publication of his book some distinguished statesman, artist, or antiquarian had found the ruins of their temples, palaces, fortresses and architectural works of all kinds, and found painted and sculptured on their walls the history of them concording with the book thus previously written, then he would have presented one evidence of divine revelation, the same which Joseph Smith did present. On page 446 he says:—

"The book that follows Judges appears to have been written by the same person who wrote Judges and Joshua: because the connexion is clear, and the composition uniform and historical. As to its truthfulness, nothing needs to be said; for I find NO SUCH DISCREPANCIES in the expressions and PUNCTUATION between the ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPTS of this book and our present mutilated versions, as appear so conspicuous in other books."

The originals had no punctuation whatever. Punctuation is a modern improvement in writing, and not found in any ancient manuscript. All ancient writings were written continuous, without points, distinction of capital letters, or division of words, and gives the first verse of Ruth in English print, as follows:—

"nowitcametopassinthedayswhenthejudgesruledthattherewasafamin einthelandandacertainmanofbethlehemjudahwenttosojourninthecount ryofmoabheandhiswifeandhistwosons"

Consequently Mr. Davis' divine revelations are founded on a falsehood. It is so difficult to write a book purporting to be of ancient origin, or to treat solely of ancient times without any allusion to modern facts, discoveries or sciences, that when the Book of Mormon was published the literati challenged its trial on that test.— There are many hundred volumes of historic novels and drama, written by the best writers of the age and of various countries, laying all their scenes in ancient times, but every one betrays the age in which it was written by its allusions to discoveries in science and customs of men peculiar to that particular age. Well did they say if Shakspeare, Pope, Addison, Bulwer, James and Scott could not write a book that should appear to be ancient, Joseph Smith could not.

On this trial, this battle ground thus selected by opponents, the Book of Mormon stood. It stood because it was a real antiquity.— But A. J. Davis, professing to give divine revelations, undertakes to decide the canon of Hebrew scriptures, & gives as a reason in favor of the book of Ruth that the present punctuation corresponds with the original: whereas there is not in existence a copy that comes within 1,600 years of an original, and neither originals or any ancient copies are punctuated at all.

(To be continued.)

☛ The apostates say prophet Strang is about to conquer the Canadas and set up his kingdom, raising a rout with every thing along the lakes. Good! Let their words be true for once.

From the Harbinger.

THE DISTINCTIVE BEING OF GOD.—No. 1.

The idea which many, if not most, form of the existence of God, is altogether vague and unsatisfactory. They go [no] farther than

"The poor Indian, whose untutored mind
Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind."

An idea of the pure, the infinite, the eternal, is doubtless associated with the Holy One in all devout, instructed minds. We are conscious of it in the minds of a tempest—when viewing such scenes as the cataract of Niagara, or the starry heavens! This feeling pervades the 139th Psalm: "If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there, if I take the wings of the morning and fly into the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, Surely darkness shall cover me, even the night shall be light about me; the darkness and the light are both alike to thee." This feeling may flow out in a flood of emotion; it, at times, overwhelms us with a consciousness of the presence, the power and majesty of Jehovah! With adoring reverence we exclaim, "Thou art over all, God blessed forever!!" An apprehension of the dreadful majesty of God seems to be the ground of this emotion. It may fill with thrilling ecstacy our utmost capacity for joy; entrance the mind with moral wonder, or make us, for the moment, rich to all the intents of bliss.

Still, we ask, is this the only, or most definite idea, which the facts of creation and the teachings of Holy Scriptures furnish us of God? Those, who, imbued with philosophic pride, endeavor to advance a step beyond our simple devotional feelings towards God, seem to regard him as everywhere, and yet, in fact, nowhere! The greatest of all beings, and yet, in reality, no being at all! God Almighty, and yet only a principle of necessity or fate! They may, in words, make him "God over all," and yet, make him only the "soul of the world;" sustaining a relation to the universe that our imagined ghostly souls do to our bodies! They place him in heaven, and yet make him a subtle, ethereal essence, like caloric or electricity, pervading alike all created things! To such absurdity does vain philosophy reduce the primary emotions of piety!—Instead of reaching the true point of comparison between man's work and God's—instead of saying that an engineer, for instance, who constructs his engine, sustains a relation to it that God does to his all comprehending machinery of worlds and systems, they mix the eternal Creator up with his creatures—they confound him with his own creation, as human life is with the human body! They themselves are above and distinct from their (so called) creations; but all the distinctive being of God Almighty is exhausted, absorbed, or lost in his! They can destroy the proudest product of their own skill, and yet exist in all their great capacity to design and execute other wonders; but God, forsooth, is identified with his works as our lives are with our bodies! I mean to say that they claim a distinction for themselves which they refuse to concede to the "everlasting God!" If it were done understandingly it would be blasphemy.—They can find no shadow of reason for it till they find their own personality absorbed or lost in the results of their own agency.—When Fulton, for instance, the builder of the steamboat, loses all identity except his spirit in the boat—when Whitney's body becomes a cotton jenny, and he only its soul, then philosophers may talk of God "as the soul of the world!" Such philosophy is too shallow and too blind to be adapted to any state of society but that of the dark ages, or heathenism. To that dread, dark state, we do, in fact, trace this philosophy, falsely so called. It is only worthy of its origin.

I am aware of the strenuous nature of my theme—yet having been led, by a regular course of pulpit instructions, to a more definite conception than I had before attained, I feel constrained to present it to the household more publicly. Prof. Bush, of the New Church Repository, giving the Swedenborgian view, has been quoted with no note but of aprobation in the Advent Herald. I humbly conceive that if Swedenborgianism be, so far true—if this primary element of that theory of Biblical interpretation be true, then it follows rationally, if not necessarily, that other parts of the system are also true. The Professor has quoted scripture! Yes; but so did Satan in the temptation of Jesus. Each, however, omitted the parts essential to a correct view of truth. As I need not inquire into the motive for introducing such an essential portion of Swedenborg's anti-Christian theory among us, so I shall not be deterred by any reflection on my motives from presenting a counter, Scripture view, and thus "raising a standard against" it

If the Swedenborgian notion of God be true, then it follows, necessarily, that we ought to take the corresponding view of the atonement, the second advent and the resurrection. It is understood to reduce the orthodox view—the view expressed in Scripture language of the resurrection to a figure, and of the atonement to a fable! It ought, therefore, to be examined by all before being entertained for a moment.

J. B. COOK.

New Bedford, July 3d.

☞ Christ and his apostles preached the gospel without salary, and so do his servants in these days. When Judas apostatized he said, "for so many pieces of silver I will deliver him (Christ) unto you." And so have all apostates done since. J. E. P.

Book of Mormon for sale at this office. Also Thompson's Evidences, and an assortment of tracts.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

CUT AND POLISHED STONE,

Of superior quality and finish, and of various sorts, constantly on hand and for sale at the Voree quarry. Caps, Sills, Tombstones, Doorsteps, Imposing stones, &c., made to order on short notice.

Voree, April 27th, 1848.

From the Harbinger.

THE DISTINCTIVE BEING OF GOD.—No. 1.

The idea which many, if not most, form of the existence of God, is altogether vague and unsatisfactory. They go [no] farther than

"The poor Indian, whose untutored mind
Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind."

An idea of the pure, the infinite, the eternal, is doubtless associated with the Holy One in all devout, instructed minds. We are conscious of it in the minds of a tempest—when viewing such scenes as the cataract of Niagara, or the starry heavens! This feeling pervades the 139th Psalm: "If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there, if I take the wings of the morning and fly into the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, Surely darkness shall cover me, even the night shall be light about me; the darkness and the light are both alike to thee." This feeling may flow out in a flood of emotion; it, at times, overwhelms us with a consciousness of the presence, the power and majesty of Jehovah! With adoring reverence we exclaim, "Thou art over all, God blessed forever!!" An apprehension of the dreadful majesty of God seems to be the ground of this emotion. It may fill with thrilling ecstacy our utmost capacity for joy; entrance the mind with moral wonder, or make us, for the moment, rich to all the intents of bliss.

Still, we ask, is this the only, or most definite idea, which the facts of creation and the teachings of Holy Scriptures furnish us of God? Those, who, imbued with philosophic pride, endeavor to advance a step beyond our simple devotional feelings towards God, seem to regard him as everywhere, and yet, in fact, nowhere! The greatest of all beings, and yet, in reality, no being at all! God Almighty, and yet only a principle of necessity or fate! They may, in words, make him "God over all," and yet, make him only the "soul of the world;" sustaining a relation to the universe that our imagined ghostly souls do to our bodies! They place him in heaven, and yet make him a subtle, ethereal essence, like caloric or electricity, pervading alike all created things! To such absurdity does vain philosophy reduce the primary emotions of piety!—Instead of reaching the true point of comparison between man's work and God's—instead of saying that an engineer, for instance, who constructs his engine, sustains a relation to it that God does to his all comprehending machinery of worlds and systems, they mix the eternal Creator up with his creatures—they confound him with his own creation, as human life is with the human body! They themselves are above and distinct from their (so called) creations; but all the distinctive being of God Almighty is exhausted, absorbed, or lost in his! They can destroy the proudest product of their own skill, and yet exist in all their great capacity to design and execute other wonders; but God, forsooth, is identified with his works as our lives are with our bodies! I mean to say that they claim a distinction for themselves which they refuse to concede to the "everlasting God!". If it were done understandingly it would be blasphemy.—They can find no shadow of reason for it till they find their own personality absorbed or lost in the results of their own agency.—When Fulton, for instance, the builder of the steamboat, loses all identity except his spirit in the boat—when Whitney's body becomes a cotton jenny, and he only its soul, then philosophers may talk of God "as the soul of the world!" Such philosophy is too shallow and too blind to be adapted to any state of society but that of the dark ages, or heathenism. To that dread, dark state, we do, in fact, trace this philosophy, falsely so called. It is only worthy of its origin.

I am aware of the strenuous nature of my theme—yet having been led, by a regular course of pulpit instructions, to a more definite conception than I had before attained, I feel constrained to present it to the household more publicly. Prof. Bush, of the New Church Repository, giving the Swedenborgian view, has been quoted with no note but of aprobation in the Advent Herald. I humbly conceive that if Swedenborgianism be, so far true—if this primary element of that theory of Biblical interpretation be true, then it follows rationally, if not necessarily, that other parts of the system are also true. The Professor has quoted scripture! Yes; but so did Satan in the temptation of Jesus. Each, however, omitted the parts essential to a correct view of truth. As I need not inquire into the motive for introducing such an essential portion of Swedenborg's anti-Christian theory among us, so I shall not be deterred by any reflection on my motives from presenting a counter, Scripture view, and thus "raising a standard against" it

If the Swedenborgian notion of God be true, then it follows, necessarily, that we ought to take the corresponding view of the atonement, the second advent and the resurrection. It is understood to reduce the orthodox view—the view expressed in Scripture language of the resurrection to a figure, and of the atonement to a fable! It ought, therefore, to be examined by all before being entertained for a moment.

J. B. COOK.

New Bedford, July 3d.

☞ Christ and his apostles preached the gospel without salary, and so do his servants in these days. When Judas apostatized he said, "for so many pieces of silver I will deliver him (Christ) unto you." And so have all apostates done since. J. E. P.

Book of Mormon for sale at this office. Also Thompson's Evidences, and an assortment of tracts.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

CUT AND POLISHED STONE,

Of superior quality and finish, and of various sorts, constantly on hand and for sale at the Voree quarry. Caps, Sills, Tombstones, Doorsteps, Imposing stones, &c., made to order on short notice.

Voree, April 27th, 1848.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 25.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, SEPT. 7, 1848. [WHOLE No. 89.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

URIM, THUMMIM AND ORACLE.

I call my readers to the consideration of the articles and uses of Urim, Thummim and Oracle. They are very little considered, and, consequently, less understood by this (would be called) very pious and religiously wise age. The reasons for doing so are as follows:—Since the Book of Mormon came forth through the agency of Joseph Smith, the inquiry is, how did Joseph translate it, he being but an unlearned youth of only 17 years of age, when an angel of God made manifest to him the place where certain ancient records were deposited, inscribed on metallic plates having the appearance of gold? This manifestation was on the evening of the 21st of Sept., 1823. On the morning of the 22d of Sept., 1827, he obtained the plates. And from that time until the spring season of 1830 he was employed (under the most precarious circumstances, in consequence of sectarian prejudices and religious persecution) in translating them, by means of what is called in the book "the interpreters placed in the two rims of of a bow," called by the ancients "Urim and Thummim."

When hearing this, many of the would be called wise say, "Urim and Thummim! Urim and Thummim!! what do you mean by Urim and Thummim?" Evidently signifying that they, with all their pretended pious study of the Bible, had not yet acquired the knowledge of the fact that the Bible recognized such articles and their uses. The grand reason why is, the religious study of the age tends to ignorance instead of a knowledge of the things of God. And this ignorance will still prevail over the minds of men until they can rally around them moral courage enough to read, think and investigate the Bible for themselves, independent of the trammeling influence of men that are self-sent to preach God and the things of God, that they in reality know nothing about, only "what they know naturally like natural brute beasts," who are made to be taken and destroyed, calling themselves "Reverend," a title of dignity which is applied to God only, and that but once in all the Bible—Psalm cxi. 9.

The reader is requested to read carefully the 28th chapt. of Ex., and keep up a proper distinction there is in the "breastplate," "ephod," "robe," "broidered coat," "mitre" and "girdle;" and notice that there are 14 stones spoken of, 12 of them were to be set in the breastplate, each one to have inscribed on it a distinct name of the twelve names of the tribes of Israel. The other two (both onyx stones) were each to have six distinct names, being in all the twelve names of the twelve tribes of Israel. These two stones were to be "set upon the shoulders of the ephod" in the breastplate.

"And thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment the Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the Lord: and Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart before the Lord continually." Exodus xxviii. 30.

"And Moses did as the Lord commanded him; and the assembly was gathered together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. And Moses said unto the congregation, This is the thing which the Lord commanded to be done. And Moses brought Aaron and his sons, and washed them with water. And he put upon him the coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it upon him therewith. And he put the breastplate upon him; also he put in the breastplate the Urim and the Thummim." Lev. viii. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

The reader will do well to notice critically the use of the stones, as expressed in the following verse in this case:—

"And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him, after the judgment of Urim before the Lord: at his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation." Numbers xxvii. 21.

Here then it is clearly manifest that these two stones were ordained of God as a means through which God was to give counsel to his people, when to go out and when to come in as a nation or people, when inquired of by his regular appointed authority.

"And of Levi he said, Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one." Deut. xxxiii. 8.

By this we are to understand that none were considered "holy," and worthy to bear the Urim and Thummim but those whom God approved, independent of the election of the people. Let the Brighamites here take the hint that Joseph Smith was constituted a seer by the call of God, and by the power of God he was made to be a prophet to use the Urim and Thummim, and not by the people, by which B. Young assumes to fill Joseph's place in the church as a seer. O moonshine! Brigham's case is even worse than was Saul's, as appears in the next quotation. For Saul was legally appointed king over Israel by Samuel the prophet. And by his wickedness he lost a right, which, if he proved faithful to God, belonged to him. And that was, to have received an answer from God through the Urim, but having lost that privilege he was driven to the experiment of seeking a witch to obtain of her what God would not give him. Brigham, will you do so, seeing you have no legal claim on God?

"And when Saul inquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets. Then said Saul unto his servants, Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and inquire of her. And his servants said to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at Endor." 1 Samuel xxviii. 6, 7.

By this I find again that the Urim was the means by which the legal authorities of Israel were to inquire of God and obtain his mind in any important event that concerned the destiny of Israel, God's chosen and peculiar people.

"And of the children of the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai: which took a wife of the daughters of Barzillai the Gileadite, and was called after their

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 25.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, SEPT. 7, 1848. [WHOLE No. 89.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

URIM, THUMMIM AND ORACLE.

I call my readers to the consideration of the articles and uses of Urim, Thummim and Oracle. They are very little considered, and, consequently, less understood by this (would be called) very pious and religiously wise age. The reasons for doing so are as follows:—Since the Book of Mormon came forth through the agency of Joseph Smith, the inquiry is, how did Joseph translate it, he being but an unlearned youth of only 17 years of age, when an angel of God made manifest to him the place where certain ancient records were deposited, inscribed on metallic plates having the appearance of gold? This manifestation was on the evening of the 21st of Sept., 1823. On the morning of the 22d of Sept., 1827, he obtained the plates. And from that time until the spring season of 1830 he was employed (under the most precarious circumstances, in consequence of sectarian prejudices and religious persecution) in translating [illegible] by means of what is called in the book "the interpreters placed in the [illegible]lms of of a bow," called by the ancients "Urim and Thummim."

When hearing this, many of the would be called wise say, "Urim and Thummim! Urim and Thummim!! what do you mean by Urim and Thummim?" Evidently signifying that they, with all their pretended pious study of the Bible, had not yet acquired the knowledge of the fact that the Bible recognized such articles and their uses. The grand reason why is, the religious study of the age tends to ignorance instead of a knowledge of the things of God. And this ignorance will still prevail over the minds of men until they can rally around them moral courage enough to read, think and investigate the Bible for themselves, independent of the trammeling influence of men that are self-sent to preach God and the things of God, that they in reality know nothing about, only "what they know naturally like natural brute beasts," who are made to be taken and destroyed, calling themselves "Reverend," a title of dignity which is applied to God only, and that but once in all the Bible—Psalm cxi. 9.

The reader is requested to read carefully the 28th chapt. of Ex., and keep up a proper distinction there is in the "breastplate," "ephod," "robe," "broidered coat," "mitre" and "girdle;" and notice that there are 14 stones spoken of, 12 of them were to be set in the breastplate, each one to have inscribed on it a distinct name of the twelve names of the tribes of Israel. The other two (both onyx stones) were each to have six distinct names, being in all the twelve names of the twelve tribes of Israel. These two stones were to be "set upon the shoulders of the ephod" in the breastplate.

"And thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment the Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the Lord: and Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart before the Lord continually." Exodus xxviii. 30.

"And Moses did as the Lord commanded him; and the assembly was gathered together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. And Moses said unto the congregation, This is the thing which the Lord commanded to be done. And Moses brought Aaron and his sons, and washed them with water. And he put upon him the coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it upon him therewith. And he put the breastplate upon him; also he put in the breastplate the Urim and the Thummim." Lev. viii. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

The reader will do well to notice critically the use of the stones, as expressed in the following verse in this case:—

"And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him, after the judgment of Urim before the Lord: at his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation." Numbers xxvii. 21.

Here then it is clearly manifest that these two stones were ordained of God as a means through which God was to give counsel to his people, when to go out and when to come in as a nation or people, when inquired of by his regular appointed authority.

"And of Levi he said, Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one." Deut. xxxiii. 8.

By this we are to understand that none were considered "holy," and worthy to bear the Urim and Thummim but those whom God approved, independent of the election of the people. Let the Brighamites here take the hint that Joseph Smith was constituted a seer by the call of God, and by the power of God he was made to be a prophet to use the Urim and Thummim, and not by the people, by which B. Young assumes to fill Joseph's place in the church as a seer. O moonshine! Brigham's case is even worse than was Saul's, as appears in the next quotation. For Saul was legally appointed king over Israel by Samuel the prophet. And by his wickedness he lost a right, which, if he proved faithful to God, belonged to him. And that was, to have received an answer from God through the Urim, but having lost that privilege he was driven to the experiment of seeking a witch to obtain of her what God would not give him. Brigham, will you do so, seeing you have no legal claim on God?

"And when Saul inquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets. Then said Saul unto his servants, Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and inquire of her. And his servants said to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at Endor." 1 Samuel xxviii. 6, 7.

By this I find again that the Urim was the means by which the legal authorities of Israel were to inquire of God and obtain his mind in any important event that concerned the destiny of Israel, God's chosen and peculiar people.

"And of the children of the priests: the children of Habaiah, the children of Koz, the children of Barzillai: which took a wife of the daughters of Barzillai the Gileadite, and was called after their name: These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found: therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood. And the Tirshatha (Governor) said unto them that they should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and with .Thummim." Ezra ii. 61, 62, 63.

This event transpired at the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, some 520 years before Christ. I learn by this that the Governor (who had the charge of the affairs of the Jews at that time) recognized the Urim and Thummim as being the appointed means of God whereby the truth of any matter was to be obtained, so much so that the Governor rejected certain men from a privilege which belonged to the legal priests, to eat of the holy things; but as the family register could not be found of those applicants, they were set aside "as polluted," and "put from the priesthood" because they had lost, in their captivity, the Urim and Thummim.

My God! I wonder how many of the priests of this nineteenth century would be rejected as polluted and put from the priesthood if they were tested by the same means. In all of my research into the history and traditions of the Jews, I have as yet been unable to learn that God has ever restored unto them the Urim and Thummim since they lost it in the Babylonish captivity: Therefore in this is fulfilled the following prophecy:—

"For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim." Hosea Chap. iii. 4.

Therefore the next verse remains to be fulfilled:—

"Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days." Hosea iii. 5.

The 7th chapter of Nehemiah, 63d, 64th and 65th verses, contains the same account as quoted above from Ezra. I will now consider the ephod. The reader will doubtless keep in mind that the Urim and Thummim were attached to the ephod, it being a peculiar garment, designed for the priests only to wear, it being the priests duty to look on the Urim and Thummim to inquire of the Lord for kings, &c.

"And David said to Abiathar the priest, Ahimelech's son, I pray thee, bring me hither the ephod. And Abiathar brought thither the ephod to David. And David inquired at the Lord, saying, Shall I pursue after this troop: shall I overtake them? And he answered him, Pursue; for thou shalt surely overtake them, and without fail recover all." 1st Samuel xxx. 7, 8.

By this some understand that king David looked on the stones and obtained the answer of the Lord for himself. It may be so, but I understand that Abiathar looked at the request of David, and the Lord gave the response to Abiathar, and he gave it to David; for I have found above that the ephod and the Urim and Thummim were provided for the priests of the tribe of Levi to wear and use. Whereas David was of the tribe of Judah, of which there was nothing said that that tribe was eligible to the Aaronic priesthood. Consequently, not eligible to wear the priest's ephod; therefore, not eligible to look on the stones to obtain the mind of the Lord; for if he could do one, he of course could do the other. There was a linen ephod, of quite an inferior importance, that David wore. 2 Sam. vi. 14. 1 Chron. xv. 27. Samuel, when a child, wore a linen ephod. 1 Sam. ii. 18.

I will now consider the term oracle. 1st. It evidently signifies the word of God. 2d. It signifies the place appointed of God to give his word. 3d. It signifies the means by which his word is given. Oracle signifies the word of God. Read Acts 7th chapter. We have there the sermon of Stephen, which he preached to the Jews when he was stoned to death by them. Who, in a state of apostacy, became as obnoxious to the truth as are the Gentiles of the nineteenth century, and equally destitute of the spirit of truth as were the Jews. On this occasion Stephen said of Moses, "who received the lively oracles (living word of God) to give unto us," (Israel.) 38th verse. Paul, although he held the garments of them that stoned Stephen, was brought to express the same fact, that to the Jews, or the circumcision, was "committed the oracles of God." Rom. iii. 1, 2. Paul to the Hebrews says:—

"For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat." Heb. v. 12.

When I consider the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, with its priesthood, and spiritual gifts, and blessings, as preached by Jesus, and Paul, and the rest of the apostles, can I be considered harsh in saying that the above text is as applicable to the Gentile churches now as it was to the Hebrews then? "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." 1 Peter iv. 11. That is, speak the truth as surely and certainly as the Urim and Thummim, or a divinely inspired prophet or a seer, (one that looks on the Urim and Thummim, and obtains the word of God,) or as the holy tabernacle in the wilderness, or as the holy sanctum sanctorum, which was built by Solomon in the temple, which is called the oracle six times over. Read 1st Kings vi. All the prophets from Moses to Malachi combined to say that God will, in the last dispensation of the fullness of times, set his hand to "gather Israel and Judah, and BUILD THEM AS AT THE FIRST." That is, he will do it by the same means and measures. Consequently he must restore to them prophets and seers and holy sanctuaries as at the first, together with the Urim and Thummim, by which they may know who are eligible to the priest's office, and eat of the most holy things, and minister in the priest's office forever before the Lord, "never more to be plucked up or thrown down" to all eternity.

What a motley and ghastly set of ignorant, self-condemned, abashed mass of creatures a world of Gentile self-made priests will appear laden down with their lying commentaries and old musty sermons, filled with all kinds of the most vulgar contradictions and nonsense that the fallen depraved human mind can conceive of, when they are brought to stand before the priests of the true Israel of God, called, qualified and authorized as in days of old, when they once more converse with God through the Urim and Thummim, and receive the unadulterated word of God. JOHN E. PAGE.

COLLATERAL TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTH AND DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.—No. 2.

The Book of Mormon was published in the spring season of 1830, Palmyra, N. Y. It contains a book called the "Book of Ether," giving an abridged account of a people called in the book "Jaradites," who emigrated to this continent (America) from the tower of Babel at the time of the confounding of the languages, as spoken of in the book of Genesis. This people it appears became very numerous on this land, built many cities and became very rich according to the following account. They were destroyed by the severe judgments of God, in consequence of their wickedness.—Their overthrow and final destruction took place in the latter part of the seventh century before Christ. The forefathers of the American Indians emigrated to this continent from Jerusalem at the commencement of the sixth century before Christ.

"And the whole face of the land northward was covered with inhabitants; and they were exceeding industrious, and they did buy and sell, and traffic one with another, that they might get gain. And they did work in all manner of ore, and they did make gold, and name: These sought their register among those that were reckoned by genealogy, but they were not found: therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood. And the Tirshatha (Governor) said unto them that they should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and with Thummim." Ezra ii. 61, 62, 63.

This event transpired at the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, some 520 years before Christ. I learn by this that the Governor (who had the charge of the affairs of the Jews at that time) recognized the Urim and Thummim as being the appointed means of God whereby the truth of any matter was to be obtained, so much so that the Governor rejected certain men from a privilege which belonged to the legal priests, to eat of the holy things; but as the family register could not be found of those applicants, they were set aside "as polluted," and "put from the priesthood" because they had lost, in their captivity, the Urim and Thummim.

My God! I wonder how many of the priests of this nineteenth century would be rejected as polluted and put from the priesthood if they were tested by the same means. In all of my research into the history and traditions of the Jews, I have as yet been unable to learn that God has ever restored unto them the Urim and Thummim since they lost it in the Babylonish captivity. Therefore in this is fulfilled the following prophecy:—

"For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim." Hosea Chap. iii. 4.

Therefore the next verse remains to be fulfilled:—

"Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days." Hosea iii. 5.

The 7th chapter of Nehemiah, 63d, 64th and 65th verses, contains the same account as quoted above from Ezra. I will now consider the ephod. The reader will doubtless keep in mind that the Urim and Thummim were attached to the ephod, it being a peculiar garment, designed for the priests only to wear, it being the priests duty to look on the Urim and Thummim to inquire of the Lord for kings, &c.

"And David said to Abiathar the priest, Ahimelech's son, I pray thee, bring me hither the ephod. And Abiathar brought thither the ephod to David. And David inquired at the Lord, saying, Shall I pursue after this troop: shall I overtake them? And he answered him, Pursue; for thou shalt surely overtake them, and without fail recover all." 1st Samuel xxx. 7, 8.

By this some understand that king David looked on the stones and obtained the answer of the Lord for himself. It may be so, but I understand that Abiathar looked at the request of David, and the Lord gave the response to Abiathar, and he gave it to David; for I have found above that the ephod and the Urim and Thummim were provided for the priests of the tribe of Levi to wear and use. Whereas David was of the tribe of Judah, of which there was nothing said that that tribe was eligible to the Aaronic priesthood. Consequently, not eligible to wear the priest's ephod; therefore, not eligible to look on the stones to obtain the mind of the Lord; for if he could do one, he of course could do the other. There was a linen ephod, of quite an inferior importance, that David wore. 2 Sam. vi. 14. 1 Chron. xv. 27. Samuel, when a child, wore a linen ephod. 1 Sam. ii. 18.

I will now consider the term oracle. 1st. It evidently signifies the word of God. 2d. It signifies the place appointed of God to give his word. 3d. It signifies the means by which his word is given. Oracle signifies the word of God. Read Acts 7th chapter. We have there the sermon of Stephen, which he preached to the Jews when he was stoned to death by them. Who, in a state of apostacy, became as obnoxious to the truth as are the Gentiles of the nineteenth century, and equally destitute of the spirit of truth as were the Jews. On this occasion Stephen said of Moses, "who received the lively oracles (living word of God) to give unto us," (Israel.) 38th verse. Paul, although he held the garments of them that stoned Stephen, was brought to express the same fact, that to the Jews, or the circumcision, was "committed the oracles of God." Rom. iii. 1, 2. Paul to the Hebrews says:—

"For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat." Heb. v. 12.

When I consider the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, with its priesthood, and spiritual gifts, and blessings, as preached by Jesus, and Paul, and the rest of the apostles, can I be considered harsh in saying that the above text is as applicable to the Gentile churches now as it was to the Hebrews then? "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." 1 Peter iv. 11. That is, speak the truth as surely and certainly as the Urim and Thummim, or a divinely inspired prophet or a seer, (one that looks on the Urim and Thummim, and obtains the word of God,) or as the holy tabernacle in the wilderness, or as the holy sanctum sanctorum, which was built by Solomon in the temple, which is called the oracle six times over. Read 1st Kings vi. All the prophets from Moses to Malachi combined to say that God will, in the last dispensation of the fullness of times, set his hand to "gather Israel and Judah, and BUILD THEM AS AT THE FIRST." That is, he will do it by the same means and measures. Consequently he must restore to them prophets and seers and holy sanctuaries as at the first, together with the Urim and Thummim, by which they may know who are eligible to the priest's office, and eat of the most holy things, and minister in the priest's office forever before the Lord, "never more to be plucked up or thrown down" to all eternity.

What a motley and ghastly set of ignorant, self-condemned, abashed mass of creatures a world of Gentile self-made priests will appear laden down with their lying commentaries and old musty sermons, filled with all kinds of the most [illegible] contradictions and nonsense that the fallen depraved human mind can conceive of, when they are brought to stand before the priests of the true Israel of God, called, qualified and authorized as priests of old, when they once more converse with God through the Urim and Thummim, and receive the unadulterated word of God.

JOHN E. PAGE.

COLLATERAL TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTH AND DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.—No. 2.

The Book of Mormon was published in the spring season of 1830, Palmyra, N. Y. It contains a book called the "Book of Ether," giving an abridged account of a people called in the book "Jaradites," who emigrated to this continent (America) from the tower of Babel at the time of the confounding of the languages, as spoken of in the book of Genesis. This people it appears became very numerous on this land, built many cities and became very rich according to the following account. They were destroyed by the severe judgments of God, in consequence of their wickedness.—Their overthrow and final destruction took place in the latter part of the seventh century before Christ. The forefathers of the American Indians emigrated to this continent from Jerusalem at the commencement of the sixth century before Christ.

"And the whole face of the land northward was covered with inhabitants; and they were exceeding industrious, and they did buy and sell, and traffic one with another, that they might get gain. And they did work in all manner of ore, and they did make gold, and silver, and iron, and brass, and all manner of metals; and they did dig it out of the earth; wherefore they did cast up mighty heaps of earth; to get ore, of gold, and of silver, and of iron, and of COPPER." Book of Mormon, stereotyped edition, page 544.

COPPER REGION.—A correspondent of the Buffalo Express writing under date of June 14th, from Ontonagon, Lake Superior, says :—

"Mr. Knapp, of the Vulcan Mining Company, has lately made very singular discoveries here in working one of the veins, which he lately found. He worked into an old cave which had been excavated centuries ago. This led them to look for other works of the same sort, and they have found a number of sinks in the earth which they have traced a long distance. By digging into these sinks, they find them to have been made by the hand of man. It appears that the ancient miners went on a different principle from what they do at the present time. The greatest depth yet found in these holes is thirty feet. After getting down to a certain depth, they drifted along the vein nearly to an open cut. These cuts have been filled nearly to a level by the accumulation of soil, and we find trees of the largest growth standing in this gutter; and also find that trees of very large growth have grown up and died, and decayed many years since, in the same places there are now standing trees of over three hundred years' growth.

"Last week they dug down into a new place, and about twelve feet below the surface found a mass of copper that will weigh from eight to ten tons. This mass was buried in ashes. It appears they could not handle it, and had no means of cutting it, and probably built fire to melt or separate the rock from it, which might be done by heating, aud then dashing on cold water. This piece of copper is as pure and clean as a new cent; the upper surface has been pounded clear and smooth. It appears that this mass of copper was taken from the bottom of a shaft, at the depth of about thirty feet. In sinking this shaft from where the mass now lies, they followed the course of the vein which pitches considerably; this enabled them to raise it as far as the hole came up with a slant. At the bottom of the shaft they found skids of black oak, from eight to twelve inches in diameter—these sticks were charred through as if burnt. They found large wooden wedges in the same situation. In this shaft they found a miner's gad and a narrow chisel made of copper.

"I do not know whether these copper tools are tempered or not, but their make displayed good workmanship. They have taken out more than a ton of cobble-stones, which had been used as mallets. These stones were nearly round, with a score cut around the centre, and looked as if this score was cut for the purpose of putting a withe round for a handle. The Chippewa Indians all say that this work was never done by Indians. This discovery will lead to a new method of finding veins in this country, and may be of great benefit to some. I suppose they will keep finding new wonders for some time yet, as it is but a short time since they first found the old mine. There is copper here in abundance, and I think people will begin to dig it in a few years. Mr. Knapp has found considerable silver during the past winter."

There are other evidences that a distinct race of men inhabited this continent previous to the American Indian race. Different authors of the developments of the antiquities of America concur in the fact that human skeletons are often taken from the American tumuli (mounds) measuring from eight to nine feet in length each. The Book of Mormon says that the Jaradites were "large and mighty men in stature."

JOHN E. PAGE.

THE NEXT SEMI-ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—It is to be hoped that every branch of the church will be prompt in sending some person to represent it, or by writing. We will want to hear of all the general interest and as many important particulars of the church as can be reported, but especially their location, number of members, and officers who are engaged in the ministry. And do not forget the Temple; think of that, and then you will be sure to remember that tithing is the Lord's demand to build it. It will be well for those who have means to do so to bring as much with them as will sustain the wife and children of some Elder or Elders for a season, while the Elder leaves home for the express purpose of preaching the gospel. To the faithful and wise a word is sufficient, therefore I hope this notice will be duly regarded.

JOHN E. PAGE,
Pres. of the Twelve.

SPIRITUAL WIFERY.—The saints are hereby instructed that it is their duty and privilege to withdraw their fellowship and support from any and every person that in any form whatever sanctions polygamy, or what is called the "spiritual wife system." Have nothing to do with the unfruitful works of darkness, born of hell and begotten of the Devil.

JOHN E. PAGE.

OH DO NOT CRUSH THE FAINT AND WITHERING FLOWER.

"None are all evil."—BYRON.

Oh do not crush the faint and withering flower;
It was not born to bud and bloom in vain.
The cheerful sunshine and the grateful shower
May bring it life and loveliness again.

And if the hoar destroying frost hath lighted
Upon its breast, with power to change and chill,
Bind up the faded leaves, tho' seared and blighted,
They may retain some latent fragrance still.

And Oh, deal thus by frail and sinful woman,
What'er her fallen ruined state may be;
Remember, though an outcast, she is human,
And has a claim to human sympathy.

She may have sunk in fearful degredation,
The brightest hours of life, her youthful prime,
But thou may'st never know the strong temptation
That led her footsteps in the path of crime.

And, whether she sinned wilfully or blindly,
Ask not, but knowing she has gone astray,
Speak to her softly, cheeringly and kindly,
And thou may'st lead her back to virtue's way.

Then turn not from the friendless wanderer lightly,
As though all care, all effort were in vain;
The sun shines on the ruin grey as brightly
As on the proudest dome and tallest fane.

None are all evil: 'neath the darkest seeming
Some spark of goodness lies concealed from sight,
Like some unquarried diamond, faintly beaming,
Where none may see the beauty of its light.

A little act, a sentence fitly spoken,
May break the fearful power of sin's control;
May heal a heart that wretchedness has broken,
And save, perchance, the never dying soul.

Then strive, and be not faithless, but believing
'Tis not too late, while God prolongs the breath,
To break the bonds that wickedness is weaving,
And snatch the victim from the gates of death.

silver, and iron, and brass, and all manner of metals; and they did dig it out of the earth; wherefore they did cast up mighty heaps of earth; to get ore, of gold, and of silver, and of iron, and of COPPER." Book of Mormon, stereotyped edition, page 544.

COPPER REGION.—A correspondent of the Buffalo Express writing under date of June 14th, from Ontonagon, Lake Superior, says:—

"Mr. Knapp, of the Vulcan Mining Company, has lately made very singular discoveries here in working one of the veins, which he lately found. He worked into an old cave which had been excavated centuries ago. This led them to look for other works of the same sort, and they have found a number of sinks in the earth which they have traced a long distance. By digging into these sinks, they find them to have been made by the hand of man. It appears that the ancient miners went on a different principle from what they do at the present time. The greatest depth yet found in these holes is thirty feet. After getting down to a certain depth, they drifted along the vein nearly to an open cut. These cuts have been filled nearly to a level by the accumulation of soil, and we find trees of the largest growth standing in this gutter; and also find that trees of very large growth have grown up and died, and decayed many years since, in the same places there are now standing trees of over three hundred years' growth.

"Last week they dug down into a new place, and about twelve feet below the surface found a mass of copper that will weigh from eight to ten tons. This mass was buried in ashes. It appears they could not handle it, and had no means of cutting it, and probably built fire to melt or separate the rock from it, which might be done by heating, and then dashing on cold water. This piece of copper is as pure and clean as a new cent; the upper surface has been pounded clear and smooth. It appears that this mass of copper was taken from the bottom of a shaft, at the depth of about thirty feet. In sinking this shaft from where the mass now lies, they followed the course of the vein which pitches considerably; this enabled them to raise it as far as the hole came up with a slant. At the bottom of the shaft they found skids of black oak, from eight to twelve inches in diameter—these sticks were charred through as if burnt. They found large wooden wedges in the same situation. In this shaft they found a miner's gad and a narrow chisel made of copper.

"I do not know whether these copper tools are tempered or not, but their make displayed good workmanship. They have taken out more than a ton of cobble-stones, which had been used as mallets. These stones were nearly round, with a score cut around the centre, and looked as if this score was cut for the purpose of putting a withe round for a handle. The Chippewa Indians all say that this work was never done by Indians. This discovery will lead to a new method of finding veins in this country, and may be of great benefit to some. I suppose they will keep finding new wonders for some time yet, as it is but a short time since they first found the old mine. There is copper here in abundance, and I think people will begin to dig it in a few years. Mr. Knapp has found considerable silver during the past winter."

There are other evidences that a distinct race of men inhabited this continent previous to the American Indian race. Different authors of the developments of the antiquities of America concur in the fact that human skeletons are often taken from the American tumuli (mounds) measuring from eight to nine feet in length each. The Book of Mormon says that the Jaradites were "large and mighty men in stature."

JOHN E. PAGE.

THE NEXT SEMI-ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—It is to be hoped that every branch of the church will be prompt in sending some person to represent it, or by writing. We will want to hear of all the general interest and as many important particulars of the church as can be reported, but especially their location, number of members, and officers who are engaged in the ministry. And do not forget the Temple; think of that, and then you will be sure to remember that tithing is the Lord's demand to build it. It will be well for those who have means to do so to bring as much with them as will sustain the wife and children of some Elder or Elders for a season, while the Elder leaves home for the express purpose of preaching the gospel. To the faithful and wise a word is sufficient, therefore I hope this notice will be duly regarded.

JOHN E. PAGE,
Pres. of the Twelve.

SPIRITUAL WIFERY.—The saints are hereby instructed that it is their duty and privilege to withdraw their fellowship and support from any and every person that in any form whatever sanctions polygamy, or what is called the "spiritual wife system." Have nothing to do with the unfruitful works of darkness, born of hell and begotten of the Devil.

JOHN E. PAGE.

OH DO NOT CRUSH THE FAINT AND WITHERING FLOWER.

"None are all evil."—BYRON.

Oh do not crush the faint and withering flower;
It was not born to bud and bloom in vain.
The cheerful sunshine and the grateful shower
May bring it life and loveliness again.

And if the hoar destroying frost hath lighted
Upon its breast, with power to change and chill,
Bind up the faded leaves, tho' seared and blighted,
They may retain some latent fragrance still.

And Oh, deal thus by frail and sinful woman,
What'er her fallen ruined state may be;
Remember, though an outcast, she is human,
And has a claim to human sympathy.

She may have sunk in fearful degredation,
The brightest hours of life, her youthful prime,
But thou may'st never know the strong temptation
That led her footsteps in the path of crime.

And, whether she sinned wilfully or blindly,
Ask not, but knowing she has gone astray,
Speak to her softly, cheeringly and kindly,
And thou may'st lead her back to virtue's way.

Then turn not from the friendless wanderer lightly,
As though all care, all effort were in vain;
The sun shines on the ruin grey as brightly
As on the proudest dome and tallest fane.

None are all evil: 'neath the darkest seeming
Some spark of goodness lies concealed from sight,
Like some unquarried diamond, faintly beaming,
Where none may see the beauty of its light.

A little act, a sentence fitly spoken,
May break the fearful power of sin's control;
May heal a heart that wretchedness has broken,
And save, perchance, the never dying soul.

Then strive, and be not faithless, but believing
'Tis not too late, while God prolongs the breath,
To break the bonds that wickedness is weaving,
And snatch the victim from the gates of death.

From the Harbinger.

THE DISTINCTIVE BEING OF GOD.—No. 2.

"This is life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou has sent." John xvii. 3.

Surely no one can justly estimate "eternal life," and yet lightly esteem the true knowedge of God, which is made so essential to its attainment. The exhortation to "acquaint thyself with God," is recorded for our instruction. If any should dare to array the sublime language of Job, touching the incomprehensibiliry of God against these truths, I appeal to himself. He says, "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, nor the mighty man in his might—but let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he knoweth me." We are taught to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Under the promptings of such motives, we advance reverently, to the consideration of our thrice holy theme. The apostle of the Gentiles taught them that though "There be gods many, and lords many," among idolators, yet, he adds: "But to us there is (but) one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in (for) him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by (through) him." In these and all parallel Scriptures, the being of God is not confounded with "the word," nor with any object within the range of human thought. The distinctive being of "one God, the Father," is made as plain as inspired language can state it—hence the unity of God, which is also clearly taught, must harmonize with it. Both are needful to a scriptural faith in God. But besides all such positive Scripture statements, there are several great undeniable facts, which from the materials of an irresistable argument—irresistable to every assult save that of unbelief.

1st. We argue the distinctive being of God from the distinctive character which he has given to every created object. If "His eternal power and Godhead" is clearly seen by the things that are made, why is not his identity as clearly seen by the identity he has given to every world—every angel, man, animal, vegetable, and pebble? We are in a real universe, filled with realities—each animate and inanimate reality has its own absolute identity. I have never found two spires of grass, or two leaves of clover, or two pebbles, in all respects, alike! Each object has its own identity.

Now, shall the Creator of all these realities be himself a non-reality—the author of all these identities have no identity? The adoring believer exclaims, "That thy name is near, thy wondrous works declared!" Why not add, That thy distinctive being is certain from the distinctive existence of every object that came from thy forming hand! My conviction is that the Creator is not only greater, more mighty and more excellent, but also more real, and altogether above the creature.

2d. We have before us an actual, visible, personal model of the distinctive being of God.

Had we, for illustration, a good model of a steamboat or its engine, we could form a definite idea of that which it represented.—Again, if we had a statue, or likeness of an absent friend or father, we could form a distinct conception of the form and general appearance of his person. Furthermore, if such likeness could be endowed with intellectual, social, and moral qualities, so as to represent his mental and moral character, we could then obtain a good knowledge of his whole being. This all will concede.

Now mark! Such an image, or likeness, of our "Father in heaven," thus endowed, we have before us. Man, as originally formed and perfected, stood forth an "image and likeness"—the likest image of God. This is not predicated of "the word"—the Son of God; for it is written of "God, even the Father," Jas. iii. 9—"The tongue can no man tame—therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, who are made in the similitude of God." As this is not affirmed of "the word," but rather that "the word was made flesh," ("God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh,") we are compelled to the conclusion that man was formed in "the likeness of God." The seeing, hearing, speaking, wisdom in planning, skill in executing and justice in governing, which constitute the essential elements of a righteous ruler's character, are all claimed, only in infinite perfection, by the Holy One—all are exercised by him! This, though incontrovertibly true, is met only by the sceptical sarcasm, You make God a great man! No, sir, it no more reduces Jehovah to a great man, than it raises man to be a little God! It is only a recognition of Scripture facts in its bearings on the subject to which the testimony relates. It neither deifies man, nor humanizes God. I am only using the testimony of "the Faithful and True witness" for its legitimate object. My thought is that the Almighty is a distinctive being; so much more real than ourselves as the Divinity is pre-eminent above humanity. Shall the source of all personality in earth and heaven, among men and angels, be, in our own minds, shorn of all such distinction? Should not an impersonal Creator have impersonal creatures? Then there would be some natural coherency between creatures and creator.

3d. The first model image or "likeness," having been marred, Jehovah has condescended, in the plentitude of his mercy, to form another—one that retains and correctly reflects the true idea of his own distinctive, eternal being.

This is Jesus—the promised seed—"the second Adam." He, though made of a woman, is yet "the brightness of his Father's glory and the express image of his person." Such is the connection in which this stands—such the scope of the inspired argument, that no verbal criticism can destroy the weight of the testimony it gives to the distinctive existence of God and his Son. It makes Jesus not the sole deity of either the Old or New Testament; but it presents him to us as the manifestation of God—"God manifested in the flesh." Hence, he said: "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father"—"the express image of his person!" "The work which the Father hath given me to finish, the same bear witness of me that the Father hath sent me—ye have neither heard his voice nor seen his shape." For the meaning of "shape," see Luke iii. 22. ix. 29.

We have the same reason to dissipate "the Son of God" altogether from our minds as to de-personalize him. Now, shall we ascribe identity or personality to the Son, while denying it to his eternal Father. Like begets like, the world over. An *im*personal father should have an impersonal son—an indistinct world, peopled with indistinct inhabitants, may be supposed to have an indistinct God. The effect then would resemble the CAUSE.

But it is objected 1st. That "God is a spirit." Answer. So is the second Adam "the Lord from heaven;" for "the Lord is that spirit," and this "Lord," in that connection, is "Jesus"—"the image of God." 2d Cor. iii. 17. iv. 4, 6. 1st Cor. xv. 45.

Let me ask the objector if spirituality renders a being indistinctive or *im*personal? Does spirituality destroy identity? Does "the spiritual man," of necessity, become an *im*personal man? If not, then give up your objection forever!

On the principle of the objection, the saints and "the son of God" himself, must *de*personalize just so far, and just so fast, as they become like God! The idea, fairly applied, would compel us to take the ground of the most arrant spiritualizer, and deny that there is any personal Jesus in the universe! Then let it be abandoned by all sane persons.

2d. It is objected that God filled "heaven and earth."

Answer. So does Jesus fill the church—not by a personal presence, but by his gifts, graces and operations! Amen.

From the Harbinger.

THE DISTINCTIVE BEING OF GOD.—No. 2.

"This is life eternal that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou has sent." John xvii. 3.

Surely no one can justly estimate "eternal life," and yet lightly esteem the true knowedge of God, which is made so essential to its attainment. The exhortation to "acquaint thyself with God," is recorded for our instruction. If any should dare to array the sublime language of Job, touching the incomprehensibiliry of God against these truths, I appeal to himself. He says, "Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, nor the mighty man in his might—but let him that glorieth, glory in this, that he knoweth me." We are taught to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Under the promptings of such motives, we advance reverently, to the consideration of our thrice holy theme. The apostle of the Gentiles taught them that though "There be gods many, and lords many," among idolators, yet, he adds: "But to us there is (but) one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in (for) him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by (through) him." In these and all parallel Scriptures, the being of God is not confounded with "the word," nor with any object within the range of human thought. The distinctive being of "one God, the Father," is made as plain as inspired language can state it—hence the unity of God, which is also clearly taught, must harmonize with it. Both are needful to a scriptural faith in God. But besides all such positive Scripture statements, there are several great undeniable facts, which from the materials of an irresistable argument—irresistable to every assult save that of unbelief.

1st. We argue the distinctive being of God from the distinctive character which he has given to every created object. If "His eternal power and Godhead" is clearly seen by the things that are made, why is not his identity as clearly seen by the identity he has given to every world—every angel, man, animal, vegetable, and pebble? We are in a real universe, filled with realities—each animate and inanimate reality has its own absolute identity. I have never found two spires of grass, or two leaves of clover, or two pebbles, in all respects, alike! Each object has its own identity.

Now, shall the Creator of all these realities be himself a non-reality—the author of all these identities have no identity? The adoring believer exclaims, "That thy name is near, thy wondrous works declared!" Why not add, That thy distinctive being is certain from the distinctive existence of every object that came from thy forming hand! My conviction is that the Creator is not only greater, more mighty and more excellent, but also more real, and altogether above the creature.

2d. We have before us an actual, visible, personal model of the distinctive being of God.

Had we, for illustration, a good model of a steamboat or its engine, we could form a definite idea of that which it represented.—Again, if we had a statue, or likeness of an absent friend or father, we could form a distinct conception of the form and general appearance of his person. Furthermore, if such likeness could be endowed with intellectual, social, and moral qualities, so as to represent his mental and moral character, we could then obtain a good knowledge of his whole being. This all will concede.

Now mark! Such an image, or likeness, of our "Father in heaven," thus endowed, we have before us. Man, as originally formed and perfected, stood forth an "image and likeness"—the likest image of God. This is not predicated of "the word"—the Son of God; for it is written of "God, even the Father," Jas. iii. 9—"The tongue can no man tame—therewith bless we God, even the Father; and therewith curse we men, who are made in the similitude of God." As this is not affirmed of "the word," but rather that "the word was made flesh," ("God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh,") we are compelled to the conclusion that man was formed in "the likeness of God." The seeing, hearing, speaking, wisdom in planning, skill in executing and justice in governing, which constitute the essential elements of a righteous ruler's character, are all claimed, only in infinite perfection, by the Holy One—all are exercised by him! This, though incontrovertibly true, is met only by the sceptical sarcasm, You make God a great man!- No, sir, it no more reduces Jehovah to a great man, than it raises man to be a little God! It is only a recognition of Scripture facts in its bearings on the subject to which the testimony relates. It neither deifies man, nor humanizes God. I am only using the testimony of "the Faithful and True witness" for its legitimate object. My thought is that the Almighty is a distinctive being; so much more real than ourselves as the Divinity is pre-eminent above humanity. Shall the source of all personality in earth and heaven, among men and angels, be, in our own minds, shorn of all such distinction? Should not an impersonal Creator have impersonal creatures? Then there would be some natural coherency between creatures and creator.

3d. The first model image or "likeness," having been marred, Jehovah has condescended, in the plentitude of his mercy, to form another—one that retains and correctly reflects the true idea of his own distinctive, eternal being.

This is Jesus—the promised seed—"the second Adam." He, though made of a woman, is yet "the brightness of his Father's glory and the express image of his person." Such is the connection in which this stands—such the scope of the inspired argument, that no verbal criticism can destroy the weight of the testimony it gives to the distinctive existence of God and his Son. It makes Jesus not the sole deity of either the Old or New Testament; but it presents him to us as the manifestation of God—"God manifested in the flesh." Hence, he said: "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father"—"the express image of his person!" "The work which the Father hath given me to finish, the same bear witness of me that the Father hath sent me—ye have neither heard his voice nor seen his shape." For the meaning of "shape," see Luke iii. 22. ix. 29.

We have the same reason to dissipate "the Son of God" altogether from our minds as to de-personalize him. Now, shall we ascribe identity or personality to the Son, while denying it to his eternal Father. Like begets like, the world over. An *im*personal father should have an impersonal son—an indistinct world, peopled with indistinct inhabitants, may be supposed to have an indistinct God. The effect then would resemble the CAUSE.

But it is objected 1st. That "God is a spirit." Answer. So is the second Adam "the Lord from heaven;" for "the Lord is that spirit," and this "Lord," in that connection, is "Jesus"—"the image of God." 2d Cor. iii. 17. iv. 4, 6. 1st Cor. xv. 45.

Let me ask the objector if spirituality renders a being indistinctive or *im*personal? Does spirituality destroy identity? Does "the spiritual man," of necessity, become an *im*personal man? If not, then give up your objection forever!

On the principle of the objection, the saints and "the son of God" himself, must *de*personalize just so far, and just so fast, as they become like God! The idea, fairly applied, would compel us to take the ground of the most arrant spiritualizer, and deny that there is any personal Jesus in the universe! Then let it be abandoned by all sane persons.

2d. It is objected that God filled "heaven and earth."

Answer. So does Jesus fill the church—not by a personal presence, but by his gifts, graces and operations! Amen.

3d. Then Jesus said "I and (my) Father are one."

Answer. I and my wife are "one!" So says the word. But this is only "one flesh." Very true; but it is so much the better, for it is a unity that must admit of distinct identity and personality. Furthermore, "He that is joined to the Lord is one flesh." This oneness never yet absorbed either the Lord or his saints. Our Lord prayed to God that his people may be one "as we" are.—John xvii. 11. x. 30. The plurality is as distinctly acknowledged as the unity. Deny this who can!

4th. That this idea makes God a great man.

Answer. No, this is altogether in your imagination; for it no more makes God a man than man a God! It presents them both to our minds as they stand revealed by inspiration.

5th. That Prof. Bush, the Swedenborgian, and those who make "Jesus Jehovah," quote Scripture to prove it. Yes; but they quote it partially. They leave out those parts which are essential to the sense of the divinely perfect whole. So did Satan in the temptation.

6th. That "God dwells in light."

Answer. So does his Son. Thus it was on the "Holy Mount"—thus it was "in Patmos." When he shall "come again," he shall come in the "glory of his Father." This shekinal glory—this uncreated moral splendor, is the radiance, the encircling light in which he dwells. But what can transcend the absurdity of talking of the glory of a being who has no identity! As we cannot rationally speak of the "glory of the sun" without embracing an idea of the sun, as a distinct object; so neither can we speak of our Lord's coming in "the glory of the Father and the holy angels," without implying their actual, distinctive existence. Their distinctive being is then as certain as the Bible is true. Jehovah and Jesus—God Almighty and his Son, are not "first principles descending into last principles!"

Admitting what is thus proved, we can understand how and why "God sent his Son"—why Jesus prayed to him, and how our Lord could redeem us "to God by his blood;" but deny this, and then the gospel doctrine of the atonement is but a Swedeborgian fable, and the resurrection a Shaker phantasy—all in appearance only!

Again, admitting the Bible view, we must believe that the saints, when "renewed in the image" of God—"fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body," will have an eternal identity—a glorious personality. But, if the opposite, spiritual method of interpretation, be true—if the union of Jesus with Jehovah absorbs him, then the union of the saints may absorb him; and the saint's personality with Jesus [except you can block the wheel] may at the next revolution go to the Boodhist's "Nejban"—utter and eternal non-entity!

But no! "Abraham, Isaac and Jacob," and all "the called, the chosen and faithful," are to be "seen in the kingdom of God," under the reign of Jesus, "the Son of David according to the flesh;" but still "the Son of God," God and the Lamb are neither lost nor overlooked amid the revealed glories of that kingdom. We "shall see God," and bask in the light of "the Lamb!"

New Bedford, July 3d. J. B. Cook.

THE MILLERITES.

It is with considerable interest that I pore over the pages of the "Advent Herald," the organ of the advocates of the doctrine of the immediate advent of Christ to judgment. I can see but one point that is of any great importance in all their well executed paper that attaches any more importance to the character of the paper or its patrons, as religionists, than what equally attaches to other papers and their patrons, and that point is, "the signs of the times." This point is truly important in the abstract. And was this point, with all its importance, called up with all its true connections, I would say God speed the paper and its patrons; but as it is I candidly look upon the paper and its supporters that are compiling the matter it contains as casting as thick a vail of darkness, of ignorance and error over the minds of men as the Romanists are doing, or any other heretical sect.

Truly the signs of the times are ominous of the second advent of Christ, and why? Because the signs in the heavens above and on the earth are too manifest to be overlooked by any sincere Bible believer, and the events of the literal return of the Jews from the "four corners of the earth," and the return of "Israel from the north country" to the land of Canaan, now called Palestine, are as surely to take place previous to the second advent of Christ as it is that Christ is to make his second advent; for one point is clear as the other, and they that deny one virtually deny the other, or they have no just understanding of either. The grand reason why the Millerites and all the rest of the Gentile religious sects are so willingly blind to the truth of the subject of the literal gathering of the natural stock of Abraham to inherit the land given to Abraham and his "seed for an everlasting possession" is, because God has declared too often by the Jewish prophets, and it is recorded too often in the Bible to be denied with any kind of feasibility, that he will raise up prophets and inspire them as he did Moses and Aaron and the elders of Israel, to "reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth." Read the article headed "Revelation to be Continued," Gospel Herald No. 23, page 98.

Because of this fact, and as the Millerites and no other of the sects which old Babylon has given birth to are not honored with such a holy calling, to do the work of gathering Israel and Judah to Jerusalem, or the Gentile saints to Mount Zion, they (the Millerites) with all their pretended deference for the Bible pretend to care as little about this all-absorbing subject of the Bible as though it was not in it. Consequently I am sometimes led to believe that the Millerites do not sincerely believe themselves what they pretend to contend for; but having by chance lit upon a subject of which most of the other sects are ignorant of entire, they have seized hold of it with such a kind of wolfish greediness they seem to be in a great measure blind to every other leading, important topic in the Bible. Little do the Millerites think that if Christ should make his advent this year, 1848, that they stand in no higher relation to God, as a people, than do the Roman Catholic church, or any other of the Protestant churches.

The Millerites will contend that the Latin church is the "whore of Babylon, and the mother of harlots." Well, I accede that point; and by doing so, I ask, in all sincerity, who are the harlots? If the whore of Babylon signifies a prostituted church, are not the harlots prostituted churches to which the whore has given birth? If so, what churches are they? will you tell me? No dodging now, out with it. "O," say you, "they are such churches as grew up under the delusions of Joanna Southcoat, Jemima Wilkerson, Ann Lee, Jo Smith and other such like impostors." Admit it for the sake of the argument. And had they not as much authority from God to raise up churches to themselves as had Martin Luther, John Calvin, John Wesley, George Fox, and Wm. Miller, and such like other men who have in their day done as they would, and as flatly given the lie one to the other as the impostors of which you speak?—Pray, what evidence has either of the last named individuals given that either or all of them were sent of God more than the first named have?

Now as a lie is a lie, and deception is deception, and impostors are impostors, which of the two classes of the above named individuals have inculcated the most successful and barefaced lies and impositions? It will be admitted by all who believe the Bible that when God sent prophets and apostles to men in any past dispensa-

3d. Then Jesus said "I and (my) Father are one."

Answer. I and my wife are "one!" So says the word. But this is only "one flesh." Very true; but it is so much the better, for it is a unity that must admit of distinct identity and personality. Furthermore, "He that is joined to the Lord is one flesh." This oneness never yet absorbed either the Lord or his saints. Our Lord prayed to God that his people may be one "as we" are.—John xvii. 11. x. 30. The plurality is as distinctly acknowledged as the unity. Deny this who can!

4th. That this idea makes God a great man.

Answer. No, this is altogether in your imagination; for it no more makes God a man than man a God! It presents them both to our minds as they stand revealed by inspiration.

5th. That Prof. Bush, the Swedenborgian, and those who make "Jesus Jehovah," quote Scripture to prove it. Yes; but they quote it partially. They leave out those parts which are essential to the sense of the divinely perfect whole. So did Satan in the temptation.

6th. That "God dwells in light."

Answer. So does his Son. Thus it was on the "Holy Mount"—thus it was "in Patmos." When he shall "come again," he shall come in the "glory of his Father." This shekinal glory—this uncreated moral splendor, is the radiance, the encircling light in which he dwells. But what can transcend the absurdity of talking of the glory of a being who has no identity! As we cannot rationally speak of the "glory of the sun" without embracing an idea of the sun, as a distinct object; so neither can we speak of our Lord's coming in "the glory of the Father and the holy angels," without implying their actual, distinctive existence. Their distinctive being is then as certain as the Bible is true. Jehovah and Jesus—God Almighty and his Son, are not "first principles descending into last principles!"

Admitting what is thus proved, we can understand how and why "God sent his Son"—why Jesus prayed to him, and how our Lord could redeem us "to God by his blood;" but deny this, and then the gospel doctrine of the atonement is but a Swedeborgian fable, and the resurrection a Shaker phantasy—all in appearance only!

Again, admitting the Bible view, we must believe that the saints, when "renewed in the image" of God—"fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body," will have an eternal identity—a glorious personality. But, if the opposite, spiritual method of interpretation, be true—if the union of Jesus with Jehovah absorbs him, then the union of the saints may absorb him; and the saint's personality with Jesus [except you can block the wheel] may at the next revolution go to the Boodhist's "Nejban"—utter and eternal non-entity!

But no! "Abraham, Isaac and Jacob," and all "the called, the chosen and faithful," are to be "seen in the kingdom of God," under the reign of Jesus, "the Son of David according to the flesh;" but still "the Son of God," God and the Lamb are neither lost nor overlooked amid the revealed glories of that kingdom. We "shall see God," and bask in the light of "the Lamb!"

New Bedford, July 3d. J. B. Cook.

THE MILLERITES.

It is with considerable interest that I pore over the pages of the "Advent Herald," the organ of the advocates of the doctrine of the immediate advent of Christ to judgment. I can see but one point that is of any great importance in all their well executed paper that attaches any more importance to the character of the paper, or its patrons, as religionists, than what equally attaches to other papers and their patrons, and that point is, "the signs of the times." This point is truly important in the abstract. And was this point, with all its importance, called up with all its true connections, I would say God speed the paper and its patrons; but as it is I candidly look upon the paper and its supporters that are compiling the matter it contains as casting as thick a vail of darkness, of ignorance and error over the minds of men as the Romanists are doing, or any other heretical sect.

Truly the signs of the times are ominous of the second advent of Christ, and why? Because the signs in the heavens above and on the earth are too manifest to be overlooked by any sincere Bible believer, and the events of the literal return of the Jews from the "four corners of the earth," and the return of "Israel from the north country" to the land of Canaan, now called Palestine, are as surely to take place previous to the second advent of Christ as it is that Christ is to make his second advent; for one point is clear as the other, and they that deny one virtually deny the other, or they have no just understanding of either. The grand reason why the Millerites and all the rest of the Gentile religious sects are so willingly blind to the truth of the subject of the literal gathering of the natural stock of Abraham to inherit the land given to Abraham and his "seed for an everlasting possession" is, because God has declared too often by the Jewish prophets, and it is recorded too often in the Bible to be denied with any kind of feasibility, that he will raise up prophets and inspire them as he did Moses and Aaron and the elders of Israel, to "reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth." Read the article headed "Revelation to be Continued," Gospel Herald No. 23, page 98.

Because of this fact, and as the Millerites and no other of the sects which old Babylon has given birth to are not honored with such a holy calling, to do the work of gathering Israel and Judah to Jerusalem, or the Gentile saints to Mount Zion, they (the Millerites) with all their pretended deference for the Bible pretend to care as little about this all-absorbing subject of the Bible as though it was not in it. Consequently I am sometimes led to believe that the Millerites do not sincerely believe themselves what they pretend to contend for; but having by chance lit upon a subject of which most of the other sects are ignorant of entire, they have seized hold of it with such a kind of wolfish greediness they seem to be in a great measure blind to every other leading, important topic in the Bible. Little do the Millerites think that if Christ should make his advent this year, 1843, that they stand in no higher relation to God, as a people, than do the Roman Catholic church, or any other of the Protestant churches.

The Millerites will contend that the Latin church is the "whore of Babylon, and the mother of harlots." Well, I accede that point; and by doing so, I ask, in all sincerity, who are the harlots? If the whore of Babylon signifies a prostituted church, are not the harlots prostituted churches to which the whore has given birth? If so, what churches are they? will you tell me? No dodging now, out with it. "O," say you, "they are such churches as grew up under the delusions of Joanna Southcoat, Jemima Wilkerson, Ann Lee, Jo Smith and other such like impostors." Admit it for the sake of the argument. And had they not as much authority from God to raise up churches to themselves as had Martin Luther, John Calvin, John Wesley, George Fox, and Wm. Miller, and such like other men who have in their day done as they would, and as flatly given the lie one to the other as the impostors of which you speak?—Pray, what evidence has either of the last named individuals given that either or all of them were sent of God more than the first named have?

Now as a lie is a lie, and deception is deception, and impostors are impostors, which of the two classes of the above named individuals have inculcated the most successful and barefaced lies and impositions? It will be admitted by all who believe, the Bible that when God sent prophets and apostles to men in any [illegible]

tion, that he sent them by divine revelation, and ministered to them by manifest angels, and sometimes manifested himself in open vision, and by dreams, and in "divers manners." "Yes," say you. Well, then, Joanna, Jemima, Ann and "Jo" all professed to be sent of God in the same manner, did they not? "Yes," say you, "but Martin, John, John, George and William did not." Then, as a matter of course, (judging them out of their own mouth,) they were impostors, and no mistake; for if they had been sent of God they would have known it as well as other prophets and apostles. Then who manifests the greatest foolery in being deceived?

Suppose I present to an intelligent man in one hand a well executed counterfeit bill on a well known specie paying bank, and a slip of brown paper in the other hand, and I say to the man, you shall be welcome to either one of which you shall make choice as being of value according to the expression of its face. Of course I would expect he would without hesitancy make choice of the bill, because in that there were some fair signs of value, but in it he might be deceived; but in the slip of brown paper he could not be deceived, because there were no signs of value on its face; and if he had made choice of the brown slip, the greater fool was he. So relative to the men under consideration. Those were the greatest impostors who presented the least outward signs of being genuine, and the greatest fools are those that are deceived by those that make no pretensions to the genuine.

Most certainly the wiser this generation get in the things of the world the greater fools they are relative to the things of God, "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."—Why? Because they shut the door against the key of knowledge, (revelation,) and will not enter in themselves, nor suffer them to do so that would. Millerites, what key, what link, what tie, what relation, what claim have you to heaven and immortal glory by which, as a people, you are any more prepared for the coming of Christ than any other religious sect, Catholics not excepted? Are you so stupidly ignorant as not to know that unless you can recognize the holy Melchisedec priesthood as being committed to you, you stand in the same relation to God that the Catholics and all the rest of the sects do, and no higher? Do you not know that the Bible does not recognize any people as his people, in a gospel sense, but those to whom God has committed a priesthood authority to act and administer in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost? and that the term name, when used as signifying an official act, signifies a right, power and authority delegated by him for whom one or many act? By what relation, tie, link or connection are the administrations of your or any other Protestant sect ratified in the heavens more than the Roman Catholic administrations are? Come, tell me; no wincing. Truth has nothing to fear. It is not a little rickety sickly bantling, that dare not venture out of the door for fear of catching cold.

Millerites, does not your failure in the calculation you made on the mathematical numbers of Daniel, in which you tried to make it appear that Christ would make his second advent in 1843, prove to you that God never sent you to sound the "midnight cry?" or will you still contend that God sent you to deceive the world with a volley of lies of the blackest dye, as now your papers, books and pamphlets, a pile of which I have now lying before me, prove to be? What shall I do with them? Shall I make a bonfire of them, and put them out of the way as I would all other novels and romances, "the light bread of the day?" or shall I keep them as a memorial to my posterity of the folly, wickedness and foolery of religionists in the by gone and ever to be remembered year 1843? Yes, I turn my eyes to the wall, and there hangs one of your picture charts as large as a small table, exhibiting a living lie in the abuse of the Bible. Yes, there it may hang for the inspection of my children and my neighbors' children, that they may know how much Millerites knew in 1843; that they may tell it to generations following, and let it be known more than the Millerites realize it, "that no man knoweth the things of God but the spirit of God, which is revelation; and that eternal life is the knowledge of the living and true God and Jesus Christ, whom he has sent; and that no man knoweth the Father or the Son but by revelation. The spirit of God searcheth out the things of God, yea the deep things of God."

To close, let me tell you and all the world that the signs of the times, the distress of the nations with perplexity, the wars, commotions, treachery, wickedness, foolery, vanity, pride, arrogance, speculation, oppression and religious chicanery of all kinds, classes, names, descriptions and qualities, are but the forebodings of the downfall and final overthrow of all and every Gentile nation and power, that Israel and Judah may come home and enjoy the blessings long since promised them by the immutability of God, that he may give to them his kingdom and Christ to come to reign over them forever and ever, and he be their God and they be his people ever more. Let him that readeth understand. God bless the lover of truth that is willing to make that sacrifice for the truth that truth always did demand.

JOHN E. PAGE.

GOD WILL DO HIS WORK AND FULFILL ALL HIS WORD.

Christ says: "Not one jot or tittle of his word shall fail."—There is one thing in the character of men in this age that is worthy of remark, and that is this: there are many that seem to hold the Bible in great reverence, and will talk about it in such a solemn manner that one would think that they really believed every word there is in it, especially that part which says, "thus saith the Lord," so and so. They refer to past events that have taken place in strict fulfillment of prophecy with all that familiarity as though they were eye witnesses of the event, and will contend that in every case the fulfillment of prophecy took place in a literal sense according to the most simple construction of language. Yet, at the same time, when one refers them to things yet future to take place in events that are to transpire in the fulfillment of the word of God, according to the same construction of language, they will say, "Oh, I don't know about that; I rather choose to wait until the event takes place in a literal sense, before I can believe it means just what it says in a literal sense."

Reader, do you not know that the above manner of treating the word of God has damned the Jews and Gentiles in all events of a national character in past times? Judgments on judgments, calamity on calamity has been foretold by God's prophets to fall on the wicked, but still they would not believe until the word was fulfilled on their heads, and probably in hell, on whom the word of prophecy has been fulfilled, nations have lifted up their eyes and confessed that God's word is true. So I think it will be with millions of this age. They will look on and behold all the foreboding events that cast their shadows before more notable ones, and still doubt whether the events foretold by the prophets pertaining to things yet future mean just what they say.

There is one thing certain, if the Millerite application of a minor part of Bible matter had proved true in the second advent of Christ in 1843, more than one half of the Bible would have proved as false as any other bundle of lies. There is nothing plainer on the face of the Bible than the fact that in the dispensation of the last times that the Gentile nations will be reduced to all that moral deformity and pollution of wickedness and corruption that ever characterized the Jews in the days of their most alarming destructions, in consequence of which they will be left to practice on themselves all that fury of self-destruction that the Jews did at Jerusalem in the days tion, that he sent them by divine revelation, and ministered to them by manifest angels, and sometimes manifested himself in open vision, and by dreams, and in "divers manners." "Yes," say you. Well, then, Joanna, Jemima, Ann and "Jo" all professed to be sent of God in the same manner, did they not? "Yes," say you, "but Martin, John, John, George and William did not." Then, as a matter of course, (judging them out of their own mouth,) they were impostors, and no mistake; for if they had been sent of God they would have known it as well as other prophets and apostles. Then who manifests the greatest foolery in being deceived?

Suppose I present to an intelligent man in one hand a well executed counterfeit bill on a well known specie paying bank, and a slip of brown paper in the other hand, and I say to the man, you shall be welcome to either one of which you shall make choice as being of value according to the expression of its face. Of course I would expect he would without hesitancy make choice of the bill, because in that there were some fair signs of value, but in it he might be deceived; but in the slip of brown paper he could not be deceived, because there were no signs of value on its face; and if he had made choice of the brown slip, the greater fool was he. So relative to the men under consideration. Those were the greatest impostors who presented the least outward signs of being genuine, and the greatest fools are those that are deceived by those that make no pretensions to the genuine.

Most certainly the wiser this generation get in the things of the world the greater fools they are relative to the things of God, "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."—Why? Because they shut the door against the key of knowledge, (revelation,) and will not enter in themselves, nor suffer them to do so that would. Millerites, what key, what link, what tie, what relation, what claim have you to heaven and immortal glory by which, as a people, you are any more prepared for the coming of Christ than any other religious sect, Catholics not excepted? Are you so stupidly ignorant as not to know that unless you can recognize the holy Melchisedec priesthood as being committed to you, you stand in the same relation to God that the Catholics and all the rest of the sects do, and no higher? Do you not know that the Bible does not recognize any people as his people, in a gospel sense, but those to whom God has committed a priesthood authority to act and administer in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost? and that the term name, when used as signifying an official act, signifies a right, power and authority delegated by him for whom one or many act? By what relation, tie, link or connection are the administrations of your or any other Protestant sect ratified in the heavens more than the Roman Catholic administrations are? Come, tell me; no wincing. Truth has nothing to fear. It is not a little rickety sickly bantling, that dare not venture out of the door for fear of catching cold.

Millerites, does not your failure in the calculation you made on the mathematical numbers of Daniel, in which you tried to make it appear that Christ would make his second advent in 1843, prove to you that God never sent you to sound the "midnight cry?" or will you still contend that God sent you to deceive the world with a volley of lies of the blackest dye, as now your papers, books and pamphlets, a pile of which I have now lying before me, prove to be? What shall I do with them? Shall I make a bonfire of them, and put them out of the way as I would all other novels and romances, "the light bread of the day?" or shall I keep them as a memorial to my posterity of the folly, wickedness and foolery of religionists in the by gone and ever to be remembered year 1843? Yes, I turn my eyes to the wall, and there hangs one of your picture charts as large as a small table, exhibiting a living lie in the abuse of the Bible. Yes, there it may hang for the inspection of my children and my neighbors' children, that they may know how much Millerites knew in 1843; that they may tell it to generations following, and let it be known more than the Millerites realize it, "that no man knoweth the things of God but the spirit of God, which is revelation; and that eternal life is the knowledge of the living and true God and Jesus Christ, whom he has sent; and that no man knoweth the Father or the Son but by revelation. The spirit of God searcheth out the things of God, yea the deep things of God."

To close, let me tell you and all the world that the signs of the times, the distress of the nations with perplexity, the wars, commotions, treachery, wickedness, foolery, vanity, pride, arrogance, speculation, oppression and religious chicanery of all kinds, classes, names, descriptions and qualities, are but the forebodings of the downfall and final overthrow of all and every Gentile nation and power, that Israel and Judah may come home and enjoy the blessings long since promised them by the immutability of God, that he may give to them his kingdom and Christ to come to reign over them forever and ever, and he be their God and they be his people ever more. Let him that readeth understand. God bless the lover of truth that is willing to make that sacrifice for the truth that truth always did demand.

JOHN E. PAGE.

GOD WILL DO HIS WORK AND FULFILL ALL HIS WORD.

Christ says: "Not one jot or tittle of his word shall fail."—There is one thing in the character of men in this age that is worthy of remark, and that is this: there are many that seem to hold the Bible in great reverence, and will talk about it in such a solemn manner that one would think that they really believed every word there is in it, especially that part which says, "thus saith the Lord," so and so. They refer to past events that have taken place in strict fulfillment of prophecy with all that familiarity as though they were eye witnesses of the event, and will contend that in every case the fulfillment of prophecy took place in a literal sense according to the most simple construction of language. Yet, at the same time, when one refers them to things yet future to take place in events that are to transpire in the fulfillment of the word of God, according to the same construction of language, they will say, "Oh, I don't know about that; I rather choose to wait until the event takes place in a literal sense, before I can believe it means just what it says in a literal sense."

Reader, do you not know that the above manner of treating the word of God has damned the Jews and Gentiles in all events of a national character in past times? Judgments on judgments, calamity on calamity has been foretold by God's prophets to fall on the wicked, but still they would not believe until the word was fulfilled on their heads, and probably in hell, on whom the word of prophecy has been fulfilled, nations have lifted up their eyes and confessed that God's word is true. So I think it will be with millions of this age. They will look on and behold all the foreboding events that cast their shadows before more notable ones, and still doubt whether the events foretold by the prophets pertaining to things yet future mean just what they say.

There is one thing certain, if the Millerite application of a minor part of Bible matter had proved true in the second advent of Christ in 1843, more than one half of the Bible would have proved as false as any other bundle of lies. There is nothing plainer on the face of the Bible than the fact that in the dispensation of the last times that the Gentile nations will be reduced to all that moral deformity and pollution of wickedness and corruption that ever characterized the Jews in the days of their most alarming destructions, in consequence of which they will be left to practice on themselves all that fury of self-destruction that the Jews did at Jerusalem in the days of Titus Vespasian, which (Titus) God suffered in his providence to rush forth with all that fury of a war host that characterized Nebuchadnezzar, which the prophets called the "servant" of God to "saw" (chastise) Judah.

So also it is foretold that when the Gentiles have fully accomplished the filling up of the cup of their iniquity they will wage a war with each other, and practice their own disasters until God will turn the tables, and send the several branches of Abraham's posterity, viz., Judah, Israel and Ephraim (the house of Joseph) to finish up the bloody scene. That the American Indians are Ephraim, of the stock of Joseph that was sold into Egypt, I have clearly shown in a former article. If any doubt the truth of what I have stated above, at call I am ready to give the irrefutable word of God for it.

I do think that the accounts which are so frequent in the columns of the public papers at the present time, informing the public of the strong symptoms that are now manifest of the fact that Ephraim (the American Indians) is about to assert his rights and concentrate his force, and in the name of the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph, who was sold into Egypt, and execute what has long since been foretold by the Bible prophets concerning them, is worthy of a serious consideration by Bible believers, that they may be duly prepared for the worst, and find deliverance in Mount Zion, the city of the most high God, whose purposes are not to be thwarted by the infidelity of men. That the great mass of mankind are bound to disbelieve the word of God relative to events that are future to transpire in our world, is as true as the word of God is true.

But there are yet some humble few who, when they read the holy record, will attach as much importance to one portion of the word of God as another, according to its nature and the importance of the thing spoken of, and will profit thereby, and will avail themselves of both the temporal and spiritual salvation that is presented in the case, and that too on the conditions proposed. So did Noah and his family in the days of the flood. So did Lot and his two daughters in the days of the destruction of Sodom. So did the saints in the days of the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, in the year 70 of the christian era. And so will the true hearted saints in the last days, when God stretches forth his mighty arm, and arms his true Israel (the different branches of Jacob's seed) and makes them his "battle axe" to "destroy nations and kingdoms," as foretold by the Jewish prophets. Read Jer. li. They will seek to be delivered in Mount Zion, according to Joel 2d chapter, last verse. Read the 48th and 132d Psalm, and 60th chapter of Isaiah.

He that reads the scriptures quoted above and those inserted below and does not feel an interest in the things spoken of, never ought to be heard speaking hard things concerning the wickedness, stupidity or want of faith in the antediluvians, Sodomites or the Jews; for the calamities that are to fall on the Gentiles in the last days, when God restores Jacob, are as clearly foretold as was theirs.

"When I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee as the sword af a mighty man. And the Lord shall be seen over them, and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning: and the Lord God shall blow the trumpet, and shall go with whirlwinds of the south. The Lord of hosts shall defend them; and they shall devour, and subdue with sling-stones: and they shall drink, and make a noise as through wine; and they shall be filled like bowls, and as the corners of the altar. And the Lord their God shall save them in that day as the flock of his people: for they shall be as the stones of a crown, lifted up as an ensign upon his land." Zech. ix. 13, 14, 15, 16.

"And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth; and behold, they shall come with speed swiftly: None shall be weary nor stumble among them; none shall slumber nor sleep; neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken:

Whose arrows are sharp, and all their bows bent, their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind:—Their roaring shall be like a lion, they shall roar like young lions: yea, they shall roar, and lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it. And in that day they shall roar against them like the roaring of the sea: and if one look unto the land, behold darkness and sorrow, and the light is darkened in the heavens thereof." Isaiah v. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30.

"And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them: for I have mercy upon them; and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the Lord their God, and will hear them. And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; their heart shall rejoice in the Lord. I will hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased. And I will sow them among the people; and they shall remember me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again." Zech. x. 6, 7, 8, 9.

Surely there are none that can recognize any event that has transpired in fulfillment of the above scriptures. What say the Adventists? The reader will do well to read the 18th chapter of Isaiah in connection with the above, for it is impossible (geographically) to apply the land spoken of in the first verse to any other than the land of North and South America. The people "scattered and peeled" are the American Indians. The people to be "given to the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air to summer and winter upon" are the Gentiles, who have finished the measure of their iniquity, as the former nations of the Jaradites and Nephites once before have done on this land, and God in his wrath has cut them off in judgment, as he will the Gentiles for like reasons. JOHN E. PAGE.

CHARACTER.—As one regards his own so he will regard the character of another. If any one regards himself as having lost a good character by his own folly and recklessness, others may expect that such persons will seek to destroy the good character of many, if not all others. J. E. PAGE.

MOB POLICY.—The policy of mobbing pre-supposes that legislative authority in government is less efficient, and thus they arise to correct a supposed evil by perpetrating a greater one. J. E. P.

TALENTS.—Brilliant and sound talents in men, not governed by sound moral principles, are like rich jewels in a swine's snout, they are ploughed into all kinds of filth. J. E. PAGE.

of Titus Vespasian, which (Titus) God suffered in his providence to rush forth with all that fury of a war host that characterized Nebuchadnezzar, which the prophets called the "servant" of God to "saw" (chastise) Judah.

So also it is foretold that when the Gentiles have fully accomplished the filling up of the cup of their iniquity they will wage a war with each other, and practice their own disasters until God will turn the tables, and send the several branches of Abraham's posterity, viz., Judah, Israel and Ephraim (the house of Joseph) to finish up the bloody scene. That the American Indians are Ephraim, of the stock of Joseph that was sold into Egypt, I have clearly shown in a former article. If any doubt the truth of what I have stated above, at call I am ready to give the irrefutable word of God for it.

I do think that the accounts which are so frequent in the columns of the public papers at the present time, informing the public of the strong symptoms that are now manifest of the fact that Ephraim (the American Indians) is about to assert his rights and concentrate his force, and in the name of the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph, who was sold into Egypt, and execute what has long since been foretold by the Bible prophets concerning them, is worthy of a serious consideration by Bible believers, that they may be duly prepared for the worst, and find deliverance in Mount Zion, the city of the most high God, whose purposes are not to be thwarted by the infidelity of men. That the great mass of mankind are bound to disbelieve the word of God relative to events that are future to transpire in our world, is as true as the word of God is true.

But there are yet some humble few who, when they read the holy record, will attach as much importance to one portion of the word of God as another, according to its nature and the importance of the thing spoken of, and will profit thereby, and will avail themselves of both the temporal and spiritual salvation that is presented in the case, and that too on the conditions proposed. So did Noah and his family in the days of the flood. So did Lot and his two daughters in the days of the destruction of Sodom. So did the saints in the days of the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, in the year 70 of the christian era. And so will the true hearted saints in the last days, when God stretches forth his mighty arm, and arms his true Israel (the different branches of Jacob's seed) and makes them his "battle axe" to "destroy nations and kingdoms," as foretold by the Jewish prophets. Read Jer. li. They will seek to be delivered in Mount Zion, according to Joel 2d chapter, last verse. Read the 48th and 132d Psalm, and 60th chapter of Isaiah.

He that reads the scriptures quoted above and those inserted below and does not feel an interest in the things spoken of, never ought to be heard speaking hard things concerning the wickedness, stupidity or want of faith in the antediluvians, Sodomites or the Jews; for the calamities that are to fall on the Gentiles in the last days, when God restores Jacob, are as clearly foretold as was theirs.

"When I have bent Judah for me, filled the bow with Ephraim, and raised up thy sons, O Zion, against thy sons, O Greece, and made thee as the sword af a mighty man. And the Lord shall be seen over them, and his arrow shall go forth as the lightning: and the Lord God shall blow the trumpet, and shall go with whirlwinds of the south. The Lord of hosts shall defend them; and they shall devour, and subdue with sling-stones: and they shall drink, and make a noise as through wine; and they shall be filled like bowls, and as the corners of the altar. And the Lord their God shall save them in that day as the flock of his people: for they shall be as the stones of a crown, lifted up as an ensign upon his land." Zech. ix. 13, 14, 15, 16.

"And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth: and behold, they shall come with speed swiftly: None shall be weary nor stumble among them; none shall slumber nor sleep; neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken:

Whose arrows are sharp, and all their bows bent, their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind:—Their roaring shall be like a lion, they shall roar like young lions: yea, they shall roar, and lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it. And in that day they shall roar against them like the roaring of the sea: and if one look unto the land, behold darkness and sorrow, and the light is darkened in the heavens thereof." Isaiah v. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30.

"And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them: for I have mercy upon them; and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the Lord their God, and will hear them. And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; their heart shall rejoice in the Lord. I will hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased. And I will sow them among the people; and they shall remember me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again." Zech. x. 6, 7, 8, 9.

Surely there are none that can recognize any event that has transpired in fulfillment of the above scriptures. What say the Adventists? The reader will do well to read the 18th chapter of Isaiah in connection with the above, for it is impossible (geographically) to apply the land spoken of in the first verse to any other than the land of North and South America. The people "scattered and peeled" are the American Indians. The people to be "given to the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air to summer and winter upon" are the Gentiles, who have finished the measure of their iniquity, as the former nations of the Jaradites and Nephites once before have done on this land, and God in his wrath has cut them off in judgment, as he will the Gentiles for like reasons. JOHN E. PAGE.

CHARACTER.—As one regards his own so he will regard the character of another. If any one regards himself as having lost a good character by his own folly and recklessness, others may expect that such persons will seek to destroy the good character of many, if not all others. J. E. PAGE.

MOB POLICY.—The policy of mobbing pre-supposes that legislative authority in government is less efficient, and thus they arise to correct a supposed evil by perpetrating a greater one. J. E. P.

TALENTS.—Brilliant and sound talents in men, not governed by sound moral principles, are like rich jewels in a swine's snout, they are ploughed into all kinds of filth. J. E. PAGE.

Beaver Island, August 7th, 1848.

Mr. Editor—Sir:—To you and your readers, if you feel disposed to insert it in the paper, as I am deprived of your society, and the saints at Voree as well as all the rest scattered abroad in Christ Jesus, greeting:—I feel for your interest, and contemplate upon your salvation, which must be effected by obedience to those principles which God has revealed for the salvation of man. Faith is the most fundamental principle existing in man, and one of the pure attributes of the Deity, and the principle upon which God works. All that believe in the doctrine commonly called Mormonism, believe that there has been a falling away from the primitive apostolic church. And as we, the Latter Day Saints, believe that the order of the gospel has been restored in its primeval bloom, we must also believe in those revelations which the Lord has revealed unto us for a law unto his people, by which we shall be judged at the last day. We must also believe in all things pertaining to it and the dispensation of the fullness of times, which dispensation has been delivered to the prophet Joseph Smith, who has been an instrument in the hands of God in bringing forth the Book of Mormon. I do not say in its fullness, for it is to restore all things in Christ.

When God has ever committed a dispensation to the children of men, there has always been a priesthood attached to it. Look at Adam, Noah, Abraham, and finally all whom God has called to stand at the head of a dispensation. Which priesthood has empowered Joseph to give revelations and to organize his church upon the earth with apostles and all the different quorums that come under the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthood, which empowers men again to preach the gospel with signs following those that believe. There is not only a priesthood attached to the gospel, but there are certain gifts which Christ set in the church for the perfecting of the saints, and to prepare them for the coming of Christ. Which Christ, Peter says, the heavens must retain until the times of restitution of all things.

After man has obeyed the first principles, had faith to believe, and been baptized for the remission of his sins, there is a probability of his being restored by his keeping the commandments of God and saved; which must be effected by his works and faith—Christ being the prototype of all saved beings—thereby they become the sons of God, by being of Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise. Christ told his apostles that the gospel should be preached in all the world. The priesthood is never to be taken from the earth again, nor, as Joseph said, the kingdom given to another people, but established on the earth for the gathering of Israel and Judah from among all the Gentile nations, and all the scattered tribes of Israel where they have been driven. As this great and marvelous work has commenced among the Gentiles, God has been pleased to locate the land of Zion in the State of Missouri by revelation through his servant Joseph. But as his people have not been permitted to stay there on account of mob violence, he has been pleased to appoint stakes for the gathering of his people, until the land shall be redeemed and cleansed, as the land of Canaan was for the reception of the children of Israel. And as Joseph has been taken from the earth and from his people, the Lord has appointed another in his stead, even as he has said, who now stands at the head of this dispensation to confer the fullness of the priesthood, as it may be revealed from time to time.

As Beaver Island is a place of gathering for the saints, appointed by James the prophet, and the place of my present residence, I recommend it to the saints for a place of safety for the pure in heart, and susceptible of prospering to the faithful. It is necessary for those that gather here to associate themselves and come or send their means to buy the lands for themselves and brethren. And if they find privation to not be disappointed. And they must feel willing to be numbered among the Lamanites when the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. How necessary it is that the saints abroad should lay hold of the word of God. Bring your gold and your silver to build those stakes and edifices which God has appointed, so that we may receive the blessings of the fullness of the priesthood, the salvation for the dead, those ancient records, and the blessings of an eternal deliverance. Hearken O ye Gentiles! Will you reject or receive the fullness of the wrath of God? Yours in the bonds of the covenant,

Daniel the prophet.

Ignorance in England.—The report of the Register General recently published in London, discloses a depth of ignorance among the poorer class of Great Britain, which would be incredible if it were not vouched for by official records. During the years 1839, 1840, and '41, out of 735,788 persons married, 363,830 affixed their marks to the marriage registry by way of signature. In Monmouthshire and Wales, 40 males in 100, and 69 females in 100 were unable to write their names, while in Cheshire and Lancashire, 40 per cent. of males and 65 per cent. of females were similarly disqualified.

☞ Indulge not thyself in the passion of anger; it is whetting a sword to wound thine own breast or murder thy friend.

☞ Truth has nothing to fear, and is always sure of victory.

CONFERENCE.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Voree Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next. By order of the Pres.

Gilbert Watson, Recorder.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

Book of Mormon for sale at this office. Also Thompson's Evidences, and an assortment of tracts.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cn.

Beaver Island, August 7th, 1848.

Mr. Editor—Sir:—To you and your readers, if you feel disposed to insert it in the paper, as I am deprived of your society, and the saints at Voree as well as all the rest scattered abroad in Christ Jesus, greeting:—I feel for your interest, and contemplate upon your salvation, which must be effected by obedience to those principles which God has revealed for the salvation of man. Faith is the most fundamental principle existing in man, and one of the pure attributes of the Deity, and the principle upon which God works. All that believe in the doctrine commonly called Mormonism, believe that there has been a falling away from the primitive apostolic church. And as we, the Latter Day Saints, believe that the order of the gospel has been restored in its primeval bloom, we must also believe in those revelations which the Lord has revealed unto us for a law unto his people, by which we shall be judged at the last day. We must also believe in all things pertaining to it and the dispensation of the fullness of times, which dispensation has been delivered to the prophet Joseph Smith, who has been an instrument in the hands of God in bringing forth the Book of Mormon. I do not say in its fullness, for it is to restore all things in Christ.

When God has ever committed a dispensation to the children of men, there has always been a priesthood attached to it. Look at Adam, Noah, Abraham, and finally all whom God has called to stand at the head of a dispensation. Which priesthood has empowered Joseph to give revelations and to organize his church upon the earth with apostles and all the different quorums that come under the Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthood, which empowers men again to preach the gospel with signs following those that believe. There is not only a priesthood attached to the gospel, but there are certain gifts which Christ set in the church for the perfecting of the saints, and to prepare them for the coming of Christ. Which Christ, Peter says, the heavens must retain until the times of restitution of all things.

After man has obeyed the first principles, had faith to believe, and been baptized for the remission of his sins, there is a probability of his being restored by his keeping the commandments of God and saved; which must be effected by his works and faith—Christ being the prototype of all saved beings—thereby they become the sons of God, by being of Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise. Christ told his apostles that the gospel should be preached in all the world. The priesthood is never to be taken from the earth again, nor, as Joseph said, the kingdom given to another people, but established on the earth for the gathering of Israel and Judah from among all the Gentile nations, and all the scattered tribes of Israel where they have been driven. As this great and marvelous work has commenced among the Gentiles, God has been pleased to locate the land of Zion in the State of Missouri by revelation through his servant Joseph. But as his people have not been permitted to stay there on account of mob violence, he has been pleased to appoint stakes for the gathering of his people, until the land shall be redeemed and cleansed, as the land of Canaan was for the reception of the children of Israel. And as Joseph has been taken from the earth and from his people, the Lord has appointed another in his stead, even as he has said, who now stands at the head of this dispensation to confer the fullness of the priesthood, as it may be revealed from time to time.

As Beaver Island is a place of gathering for the saints, appointed by James the prophet, and the place of my present residence, I recommend it to the saints for a place of safety for the pure in heart, and susceptible of prospering to the faithful. It is necessary for those that gather here to associate themselves and come or send their means to buy the lands for themselves and brethren. And if they [illegible] privation to not be disappointed. And they must feel willing to be numbered among the Lamanites when the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. How necessary it is that the saints abroad should lay hold of the word of God. Bring your gold and your silver to build those stakes and edifices which God has appointed, so that we may receive the blessings of the fullness of the priesthood, the salvation for the dead, those ancient records, and the blessings of an eternal deliverance. Hearken O ye Gentiles! Will you reject or receive the fullness of the wrath of God? Yours in the bonds of the covenant,

DANIEL THE PROPHET.

IGNORANCE IN ENGLAND.—The report of the Register General recently published in London, discloses a depth of ignorance among the poorer class of Great Britain, which would be incredible if it were not vouched for by official records. During the years 1839, 1840, and '41, out of 735,788 persons married, 363,830 affixed their marks to the marriage registry by way of signature. In Monmouthshire and Wales, 40 males in 100, and 69 females in 100 were unable to write their names, while in Cheshire and Lancashire, 40 per cent. of males and 65 per cent. of females were similarly disqualified.

☞ INDULGE not thyself in the passion of anger; it is whetting a sword to wound thine own breast or murder thy friend.

☞ Truth has nothing to fear, and is always sure of victory.

CONFERENCE.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Voree Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next. By order of the Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

Book of Mormon for sale at this office. Also Thompson's Evidences, and an assortment of tracts.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest money due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest money and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Ellington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 26.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. SEPT. 14, 1848. [WHOLE No. 90.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE FLOOD AND THE TRADITIONAL HISTORY OF THE CHINESE.

I present below a lengthy extract for the reading and scrutiny of my readers, from the 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th pages of a history of the "American Antiquities," "by Josiah Priest," published in 1833. I copy from the fifth edition, published in 1838. The reader will discover that the attempt in the following article is, to defend the divine claims of the Bible against the traditional history of the Chinese relative to dates respecting the creation and the flood, as given by Moses in the book of Genesis:—

"A lofty summit on a range of mountains, called Ararat, in Asia, furnished the resting place of the Ark, which contained the progenitors of both man and animals, who have replenished the globe since the era of the deluge, (flood of Noah.) The inhabitants dwelling on the plain, around this mountain, all unite in reverencing it as the haven of the great ship which preserved the father of mankind from the waters of the deluge.

"But that the flood of Noah was universal is gravely doubted; in proof of which, the abettors of this doubt, bring the traditional history of the ancient Chinese. Professor Rafinesque, of the city of Philadelphia, confessedly a learned and most able antiquarian, has recently advanced the following exceedingly interesting and curious matter, which relates to this subject, as follows:—

"History of China before the Flood. The traditions preserved by many ancient nations of the earliest history of the earth and mankind, before and after the great floods, which have desolated the globe, are highly interesting.

"Ancient China was in the eastern slopes and branches of the mountains of Central Asia, the hoary Imalaya, where it is as yet very doubtful whether the flood thoroughly extended.

"But though this is doubted, we cannot subscribe to the opinion, however great our deference may be for the ability and research of those who have ventured to doubt. We feel by far a greater deference for the statement of the Hebrew author of the book of Genesis; an historian of the highest accredited antiquity. This author says plainly, that 'all the high hills under the whole heaven were covered;' and that 'fifteen cubits and upwards, the waters prevailed; and the mountains were covered.' But not so, if we are to believe the above suggestion, which would leave a very large tract of country of Central Asia exempt from the flood of Noah.

"This opinion, which contradicts the Bible account of that flood, is founded on 'the traditional history of China, which speaks of two great floods which desolated, but did not overflow the land.'—They answer, says Mr. Rafinesque, to the two great floods of Noah and Peleg, recorded in the Bible. 'The latter, the flood of Peleg, or Yao, was caused, he says, by volcanic paroxysms all over the earth;' but 'much less fatal than the flood of Noah, or Yu-ti, in China,' which was no doubt the fact.

"Respecting this flood, 'the following details are taken chiefly from the Chinese historians, Liu-yu and Lo-pi, whose works are called Y-tese, and Uai-ki, as translated by Leroux.' These say, that 'the first flood happened under the 8th Ki, or period called Yu-ti, and the first emperor of it,' was 'Chin-sang, about 3170 years before Christ,' 826 before the flood.

"But neither can this be true, as the flood of Noah took place 1656 years from the creation, which would be but 2344 years before Christ; being a mistake of about 826 years. Wherefore, if there is any truth in the Chinese history at all, it must allude to some flood before that of Noah; an account of which may have been received from Noah himself, and preserved by the Chinese.

"The flood alluded to by the above named historians, did not, it is true, according to their account, overflow the whole earth, but was such as that the waters did not return to their usual channels for a long time: 'The misery of mankind was extreme; the beasts and serpents were very numerous;' being driven together by the pursuit of the waters, and also 'storms and cold' had greatly increased.—Chin-sang collected the wandering men to unite against the wild beasts, to dress their skins for clothing, and to weave their fur into webs and caps. This emperor was venerated for these benefits, and began a Shi, or dynasty, that lasted 350 years.

"This account would suit very well to the character of Nimrod, the founder of the first monarchy after the flood, whom we are much inclined to think the Chinese historians point out, instead of any king before the era of the flood of Noah.

"But to the research of the highly gifted antiquarian, Rafinesque, we are greatly indebted in one important respect, as it is well known that persons in the learned world have greatly admired the boasted antiquity of the Chinese nations, who, by their records, make the earth much older than the account given by Moses. But this philosopher on this subject writes as follows: 'The two Chinese words Ki and Shi, translated period and dynasty, or family, are of some importance. As they now stand translated, they would make the world very old; since no less than ten Ki, or periods, are enumerated, (we are in the 10th;) wherein 232 Shi, or dynasties of emperors, are said to have ruled in China, during a course of 276,480 years Christ, at the lowest computation; and 96,962,220 before Christ, at the highest; with many intermediary calculations, by various authors.

"'But if Ki, he says, may also mean a dynasty, or division, or people, as it appears to do in some instances, and Shi, an age, or a tribe, or reign, the whole preposterous computation will prove false, or be easily reduced to agree with those of the Hindoos, Persians and Egyptians;' and come within the age of the earth as given in the Scriptures.

"If the central region of Asia may have been exempted from that flood, we may then safely inquire whether other parts of the globe may not also have been exempt; where men and animals were preserved; and thus the account of the Ark, in which, as related by Moses, both men and animals were saved, is completely overturn-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 26.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, SEPT. 14, 1848. [WHOLE No. 90.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE FLOOD AND THE TRADITIONAL HISTORY OF THE CHINESE.

I present below a lengthy extract for the reading and scrutiny of my readers, from the 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th pages of a history of the "American Antiquities," "by Josiah Priest," published in 1833. I copy from the fifth edition, published in 1838. The reader will discover that the attempt in the following article is, to defend the divine claims of the Bible against the traditional history of the Chinese relative to dates respecting the creation and the flood, as given by Moses in the book of Genesis:—

"A lofty summit on a range of mountains, called Ararat, in Asia, furnished the resting place of the Ark, which contained the progenitors of both man and animals, who have replenished the globe since the era of the deluge, (flood of Noah.) The inhabitants dwelling on the plain, around this mountain, all unite in reverencing it as the haven of the great ship which preserved the father of mankind from the waters of the deluge.

"But that the flood of Noah was universal is gravely doubted; in proof of which, the abettors of this doubt, bring the traditional history of the ancient Chinese. Professor Rafinesque, of the city of Philadelphia, confessedly a learned and most able antiquarian, has recently advanced the following exceedingly interesting and curious matter, which relates to this subject, as follows:—

"History of China before the Flood. The traditions preserved by many ancient nations of the earliest history of the earth and mankind, before and after the great floods, which have desolated the globe, are highly interesting.

"Ancient China was in the eastern slopes and branches of the mountains of Central Asia, the hoary Imalaya, where it is as yet very doubtful whether the flood thoroughly extended.

"But though this is doubted, we cannot subscribe to the opinion, however great our deference may be for the ability and research of those who have ventured to doubt. We feel by far a greater deference for the statement of the Hebrew author of the book of Genesis; an historian of the highest accredited antiquity. This author says plainly, that 'all the high hills under the whole heaven were covered;' and that 'fifteen cubits and upwards, the waters prevailed; and the mountains were covered.' But not so, if we are to believe the above suggestion, which would leave a very large tract of country of Central Asia exempt from the flood of Noah.

"This opinion, which contradicts the Bible account of that flood, is founded on 'the traditional history of China, which speaks of two great floods which desolated, but did not overflow the land.'—They answer, says Mr. Rafinesque, to the two great floods of Noah and Peleg, recorded in the Bible. 'The latter, the flood of Peleg, or Yao, was caused, he says, by volcanic paroxysms all over the earth;' but 'much less fatal than the flood of Noah, or Yu-ti, in China,' which was no doubt the fact.

"Respecting this flood, 'the following details are taken chiefly from the Chinese historians, Liu-yu and Lo-pi, whose works are called Y-tese, and Uai-ki, as translated by Leroux.' These say, that 'the first flood happened under the 8th Ki, or period called Yu-ti, and the first emperor of it,' was 'Chin-sang, about 3170 years before Christ,' 826 before the flood.

"But neither can this be true, as the flood of Noah took place 1656 years from the creation, which would be but 2344 years before Christ; being a mistake of about 826 years. Wherefore, if there is any truth in the Chinese history at all, it must allude to some flood before that of Noah; an account of which may have been received from Noah himself, and preserved by the Chinese.

"The flood alluded to by the above named historians, did not, it is true, according to their account, overflow the whole earth, but was such as that the waters did not return to their usual channels for a long time: 'The misery of mankind was extreme; the beasts and serpents were very numerous;' being driven together by the pursuit of the waters, and also 'storms and cold' had greatly increased.—Chin-sang collected the wandering men to unite against the wild beasts, to dress their skins for clothing, and to weave their fur into webs and caps. This emperor was venerated for these benefits, and began a Shi, or dynasty, that lasted 350 years.

"This account would suit very well to the character of Nimrod, the founder of the first monarchy after the flood, whom we are much inclined to think the Chinese historians point out, instead of any king before the era of the flood of Noah.

"But to the research of the highly gifted antiquarian, Rafinesque, we are greatly indebted in one important respect, as it is well known that persons in the learned world have greatly admired the boasted antiquity of the Chinese nations, who, by their records, make the earth much older than the account given by Moses. But this philosopher on this subject writes as follows: 'The two Chinese words Ki and Shi, translated period and dynasty, or family, are of some importance. As they now stand translated, they would make the world very old; since no less than ten Ki, or periods, are enumerated, (we are in the 10th;) wherein 232 Shi, or dynasties of emperors, are said to have ruled in China, during a course of 276,480 years Christ, at the lowest computation; and 96,962,220 before Christ, at the highest; with many intermediary calculations, by various authors.

"'But if Ki, he says, may also mean a dynasty, or division, or people, as it appears to do in some instances, and Shi, an age, or a tribe, or reign, the whole preposterous computation will prove false, or be easily reduced to agree with those of the Hindoos, Persians and Egyptians;' and come within the age of the earth as given in the Scriptures.

"If the central region of Asia may have been exempted from that flood, we may then safely inquire whether other parts of the globe may not also have been exempt; where men and animals were preserved; and thus the account of the Ark, in which, as related by Moses, both men and animals were saved, is completely overturned. But the universal traditions of all nations contradict this, while the earth every where shows signs of the operations of the waters, in agreement with this universal tradition. If such a flood never took place, which rushed over the earth with extraordinary violence, how, it may be inquired, are there found in Siberia, in north latitude 60 and 70 deg., great masses of the bones of the elephant and rhinoceros—animals of the hot regions of the equator. From this it is evident that the flood which wafted the bodies of those animals, rolled exactly over all China and the Hindoo regions. In all parts of the earth, even on the highest regions and mountains, are found oceanic remains. Whales have been found in the mountains of Greenland, and also in other parts, as in America, far from the ocean.

"Chinese history, it is true, gives an account of many floods, which have ruined whole tracts of that country, as many as sixty-five, one of which, in the year 185 before Christ, it is said, formed that body of water called the Yellow Sea, situated between Corea and China.

"But were the history of American floods written, occasioned by similar causes: such as rivers rupturing their mountain barriers; and the shocks of earthquakes, since the time of Noah's flood; who could say there would not be as many. We shall have occasion to speak of this subject before we close this volume.

"It is said that the history of China gives an account of the state of mankind before the flood of Yuti, or Noah, and represents them as having been happy, ruled by benevolent monarchs, who took nothing and gave much; the world submitted to their virtues and good laws; they wore no crowns, but long hair; never made war, and put no one to death. But this is also contrary to the account of Moses; who says the earth before the flood was corrupt before God, and was filled with violence. But they carry their description of the happiness of men so high, as to represent perfect harmony as having existed between men and animals; when men lived on roots and the fruits of the earth; that they did not follow hunting; property was common, and universal concord prevailed. From this high wrought account of the pristine happiness of man, we are at once referred to the original state of Adam in Paradise, and to his patriarchal government after his fall, and it is likely also to that of his successors, till men had multiplied in the earth; so as to form conflicting interests, when the rapine and violence commenced, as spoken of by Moses, which it seems grew worse and worse, till the flood came and took them all away.

"That the central parts of Asia were not overflown by the deluge, appears of vast importance to some philosophers of the present day to be established. For if so, we see, say they at once, how both men and animals were preserved from that flood; and yet this does not, they say, militate against the Mosaic account; for the very word ark is in the original language, theba and signifies refuge, and is the country of Thibet. So that when Moses talked about an ark, he only meant the central part of Asia, or Thibet, in which men and animals were saved, instead of a vessel.

"Theba, or Thibet, situated in what is called Central Asia, and in size equal to three-fourths of the area of the United States, is indeed the highest part of that continent, and produces mountains higher than any other part of the earth: yet Moses says, that the flood prevailed fifteen cubits and upwards above the highest mountains.

"Thibet is situated in latitude 30 degrees north, exactly between Farther India, Hindostan and Siberia, where banks of the bones of equatorial animals are found, as we have noticed; by which we ascertain that the deluge rolled over this very Theba, the country supposed to have been left dry at the time of Noah's flood.

"The Mosaic account plainly says that God said to Noah, 'make thee an ark of gopher wood.' Surely Noah did not make the central part of Asia, called Theba or Thibet; neither was he commanded to do so, as it would have taken much gopher wood to have formed the whole, or a part of so large a country. But respecting the word which is translated ark in the scriptures, it is said by Adam Clarke to be in the original Tebath, and not Theba.

"The word Tebath, he says, signifies vessel, and means no more nor less than a vessel, in its most common acceptation, a hollow place, capable of containing persons, goods, &c. The idea, therefore, that the word ark signified the central parts of Asia, called Theba or Thibet, falls to the ground; while the history, as given by Moses, respecting the flood of Noah, remains unshaken.

"The same author has also discovered that a race of ancient people in South America, called the Zapotecas, boast of being antediluvian in America, and to have built the city of Coat-lan, so named because this city was founded at a place which swarmed with serpents, therefore named Snake city, or Coat-lan, built 327 years before the flood, and that at the time of the flood, a remnent of them, together with their king, named Pet-ela, (or dog,) saved themselves on a mountain of the same name, Coat-lan.

"But we consider this tradition to relate only to the first efforts at architecture after the flood of Noah, round about the region of Ararat, and on the plains of Shinar. The very circumstance of this tribe being still designated by that of the Dog tribe, is an evidence that they originated not before the flood as a nation, but in Asia, since that era; for in Asia, as in America, tribes of men have also been thus designated, and called after the various animals of the woods. The Snake Indians are well known to the western explorers in America, as also many other tribes, who are named after various wild animals. And the circumstance of their city being built at a place where there were many serpents, shows the allusion to point to the same time and place spoken of on page 11, where the Chinese historians, Liu-yu and Lo-pi say the serpents were driven together by the waters, at the flood of Peleg,—where, according to the Zapotecas, the city of Snakes, or Coat-lan, was built.

"Many of the first nations were called after serpents,—as the Hivites, the Ophites, the Ethiops, or Ethiopians, Bassolidians, &c. —all derived, it is likely, from circumstances variously relating to the abundance of serpents in these times, and abounding at certain places more than others. Even the adoration and worship of that terrible reptile obtained among many nations, before as well as after the Christian era."

I look at the above as being but a weak defence of the claims of the divinity of the Bible against so strong a bulwark as the Chinese dates of their own chronology, a people whose history, as far as has come under my research, presents as unbroken a chain as any other, and more so; for, as a nation, I can learn that they have been revolutionized, but never destroyed; and as near as I can learn they have had in practical use the art of printing for more than half the time from this date (1848) back to the flood. This art, at whatever time it was first introduced into use among them, certainly would strongly indicate that they must have acquired, to a considerable degree, a practicable knowledge of the other branches of the common sciences, especially the art of writing and keeping public as well as private records. Consequently it remains to be more satisfactorily disclosed how it is that the people of China have fallen into so "preposterous" an error relative to their national chronology as to compute to themselves hundreds of thousands or tens of millions of years of time more than the age of the earth according to the Mosaic record.

But as I am an unshaken believer in the divinity of the Bible, not merely by the force of chronological dates or tradition, or the force

ed. But the universal traditions of all nations contradict this, while the earth every where shows signs of the operations of the waters, in agreement with this universal tradition. If such a flood never took place, which rushed over the earth with extraordinary violence, how, it may be inquired, are there found in Siberia, in north latitude 60 and 70 deg., great masses of the bones of the elephant and rhinoceros—animals of the hot regions of the equator. From this it is evident that the flood which wafted the bodies of those animals, rolled exactly over all China and the Hindoo regions. In all parts of the earth, even on the highest regions and mountains, are found oceanic remains. Whales have been found in the mountains of Greenland, and also in other parts, as in America, far from the ocean.

"Chinese history, it is true, gives an account of many floods, which have ruined whole tracts of that country, as many as sixty-five, one of which, in the year 185 before Christ, it is said, formed that body of water called the Yellow Sea, situated between Corea and China.

"But were the history of American floods written, occasioned by similar causes: such as rivers rupturing their mountain barriers; and the shocks of earthquakes, since the time of Noah's flood; who could say there would not be as many. We shall have occasion to speak of this subject before we close this volume.

"It is said that the history of China gives an account of the state of mankind before the flood of Yuti, or Noah, and represents them as having been happy, ruled by benevolent monarchs, who took nothing and gave much; the world submitted to their virtues and good laws; they wore no crowns, but long hair; never made war, and put no one to death. But this is also contrary to the account of Moses; who says the earth before the flood was corrupt before God, and was filled with violence. But they carry their description of the happiness of men so high, as to represent perfect harmony as having existed between men and animals; when men lived on roots and the fruits of the earth; that they did not follow hunting; property was common, and universal concord prevailed. From this high wrought account of the pristine happiness of man, we are at once referred to the original state of Adam in Paradise, and to his patriarchal government after his fall, and it is likely also to that of his successors, till men had multiplied in the earth; so as to form conflicting interests, when the rapine and violence commenced, as spoken of by Moses, which it seems grew worse and worse, till the flood came and took them all away.

"That the central parts of Asia were not overflown by the deluge, appears of vast importance to some philosophers of the present day to be established. For if so, we see, say they at once, how both men and animals were preserved from that flood; and yet this does not, they say, militate against the Mosaic account; for the very word ark is in the original language, theba and signifies refuge, and is the country of Thibet. So that when Moses talked about an ark, he only meant the central part of Asia, or Thibet, in which men and animals were saved, instead of a vessel.

"Theba, or Thibet, situated in what is called Central Asia, and in size equal to three-fourths of the area of the United States, is indeed the highest part of that continent, and produces mountains higher than any other part of the earth: yet Moses says, that the flood prevailed fifteen cubits and upwards above the highest mountains.

"Thibet is situated in latitude 30 degrees north, exactly between Farther India, Hindostan and Siberia, where banks of the bones of equatorial animals are found, as we have noticed; by which we ascertain that the deluge rolled over this very Theba, the country supposed to have been left dry at the time of Noah's flood.

"The Mosaic account plainly says that God said to Noah, 'make thee an ark of gopher wood.' Surely Noah did not make the central part of Asia, called Theba or Thibet; neither was he commanded to do so, as it would have taken much gopher wood to have formed the whole, or a part of so large a country. But respecting the word which is translated ark in the scriptures, it is said by Adam Clarke to be in the original Tebath, and not Theba.

"The word Tebath, he says, signifies vessel, and means no more nor less than a vessel, in its most common acceptation, a hollow place, capable of containing persons, goods, &c. The idea, therefore, that the word ark signified the central parts of Asia, called Theba or Thibet, falls to the ground; while the history, as given by Moses, respecting the flood of Noah, remains unshaken.

"The same author has also discovered that a race of ancient people in South America, called the Zapotecas, boast of being antediluvian in America, and to have built the city of Coat-lan, so named because this city was founded at a place which swarmed with serpents, therefore named Snake city, or Coat-lan, built 327 years before the flood, and that at the time of the flood, a remnent of them, together with their king, named Pet-ela, (or dog,) saved themselves on a mountain of the same name, Coat-lan.

"But we consider this tradition to relate only to the first efforts at architecture after the flood of Noah, round about the region of Ararat, and on the plains of Shinar. The very circumstance of this tribe being still designated by that of the Dog tribe, is an evidence that they originated not before the flood as a nation, but in Asia, since that era; for in Asia, as in America, tribes of men have also been thus designated, and called after the various animals of the woods. The Snake Indians are well known to the western explorers in America, as also many other tribes, who are named after various wild animals. And the circumstance of their city being built at a place where there were many serpents, shows the allusion to point to the same time and place spoken of on page 11, where the Chinese historians, Liu-yu and Lo-pi say the serpents were driven together by the waters, at the flood of Peleg,—where, according to the Zapotecas, the city of Snakes, or Coat-lan, was built.

"Many of the first nations were called after serpents,—as the Hivites, the Ophites, the Ethiops, or Ethiopians, Bassolidians, &c. —all derived, it is likely, from circumstances variously relating to the abundance of serpents in these times, and abounding at certain places more than others. Even the adoration and worship of that terrible reptile obtained among many nations, before as well as after the Christian era."

I look at the above as being but a weak defence of the claims of the divinity of the Bible against so strong a bulwark as the Chinese dates of their own chronology, a people whose history, as far as has come under my research, presents as unbroken a chain as any other, and more so; for, as a nation, I can learn that they have been revolutionized, but never destroyed; and as near as I can learn they have had in practical use the art of printing for more than half the time from this date (1848) back to the flood. This art, at whatever time it was first introduced into use among them, certainly would strongly indicate that they must have acquired, to a considerable degree, a practicable knowledge of the other branches of the common sciences, especially the art of writing and keeping public as well as private records. Consequently it remains to be more satisfactorily disclosed how it is that the people of China have fallen into so "preposterous" an error relative to their national chronology as to compute to themselves hundreds of thousands or tens of millions of years of time more than the age of the earth according to the Mosaic record.

But as I am an unshaken believer in the divinity of the Bible, not merely by the force of chronological dates or tradition, or the of religious education, but by the power of the God of the true prophets, I am not in the least concerned in meeting as strong a bulwark to contend with against the divinity of the Book of Mormon as the above is against the Bible. I have merely copied the above to show what great allowances there must be made to traditions as being corrupted in many particulars, yet carrying all force in the general leading facts to confirm that which they are arrayed to prove. If the leading facts in tradition clearly corroborate with statements made previous to the developments of the tradition of the people concerned, it certainly must be regarded as the strongest class of testimony, especially when the statements made are of such a nature that it would naturally lie out of the reach of human imagination, as will appear in the following article. JOHN E. PAGE.

COLLATERAL TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTH AND DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.—No. 3.

In the Book of Mormon, published in 1830, on page 433, stereotyped edition, is presented the following account of a prophecy:—

"And now it came to pass that Samuel, the Lamanite, did prophecy a great many more things which cannot be written. And, behold, he said unto them, Behold, I give unto you a sign: for five years more cometh, and, behold, then cometh the Son of God to redeem all those who shall believe on his name. And, behold, this will I give unto you for a sign at the time of his coming; for, behold, there shall be great lights in heaven, insomuch that in the night before he cometh there shall be no darkness, insomuch that it shall appear unto man as if it was day; therefore there shall be one day and a night, and a day, as if it were one day, and there were no night; and this shall be unto you for a sign; for ye shall know of the rising of the sun, and also of its setting; therefore they shall know of a surety that there shall be two days and a night; nevertheless the night shall not be darkened; and it shall be the night before he is born. And behold there shall be a new star arise, such an one as ye have never beheld; and this also shall be a sign unto you."

On pages 440 and 441 is presented an account of the fulfillment of the above prophecy, as follows:—

"Now it came to pass that there was a day set apart by the unbelievers, that all those who believed in these traditions should be put to death, except the sign should come to pass which had been given by Samuel the prophet. Now it came to pass that when Nephi, the son of Nephi, saw this wickedness of his people, his heart was exceding sorrowful. And it came to pass that he went out and bowed himself down upon the earth, and cried mightily to his God, in behalf of his people; yea, those who were about to be destroyed because of their faith in the tradition of their fathers. And it came to pass that he cried mightily unto the Lord, all the day; and behold, the voice of the Lord came unto him, saying, Lift up your head and be of good cheer, for behold, the time is at hand, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world, to show unto the world that I will fulfill all that which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy prophets. Behold, I come unto my own, to fulfill all things which I have made known unto the children of men, from the foundation of the world, and do the will, both of the Father, and of the Son of the Father, because of me, and of the Son, because of my flesh.—And behold, the time is at hand, and this night shall the sign be given.

"And it came to pass that the words which came unto Nephi were fulfilled, according as they had been spoken: for behold at the going down of the sun there was no darkness; and the people began to be astonished, because there was no darkness when the night came. And there were many who had not believed the words of the prophets, fell to the earth, and became as if they were dead, for they knew that the great plan of destruction which they had laid for those who believed in the word of the prophets, had been frustrated, for the signal which had been given was already at hand; and they began to know that the Son of God must shortly appear; yea, in fine, all the people upon the face of the whole earth, from the west to the east, both in the land north and in the land south, were so exceedingly astonished, that they fell to the earth; for they knew that the prophets had testified of these things for many years, and that the sign which had been given, was already at hand; and they began to fear because of their iniquity and their unbelief.

"And it came to pass that there was no darkness in all that night, but it was as light as though it was mid-day. And it came to pass that the sun did rise in the morning again, according to its proper order; and they knew that it was the day that the Lord should be born, because of the sign which had been given. And it came to pass, yea, all things, every whit, according to the words of the prophets. And it came to pass also, that a new star did appear, according to the word."

As collateral testimony to the truth of the above, I present the following account of a tradition had among the Central American Indians, copied from the "incidents of travels" of John L. Stephens in Chiapas and Yucatan, Vol. 2, 1841, page 173. The account of a certain division of the ancient American Indian nation into three nations, says:—

"This division was made on a day when three suns were visible at the same time, which extraordinary circumstance, says the manuscript, has induced some persons to believe that it was made on the day of our Savior's birth."

All who are familiar with the Book of Mormon are probably aware of the fact that the whole account of the history of the fore fathers of the American Indians, called the Nephites, Lamanites and Zoramites, is confined to Central America entirely until the 394th page. The 30th chapter of the book of Alma, commencing on that page, commences the account of one Hagoth, who built a ship on the shores of the Pacific ocean opposite or nearly west of the south-west part of the Gulf of Mexico, and sailed northward.—Consequently the above account, copied from the Book of Mormon, originated in Central America, where Mr. Stephens picked up the corroborating tradition.

The reader will doubtless observe that the account of Samuel's prophecy and its fulfillment is a later account than that of Hagoth building a ship and sailing northward. Yet by reading the 5th chapter of Helaman you will observe that Samuel delivered his prophecy at the city of Zarahemla, which, at some future period, I intend to show clearly that it is the veritable city of Palenque, the ruins of which is situated some miles south-west of the Gulf of Mexico. Read Stephens' travels, 1841, Vol. 2, page 289, &c.—The reader will keep in view that the city of Zarahemla was not built by the Jaradites nor the descendants of Lehi, but by the descendants of Mulek, who left the city of Jerusalem in Palestine in the eleventh year of the reign of king Zedekiah, the year that Zedekiah and all Jerusalem was taken captive by Nebuchadnezzar.—Read Book of Mormon, pages 411 and 419 inclusive.

JOHN E. PAGE.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, AND A VOICE TO MANKIND BY AND THROUGH ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, THE POUGHKEEPSIE SEER AND CLAIRVOYANT, NEW YORK, S. S. LYON AND WILLIAM FISHBOUGH, 1847.

(Continued from No. 24.)

"The Bible does not give a connected account of the origin of the Jewish nation after the flood." Page 461.

religious education, but by the power of the God of the true proph-
, I am not in the least concerned in meeting as strong a bulwark contend with against the divinity of the Book of Mormon as the ove is against the Bible. I have merely copied the above to show hat great allowances there must be made to traditions as being rrupted in many particulars, yet carrying all force in the general ading facts to confirm that which they are arrayed to prove. If e leading facts in tradition clearly corroborate with statements ade previous to the developments of the tradition of the people con-rmed, it certainly must be regarded as the strongest class of testiony, especially when the statements made are of such a nature at it would naturally lie out of the reach of human imagination, s will appear in the following article. JOHN E. PAGE.

COLLATERAL TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTH AND DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.—No. 3.

In the Book of Mormon, published in 1830, on page 433, stereoyped edition, is presented the following account of a prophecy:—
"And now it came to pass that Samuel, the Lamanite, did prophcy a great many more things which cannot be written. And, be-old, he said unto them, Behold, I give unto you a sign: for five ears more cometh, and, behold, then cometh the Son of God to redeem all those who shall believe on his name. And, behold, this will I give unto you for a sign at the time of his coming; for, be-old, there shall be great lights in heaven, insomuch that in the night before he cometh there shall be no darkness, insomuch that it shall appear unto man as if it was day; therefore there shall be one day nd a night, and a day, as if it were one day, and there were no ight; and this shall be unto you for a sign; for ye shall know of he rising of the sun, and also of its setting; therefore they shall know of a surety that there shall be two days and a night; neverheless the night shall not be darkened; and it shall be the night be- ore he is born. And behold there shall be a new star arise, such an one as ye have never beheld; and this also shall be a sign unto you."

On pages 440 and 441 is presented an account of the fulfillment
f the above prophecy, as follows:—

"Now it came to pass that there was a day set apart by the unbelievers, that all those who believed in these traditions should e put to death, except the sign should come to pass which had been given by Samuel the prophet. Now it came to pass that when Nephi, the son of Nephi, saw this wickedness of his people, his heart was exceding sorrowful. And it came to pass that he went out and bowed himself down upon the earth, and cried mightly to his God, in behalf of his people; yea, those who were about o be destroyed because of their faith in the tradition of their fathers.
And it came to pass that he cried mightily unto the Lord, all the ay; and behold, the voice of the Lord came unto him, saying, ift up your head and be of good cheer, for behold, the time is at nd, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow me I into the world, to show unto the world that I will fulfill all hat which I have caused to be spoken by the mouth of my holy rophets. Behold, I come unto my own, to fulfill all things which have made known unto the children of men, from the foundation f the world, and do the will, both of the Father, and of the Son of he Father, because of me, and of the Son, because of my flesh:—
nd behold, the time is at hand, and this night shall the sign be iven.

"And it came to pass that the words which came unto Nephi ere fulfilled, according as they had been spoken: for behold at e going down of the sun there was no darkness; and the people gan to be astonished, because there was no darkness when the ght came. And there were many who had not believed the words the prophets, fell to the earth, and became as if they were dead, for they knew that the great plan of destruction which they had laid for those who believed in the word of the prophets, had been frustrated, for the signal which had been given was already at hand; and they began to know that the Son of God must shortly appear; yea, in fine, all the people upon the face of the whole earth, from the west to the east, both in the land north and in the land south, were so exceedingly astonished, that they fell to the earth; for they knew that the prophets had testified of these things for many years, and that the sign which had been given, was already at hand; and they began to fear because of their iniquity and their unbelief.

"And it came to pass that there was no darkness in all that night, but it was as light as though it was mid-day. And it came to pass that the sun did rise in the morning again, according to its proper order; and they knew that it was the day that the Lord should be born, because of the sign which had been given. And it came to pass, yea, all things, every whit, according to the words of the prophets. And it came to pass also, that a new star did appear, according to the word."

As collateral testimony to the truth of the above, I present the following account of a tradition had among the Central American Indians, copied from the "incidents of travels" of John L. Stephens in Chiapas and Yucatan, Vol. 2, 1841, page 173. The account of a certain division of the ancient American Indian nation into three nations, says:—

"This division was made on a day when three suns were visible at the same time, which extraordinary circumstance, says the manuscript, has induced some persons to believe that it was made on the day of our Savior's birth."

All who are familiar with the Book of Mormon are probably aware of the fact that the whole account of the history of the fore fathers of the American Indians, called the Nephites, Lamanites and Zoramites, is confined to Central America entirely until the 394th page. The 30th chapter of the book of Alma, commencing on that page, commences the account of one Hagoth, who built a ship on the shores of the Pacific ocean opposite or nearly west of the south-west part of the Gulf of Mexico, and sailed northward.—Consequently the above account, copied from the Book of Mormon, originated in Central America, where Mr. Stephens picked up the corroborating tradition.

The reader will doubtless observe that the account of Samuel's prophecy and its fulfillment is a later account than that of Hagoth building a ship and sailing northward. Yet by reading the 5th chapter of Helaman you will observe that Samuel delivered his prophecy at the city of Zarahemla, which, at some future period, I intend to show clearly that it is the veritable city of Palenque, the ruins of which is situated some miles south-west of the Gulf of Mexico. Read Stephens' travels, 1841, Vol. 2, page 289, &c.—The reader will keep in view that the city of Zarahemla was not built by the Jaradites nor the descendants of Lehi, but by the descendants of Mulek, who left the city of Jerusalem in Palestine in the eleventh year of the reign of king Zedekiah, the year that Zedekiah and all Jerusalem was taken captive by Nebuchadnezzar.—Read Book of Mormon, pages 411 and 419 inclusive.

JOHN E. PAGE.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, AND A VOICE TO MANKIND BY AND THROUGH ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, THE POUGHKEEPSIE SEER AND CLAIRVOYANT, NEW YORK, S. S. LYON AND WILLIAM FISHBOUGH, 1847.

(Continued from No. 24.)

"The Bible does not give a connected account of the origin of the Jewish nation after the flood." Page 457.

We do not conceive that it would be easy to give a mere connected account of the origin of any nation than is given of the nation of Jews from Gen. xi. 10 to Joshua xxi. inclusive. Here is one unbroken history of that people from the ancestors of Abraham, their common father, down to their full establishment as a powerful nation, spreading terror throughout all the west of Asia, so minute in its details as to include the genealogies of all their principal men, and such a detail of the minute circumstances connected with the origin of that nation as is recorded of no other people on earth, ancient or modern. The effrontery of such reckless falsehood is matched by the ignorance of the following lines, where the word Israelite is used as synonymous with Jew. As a divine revelation, this is decidedly rich. And it is still richer to think of men possessed of gospel enlightenment sliding off on such pretensions into a kind of hypocritical infidelity. But even this is beat by the following assertion of the man with a familiar spirit, saying how much of the biblical history is correct:—

"The Lord sanctioned this movement by promising that whatsoever they desired and undertook should not be prohibited, and that there should be no interference in the accomplishment of their intentions. The building then progressed, and massive stones were conveyed to the spot, and were adjusted with a uniformity characterizing a superior order of architecture. And while they were pleased and elated with their progress, and exulted in the probability of the fulfillment of their anticipations, the account represents the Lord to say, 'Go to, let us confuse their language!' Thus the account makes the Lord to sanction their proceedings, and to promise that they should not receive from him the least interruption; and then represents him as repealing his promise, and sending forth his power to destroy their means of vocal communication!"

A gross lie. The Lord did not make any such promise, nor any other promise whatever. There is not the least evidence on earth that a stone was used in the tower, except this one saying of A. J. Davis. All history agrees that it was built of brick. The remains are all brick, not stone; and stone cannot be obtained in that country. It is a mere alluvial formation. They must be transported a great distance and at very great expense. The assertion that "the account makes the Lord to sanction their proceedings, and to promise that they should not receive the least interruption from him," is as palpable a lie and as unblushingly spoken as was ever put in a book, and proved such by evidence in the possession of every family in the land.

"And the Lord said, Behold, the people is one, and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do. Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech." Gen. xi. 6, 7.

But though Mr. S. S. Lyon makes his puppet thus to characterize the biblicel account of this building, he altogether denies the reality. Disputes that the history was founded on any fact whatever, and yet (p. 453) makes the fiction of its supposed building the origin of the extraordinary mysteries of Druidism and free masonry. Makes the most imposing and extraordinary ceremonies ever known among men the mere commemoration of a lie!

(To be continued.)

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

I have just received a letter from Beaver Island, from which I extract the following, which you are at liberty to insert in your paper if you think proper. G. B.

Beaver Island, August 16th, 1848.

BROTHER BROWNSON:—The saints are all well here, and are more united than they have been yet. The work of the Lord is progressing here. The way for the gospel to go to the Lamanites is now open. Brother Brown is on his high heeled boots. I am doing well, and have my health good. I promised you, when you left here, to come and go on a mission with you this fall, but I have bought 40 acres of land and I cannot come till it is paid for.* Then I will go into the field and labor for the Lord. I remain yours in the Lord, JULIUS A. HICKOX.

* Luke xiv. 18.

☞ We are sadly in want of a little team work on the Temple before Conference. Who will turn out IMMEDIATELY?

☞ Industry and honesty secure a clear conscience, if not wealth. When it secures wealth, it is secured to stick by, not to be wasted in rioting, but to be appropriated to useful and charitable purposes.

CONFERENCE.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Voree Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next. By order of the Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

Book of Mormon for sale at this office. Also Thompson's Evidences, and an assortment of tracts.

CUT AND POLISHED STONE,

Of superior quality and finish, and of various sorts, constantly on hand and for sale at the Voree quarry. Caps, Sills, Tombstones, Doorsteps, Imposing stones, &c., made to order on short notice.

Voree, April 27th, 1848.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

We do not conceive that it would be easy to give a mere connected account of the origin of any nation than is given of the nation of Jews from Gen. xi. 10 to Joshua xxi. inclusive. Here is one unbroken history of that people from the ancestors of Abraham, their common father, down to their full establishment as a powerful nation, spreading terror throughout all the west of Asia, so minute in its details as to include the genealogies of all their principal men, and such a detail of the minute circumstances connected with the origin of that nation as is recorded of no other people on earth, ancient or modern. The effrontery of such reckless falsehood is matched by the ignorance of the following lines, where the word Israelite is used as synonymous with Jew. As a divine revelation, this is decidedly rich. And it is still richer to think of men possessed of gospel enlightenment sliding off on such pretensions into a kind of hypocritical infidelity. But even this is beat by the following assertion of the man with a familiar spirit, saying how much of the biblical history is correct:—

"The Lord sanctioned this movement by promising that whatsoever they desired and undertook should not be prohibited, and that there should be no interference in the accomplishment of their intentions. The building then progressed, and massive stones were conveyed to the spot, and were adjusted with a uniformity characterizing a superior order of architecture. And while they were pleased and elated with their progress, and exulted in the probability of the fulfillment of their anticipations, the account represents the Lord to say, 'Go to, let us confuse their language!' Thus the account makes the Lord to sanction their proceedings, and to promise that they should not receive from him the least interruption; and then represents him as repealing his promise, and sending forth his power to destroy their means of vocal communication!"

A gross lie. The Lord did not make any such promise, nor any other promise whatever. There is not the least evidence on earth that a stone was used in the tower, except this one saying of A. J. Davis. All history agrees that it was built of brick. The remains are all brick, not stone; and stone cannot be obtained in that country. It is a mere alluvial formation. They must be transported a great distance and at very great expense. The assertion that "the account makes the Lord to sanction their proceedings, and to promise that they should not receive the least interruption from him," is as palpable a lie and as unblushingly spoken as was ever put in a book, and proved such by evidence in the possession of every family in the land.

"And the Lord said, Behold, the people is one, and they have all one language; and this they begin to do: and now nothing will be restrained from them, which they have imagined to do. Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech." Gen. xi. 6, 7.

But though Mr. S. S. Lyon makes his puppet thus to characterize the biblical account of this building, he altogether denies the reality. Disputes that the history was founded on any fact whatever, and yet (p. 453) makes the fiction of its supposed building the origin of the extraordinary mysteries of Druidism and free masonry. Makes the most imposing and extraordinary ceremonies ever known among men the mere commemoration of a lie!

(To be continued.)

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

I have just received a letter from Beaver Island, from which I extract the following, which you are at liberty to insert in your paper if you think proper. G. B.

Beaver Island, August 16th, 1848.

Brother Brownson:—The saints are all well here, and are more united than they have been yet. The work of the Lord is progressing here. The way for the gospel to go to the Lamanites is n open. Brother Brown is on his high heeled boots. I am do well, and have my health good. I promised you, when you here, to come and go on a mission with you this fall, but I h bought 40 acres of land and I cannot come till it is paid for.* T I will go into the field and labor for the Lord. I remain yours the Lord, JULIUS A. HICKOX

* Luke xiv. 18.

☞ We are sadly in want of a little team work on the Tem before Conference. Who will turn out IMMEDIATELY?

☞ Industry and honesty secure a clear conscience, if n wealth. When it secures wealth, it is secured to stick by, not be wasted in rioting, but to be appropriated to useful and charitab purposes.

CONFERENCE.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ Latter Day Saints will be held at Voree Friday, Saturday and Su day, the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next. By order of the Pres. GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a larg supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Cov nants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quan ties or by the single copy.

Book of Mormon for sale at this office. Also Thompson's Evi dences, and an assortment of tracts.

CUT AND POLISHED STONE,

Of superior quality and finish, and of various sorts, constantly on hand and for sale at the Voree quarry. Caps, Sills, Tombstones Doorsteps, Imposing stones, &c., made to order on short notice.

Voree, April 27th, 1848.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods to the place of beginning. ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13tf

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 27.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, SEPT. 21, 1848. [WHOLE No. 91.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

COLLATERAL TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTH AND DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.—No. 4.

In the Book of Mormon, pages 191, 192, 193, published in 1830, I find the following curious narrative :—

"Now there was a place in Shemlon, where the daughters of the Lamanites did gather themselves together to sing, and to dance, and to make themselves merry. And it came to pass that there was one day a small number of them gathered together to sing and to dance. And now the priests of king Noah, being ashamed to return to the city of Nephi, yea, and also fearing that the people would slay them, therefore they durst not return to their wives and their children. And having tarried in the wilderness, and having discovered the daughters of the Lamanites, they laid and watched them; and when there were but few of them gathered together to dance, they came forth out of their secret place and took them and carried them into the wilderness; yea, twenty and four of the daughters of the Lamanites they carried into the wilderness.

"And it came to pass that when the Lamanites found that their daughters had been missing, they were angry with the people of Limhi; for they thought it was the people of Limhi. Therefore they sent their armies forth; yea, even the king himself went before his people; and they went up to the land of Nephi, to destroy the people of Limhi. And now Limhi had discovered them from the tower; even all their preparations for war did he discover; therefore he gathered his people together, and laid wait for them in the fields, and in the forests. And it came to pass that when Lamanites had come up, that the people of Limhi began to fall upon them from their waiting places, and began to slay them.

"And it came to pass that the battle became exceeding sore, for they fought like lions for their prey. And it came to pass that the people of Limhi began to drive the Lamanites before them, yet they were not half so numerous as the Lamanites. But they fought for their lives, and for their wives, and for their children; therefore they exerted themselves, and like dragons did they fight.

"And it came to pass that they found the king of the Lamanites among the number of the dead; yet he was not dead, having been wounded and left upon the ground, so speedy was the flight of his people. And they took him and bound up his wounds, and brought him before Limhi and said, behold, here is the king of the Lamanites; he having received a wound, has fallen among their dead, and they left him; and behold, we have brought him before you; and now let us slay him. But Limhi said unto them, ye shall not slay him, but bring him hither, that I may see him. And they brought him. And Limhi said unto him, What cause have ye to come up to war against my people? Behold, my people have not broken the oath that I made unto you; therefore, why should ye break the oath which ye made unto my people? And now the king said, I have broken the oath, because thy people did carry away the daughters of my people; therefore in my anger did I cause my people to come up to war against thy people. Now Limhi had heard nothing concerning this matter; therefore he said, I will search among my people, and whosoever has done this thing shall perish. Therefore he caused a search to be made among his people. Now when Gideon had heard these things, he being the king's captain, he went forth and said unto the king, I pray thee forbear, and do not search this people, and lay not this thing to their charge.—For do ye not remember the priests of thy father, whom this people sought to destroy? And are they not in the wilderness? And are not they the ones who have stolen the daughters of the Lamanites? And now behold, and tell the king of these things, that he may tel his people, that they may be pacified towards us: for behold they are already preparing to come against us; and behold also, ther are but few of us. And behold, they come with their numerous hosts; and except the king doth pacify them towards us, we mus perish. For are not the words of Abinadi fulfilled, which he prophesied against us? and all this because we would not hearken unt the word of the Lord, and turn from our iniquity? And now let us pacify the king, and we fulfill the oath which we have made unto him: for it is better that we should be in bondage, than that we should lose our lives; therefore, let us put a stop to the shedding of so much blood. And now Limhi told the king all the things concerning his father, and the priests that had fled into the wilderness, and attributed the carrying away of their daughters to them."

As collateral testimony to the truth of the above, I present the following extract from Stephens' "incidents of travels in Central America," Vol. 2, 1841, pages 173 and 174 :—

"In the reign of Balam Acan, the next king of Quiche, while living on terms of great intimacy and friendship with his cousin Zutugilebpop, king of the Zutugiles, the latter abused his generosity and ran away with his daughter Ixconsocil, and at the same time Iloacab, his relative and favorite, ran away with Ecselixpua, the niece of the king. The rape of Helen did not produce more wars and bloodshed than the carrying off of these two young ladies with unpronounceable names. Balam Acan was naturally a mild man, but the abduction of his daughter was an affront not to be pardoned. With eighty thousand veterans, himself in the centre squadron, adorned with three diadems and other regal ornaments, carried in a rich chair of state, splendidly ornamented with gold, emeralds, and other precious stones, upon the shoulders of the nobles of his court, he marched against Zutugilebpop, who met him with sixty thousand men, commanded by Iloacab, his chief general and accomplice.—The most bloody battle ever fought in the country took place; the field was so deeply inundated with blood that not a blade of grass could be seen. Victory long remained undecided, and at length Iloacab was killed, and Balam Acan remained master of the field. But the campaign did not terminate here. Balam Acan, with thirty thousand veterans under his personal command, and two other bodies of thirty thousand each, again met Zutugilebpop with forty thousand of his own warriors and forty thousand auxiliaries. The latter was defeated, and escaped at night. Balam Acan pursued

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 27.] VOREE, WIS. THURSDAY, SEPT. 21, 1848. [WHOLE No. 91.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

COLLATERAL TESTIMONY OF THE TRUTH AND DIVINITY OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.—No. 4.

In the Book of Mormon, pages 191, 192, 193, published in 1830, I find the following curious narrative:—

"Now there was a place in Shemlon, where the daughters of the Lamanites did gather themselves together to sing, and to dance, and to make themselves merry. And it came to pass that there was one day a small number of them gathered together to sing and to dance. And now the priests of king Noah, being ashamed to return to the city of Nephi, yea, and also fearing that the people would slay them, therefore they durst not return to their wives and their children. And having tarried in the wilderness, and having discovered the daughters of the Lamanites, they laid and watched them; and when there were but few of them gathered together to dance, they came forth out of their secret place and took them and carried them into the wilderness; yea, twenty and four of the daughters of the Lamanites they carried into the wilderness.

"And it came to pass that when the Lamanites found that their daughters had been missing, they were angry with the people of Limhi; for they thought it was the people of Limhi. Therefore they sent their armies forth; yea, even the king himself went before his people; and they went up to the land of Nephi, to destroy the people of Limhi. And now Limhi had discovered them from the tower; even all their preparations for war did he discover; therefore he gathered his people together, and laid wait for them in the fields, and in the forests. And it came to pass that when Lamanites had come up, that the people of Limhi began to fall upon them from their waiting places, and began to slay them.

"And it came to pass that the battle became exceeding sore, for they fought like lions for their prey. And it came to pass that the people of Limhi began to drive the Lamanites before them, yet they were not half so numerous as the Lamanites. But they fought for their lives, and for their wives, and for their children; therefore they exerted themselves, and like dragons did they fight.

"And it came to pass that they found the king of the Lamanites among the number of the dead; yet he was not dead, having been wounded and left upon the ground, so speedy was the flight of his people. And they took him and bound up his wounds, and brought him before Limhi and said, behold, here is the king of the Lamanites; he having received a wound, has fallen among their dead, and they left him; and behold, we have brought him before you; and now let us slay him. But Limhi said unto them, ye shall not slay him, but bring him hither, that I may see him. And they brought him. And Limhi said unto him, What cause have ye to come up to war against my people? Behold, my people have not broken the oath that I made unto you; therefore, why should ye break the oath which ye made unto my people? And now the king said, I have broken the oath, because thy people did carry away the daughters of my people; therefore in my anger did I cause my people to come up to war against thy people. Now Limhi had heard nothing concerning this matter; therefore he said, I will search among my people, and whosoever has done this thing shall perish. Therefore he caused a search to be made among his people. Now when Gideon had heard these things, he being the king's captain, he went forth and said unto the king, I pray thee forbear, and do not search this people, and lay not this thing to their charge.—For do ye not remember the priests of thy father, whom this people sought to destroy? And are they not in the wilderness? And are not they the ones who have stolen the daughters of the Lamanites? And now behold, and tell the king of these things, that he may tell his people, that they may be pacified towards us: for behold they are already preparing to come against us; and behold also, there are but few of us. And behold, they come with their numerous hosts; and except the king doth pacify them towards us, we must perish. For are not the words of Abinadi fulfilled, which he prophesied against us? and all this because we would not hearken unto the word of the Lord, and turn from our iniquity? And now let us pacify the king, and we fulfill the oath which we have made unto him: for it is better that we should be in bondage, than that we should lose our lives; therefore, let us put a stop to the shedding of so much blood. And now Limhi told the king all the things concerning his father, and the priests that had fled into the wilderness, and attributed the carrying away of their daughters to them."

As collateral testimony to the truth of the above, I present the following extract from Stephens' "incidents of travels in Central America," Vol. 2, 1841, pages 173 and 174:—

"In the reign of Balam Acan, the next king of Quiche, while living on terms of great intimacy and friendship with his cousin Zutugilebpop, king of the Zutugiles, the latter abused his generosity and ran away with his daughter Ixconsocil, and at the same time Iloacab, his relative and favorite, ran away with Eceliapan, the niece of the king. The rape of Helen did not produce more wars and bloodshed than the carrying off of these two young ladies with unpronounceable names. Balam Acan was naturally a mild man, but the abduction of his daughter was an affront not to be pardoned. With eighty thousand veterans, himself in the centre squadron, adorned with three diadems and other regal ornaments, carried in a rich chair of state, splendidly ornamented with gold, emeralds, and other precious stones, upon the shoulders of the nobles of his court, he marched against Zutugilebpop, who met him with sixty thousand men, commanded by Iloacab, his chief general and accomplice.—The most bloody battle ever fought in the country took place; the field was so deeply inundated with blood that not a blade of grass could be seen. Victory long remained undecided, and at length Iloacab was killed, and Balam Acan remained master of the field. But the campaign did not terminate here. Balam Acan, with thirty thousand veterans under his personal command, and two other bodies of thirty thousand each, again met Zutugilebpop with fifty thousand of his own warriors and forty thousand auxiliaries. The latter was defeated, and escaped at night. Balam Acan pursued and overtook him; but while his bearers were hastening with him to the thickest of the fight, they lost their footing, and precipitated him to the earth. At this moment Zutugilebpop was advancing with a chosen body of ten thousand lancers. Balam Acan was slain, and fourteen thousand Indians were left dead on the field."

The strong corroborating points in the two above accounts are, that women were "carried" off or "run away" with by the clandestine measures of men, and a dreadful and bloody war ensued as the consequence, in which many were slain. According to the Book of Mormon the above circumstance transpired in Central America, the country where Mr. Stephens obtained the traditional corroborating account. The Book of Mormon says "24 of the daughters of the Lamanites" were taken, and the traditional account says two were taken. One of the two was the "daughter" of the king, the other was "his niece." It being an established custom among all nations, both ancient and modern, that kings' relatives should have on all occasions waiters of their own sex, the two spoken of in the tradition being one a daughter and the other a niece of the king they probably had with them their waiting maids, which accounts for the fact of there being "24" females "taken away," according to the Book of Mormon. And as two of them were ladies of the blood royal they were the only ones that were taken into the account of the tradition and perpetuated in remembrance.

At all events I think it will puzzle any sectarian diviner to account for how it happened that the Book of Mormon should contain such an account in 1830 as transpiring in Central America, and ten years after be corroborated by a traditional account of the Indians in the same country, at such a vast distance as it is from Ontario county, N. Y., to Central America, and that account picked up by a gentleman as much disinterested concerning the truth of the Book of Mormon as though it had never been heard of. I know at least that if such a species of collateral testimony was found to sustain the truth and divinity of the Bible the religious Bible believers would snatch it with avidity and hurl it to the four winds of heaven as indisputable evidence of the divinity of the Bible, and point the finger of scorn at him who would feign to cherish a doubt in the case, and charge him with incredulity that was beneath common human reason. But with many the old adage holds good—

"Convince a man against his will,
And he is of the same opinion still."

But the fact is, God holds all men accountable at the tribunal of truth, and will not change his purposes or waive his law to accommodate the caprice, ignorance or stubborn will of any man. Truth alone sanctifieth unto salvation, and it alone will acquit us at the bar of God. JOHN E. PAGE.

ANECDOTES.

Bro. Isaac Haven came from England September, 1845. The same autumn he was engaged preaching the gospel in Easton, Pa., where the spirit of persecution was so rife that several elders had been driven away and prevented preaching, and broken up in their discourses. While he was preaching the necessity of baptism for the remission of sins, a young fellow in the crowd said, "if you don't stop preaching such damned stuff as that a man can't be saved without being stifled over head and ears in the water, I'll knock your brains out with a stone." Elder Glover replied, "there is not a stone on the ground that will knock his brains out." The fellow answered, "then I will try what a bone will do." And picking up a leg bone of a horse, hurled it against brother Haven's head with such violence as to fracture his scull, though it did not knock his brains out or stop his preaching. Some gentlemen interfered and took the fellow into custody, and requested brother Haven to go to a magistrate to prosecute him. He refused, saying, "let him be; God shall judge him: I shall not trouble about it."

THE SEQUEL.

How oft does the spirit of prophecy come on God's children and the world dreams not of it. Before the following Christmas this same fellow, in company with many others, went on the ice and broke in where the water was some four or five feet deep, but not over their heads. All the rest got out without difficulty, but this one could not be saved. The others tried a long time in vain to get him out, and finally left him standing in water up to his shoulders to get help. When they returned he had perished. Surely the wrath of God slumbereth not.

New York, September 3d, 1848.

Dear Bro. Strang:—When I left Voree I expected to labor in the gospel, which I know is my duty. I preached a few times, baptized three, then went to work for myself. I published the endowment as given by the impostor Brigham Young. When I commenced selling that I quit preaching entirely, except in a private capacity, when I say to all the Mormons brother Strang is the head of the church, and all other ways will lead astray. I hope soon to commence. The duty is encumbent on me. Here is a great field of labor in New York and vicinity. I am convicted daily. I hope soon to commence. Thousands are crushed to death here even in the city under the weight of ignorance and superstition. Who will impart to the popular mass the principles of life? This question is constantly suggested to my mind. I want you to send me a line with a word of advice, with regard to the circulation of this book. I have sent you two copies. You say you have not received them. The pamphlet does not meddle with doctrines. It reveals the endowment, Joseph's letter of appointment, your claims, &c. I have sold 10,000 copies. Yours with great respect,

I. VAN DEUSEN.

Remarks.—We received a copy of such a publication some time after writing you, and noticed it in the Herald as we deemed necessary. We most heartily and entirely disapprove of the publication, because by the account of the author it involves him in the crime of perjury. It may be alledged in excuse that Brigham Young was not authorized to administer oaths. We humbly conceive that, before God, his authority was every whit as good as that of the mayor or police justice of the city of New York. We should be sorry indeed to hear a Mormon elder justifying perjury before them simply because they had not a valid priesthood. Catholics in some cases, and Protestants in all, assume to absolve themselves from oaths just when they please. That is, to totally disregard them, and break them because they think they ought not to have taken them. For this we know of neither justification or excuse in the law of God.—On the other hand, the breaking of such oaths is severely punished. As an instance of the obligation of an oath which ought not to have been taken, I refer you to the vow of Jepthah:—

"And Jepthah vowed a vow unto the Lord, and said, If thou shalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into my hands, Then it shall be that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering." Judges xi. 30, 31.

Had Jepthah vowed to offer the first clean beast that should thus meet him, the vow would have been lawful, because a clean beast was a lawful sacrifice. But vowing to sacrifice whatsoever should thus meet him, he ran the risk of being bound to sacrifice what it was not lawful to slay and would pollute the altar. In the sequel God gave him the victory, by which the vow became binding, and on his return home, "behold, his daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and with dances; and she was his only child: be-and overtook him; but while his bearers were hastening with him to the thickest of the fight, they lost their footing, and precipitated him to the earth. At this moment Zutugilebpop was advancing with a chosen body of ten thousand lancers. Balam. Acan was slain, and fourteen thousand Indians were left dead on the field."

The strong corroborating points in the two above accounts are, that women were "carried" off or "run away" with by the clandestine measures of men, and a dreadful and bloody war ensued as the consequence, in which many were slain. According to the Book of Mormon the above circumstance transpired in Central America, the country where Mr. Stephens obtained the traditional corroborating account. The Book of Mormon says "24 of the daughters of the Lamanites" were taken, and the traditional account says two were taken. One of the two was the "daughter" of the king, the other was "his niece." It being an established custom among all nations, both ancient and modern, that kings' relatives should have on all occasions waiters of their own sex, the two spoken of in the tradition being one a daughter and the other a niece of the king they probably had with them their waiting maids, which accounts for the fact of there being "24" females "taken away," according to the Book of Mormon. And as two of them were ladies of the blood royal they were the only ones that were taken into the account of the tradition and perpetuated in remembrance.

At all events I think it will puzzle any sectarian diviner to account for how it happened that the Book of Mormon should contain such an account in 1830 as transpiring in Central America, and ten years after be corroborated by a traditional account of the Indians in the same country, at such a vast distance as it is from Ontario county, N. Y., to Central America, and that account picked up by a gentleman as much disinterested concerning the truth of the Book of Mormon as though it had never been heard of. I know at least that if such a species of collateral testimony was found to sustain the truth and divinity of the Bible the religious Bible believers would snatch it with avidity and hurl it to the four winds of heaven as indisputable evidence of the divinity of the Bible, and point the finger of scorn at him who would feign to cherish a doubt in the case, and charge him with incredulity that was beneath common human reason. But with many the old adage holds good—

"Convince a man against his will,
And he is of the same opinion still."

But the fact is, God holds all men accountable at the tribunal of truth, and will not change his purposes or waive his law to accommodate the caprice, ignorance or stubborn will of any man. Truth alone sanctifieth unto salvation, and it alone will acquit us at the bar of God.

JOHN E. PAGE.

ANECDOTES.

Bro. Isaac Haven came from England September, 1845. The same autumn he was engaged preaching the gospel in Easton, Pa., where the spirit of persecution was so rife that several elders had been driven away and prevented preaching, and broken up in their discourses. While he was preaching the necessity of baptism for the remission of sins, a young fellow in the crowd said, "if you don't stop preaching such damned stuff as that a man can't be saved without being stifled over head and ears in the water, I'll knock your brains out with a stone." Elder Glover replied, "there is not a stone on the ground that will knock his brains out." The fellow answered, "then I will try what a bone will do." And picking up a leg bone of a horse, hurled it against brother Haven's head with such violence as to fracture his scull, though it did not knock his brains out or stop his preaching. Some gentlemen interfered and took the fellow into custody, and requested brother Haven to go to a magistrate to prosecute him. He refused, saying, "let him be; God shall judge him: I shall not trouble about it."

THE SEQUEL.

How oft does the spirit of prophecy come on God's children and the world dreams not of it. Before the following Christmas this same fellow, in company with many others, went on the ice and broke in where the water was some four or five feet deep, but not over their heads. All the rest got out without difficulty, but this one could not be saved. The others tried a long time in vain to get him out, and finally left him standing in water up to his shoulders to get help. When they returned he had perished. Surely the wrath of God slumbereth not.

New York, September 3d, 1848.

Dear Bro. Strang:—When I left Voree I expected to labor in the gospel, which I know is my duty. I preached a few times, baptized three, then went to work for myself. I published the endowment as given by the impostor Brigham Young. When I commenced selling that I quit preaching entirely, except in a private capacity, when I say to all the Mormons brother Strang is the head of the church, and all other ways will lead astray. I hope soon to commence. The duty is encumbent on me. Here is a great field of labor in New York and vicinity. I am convicted daily. I hope soon to commence. Thousands are crushed to death here even in the city under the weight of ignorance and superstition. Who will impart to the popular mass the principles of life? This question is constantly suggested to my mind. I want you to send me a line with a word of advice, with regard to the circulation of this book. I have sent you two copies. You say you have not received them. The pamphlet does not meddle with doctrines. It reveals the endowment, Joseph's letter of appointment, your claims, &c. I have sold 10,000 copies. Yours with great respect,

I. VAN DEUSEN.

Remarks.—We received a copy of such a publication some time after writing you, and noticed it in the Herald as we deemed necessary. We most heartily and entirely disapprove of the publication because by the account of the author it involves him in the crime of perjury. It may be alledged in excuse that Brigham Young was not authorized to administer oaths. We humbly conceive that, before God, his authority was every whit as good as that of the mayor or police justice of the city of New York. We should be sorry indeed to hear a Mormon elder justifying perjury before them simply because they had not a valid priesthood. Catholics in some cases, and Protestants in all, assume to absolve themselves from oaths just when they please. That is, to totally disregard them, and break them because they think they ought not to have taken them. For this we know of neither justification or excuse in the law of God.—On the other hand, the breaking of such oaths is severely punished. As an instance of the obligation of an oath which ought not to have been taken, I refer you to the vow of Jepthah:—

"And Jepthah vowed a vow unto the Lord, and said, If thou shalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into my hands, Then it shall be that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering." Judges xi. 30, 31.

Had Jepthah vowed to offer the first clean beast that should thus meet him, the vow would have been lawful, because a clean beast was a lawful sacrifice. But vowing to sacrifice whatsoever should thus meet him, he ran the risk of being bound to sacrifice what it was not lawful to slay and would pollute the altar. In the sequel God gave him the victory, by which the vow became binding, and on his return home, "behold, his daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and with dances; and she was his only child: besides her he had neither son nor daughter. And it came to pass, when he saw her, that he rent his clothes, and said, Alas, my daughter! thou hast brought me very low, and thou art one of them that trouble me: for I have opened my mouth unto the Lord, and I cannot go back. And she said unto him, My father, if thou hast opened thy mouth unto the Lord, do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth; forasmuch as the Lord hath taken vengeance for thee of thine enemies, even of the children of Ammon." Judges xi. 34, 35, 36.

Jepthah was, by means of this rash vow, placed between two crimes, and whether he kept the vow or broke it, he was guilty.—Lev. v. 4. If he broke the vow he was guilty of perjury, and if he kept it he was guilty of murdering his daughter and polluting the altar of God with an unlawful sacrifice. Yet he says: "I have opened my mouth to the Lord, and I CANNOT GO BACK." Whereas you have "gone back," broke your oath just to make a little business speculation out of it. You may ask, did he really kill his daughter? Certainly not. He redeemed her by giving a lawful sacrifice in her stead. But when he had done so, both she and the redemption belonged to the Lord, and she became a vestal of the sanctuary. Having thus redeemed her, he got a lawful absolution.

A still stronger case is that of the oath of Joshua and the elders of Israel to the Gibeonites. The Lord had expressly forbidden the house of Israel to make any league or covenant with any of the inhabitants of the land of Canaan. But the Gibeonites came, and by a series of the most gross deceptions, by literally clothing themselves in lies from the crowns of their heads to the soles of their feet, and making lies their food and their drink as well as their spoken words, deceived Joshua and the elders of Israel to believe that they were from a far country, and by such means obtained a league with Joshua and the elders of Israel, and the princes of Israel sware unto them to keep the league. Joshua ix. 3 to 15. And the princes of Israel were without excuse for being deceived, for they asked not counsel of the Lord. 14th verse. Yet for all this the children of Israel kept their oath. 18th verse. Certainly if any case could be found on earth where men could assume to break an oath, this is the one; for not only was the oath contrary to an express commandment of God, but every word spoken and every act done in obtaining the covenant and oath was a lie. Yet Joshua kept his oath.

You may say he ought to have broke it. So did not God say: The house of Israel kept this covenant with the Gibeonites some four hundred years, when Saul, in his zeal for Israel and Judah, killed some of the men of Gibeon and God brought a famine on Israel to punish them for their perjury; thus showing that he held the nation bound from generation to generation to keep the oath of their fathers, however improperly taken. 2 Samuel xxi 1. That the curse of God might be taken off the nation for breaking their league, David suffered the Gibeonites to name the price of redemption, and they demanded and had seven sons of Saul put to death, 6th and 7th verses, and the anger of the Lord was appeased. 14th verse. Men have habituated themselves to trifle with oaths as mere playthings, but God will not hold them guiltless, and his wrath will smoke against them in the days to come.

I would not be understood, however, that there is no release from obligations improperly assumed, or which have become the sources of evil. But it is very dangerous for every man to set aside whatever obligation he thinks proper to disregard. So long as this is allowed men cannot be bound. Every man will find a pretense for breaking the oath he wishes not to keep. So they always have done. In addition to this, such publications tend to bring Mormonism into disrepute. Like William Smith's career, giving lectures on the alledged crimes of Brigham Young and others, they build up prejudices which every elder must meet as he goes out to preach.—The world do not distinguish between saints and apostates. With them the rule is, once a Mormon, always a Mormon. The crimes thus published on apostates will in turn be thrown into our faces, as the effects of the Mormon faith. Professed believers have thus raised more barriers against the gospel than all the declared opponents of the faith. [ED.

For the Gospel Herald.

APPOINTMENT OF JAMES J. STRANG.

TO ALL THE SAINTS OF GOD IN ALL THE WORLD, GREETING:—Your brother and servant in Christ has looked upon the condition of the church of Jesus Christ with great interest for the last three or four years. Since the martyrdom of the prophet Joseph I have been seeking after truth, honesty and justice as it is in Jesus, and had I not known there was a divine reality in the gospel of Jesus Christ, as taught by Joseph and Hyrum, I would have long since no doubt been a miserable infidel. But, thank the Lord for a knowledge of the great work of the last days, at his death I was earnestly looking like all the rest of the honest saints to see one Elisha-like stand in the footsteps of Joseph to teach the law of the Lord, and to be like unto Moses; yea, to be a prophet, seer, revelator and translator.—But, alas! I was disappointed, until a day spring from on high revealed the glorious intelligence that God had not cast off his people. In justice to you, my God, and brother J. J. Strang, I must say that, early in the fall of 1845, (October,) I went to Voree to investigate the claims of brother Strang to the First Presidency of the church. It was just after he had found the plates. He showed me the plates, his writings on the subject, Joseph's letter, and the revelations which he had received, and the translation that he had made of part of the record of Rajah Manchau of Vorito.

We went into an investigation of his claims in good earnest, for I was not to be imposed upon if I could avoid it. I asked him if Joseph sent him that letter. He answered yes. I then asked him who ordained him. He referred me to D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2, also sec. l. p. 1, 2, 3, and said he was ordained by an angel. This was before he saw Reuben Miller, and before the first Voree Herald was published. That has ALWAYS been brother Strang's position, and he has always maintained it without any twisting or turning to the right or left. Why, how has there been so many apostacies? Ans. Because mankind are so selfish they are not willing to remain in the station God has placed them in. This is the case with a great many who have left the church. They came to Voree with the expectation of getting into some office to suit their ruling organs.—Self-esteem for instance. Collins Pemberton and Charles B. Thompson expected to be ordained into the quorum of the Twelve, and when they found they were not they began to cry "wolf." When brother J. Savage was ordained into the quorum of the Twelve Charles was stung to the heart, and made some very impertinent remarks about having the company of one of the Twelve on his return home, and considered he was just as able and competent to fulfill that functionary as brother Savage. Disappointed ambition some way or the other has been the cause of almost all the difference in the ranks of the Voree Mormons.

With all candor, brethren, I ask you in the name of honesty, sincerity, brotherly kindness and God's eternal truth to investigate the claims of Bro. Strang, and mind the injunction of Bro. Paul, to prove all things and hold fast that which is good. Investigate philosophically, scientifically and honestly before God, knowing the time has come when men will heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they shall turn from the truth unto fables, not waiting for God to give them their teachers. Has this not been verified in the Brighamite organization? H. P. BROWN.

sides her he had neither son nor daughter. And it came to pass, when he saw her, that he rent his clothes, and said, Alas, my daughter! thou hast brought me very low, and thou art one of them that trouble me: for I have opened my mouth unto the Lord, and I cannot go back. And she said unto him, My father, if thou hast opened thy mouth unto the Lord, do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth; forasmuch as the Lord hath taken vengeance for thee of thine enemies, even of the children of Ammon." Judges xi. 34, 35, 36.

Jepthah was, by means of this rash vow, placed between two crimes, and whether he kept the vow or broke it, he was guilty.—Lev. v. 4. If he broke the vow he was guilty of perjury, and if he kept it he was guilty of murdering his daughter and polluting the altar of God with an unlawful sacrifice. Yet he says: "I have opened my mouth to the Lord, and I CANNOT GO BACK." Whereas you have "gone back," broke your oath just to make a little business speculation out of it. You may ask, did he really kill his daughter? Certainly not. He redeemed her by giving a lawful sacrifice in her stead. But when he had done so, both she and the redemption belonged to the Lord, and she became a vestal of the sanctuary. Having thus redeemed her, he got a lawful absolution.

A still stronger case is that of the oath of Joshua and the elders of Israel to the Gibeonites. The Lord had expressly forbidden the house of Israel to make any league or covenant with any of the inhabitants of the land of Canaan. But the Gibeonites came, and by a series of the most gross deceptions, by literally clothing themselves in lies from the crowns of their heads to the soles of their feet, and making lies their food and their drink as well as their spoken words, deceived Joshua and the elders of Israel to believe that they were from a far country, and by such means obtained a league with Joshua and the elders of Israel, and the princes of Israel sware unto them to keep the league. Joshua ix. 3 to 15. And the princes of Israel were without excuse for being deceived, for they asked not counsel of the Lord. 14th verse. Yet for all this the children of Israel kept their oath. 20th verse. Certainly if any case could be found on earth where men do assume to break an oath, this is the one; for not only was the oath contrary to an express commandment of God, but every word spoken and every act done in obtaining the covenant and oath was a lie. Yet Joshua kept his oath.

You may say he ought to have broke it. So did not God say: The house of Israel kept this covenant with the Gibeonites some four hundred years, when Saul in his zeal for Israel and Judah, killed some of the men of Gibeon. God brought a famine on Israel to punish them for this, thus showing that he held the nation bound from generation to generation to keep the oath of their fathers, however improperly taken. 2 Samuel xxi 1. That the curse of God might be taken off the nation for breaking their league, David suffered the Gibeonites to take the price of redemption, and they demanded and had seven sons of Saul put to death, 5th and 7th verses, and the anger of the Lord was appeased. 14th verse. Men have habituated themselves to trifle with oaths as mere playthings, but God will not hold them guiltless, and his wrath will smoke against them in the days to come.

I would not be understood, however, that there is no release from obligations improperly assumed, or which have become the sources of evil. But it is very dangerous for every man to set aside whatever obligation he thinks proper to disregard. So long as this is allowed men cannot be bound. Every man will find a pretense for breaking the oath he wishes not to keep. So they always have done. In addition to this, such publications tend to bring Mormonism into disrepute. Like William Smith's career, giving lectures on the alledged crimes of Brigham Young and others, they build up prejudices which every elder must meet as he goes out to preach.—The world do not distinguish between saints and apostates. With them the rule is, once a Mormon, always a Mormon. The crimes thus published on apostates will in turn be thrown into our faces, as the effects of the Mormon faith. Professed believers have thus raised more barriers against the gospel than all the declared opponents of the faith. [Ed.

For the Gospel Herald.

APPOINTMENT OF JAMES J. STRANG.

TO ALL THE SAINTS OF GOD IN ALL THE WORLD, GREETING:—Your brother and servant in Christ has looked upon the condition of the church of Jesus Christ with great interest for the last three or four years. Since the martyrdom of the prophet Joseph I have been seeking after truth, honesty and justice as it is in Jesus, and had I not known there was a divine reality in the gospel of Jesus Christ, as taught by Joseph and Hyrum, I would have long since no doubt been a miserable infidel. But, thank the Lord for a knowledge of the great work of the last days, at his death I was earnestly looking like all the rest of the honest saints to see one Elisha-like stand in the footsteps of Joseph to teach the law of the Lord, and to be like unto Moses; yea, to be a prophet, seer, revelator and translator.—But, alas! I was disappointed, until a day spring from on high revealed the glorious intelligence that God had not cast off his people. In justice to you, my God, and brother J. J. Strang, I must say that, early in the fall of 1845, (October,) I went to Voree to investigate the claims of brother Strang to the First Presidency of the church. It was just after he had found the plates. He showed me the plates, his writings on the subject, Joseph's letter, and the revelations which he had received, and the translation that he had made of part of the record of Rajah Manchau of Vorito.

We went into an investigation of his claims in good earnest, for I was not to be imposed upon if I could avoid it. I asked him if Joseph sent him that letter. He answered yes. I then asked him who ordained him. He referred me to D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2, also sec. 1. p. 1, 2, 3, and said he was ordained by an angel. This was before he saw Reuben Miller, and before the first Voree Herald was published. That has ALWAYS been brother Strang's position, and he has always maintained it without any twisting or turning to the right or left. Why, how has there been so many apostacies? Ans. Because mankind are so selfish they are not willing to remain in the station God has placed them in. This is the case with a great many who have left the church. They came to Voree with the expectation of getting into some office to suit their ruling organs.—Self-esteem for instance. Collins Pemberton and Charles B. Thompson expected to be ordained into the quorum of the Twelve, and when they found they were not they began to cry "wolf." When brother J. Savage was ordained into the quorum of the Twelve Charles was stung to the heart, and made some very impertinent remarks about having the company of one of the Twelve on his return home, and considered he was just as able and competent to fulfill that functionary as brother Savage. Disappointed ambition some way or the other has been the cause of almost all the difference in the ranks of the Voree Mormons.

With all candor, brethren, I ask you in the name of honesty, sincerity, brotherly kindness and God's eternal truth to investigate the claims of Bro. Strang, and mind the injunction of Bro. Paul, to prove all things and hold fast that which is good. Investigate philosophically, scientifically and honestly before God, knowing the time has come when men will heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they shall turn from the truth unto fables, not waiting for God to give them their teachers. Has this not been verified in the Brighamite organization?

E. P. BROWN.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH WIGHT.

Mount Sterling, Ill., August 22d, 1848.

PRES. STRANG:—Having heard much of you since I left the south, I desired to visit you, but not having time, I will address you a few lines. I left the southern part of Texas the 15th of May, and came to this country by the way of New Orleans. I have visited a great number of small branches of the church since I came, and should have seen you but for lack of time, but I shall be in this State again the first of April next, if possible, to pilot a company through to Texas. I find many people standing as it were on the fence, not knowing which way to jump. Some are leaning towards you; some to Texas, and some to the salt land spoken of in Jeremiah xvii. 5, 6.

I do not know fully the principles of your belief, but will give you the outlines of some of mine. We believe that Joseph Smith died a prophet of the living God, holding the keys of the seventh and last dispensation of God on earth, and will continue to hold them throughout all ages; and that the government of the church belongs to one of his (Joseph's) posterity, i. e., the whole church. For proof of this matter I refer you to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, page 402 p. 18, which is sufficient to show the lawful successor to the government. Neither doth he vary from that which he hath said. Doctrine and Covenants page 229 p. 1. We believe now as the saints did anciently, that the priesthood is given by lineage, and Joseph, the son of the prophet, is the lawful heir.—As to our belief further, we hold to the principles taught in the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants; believing in a united order, just the same as the book of Commandments teaches in various places. Look on the 218th and 219th pages, and the 224th, and the 381st and 382d, &c.; all these go to show our belief.

These few ideas I submit to you to handle as you please, not knowing but you believe in the same principles yourself. It is the course of the ancients generally. We find that Peter believed in a united order. And the Nephites prospered under this order. And a Noah (Enoch) was translated under the same order. We follow out the order of God, not forgetting the first principles of the gospel. As to the country where we live, it is a very good and healthy place. It is not to be surpassed by any that I have ever seen since I left the land of Zion. The climate is that of one continual spring and summer. The saints in that part of the vineyard are prospering exceedingly both temporally and spiritually. We live 75 miles west of the city of Austin, the capitol of Texas. Lyman Wight is the President of the branch, of whom no doubt you have heard.

Your friend, &c., O. L. WIGHT.

Voree, September 13th, 1848.

DEAR BROTHER:—Yours of 22d August came to hand yesterday, and I avail myself of the privilege you allowed me of giving it to the public through the columns of the Herald, believing that its publication will be useful to the saints, and hoping it may tend to save some from the miseries of the salt land, and in the kingdom of God. You will appreciate in some degree the pleasure I enjoyed in the receipt of your epistle when I tell you that, on first hearing of your being in Illinois, I addressed letters to you at various places, hoping that some one of them might by that means find you.—I have also recently sent various documents to the saints in Texas. But as before the receipt of your letter I did not certainly know how to direct to them, they may not have received them.

I shall now take occasion to send to you and others such papers as will make the saints there fully acquainted with the circumstances of their brethren here. I beg to add that as the saints in Texas are destitute of the means of keeping up communication with their brethren throughout the world, for want of a printing press, we shall be happy to do them the favor of making the Gospel Herald the channel of such communication. This paper is issued weekly on a half sheet, and is at present the only gospel paper regularly published on earth. Besides this we occasionally issue tracts, &c., by means of which the faith is faithfully defended against the assaults of both infidels, sectarians and apostates.

While apostates of every kind and complexion have been assailing us from every quarter, I, as the prophet and witness of God, and my brethren here, a little handful of faithful saints, have stood against the world at large, the sole bulwark on earth of the dispensation of the fullness of times. Many others have stood faithful in their various places, maintaining the faith in their several neighborhoods, but no body else in defending and propagating the faith throughout the world, seeking encounters with the sects generally, and making converts from among those who were ignorant of the gospel. God be praised. For in every peril he has been our protector, and in every encounter he has given us the victory.

I have seen a single copy of a tract issued by elder Lyman Wight, and have published in the Herald a particular notice of it, written by elder J. E. Page, copies of which I send you by the mail that takes this. I am a little surprised that you should be unacquainted with the principles of my belief. Cradled as you were in the lap of Mormonism, familiar with the teachings of the true priesthood of the living God from your childhood, using the language of the true faith as household words from lisping infancy, and having grown up to manhood a lively member of the church of the living God, you might well have assumed as an unquestioned fact that he to whom God has committed the keys of mysteries and revelations has a fixed and unchanging faith in all that God has revealed in this dispensation of the fullness of times.

The fact that Joseph Smith both lived and died a true prophet of the living God is so apparent that it is folly for any one to claim the name of Mormon who questions it, and that he holds the keys of the kingdom of heaven to all eternity is equally clear. D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 2. But your expression that he holds the keys of the last dispensation throughout all ages, may bear a construction broader than the fact. HE DOES NOT HOLD THE KEYS OF MYSTERIES AND REVELATIONS. The keys of the kingdom of God pertain to time and eternity; to earth and heaven: they hold the right to the authority of God forever. Christ held them and holds them unchangingly. Matt. xxviii. 18. Heb. i. 3 to 12. Rev. i. 5, 6. v. 2, 3, 4, 5. xxii. 16, 17, 18, 19. Yet he conferred them on Peter, Matt. xvi. 19. John xxi. 15, 16, 17, who exercised them without in any sense derogating from the authority, or dignity of Christ, and afterwards John the Revelator and others came into possession of them and hold them in their second spheres to this moment, and will as long as God is.

But this did not prevent the same authority being in this dispensation conferred on Joseph Smith and others. D. & C. sec. l. p. 2, 3. sec. lxxxv. p. 3. sec. ciii. p. 29. Diamond ii. iii. Your will perceive that several of these persons were EQUAL with Joseph in the holding of the "KEYS OF THE KINGDOM," yet by some means he had an unchanging pre-eminency over them. Why?—Because he held keys that no other person could hold at the same time. The keys of mysteries and revelations belonged to him alone. D. & C. sec. li. p. 1, 2. sec. xi. p. 4. sec. xiv. p. 2. In Dec., 1830, God gave to him a conditional promise of these keys until the coming of Christ. D. & C. sec. xi, p. 4. This is a promise of everlasting life without seeing death. For had Joseph lived to the condition of it he must have stood at the head of the dispensation when Christ comes, not to taste death, but to meet him in the clouds of heaven when he takes vengeance on them that know not God and makes the earth empty, leaving few men to inhabit it.—

CORRESPONDENCE WITH WIGHT.

Mount Sterling, Ill., August 22d, 1848.

PRES. STRANG:—Having heard much of you since I left the south, I desired to visit you, but not having time, I will address you a few lines. I left the southern part of Texas the 15th of May, and came to this country by the way of New Orleans. I have visited a great number of small branches of the church since I came, and should have seen you but for lack of time, but I shall be in this State again the first of April next, if possible, to pilot a company through to Texas. I find many people standing as it were on the fence, not knowing which way to jump. Some are leaning towards you; some to Texas, and some to the salt land spoken of in Jeremiah xvii. 5, 6.

I do not know fully the principles of your belief, but will give you the outlines of some of mine. We believe that Joseph Smith died a prophet of the living God, holding the keys of the seventh and last dispensation of God on earth, and will continue to hold them throughout all ages; and that the government of the church belongs to one of his (Joseph's) posterity, i. e., the whole church. For proof of this matter I refer you to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, page 402-p. 18, which is sufficient to show the lawful successor to the government. Neither doth he vary from that which he hath said. Doctrine and Covenants page 229 p. 1. We believe now as the saints did anciently, that the priesthood is given by lineage, and Joseph, the son of the prophet, is the lawful heir.—As to our belief further, we hold to the principles taught in the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants; believing in a united order, just the same as the book of Commandments teaches in various places. Look on the 218th and 219th pages, and the 224th, and the 381st and 382d, &c.; all these go to show our belief.

These few ideas I submit to you to handle as you please, not knowing but you believe in the same principles yourself. It is the course of the incients generally. We find that Peter believed in a united order. And the Nephites prospered under this order. And a Noah (Enoch) was translated under the same order. We follow out the order of God, not forgetting the first principles of the gospel. As to the country where we live, it is a very good and healthy place. It is not to be surpassed by any that I have ever seen since I left the land of Zion. The climate is that of one continual spring and summer. The saints in that part of the vineyard are prospering exceedingly both temporally and spiritually. We live 75 miles west of the city of Austin, the capitol of Texas. Lyman Wight is the President of the branch, of whom no doubt you have heard.

Your friend, &c., O. L. WIGHT.

Voree, September 13th, 1848.

DEAR BROTHER:—Yours of 22d August came to hand yesterday, and I avail myself of the privilege you allowed me of giving it to the public through the columns of the Herald, believing that its publication will be useful to the saints, and hoping it may tend to save some from the miseries of the salt land, and in the kingdom of God. You will appreciate in some degree the pleasure I enjoyed in the receipt of your epistle when I tell you that, on first hearing of your being in Illinois, I addressed letters to you at various places, hoping that some one of them might by that means find you.—I have also recently sent various documents to the saints in Texas. But as before the receipt of your letter I did not certainly know how to direct to them, they may not have received them.

I shall now take occasion to send to you and others such papers as will make the saints there fully acquainted with the circumstances of their brethren here. I beg to add that as the saints in Texas are destitute of the means of keeping up communication with their brethren throughout the world, for want of a printing press, we shall be happy to do them the favor of making the Gospel Herald the channel of such communication. This paper is issued weekly on a half sheet, and is at present the only gospel paper regularly published on earth. Besides this we occasionally issue tracts, &c., by means of which the faith is faithfully defended against the assaults of both infidels, sectarians and apostates.

While apostates of every kind and complexion have been assailing us from every quarter, I, as the prophet and witness of God, and my brethren here, a little handful of faithful saints, have stood against the world at large, the sole bulwark on earth of the dispensation of the fullness of times. Many others have stood faithful in their various places, maintaining the faith in their several neighborhoods, but no body else in defending and propagating the faith throughout the world, seeking encounters with the sects generally, and making converts from among those who were ignorant of the gospel. God be praised. For in every peril he has been our protector, and in every encounter he has given us the victory.

I have seen a single copy of a tract issued by elder Lyman Wight, and have published in the Herald a particular notice of it, written by elder J. E. Page, copies of which I send you by the mail that takes this. I am a little surprised that you should be unacquainted with the principles of my belief. Cradled as you were in the lap of Mormonism, familiar with the teachings of the true priesthood of the living God from your childhood, using the language of the true faith as household words from lisping infancy, and having grown up to manhood a lively member of the church of the living God, you might well have assumed as an unquestioned fact that he to whom God has committed the keys of mysteries and revelations has a fixed and unchanging faith in all that God has revealed in this dispensation of the fullness of times.

The fact that Joseph Smith both lived and died a true prophet of the living God is so apparent that it is folly for any one to claim the name of Mormon who questions it, and that he holds the keys of the kingdom of heaven to all eternity is equally clear. D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 2. But your expression that he holds the keys of the last dispensation throughout all ages, may bear a construction broader than the fact. HE DOES NOT HOLD THE KEYS OF MYSTERIES AND REVELATIONS. The keys of the kingdom of God pertain to time and eternity; to earth and heaven: they hold the right to the authority of God forever. Christ held them and holds them unchangingly. Matt. xxviii. 18. Heb. i. 3 to 12. Rev. i. 6. v. 2, 3, 4, 5. xxii. 16, 17, 18, [illegible] Yet he conferred them on Peter, Matt. xvi. 19. John xxi. [illegible] 16, 17, who exercised them without in any sense derogating from the authority, or dignity of Christ, and afterwards John the Revelator and others came into possession of them and hold them in their second spheres to this moment, and will as long as God is.

But this did not prevent the same authority being in this dispensation conferred on Joseph Smith and others. D. & C. sec. l. p. 2, 3. sec. lxxxv. p. 3. sec. ciii. p. 29. Diamond ii. iii. You will perceive that several of these persons were EQUAL with Joseph in the holding of the "KEYS OF THE KINGDOM," yet by some means he had an unchanging pre-eminency over them. Why?—Because he held keys that no other person could hold at the same time. The keys of mysteries and revelations belonged to him alone. D. & C. sec. li. p. 1, 2. sec. xi. p. 4. sec. xiv. p. 2. In Dec., 1830, God gave to him a conditional promise of these keys until the coming of Christ. D. & C. sec. xi, p. 4. This is a promise of everlasting life without seeing death. For had Joseph lived to the condition of it he must have stood at the head of the dispensation when Christ comes, not to taste death, but to meet him in the clouds of heaven when he takes vengeance on them that know not God and makes the earth empty, leaving few men to inhabit it.

Though Joseph did not live to the condition of this promise, yet he did not fall from the favor of God or lose his priesthood; for in March, 1833, God forgave him his sins and sealed him up to salvation with the keys of the kingdom, but with the express saying that the oracles, that is, the keys of mysteries and revelations, should be given to another. D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 1, 2.

There is this difference between the keys of the kingdom and the keys of mysteries and revelations, that authority or the keys of the kingdom may be exercised forever. But the mysteries and revelations cease in eternity. Then man "shall no longer say to his neighbor, know ye the Lord; for all shall know him from the least to the greatest." Jer. xxxi. 33, 34. Heb. viii. 10. x. 16. Prophecy, revelations and visions shall cease, for we all shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known. 1 Cor. xiii. 9, 10, 11, 12.—The mysteries of eternity will be open to us, and the fountains of everlasting truth shall flow free to all. We shall be perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect. And there will be to us no mysteries, and can be no keys of mysteries that have ceased to be. But since the death of Joseph the church has just the same need of revelations as before. It has the same necessity of a prophet to stand as the common shepherd of the whole flock now as ever. God had given promise in the earliest times of the church to plant another instead of Joseph in this particular office, in case he ceased to fill it either by apostacy or death. D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2. sec. li. p. 2. sec. lxxxv. p. 2.

To this office I was called by revelation of God given by the mouth of Joseph, a copy of which I send you herewith, and was also ordained by the ministration of angels of God in the same hour in which Joseph was taken away, the record of which ordination I also send to you. Since that time I have stood in that duty and calling continually, calling on all the saints every where to stand in their several priesthoods, missions and duties in the church, and teaching the revelations which God has given to Joseph as well as those he has given to me. Particularly I have addressed myself to all the quorum of the Twelve excepting Lyman Wight, who probably has never received a communication from me in consequence of his peculiar location and circumstances, to fulfill the various missions to which Joseph had appointed them. And as many of them refused to heed my words and admonitions, and have trampled on my epistles directing them in their duties, and admonishing them for various faults, I have proceeded, assisted by the high council of the church, to excommunicate them from the communion of God and deliver them over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of the Lord Jesus.

Moses held the keys of his dispensation. As a Mormon you are bound to confess that he still holds them. Yet Joshua, Jeptha, Samuel, David and many others were in that dispensation prophets and revelators, standing in authority over ALL the FLOCK of God.—Jesus Christ stood at the head of his dispensation with all the keys of power therein. Yet few will deny that both Peter and John each in their time held the keys of the kingdom, standing not only as apostles but as PROPHETS, seers and revelators. Certainly they both prophesied in the name of God, saw heavenly visions, and received and wrote revelations and gave them to the whole church as a LAW and an ADMONITION to them FOREVER. In the time of Joshua and the subsequent prophets of Israel, Moses, though he was accepted of God in his priesthood, ceased to hold the keys of mysteries and revelations, they being held by one on earth, by whom the word of God was spoken among men.

So Christ, having all power committed to him, and all mysteries opened to him, has committed the keys of the mysteries of those things which were sealed to the hands of those whom he placed at the head of the church on earth while he stands at the head in heaven. With like propriety after Joseph ceased to dwell among men God has given the keys of mysteries or the oracles to another, that is, to the whole church; D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 2; that through one revelator all may have the word of God now as formerly. This power being conferred on me by revelation of God and anointing and ordaining of angels precisely as it was conferred on Joseph before me, does not in the least derogate from his priesthood, but becomes one of the strong, the overwhelming, evidences that he was indeed sent of God.

I perceive you have laid down that priesthood goes by lineage.—That is true to a limited extent. The priesthood of the Aaronic order under the Mosaic dispensation went by lineage. The patriarchal office, which pertains to the Melchisedec priesthood, also goes by lineage. But the office of prophet, of lawgiver to God's people and shepherd of the whole flock of God does not. The genealogy of Abraham was through Terah, &c., to Noah. But at the time God called him Melchisedec stood above him and received tithes. Gen. xiv. 18, 19, 20. Heb. vii. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7. Joseph seems to have stood in that place after the death of Jacob, but however that may be it is certain that Levi did not. Yet we soon after find Moses, of the lineage of Levi, filling it with most transcendent authority. And he did not give it to his posterity. But it went severally through

Joshua, of the tribe of Judah,
Othniel, of the tribe of Judah, not his son. Judges iii. 9.
Ehud, of the tribe of Benjamin. Jud. iii. 15, 19, 20, 28.
Shamgar, the son of Anath. Jud. iii. 31.
Deborah, a prophetess. Jud. iv. 3, 4.
Gideon, the son of Joash. Jud. vi. 11, 12.
Tola, of the tribe of Issacher. Jud. x. 1, 2.
Jair, not his son. Jud. x. 3.
Jepthah, the son of a harlot, and consequently having no legal lineage. Jud. xi. 1. xii. 7.
Ibzan, not his son. Jud. xii. 8.
Elon, of the tribe of Zebulon. Jud. xii. 11.
Abdon, the son of Hillel. Jud. xii. 13.
Samson, of the tribe of Dan. Jud. xiii. 2, 5. xvi. 31.
Eli, of the tribe of Levi. 1 Sam. iv. 18.
Samuel, of the tribe of Ephraim. 1 Sam. iii.

And Nathan, Elijah, Elisha, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and a great number of others, who stood as prophets in Israel, either acting with royal authority as did Moses and Joshua, or standing above kings as did Samuel and Elijah. Yet in the list of prophets above holding the right to GOVERN the WHOLE CHURCH there is not a single instance of this priesthood going from father to son. And we find it in seven different tribes of Israel, and the lineage of many of the prophets yet undetermined. Indeed I discover but a single instance where there was an attempt on the part of the son to claim the priesthood of the father, to wit: that of Abimelech, the son of Gideon, who was signally overthrown. I am aware that there are cases in other times where the son was prophet after the father. But in these cases he held the office by revelation, and not by lineage. And these cases form exceptions to the general course of facts. So, too, there are cases where the son was not patriarch after the father. But these cases are exceptions to the general rule, because the priesthood of patriarch goes by lineage, and that of prophet by individual call.

In the gospel dispensation Christ first held the keys. After him they were conferred on Peter, who thereby became the chief shepherd of the whole flock, and Paul was placed in the office formerly held by Peter. After the crucifixion of Peter, we find John on the isle of Patmos exercising the powers of the same keys, totally disregarding lineage in this office, as had been done in the former dis-

Though Joseph did not live to the condition of this promise, yet he did not fall from the favor of God or lose his priesthood; for in March, 1833, God forgave him his sins and sealed him up to salvation with the keys of the kingdom, but with the express saying that the oracles, that is, the keys of mysteries and revelations, should be given to another. D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 1, 2.

There is this difference between the keys of the kingdom and the keys of mysteries and revelations, that authority or the keys of the kingdom may be exercised forever. But the mysteries and revelations cease in eternity. Then man "shall no longer say to his neighbor, know ye the Lord; for all shall know him from the least to the greatest." Jer. xxxi. 33, 34. Heb. viii. 10. x. 16. Prophecy, revelations and visions shall cease, for we all shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known. 1 Cor. xiii. 9, 10, 11, 12.—The mysteries of eternity will be open to us, and the fountains of everlasting truth shall flow free to all. We shall be perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect. And there will be to us no mysteries, and can be no keys of mysteries that have ceased to be. But since the death of Joseph the church has just the same need of revelations as before. It has the same necessity of a prophet to stand as the common shepherd of the whole flock now as ever. God had given promise in the earliest times of the church to plant another instead of Joseph in this particular office, in case he ceased to fill it either by apostacy or death. D. & C. sec. xi, p. 4. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2. sec. li. p. 2. sec. lxxxv. p. 2.

To this office I was called by revelation of God given by the mouth of Joseph, a copy of which I send you herewith, and was also ordained by the ministration of angels of God in the same hour in which Joseph was taken away, the record of which ordination I also send to you. Since that time I have stood in that duty and calling continually, calling on all the saints every where to stand in their several priesthoods, missions and duties in the church, and teaching the revelations which God has given to Joseph as well as those he has given to me. Particularly I have addressed myself to all the quorum of the Twelve excepting Lyman Wight, who probably has never received a communication from me in consequence of his peculiar location and circumstances, to fulfill the various missions to which Joseph had appointed them. And as many of them refused to heed my words and admonitions, and have trampled on my epistles directing them in their duties, and admonishing them for various faults, I have proceeded, assisted by the high council of the church, to excommunicate them from the communion of God and deliver them over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of the Lord Jesus.

Moses held the keys of his dispensation. As a Mormon you are bound to confess that he still holds them. Yet Joshua, Jeptha, Samuel, David and many others were in that dispensation prophets and revelators, standing in authority over ALL the FLOCK of God.—Jesus Christ stood at the head of his dispensation with all the keys of power therein. Yet few will deny that both Peter and John each in their time held the keys of the kingdom, standing not only as apostles but as PROPHETS, seers and revelators. Certainly they both prophesied in the name of God, saw heavenly visions, and received and wrote revelations and gave them to the whole church as A LAW and an ADMONITION to them FOREVER. In the time of Joshua and the subsequent prophets of Israel, Moses, though he was accepted of God in his priesthood, ceased to hold the keys of mysteries and revelations, they being held by one on earth, by whom the word of God was spoken among men.

So Christ, having all power committed to him, and all mysteries opened to him, has committed the keys of the mysteries of those things which were sealed to the hands of those whom he placed at the head of the church on earth while he stands at the head in heaven. With like propriety, after Joseph ceased to dwell among men God has given the keys of mysteries or the oracles to another, that is, to the whole church; D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 2; that through one revelator all may have the word of God now as formerly. This power being conferred on me, by revelation of God and anointing and ordaining of angels precisely as it was conferred on Joseph before me, does not in the least derogate from his priesthood, but becomes one of the strong, the overwhelming, evidences that he was indeed sent of God.

I perceive you have laid down that priesthood goes by lineage.—That is true to a limited extent. The priesthood of the Aaronic order under the Mosaic dispensation went by lineage. The patriarchal office, which pertains to the Melchisedec priesthood, also goes by lineage. But the office of prophet, of lawgiver to God's people and shepherd of the whole flock of God does not. The genealogy of Abraham was through Terah, &c., to Noah. But at the time God called him Melchisedec stood above him and received tithes. Gen. xiv. 18, 19, 20. Heb. vii. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7. Joseph seems to have stood in that place after the death of Jacob, but however that may be it is certain that Levi did not. Yet we soon after find Moses, of the lineage of Levi, filling it with most transcendent authority. And he did not give it to his posterity. But it went severally through

Joshua, of the tribe of Judah,
Othniel, of the tribe of Judah, not his son. Judges iii. 9.
Ehud, of the tribe of Benjamin. Jud. iii. 15, 19, 20, 28.
Shamgar, the son of Anath. Jud. iii. 31.
Deborah, a prophetess. Jud. iv. 3, 4.
Gideon, the son of Joash. Jud. vi. 11, 12.
Tola, of the tribe of Issacher. Jud. x. 1, 2.
Jair, not his son. Jud. x. 3.
Jepthah, the son of a harlot, and consequently having no legal lineage. Jud. xi. 1. xii. 7.
Ibzan, not his son. Jud. xii. 8.
Elon, of the tribe of Zebulon. Jud. xii. 11.
Abdon, the son of Hillel. Jud. xii. 13.
Samson, of the tribe of Dan. Jud. xiii. 2, 5. xvi. 31.
Eli, of the tribe of Levi. 1 Sam. iv. 18.
Samuel, of the tribe of Ephraim. 1 Sam. iii.

And Nathan, Elijah, Elisha, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, and a great number of others, who stood as prophets in Israel, either reigning with royal authority as did Moses and Joshua, or standing above kings as did Samuel and Elijah. Yet in the list of prophets above holding the right to GOVERN the WHOLE CHURCH there is not a single instance of this priesthood going from father to son. And we find it in seven different tribes of Israel, and the lineage of many of the prophets yet undetermined. Indeed I discover but a single instance where there was an attempt on the part of the son to claim the priesthood of the father, to wit: that of Abimelech, the son of Gideon, who was signally overthrown. I am aware that there are cases in other times where the son was prophet after the father. But in these cases he held the office by revelation, and not by lineage. And these cases form exceptions to the general course of facts. So, too, there are cases where the son was not patriarch after the father. But these cases are exceptions to the general rule, because the priesthood of patriarch goes by lineage, and that of prophet by individual call.

In the gospel dispensation Christ first held the keys. After him they were conferred on Peter, who thereby became the chief shepherd of the whole flock, and Paul was placed in the office formerly held by Peter. After the crucifixion of Peter, we find John on the isle of Patmos exercising the powers of the same keys, totally disregarding lineage in this office, as had been done in the former dispensation. I have carefully looked into the promise of God to Joseph, quoted by you, D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 18, and do not see therein the least intimation that his son shall be prophet in his stead. It contains a command of an earthly inheritance of part ownership to Joseph and his house from generation to generation in the Nauvoo house, upon the doing of certain works at Nauvoo, which have never been done. With the rejection of Nauvoo this house has been abandoned, and the command has fallen to the ground unperfomed. There is nothing left to inherit. Contingent upon this command is the following: "For this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall be upon the head of his posterity after him." What blessing? Clearly that of which the Lord was speaking, to wit: an inheritance in the Nauvoo house.—Then follows these words: "And as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph; in thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed." Is this a promise of the prophetic office in the line of Joseph's posterity? Certainly not. It is at the most a promise that some one of the posterity of Joseph shall be a deliverer to one of the kindreds of the earth: a kindred; not all the kindreds.

Copy and preserve

If it be construed as a promise of the prophetic office in the lineage of Joseph, by far stronger reasons should we look for it in the line of Abraham, running regularly from father to son. Yet since the Egyptian bondage I do not recollect of a single instance of its going to the son. During this bondage it does not appear to have been in the line of Abraham at all. The nations dwelling in and round about the land of Canaan had not altogether apostatized from God and been rejected of him. A true priesthood was found among them as late as the time of Moses, as in the case of Jethro, Ex. xviii., and for aught that appears the prophetic office was among them. Certainly is not mentioned in Israel.

The covenant of God to David is everlasting and unchangeable. It can no more be departed from than can the sun depart from its place. Ps. lxxxviii. 4, 5, 25, 28, 30, 31, 35, 36, 37. And this promise has kept the kingly office (which is the same as the patriarchal) in his family against all others. But the prophetic never remained with it two generations in succession.

These considerations certainly should show any one that the priesthood of a prophet, as shepherd of the whole flock, is not hereditary, though that of patriarch or king is. This priesthood belonged to Joseph Smith, the father of the prophet. From him it went to Hyrum, who, but for the prophetic office, would have taken precedence to Joseph, being the oldest son. But Joseph, as First President, held a full priesthood, including the patriarchate, and this he transmits by lineage to his posterity, being found worthy. This right in them I am bound fully to maintain. I did so against the pretensions of William Smith, who claimed to exclude the children of his older brothers from that priesthood, and make himself the sole representative of the family. And this I will do against any man who shall attempt to rob them of their inheritance.

I refer you to the book of D. & C. sec. v. p. 6. sec. xi. p. 4. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2. sec. xlvi. p. 1. sec. l. p. 2, 3. sec. li. p. 2. sec. civ. p. 7, to show you how one should be raised up to stand instead of Joseph, having the government of the whole church, and simply add that I received such an appointment as this law contemplates, to wit: a revelation given by God to Joseph, while yet standing in his place, and which he wrote and sent to me near the time of his martyrdom, appointing me to that office; a copy of which I send to you; and an ordination by the hands of angels at the very same moment when Joseph was taken away; a copy of the record of which I also send you. Diamond ii. iii. Since then God has given me many revelations, some of them pertaining to the united and everlasting order of Enoch, which is established among us upon the basis of the law of God, with which I am pleased to see that you are familiar. This order, however, the saints were slow to enter upon. It was only established among us last winter, and is now limited to some 35 or 40 families. But God has blessed them and strengthened them, and the final result will be that all who have the cause of God at heart will make a consecration of all they possess, and seek earnestly for a place in the true order of the church of the first born.

Having said this, I think I need not tell you that we remember also the first principles of the gospel, as revealed by Christ and renewed by Joseph, and the secondary principles also, and are laying hold of those which lead to perfection. I rejoice to hear of your prosperity, both in spiritual and temporal things. I shall look for you as the guest of the saints on the Hill of Promise on your return to this country, and am not without hope that ere long I may see you at your own home. May God bless you and the saints with you with the choice blessings of the land of Joseph forever.—Amen.

JAMES J. STRANG.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, AND A VOICE TO MANKIND BY AND THROUGH ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, THE POUGHKEEPSIE SEER AND CLAIRVOYANT, NEW YORK, S. S. LYON AND WILLIAM FISHBOUGH, 1847.

(Continued from last week.)

"The original manuscripts (of the Bible) in possession of the Jews were written in the Greek language. In addition to these, manuscripts of other nations and writers were collected, and their contents were in like manner transcribed. And it was at this period that many portions of the Primitive History were conveyed into Persia; and they were there retained for several centuries, until the Jews were taken into captivity, at which time the latter transcribed some of them, and the remainder they brought with them when they returned to their own country. This was the period of which I have spoken, when many of the original writings, being opposed to their peculiar opinions, were rejected. And those that were saved constituted the last will and testament of the Deity as recognized by the Jewish rabbinical writers." Page 420.

This being a mere naked assertion of the author, of times some thousand years past, doubtless he flatters himself that however false, the falsehood cannot be detected. Not so. The Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, the two books of Samuel, the two books of Kings, the two books of Chronicles, and the book of Job, have a historic existence earlier than the Greek was a written language. By their allusions to men, to events, and to places, by every thing in their composition they justify their origin in a country where the Greek language was unknown till Alexander. How should books be written among the Greeks treating altogether of the history, the traditions and the customs of the Hebrews, and never alluding to those of Grecians? making western Asia and the adjacent parts of Africa its scene, and speaking of Greece merely as distant "isles of the sea?" Why should Greeks speak of Hebrews as the chosen seed, the favored people of God, and themselves as rejected and cast off? Why should they write in favor of the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob, whom they did not worship, and call him the God of "our fathers," and the God who brought our fathers out of Egypt?

The age and country in which a book originated can be determined by its language, its figures, similes, comparisons, and its allusions to persons, places, scenery, customs, traditions, ceremonies and various other things. But among all these the Old Testament contains not one single mark of a Greek origin, but marks almost every leaf and chapter plain as ear marks on sheep of a Hebrew origin, and of a date approximating quite near to that usually attribpensation. I have carefully looked into the promise of God to Joseph, quoted by you, D. & C. sec. cili. p. 18, and do not see therein the least intimation that his son shall be prophet in his stead. It contains a command of an earthly inheritance of part ownership to Joseph and his house from generation to generation in the Nauvoo house, upon the doing of certain works at Nauvoo, which have never been done. With the rejection of Nauvoo this house has been abandoned, and the command has fallen to the ground unperfomed. There is nothing left to inherit. Contingent upon this command is the following: "For this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall be upon the head of his posterity after him." What blessing? Clearly that of which the Lord was speaking, to wit: an inheritance in the Nauvoo house. Then follows these words: "And as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph; in thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed." Is this a promise of the prophetic office in the line of Joseph's posterity? Certainly not. It is at the most a promise that some one of the posterity of Joseph shall be a deliverer to one of the kindreds of the earth: a kindred; not all the kindreds.

If it be construed as a promise of the prophetic office in the lineage of Joseph, by far stronger reasons should we look for it in the line of Abraham, running regularly from father to son. Yet since the Egyptian bondage I do not recollect of a single instance of its going to the son. During this bondage it does not appear to have been in the line of Abraham at all. The nations dwelling in and round about the land of Canaan had not altogether apostatized from God and been rejected of him. A true priesthood was found among them as late as the time of Moses, as in the case of Jethro, Ex. xviii., and for aught that appears the prophetic office was among [illegible] not mentioned in Israel.

The covenant of God to David is everlasting and unchangeable. It can no more be departed from than can the sun depart from its place. Ps. lxxxviii. 4, 5, 25, 28, 30, 31, 35, 36, 37. And this promise has kept the kingly office (which is the same as the patriarchal) in his family against all others. But the prophetic never remained with it two generations in succession.

These considerations certainly should show any one that the priesthood of a prophet, as shepherd of the whole flock, is not hereditary, though that of patriarch or king is. This priesthood belonged to Joseph Smith, the father of the prophet. From him it went to Hyrum, who, but for the prophetic office, would have taken precedence to Joseph, being the oldest son. But Joseph, as First President, held a full priesthood, including the patriarchate, and this he transmits by lineage to his posterity, being found worthy. This right in them I am bound fully to maintain. I did so against the pretensions of William Smith, who claimed to exclude the children of his older brothers from that priesthood, and make himself the sole representative of the family. And this I will do against any man who shall attempt to rob them of their inheritance.

I refer you to the book of D. & C. sec. v. p. 6. sec. xi. p. 4. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2. sec. xlvi. p. 1. sec. l. p. 2, 3. sec. li. p. 2. sec. civ. p. 7, to show you how one should be raised up to stand instead of Joseph, having the government of the whole church, and simply add that I received such an appointment as this law contemplates, to wit: a revelation given by God to Joseph, while yet standing in his place, and which he wrote and sent to me near the time of his martyrdom, appointing me to that office; a copy of which I send to you; and an ordination by the hands of angels at the very same moment when Joseph was taken away; a copy of the record of which I also send you. Diamond ii. iii. Since then God has given me many revelations, some of them pertaining to the united and everlasting order of Enoch, which is established among us upon the basis of the law of God, with which I am pleased to see that you are familiar. This order, however, the saints were slow to enter upon. It was only established among us last winter, and is now limited to some 36 or 40 families. But God has blessed them and strengthened them, and the final result will be that all who have the cause of God at heart will make a consecration of all they possess, and seek earnestly for a place in the true order of the church of the first born.

Having said this, I think I need not tell you that we remember also the first principles of the gospel, as revealed by Christ and renewed by Joseph, and the secondary principles also, and are laying hold of those which lead to perfection. I rejoice to hear of your prosperity, both in spiritual and temporal things. I shall look for you as the guest of the saints on the Hill of Promise on your return to this country, and am not without hope that ere long I may see you at your own home. May God bless you and the saints with you with the choice blessings of the land of Joseph forever. Amen.

JAMES J. STRANG.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, AND A VOICE TO MANKIND BY AND THROUGH ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, THE POUGHKEEPSIE SEER AND CLAIRVOYANT, NEW YORK, S. S. LYON AND WILLIAM FISHBOUGH, 1847.

(Continued from last week.)

"The original manuscripts (of the Bible) in possession of the Jews were written in the Greek language. In addition to these, manuscripts of other nations and writers were collected, and their contents were in like manner transcribed. And it was at this period that many portions of the Primitive History were conveyed into Persia; and they were there retained for several centuries, until the Jews were taken into captivity, at which time the latter transcribed some of them, and the remainder they brought with them when they returned to their own country. This was the period [illegible] which I have spoken, when many of the original writings, being opposed to their peculiar opinions, were rejected. And those that were saved constituted the last will and testament of the Deity as recognized by the Jewish rabbinical writers." Page 420.

This being a mere naked assertion of the author, of times some thousand years past, doubtless he flatters himself that however false, the falsehood cannot be detected. Not so. The Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, the two books of Samuel, the two books of Kings, the two books of Chronicles, and the book of Job, have a history existence earlier than the Greek was a written language. By their allusions to men, to events, and to places, by every thing in their composition they justify their origin in a country where the Greek language was unknown till Alexander. How should books be written among the Greeks treating altogether of the history, the traditions and the customs of the Hebrews, and never alluding to those of Grecians? making western Asia and the adjacent parts of Africa its scene, and speaking of Greece merely as distant "isles of the sea?" Why should Greeks speak of Hebrews as the chosen seed, the favored people of God, and themselves as rejected and cast off? Why should they write in favor of the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob, whom they did not worship, and call him the God of "our fathers," and the God who brought our fathers out of Egypt?

The age and country in which a book originated can be determined by its language, its figures, similes, comparisons, and its allusions to persons, places, scenery, customs, traditions, ceremonies and various other things. But among all these the Old Testament contains not one single mark of a Greek origin, but marks [illegible] every leaf and chapter plain as ear marks on sheep of a Hebrew origin, and of a date approximating quite [illegible] to that usually attributed to it. Genesis was written previous to Moses. The four following books are compilations from books written by him, made in the following age. The books written by Moses himself are not extant. So, too, the original chronicles of the kings of Judah and Israel are not extant, but those books were kept by the kings' scribes in each reign, and in them were noted the principal events of the reign. The books we have are compilations, noticing a few of the most extraordinary events.

Is it not a pretty story that books treating merely of Jews and Jewish kings, judges, prophets and wars, and of times when Greece consisted of a few wandering tribes of savages, should have been originally written in Greek. In the Greek classics every mountain, river, island, city, hero and God of the Greeks is commemorated and immortalized. Yet of a thousand pages of scripture scarcely mentioning one of them, but forever speaking of other scenes, mountains, rivers, islands and of only one true God, and when speaking of false Gods, naming those unknown among the Greeks, we are told the original was Greek. We doubt whether ignorance or impudence can go further. And he who writes thus pretends to give DIVINE REVELATIONS! Where will the impudence of imposture end? Yet men who love lies more than the truth will believe the confessed impostor. As well might it be said that Josephus was written by Channing, or Irving's Columbus by Cicero, or Webster's American spelling book in Chinese.

"There is no evidence of the actual fulfillment of all those ambiguous prophecies, many of which are contained in the Primitive History, (Bible.) Besides this, many of their prophecies were impure and unholy, destructive to the morals and happiness of their own nation, and tended to excite hostility, envy, and sectarian vengeance, in the bosoms of those to whom their prophecies were unfavorable. They breathed forth no celestial purity and refinement, but all their deeds and expressions were blackened by sectarian fanaticism." Page 422.

It does not need a divine revelation to show that all the prophecies are not fulfilled. They have been fulfilled in their time and in their order, and those which by time and order are yet future, and those only, remain unfulfilled. The word ambiguous does not apply to the prophecies. Take, for instance, the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy, containing the annunciation of some seventy or eighty curses which God would inflict on the house of Israel, in case they departed from the covenants by which God made them a nation. It would certainly be difficult to find language less ambiguous than this. And the historic record of what has befallen them, could hardly be written but by a repetition of the same language.—One might as well call the decalogue, the Lord's prayer, or the creed of saint Athanasius ambiguous, as to call these prophecies so. In the thirtieth chapter, in equally unambiguous language, Moses says:—

"If any of thine be driven out unto the outmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee: And the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers. And the Lord thy God will circumcise thy heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live. And the Lord thy God will put all these curses upon thine enemies, and on them that hate thee, which persecuted thee." Deut. xxx. 4, 5, 6, 7.

The former prophecy has been fulfilled in its time, and as truly the latter will be. The great body of the prophecies of nearly all the prophets are equally unambiguous. They are written in the same language in which the history of their fate would be written, except that they are oftimes expressed in the future tense, though not always. It is true that some of them, among which Daniel and John the revelator are pre-eminent, have prophecied in the language of symbols representing events. But the books containing their prophecies contain also an exposition of many of the symbols.

(To be continued.)

VALLEY OF JEHOSHAPHAT.

The Valley of Jehoshaphat has in all ages served as the burying place to Jerusalem. You meet there, side by side, monuments of the most distant times and of the present century. The Jews still come there to die from the corners of the earth. A stranger sells to them, for almost its weight in gold, the land which contains the bones of their fathers. Solomon planted that valley. The shadow of the Temple, by which it was overhung—the torrent, called after grief, which traversed it—the Psalms which David there composed—the Lamentations of Jeremiah, which its rocks re-echoed, render it the fitting abode of the tomb. Christ commenced his Passion in the same place: that innocent David there shed, for the expiation of our sins, tears, which the guilty David let fall for his own transgressions. Few names awaken in our mind recollections so solemn as the Valley of Jehoshaphat. It is so full of mysteries, that, according to the prophet Joel, all mankind will be assembled there before the Eternal Judge.

The aspect of this celebrated valley is desolate, the western side is bounded by a ridge of lofty rocks which support the walls of Jerusalem, above which the towers of the city appear. The eastern side is formed by the Mount of Olives, and another eminence, called the Mount of Scandal, from the idolatry of Solomon. These two mountains, which adjoin each other, are almost bare, and of a red and sombre hue; on their desert you see here and there some black and withered vineyards, some wild olives, some ploughed land, covered with hyssop, and a few ruined chapels. At the bottom of the valley you perceive a torrent, traversed by a single arch, which appears to be of great antiquity. The stones of the Jewish cemetery appear like a mass of ruins, with which they are surrounded. Three ancient monuments are particularly conspicuous, those of Zachariah, Jehoshaphat and Absalom. The sadness of Jerusalem, from which no smoke ascends, and in which no sound is heard; the solitude of the surrounding mountains, where not a living creature is to be seen; the disorder of these tombs, ruined, ransacked and half exposed to view, would almost induce one to believe that the last trump had been heard, and that the dead were about to rise in the valley of Jehoshaphat.—Advent Herald.

THE EMIGRATING MORMONS.—Accounts from the settlement at the Salt Lake, beyond the Rocky Mountains, to the 1st of May, state that there was great suffering among the Mormons for want of provisions. They were obliged to kill and eat their working cattle for food, and their stock of breadstuffs were nearly exhausted. Their wheat and barley crops had been entirely destroyed by crickets, which appeared in astonishing numbers, and, like the locusts, destroyed every kind of vegetation in their path.—Belfast Journal.

CONFERENCE.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Voree Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next. By order of the Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 28.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, SEPT. 28, 1848. [WHOLE No. 92.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, AND A VOICE TO MANKIND BY AND THROUGH ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, THE POUGHKEEPSIE SEER AND CLAIRVOYANT, NEW YORK, S. S. LYON AND WILLIAM FISHBOUGH, 1847.

(Continued from last week.)

"The origin of oracles and prophets, is, then, plainly understood. They are an effect of ignorance, and uncultivated judgment, and imagination." Page 421.

We are not the least surprised at this judgment of the author.—Few men are willing to give others the credit of a higher standard of intellect or moral principle than their own. A man attempting to impose on the credulity of mankind by giving forged "divine revelations," would very naturally suppose that all prophets had thus imposed on the ignorance, uncultivated judgment, and imagination of men. In the next line the author says he has "been impressed to speak briefly concerning" the prophecies. Impressed? Impressed by what? By whom? By the divine mind? or by his own mind? If by the divine mind, is the oracle the effect of ignorance? If by his own mind, how is the revelation he gives "DIVINE?"

"Many prophecies were apparently substantially fulfilled;—but these were particular and occasional occurrences, and did not necessarily follow the prophecies in the form of fulfillments. Things prophecied according to existing probabilities, did sometimes occur." Page 421.

Yes, and "many prophecies" were positively fulfilled that were neither particular nor occasional, and were NOT according to existing probabilities, but were expressly contrary thereto, are general, continuous and contrary to all probability. The instance we gave here-fore, Deut. xxviii., is eminently in point in all its particulars; for reaches to almost every fact in the history of that people, (the ws,) whether political, ecclesiastic, social or physical, covers a riod of many thousand years, and extends to every country on rth. We shall not again go over it at length, but merely drop a w remarks on the score of probability. It was probable enough at in process of time the nation of Israel should be conquered by neighboring nation, but there was no national probability that they ould be conquered by a nation from far, whose tongue they could ot understand. 49th verse. There is a probability that any na-on may change their religion and their rank among men, but there s no probability that the Israelites would become an astonish-ent, a hissing and a by-word among all nations (verse 37) as the ws have. There was a probability that they might suffer severe-by famine and war, but there was no probability that they would [illegible] in a siege living on the flesh of their own children. 53d [illegible] There was a reasonable probability that the nation of Israel should meet with various vicissitudes in war, and sometimes lose their national independence or change their religion, but no probability that as often as they departed from the true faith so often they should be conquered, and as often as they returned to it they should be restored to their own land and to national independence.

There was a reasonable probability that some of them might be sold into slavery, especially to the northern nations, but little probability of their being taken back to Egypt, and not the least of their being carried there till no man would buy them. 68th verse. It was probable that they might be conquered as a nation, and by mixing up lost as a race, but there was not the slightest probability that, being conquered as a nation and scattered among all nations, they should still remain a separate people, to be gathered again to their land. Deut. xxx. 5, 6.

Yet all these improbabilities befell them in exact accordance with the prophecies. The Lord brought against them from far, from the ends of the earth, the power of the Roman nation, whose capitol was built where the foot prints of man were not found when this prophecy was given, and whose legions marched from Britain to the war of the Jews—a nation delighting in blood as doth the eagle—a nation whose tongue they could not understand—a most insolent people, having no regard to the aged, and no pity on the infant; who ate up the fruit of their flocks and the fruit of their lands, and took all their fortified cities and overthrew their strong walls, until they were few in number and were destroyed from being a nation, and were plucked out of the land that God gave them for a possession.

The Lord did bring them into bondage to the Assyrians and the Babylonians—nations which grew up subsequent to the prophecy, and, consequently, not known to them and their fathers; and their kings with them, and there they worshipped false Gods made of wood and stone, and from that time to this all the nations among whom they have been scattered have made them a proverb and a by-word, and have been astonished at them, and have never regarded them as they have other people. In the siege of the city of Jerusalem they did eat the flesh of their children, and that secretly, concealing it from their nearest relatives, that they might reserve it all to themselves.—Josephus' Jewish Wars.

They were overthrown in war from time to time during the Judges, by intermarrying and mixing up in their religion with the neighboring nations. As often as they hearkened to the prophets that God raised up to them they were restored to nationality. Eminently were they thus built up under David, when all worship but that of the true God was prohibited. They began to decline towards the end of the reign of Solomon, who allowed temples of idols for his heathen wives. From this time forward their nationality vibrated precisely with their faith, until it was entirely blotted out by Nebuchadnezzar. After 70 years, with the true faith, was their nationality restored. And though various vicissituded it was finally lost after their rejection of Christ, not to be restored till they shall again set their hearts to keep the law of the Lord given by Moses. Deut. xxx. 2. They were thus taken into Egypt by the Roman officers, who took them prisoners at Jerusalem, and were there sold into slavery until the market was so glutted with them

EVIL REPORTS.

Many persons seem to have a kind of innate propensity to circulate evil reports of others. They are accordingly seldom, if ever, heard to speak well of their neighbors, but are found diligently availing themselves of every opportunity that offers to utter something to their disparagement. Such persons are a great pest to society. Through their influence, the most intimate friends are frequently set at variance with each other, and whole neighborhoods are sometimes thrown into the utmost confusion. Those who consult their own peace, as well as that of the community, should avail themselves of every proper instrumentality to put such persons entirely out of countenance, and to make their number as small as possible. Their conduct should be constantly held up in its true light, as proceeding either from a spirit of the most sordid jealousy at the happiness of others, or from an unholy pleasure in their injury, and as highly prejudicial to the interests of society. Great care should also be taken to avoid being in any way improperly influenced by their reports, or giving the least countenance, either directly or indirectly, to their evil practices. The rules which the late Rev. Charles Simeon adopted for the regulation of his conduct in reference to such matters are excellent, and should be observed by all who properly consult the true interests of our race. They are the following :—1. To hear as little as possible of whatever is to the prejudice of others. 2. To believe nothing of the kind till I am absolutely forced to it. 3. Never to drink into the spirit of one who circulates an evil report. 4. Always to moderate as far as I can the unkindness which is expressed towards others. 5. Always to believe, that if the other side were heard, a very different account would be given of the matter.

The longer he lived, he tells us, the more he felt the importance of adhering to these rules. His experience in this matter has been fully corroborated by that also of all the wise and the good. How glad should we be to find his rules generally adopted, and faithfully carried out, as, in that event, much good will most certainly be secured to every community.—Weekly Messenger.

THE INDIANS.—One of our exchanges makes the following remarks respecting the aborigines of our continent :—

"These are gloomy forebodings, perhaps counseled by our distrust of Mexican faith, and we hope time may prove them groundless, which will certainly be the case if a new movement, strongly hinted at in our late news, is carried out. We allude to a general rising of the Indian race against the whites. It was stated recently that the Indians of San Louis Potosi had risen and driven the white inhabitants out of the city, and preceding news has given accounts of the rising of the Indians in different parts of the country, bearing as their motto, death and extermination to the whites. What may grow out of this state of affairs is yet in the future, and speculation would be at fault if it attempted to penetrate the mystery ; but from the almost simultaneous rising of the Indians from the peninsula of Yucatan to Oregon, it might not be unfair to infer that the movement is a concerted one, and may result in one of the most sanguinary wars of races that has ever deluged the world with blood.—Whilst there is hardly a doubt but the whole Indian race of Mexico, where the country is not protected by United States troops, is ready for a general rising against the whites, it may not be amiss to note the discontent of some tribes within our territorial limits.—The policy of our government, for many years, has been to concentrate all the Indians in our territory on our South-western frontier ; this accomplishes, in part, for the Indians what Tecumseh labored to do, but failed—a concentration of Indian power. Although the United States is too powerful to fear any demonstration by the Indians, beyond a border warfare and cruel massacres ; yet the position of the Indians living on the continent of North America, is such as to invite the attention of statesmen. The Indian race residing in Mexico numbers some five millions. We do not recollect the estimated number of Indians residing within the limits of the United States, but it is large, and being placed on the borders of the former Mexican territory, they are in a condition to act with the Mexican Indians. The antipathy of distinctly marked races is so well known to every man of common observation, that it would be supererogatory to say anything on that point. It exists, whether in reason or not has no influence on the action of races towards each other."

POETRY.

O yes, I take the papers—
The trifling cost is never missed,
Though I've stood forty years
Upon the printer's list.

Talk not of warriors—Faust released
Earth from the terror of her kings—
He twirled his stick, and darkness ceased,
And morning streamed along the East,
On Freedom's burnished wings.

O yes, I read the papers,
And sons and daughters tall and small—
For they have been through thick and thin
The pastime of us all.

'Twas nobly said, that should a star
Be stricken from the dome of night,
A Printing Press—if stationed there—
Would fill the vacuum to a hair,
And shed a broader light.

The man who takes no papers,
Or taking, pays not when they're read,
Would sell his corn to buy a 'horn,'
And live on borrowed bread.

The printer opes his wide domains
Of Science—scatters Education
All o'er the land like April rains ;
And yet his labor and his pains
Are half his compensation !

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs ; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit : All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east ; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods ; thence north ten (10) rods ; thence east four (4) rods ; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

pensation. I have carefully looked into the promise of God to Joseph, quoted by you, D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 18, and do not see therein the least intimation that his son shall be prophet in his stead. It contains a command of an earthly inheritance of part ownership to Joseph and his house from generation to generation in the Nauvoo house, upon the doing of certain works at Nauvoo, which have never been done. With the rejection of Nauvoo this house has been abandoned, and the command has fallen to the ground unperfomed. There is nothing left to inherit. Contingent upon this command is the following: "For this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall be upon the head of his posterity after him." What blessing? Clearly that of which the Lord was speaking, to wit: an inheritance in the Nauvoo house. Then follows these words: "And as I said unto Abraham, concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph; in thee, and in thy seed, shall the kindred of the earth be blessed." Is this a promise of the prophetic office in the line of Joseph's posterity? Certainly not. It is at the most a promise that some one of the posterity of Joseph shall be a deliverer to one of the kindreds of the earth: a kindred; not all the kindreds.

If it be construed as a promise of the prophetic office in the lineage of Joseph, by far stronger reasons should we look for it in the line of Abraham, running regularly from father to son. Yet since the Egyptian bondage I do not recollect of a single instance of its going to the son. During this bondage it does not appear to have been in the line of Abraham at all. The nations dwelling in and round about the land of Canaan had not altogether apostatized from God and been rejected of him. A true priesthood was found among them as late as the time of Moses, as in the case of Jethro, Ex. xviii., and for aught that appears the prophetic office was among them. Ce. ——— is not mentioned in Israel.

The covenant of God to David is everlasting and unchangeable. It can no more be departed from than can the sun depart from its place. Ps. lxxxviii. 4, 5, 25, 28, 30, 31, 35, 36, 37. And this promise has kept the kingly office (which is the same as the patriarchal) in his family against all others. But the prophetic never remained with it two generations in succession.

These considerations certainly should show any one that the priesthood of a prophet, as shepherd of the whole flock, is not hereditary, though that of patriarch or king is. This priesthood belonged to Joseph Smith, the father of the prophet. From him it went to Hyrum, who, but for the prophetic office, would have taken precedence to Joseph, being the oldest son. But Joseph, as First President, held a full priesthood, including the patriarchate; and this he transmits by lineage to his posterity, being found worthy. This right in them I am bound fully to maintain. I did so against the pretensions of William Smith, who claimed to exclude the children of his older brothers from that priesthood, and make himself the sole representative of the family. And this I will do against any man who shall attempt to rob them of their inheritance.

I refer you to the book of D. & C. sec. v. p. 6. sec. xi. p. 4. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2. sec. xlvi. p. 1. sec. l. p. 2, 3. sec. li. p. 2. sec. civ. p. 7, to show you how one should be raised up to stand instead of Joseph, having the government of the whole church, and simply add that I received such an appointment as this law contemplates, to wit: a revelation given by God to Joseph, while yet standing in his place, and which he wrote and sent to me near the time of his martyrdom, appointing me to that office; a copy of which I send to you; and an ordination by the hands of angels at the very same moment when Joseph was taken away; a copy of the record of which I also send you. Diamond ii. iii. Since then God has given me many revelations, some of them pertaining to the united and everlasting order of Enoch, which is established among us upon the basis of the law of God, with which I am pleased to see that you are familiar. This order, however, the saints were slow to enter upon. It was only established among us last winter, and is now limited to some 36 or 40 families. But God has blessed them and strengthened them, and the final result will be that all who have the cause of God at heart will make a consecration of all they possess, and seek earnestly for a place in the true order of the church of the first born.

Having said this, I think I need not tell you that we remember also the first principles of the gospel, as revealed by Christ and renewed by Joseph, and the secondary principles also, and are laying hold of those which lead to perfection. I rejoice to hear of your prosperity, both in spiritual and temporal things. I shall look for you as the guest of the saints on the Hill of Promise on your return to this country, and am not without hope that ere long I may see you at your own home. May God bless you and the saints with you with the choice blessings of the land of Joseph forever.—Amen.

JAMES J. STRANG.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, AND A VOICE TO MANKIND BY AND THROUGH ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, THE POUGHKEEPSIE SEER AND CLAIRVOYANT, NEW YORK, S. S. LYON AND WILLIAM FISHBOUGH, 1847.

(Continued from last week.)

"The original manuscripts (of the Bible) in possession of the Jews were written in the Greek language. In addition to these, manuscripts of other nations and writers were collected, and their contents were in like manner transcribed. And it was at this period that many portions of the Primitive History were conveyed into Persia; and they were there retained for several centuries, until the Jews were taken into captivity, at which time the latter transcribed some of them, and the remainder they brought with them when they returned to their own country. This was the period of which I have spoken, when many of the original writings, being opposed to their peculiar opinions, were rejected. And those that were saved constituted the last will and testament of the Deity as recognized by the Jewish rabbinical writers." Page 420.

This being a mere naked assertion of the author, of times some thousand years past, doubtless he flatters himself that however false, the falsehood cannot be detected. Not so. The Pentateuch, Joshua, Judges, the two books of Samuel, the two books of Kings, the two books of Chronicles, and the book of Job, have a historic existence earlier than the Greek was a written language. By their allusions to men, to events, and to places, by every thing in their composition they justify their origin in a country where the Greek language was unknown till Alexander. How should books be written among the Greeks treating altogether of the history, the traditions and the customs of the Hebrews, and never alluding to those of Grecians? making western Asia and the adjacent parts of Africa its scene, and speaking of Greece merely as distant "isles of the sea?" Why should Greeks speak of Hebrews as the chosen seed, the favored people of God, and themselves as rejected and cast off? Why should they write in favor of the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob, whom they did not worship, and call him the God of "our fathers," and the God who brought our fathers out of Egypt?

The age and country in which a book originated can be determined by its language, its figures, similes, comparisons, and its allusions to persons, places, scenery, customs, traditions, ceremonies and various other things. But among all these the Old Testament contains not one single mark of a Greek origin, but marks almost every leaf and chapter plain as ear marks on sheep of a Hebrew origin, and of a date approximating quite near to that usually attrib-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 28.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, SEPT. 28, 1848. [WHOLE No. 92.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, AND A VOICE TO MANKIND BY AND THROUGH ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, THE POUGHKEEPSIE SEER AND CLAIRVOYANT, NEW YORK, S. S. LYON AND WILLIAM FISHBOUGH, 1847.

(Continued from last week.)

"The origin of oracles and prophets, is, then, plainly understood. They are an effect of ignorance, and uncultivated judgment, and imagination." Page 421.

We are not the least surprised at this judgment of the author.—Few men are willing to give others the credit of a higher standard of intellect or moral principle than their own. A man attempting to impose on the credulity of mankind by giving forged "divine revelations," would very naturally suppose that all prophets had thus imposed on the ignorance, uncultivated judgment, and imagination of men. In the next line the author says he has "been impressed to speak briefly concerning" the prophecies. Impressed? Impressed by what? By whom? By the divine mind? or by his own mind? If by the divine mind, is the oracle the effect of ignorance? If by his own mind, how is the revelation he gives "DIVINE?"

"Many prophecies were apparently substantially fulfilled;—but these were particular and occasional occurrences, and did not necessarily follow the prophecies in the form of fulfillments. Things prophecied according to existing probabilities, did sometimes occur." Page 421.

Yes, and "many prophecies" were positively fulfilled that were neither particular nor occasional, and were NOT according to existing probabilities, but were expressly contrary thereto, are general, continuous and contrary to all probability. The instance we gave heretofore, Deut. xxviii., is eminently in point in all its particulars; for it reaches to almost every fact in the history of that people, (the Jews,) whether political, ecclesiastic, social or physical, covers a period of many thousand years, and extends to every country on earth. We shall not again go over it at length, but merely drop a few remarks on the score of probability. It was probable enough that in process of time the nation of Israel should be conquered by a neighboring nation, but there was no national probability that they would be conquered by a nation from far, whose tongue they could not understand. 49th verse. There is a probability that any nation may change their religion and their rank among men, but there was no probability that the Israelites would become an astonishment, a hissing and a by-word among all nations (verse 37) as the Jews have. There was a probability that they might suffer severely by famine and war, but there was no probability that they would hold out in a siege living on the flesh of their own children. 53d verse. There was a reasonable probability that the nation of Israel should meet with various vicissitudes in war, and sometimes lose their national independence or change their religion, but no probability that as often as they departed from the true faith so often they should be conquered, and as often as they returned to it they should be restored to their own land and to national independence.

There was a reasonable probability that some of them might be sold into slavery, especially to the northern nations, but little probability of their being taken back to Egypt, and not the least of their being carried there till no man would buy them. 68th verse. It was probable that they might be conquered as a nation, and by mixing up lost as a race, but there was not the slightest probability that, being conquered as a nation and scattered among all nations, they should still remain a separate people, to be gathered again to their land. Deut. xxx. 5, 6.

Yet all these improbabilities befell them in exact accordance with the prophecies. The Lord brought against them from far, from the ends of the earth, the power of the Roman nation, whose capitol was built where the foot prints of man were not found when this prophecy was given, and whose legions marched from Britain to the war of the Jews—a nation delighting in blood as doth the eagle—a nation whose tongue they could not understand—a most insolent people, having no regard to the aged, and no pity on the infant; who ate up the fruit of their flocks and the fruit of their lands, and took all their fortified cities and overthrew their strong walls, until they were few in number and were destroyed from being a nation, and were plucked out of the land that God gave them for a possession.

The Lord did bring them into bondage to the Assyrians and the Babylonians—nations which grew up subsequent to the prophecy, and, consequently, not known to them and their fathers; and their kings with them, and there they worshipped false Gods made of wood and stone, and from that time to this all the nations among whom they have been scattered have made them a proverb and a by-word, and have been astonished at them, and have never regarded them as they have other people. In the siege of the city of Jerusalem they did eat the flesh of their children, and that secretly, concealing it from their nearest relatives, that they might reserve it all to themselves.—Josephus' Jewish Wars.

They were overthrown in war from time to time during the Judges, by intermarrying and mixing up in their religion with the neighboring nations. As often as they hearkened to the prophets that God raised up to them they were restored to nationality. Eminently were they thus built up under David, when all worship but that of the true God was prohibited. They began to decline towards the end of the reign of Solomon, who allowed temples of idols for his heathen wives. From this time forward their nationality vibrated precisely with their faith, until it was entirely blotted out by Nebuchadnezzar. After 70 years, with the true faith, was their nationality restored. And though various vicissituded it was finally lost after their rejection of Christ, not to be restored till they shall again set their hearts to keep the law of the Lord given by Moses. Deut. xxx. 2. They were thus taken into Egypt by the Roman officers, who took them prisoners at Jerusalem, and were there sold into slavery until the market was so glutted with them

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 28.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, SEPT. 28, 1848. [WHOLE No. 92.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, AND A VOICE TO MANKIND BY AND THROUGH ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, THE POUGHKEEPSIE SEER AND CLAIRVOYANT, NEW YORK, S. S. LYON AND WILLIAM FISHBOUGH, 1847.

(Continued from last week.)

"The origin of oracles and prophets, is, then, plainly understood. They are an effect of ignorance, and uncultivated judgment, and imagination." Page 421.

We are not the least surprised at this judgment of the author.—Few men are willing to give others the credit of a higher standard of intellect or moral principle than their own. A man attempting to impose on the credulity of mankind by giving forged "divine revelations," would very naturally suppose that all prophets had thus imposed on the ignorance, uncultivated judgment, and imagination of men. In the next line the author says he has "been impressed to speak briefly concerning" the prophecies. Impressed? Impressed by what? By whom? By the divine mind? or by his own mind? If by the divine mind, is the oracle the effect of ignorance? If by his own mind, how is the revelation he gives "DIVINE?"

"Many prophecies were apparently substantially fulfilled;—but these were particular and occasional occurrences, and did not necessarily follow the prophecies in the form of fulfillments. Things prophecied according to existing probabilities, did sometimes occur." Page 421.

Yes, and "many prophecies" were positively fulfilled that were neither particular nor occasional, and were NOT according to existing probabilities, but were expressly contrary thereto, are general, continuous and contrary to all probability. The instance we gave heretofore, Deut. xxviii., is eminently in point in all its particulars; for it reaches to almost every fact in the history of that people, (the Jews,) whether political, ecclesiastic, social or physical, covers a period of many thousand years, and extends to every country on the earth. We shall not again go over it at length, but merely drop a few remarks on the score of probability. It was probable enough that in process of time the nation of Israel should be conquered by a neighboring nation, but there was no national probability that they would be conquered by a nation from far, whose tongue they could not understand. 49th verse. There is a probability that any nation may change their religion and their rank among men, but there was no probability that the Israelites would become an astonishment, a hissing and a by-word among all nations (verse 37) as the Jews have. There was a probability that they might suffer severely by famine and war, but there was no probability that they would [illegible] in a siege living on the flesh of their own children. 53d [illegible] There was a reasonable probability that the nation of Israel should meet with various vicissitudes in war, and sometimes lose their national independence or change their religion, but no probability that as often as they departed from the true faith so often they should be conquered, and as often as they returned to it they should be restored to their own land and to national independence.

There was a reasonable probability that some of them might be sold into slavery, especially to the northern nations, but little probability of their being taken back to Egypt, and not the least of their being carried there till no man would buy them. 68th verse. It was probable that they might be conquered as a nation, and by mixing up lost as a race, but there was not the slightest probability that, being conquered as a nation and scattered among all nations, they should still remain a separate people, to be gathered again to their land. Deut. xxx. 5, 6.

Yet all these improbabilities befell them in exact accordance with the prophecies. The Lord brought against them from far, from the ends of the earth, the power of the Roman nation, whose capitol was built where the foot prints of man were not found when this prophecy was given, and whose legions marched from Britain to the war of the Jews—a nation delighting in blood as doth the eagle—a nation whose tongue they could not understand—a most insolent people, having no regard to the aged, and no pity on the infant; who ate up the fruit of their flocks and the fruit of their lands, and took all their fortified cities and overthrew their strong walls, until they were few in number and were destroyed from being a nation, and were plucked out of the land that God gave them for a possession.

The Lord did bring them into bondage to the Assyrians and the Babylonians—nations which grew up subsequent to the prophecy, and, consequently, not known to them and their fathers; and their kings with them, and there they worshipped false Gods made of wood and stone, and from that time to this all the nations among whom they have been scattered have made them a proverb and a by-word, and have been astonished at them, and have never regarded them as they have other people. In the siege of the city of Jerusalem they did eat the flesh of their children, and that secretly, concealing it from their nearest relatives, that they might reserve it all to themselves.—Josephus' Jewish Wars.

They were overthrown in war from time to time during the Judges, by intermarrying and mixing up in their religion with the neighboring nations. As often as they hearkened to the prophets that God raised up to them they were restored to nationality. Eminently were they thus built up under David, when all worship but that of the true God was prohibited. They began to decline towards the end of the reign of Solomon, who allowed temples of idols for his heathen wives. From this time forward their nationality vibrated precisely with their faith, until it was entirely blotted out by Nebuchadnezzar. After 70 years, with the true faith, was their nationality restored. And though various vicissituded it was finally lost after their rejection of Christ, not to be restored till they shall again set their hearts to keep the law of the Lord given by Moses. Deut. xxx. 2. They were thus taken into Egypt by the Roman officers, who took them prisoners at Jerusalem, and were there sold into slavery until the market was so glutted with them they could not be sold at any price. Many starved to death, and others were slain to get rid of them.

They have been scattered among all nations throughout the entire earth. From Oregon, around and across America, Europe and Asia to China, from Lapland to the Cape of Good Hope, they are found every where. In the great commercial marts, as London, Constantinople and New York, and equally in the most wild and remote regions, as Mackinac, St. Peters and San Diego, they are equally found, and every where a separate and distinct people from those among whom they dwell. They are every where distinguished by faith, by feature and by customs peculiar to themselves. Eighteen hundred years has not sufficed to obliterate them or mix them up with other nations. But they remain to be gathered out from among all other nations. And most fearfully has that saying been fulfilled :—

"And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind: And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt have none assurance of thy life: In the morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even! and at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning! for the fear of thy heart wherewith thou shalt fear, and for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see." Deut. xxviii. 65 66, 67.

There is no land on the earth where the Jews have not in time past been subject to legal disabilities and persecutions, and at this time these disabilities are only removed in a part of the U. S. Over the principal part of the earth their lives hang in doubt continually. They wake up in dread of the day, and lie down in fear of the night, and if they are wronged there is none to avenge them.

As a further example of a prophecy not probable in its facts, and extending over a long period of time, we give the prediction of the overthrow of Babylon, as follows:—

"The burden of Babylon, which Isaiah the son of Amoz did see. They come from a far country, from the end of heaven, even the Lord, and the weapons of his indignation, to destroy the whole land. Howl ye; for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty. Behold, I will stir up the Medes against them, which shall not regard silver; and as for gold, they shall not delight in it. Their bows also shall dash the young men to pieces; and they shall have no pity on the fruit of the womb; their eye shall not spare children. And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there. But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there. And the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant palaces: and her time is near to come, and her days shall not be prolonged." Isa. xiii. 1, 5, 6, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22.

"That thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon, and say, How hath the oppressor ceased! the golden city ceased! The Lord hath broken the staff of the wicked, and the sceptre of the rulers. He who smote the people in wrath with a continual stroke, he that ruled the nations in anger, is persecuted, and none hindereth. For I will rise up against them, saith the Lord of hosts, and cut off from Babylon the name, and remnant, and son, and nephew, saith the Lord. I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water: and I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord of hosts." Isa. xiv. 4, 5, 6, 22, 23.

It was not improbable that such a city as Babylon might lose its pre-eminence. Nor was it extremely improbable that, in process of time, it would cease to be a great metropolis of trade and power.—Truly there could have been no real probability that it should cease to be a city. Truly, were any one to appear among us claiming to be a prophet and put forth a prediction that at any time future New York would be utterly destroyed and become a desert uninhabited, we should all think he had put himself to a hard test, and his words were likely to fall to the ground. It would be difficult to realize such an event as in any degree probable. But if he should name the time when it was to be destroyed, and the means by which the destruction should be accomplished, the nation by whose hand it should be done, and the particular circumstances which should befall the place afterward, we should very well understand that there was too much particularity and too little ambiguity to leave the matter in doubt. All must agree that if his words were truly fulfilled in all their parts he must indeed be a prophet, and there was not ambiguity enough to leave room for an accidental and unforeseen fulfilling.

But this is less than Isaiah has done in his prophecy on Babylon. He has told us that it shall be destroyed by the Medes, Isa. xiii. 17, assisted by the Persians, (Elamites,) xxi. 2, naming the beasts of war of both, do 7, and the character of their destroyers. xiii. 18, 19. That its destruction shall be an utter overthrow, complete as that of Sodom and Gomorrah. do 19. Situated as Babylon was, on a rich alluvial plain, how could any one have guessed that it should never more be inhabited? Yet the bricks of which it was built have dissolved to earth, so steril that no plant will grow upon it.—How should he have guessed that, in its desolation and wildness, the Arabian would not pitch his tent there? But they have a tradition that the ghost of Nimrod haunts these grounds and dare not. How could he have guessed that the shepherd should not make his fold on the banks of a river where there was neither inhabitants to be disturbed nor Arabians to rob him of his flocks? But the wild beasts of the desert are there, do 21, and would devour his flocks.

(To be continued.)

Kirtland, Ohio, September 8th, 1848.

PRES. STRANG—DEAR BROTHER:—For the instruction and benefit of such as may yet entertain some faint hope that McLellinism may yet survive the storms of persecution that beat upon it from every side, I have thought proper to give a history of its doings at its last Conference then forward to the present time, that all may see that, Samson-like, with the jaw bone of an ass, it cannot only slay the thousands of Philistines, (enemies,) but that, being bound with the strong cords of the law of the land, it breaks them as a thread of tow when it toucheth the fire, also that its strength is not yet known. The following are the circumstances that introduced the action of the drama:—

A writ of ejectment had been prosecuted by the agent of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints against the McLellinite Church of Christ, to dispossess them of the Temple, and judgment obtained against them by default and a writ of ouster issued, and the sheriff, in obedience to its mandate, early in the morning of the memorable 19th of June, the day of Mc.'s Conference, did dispossess the defendants of the Temple, and put the agent in possession of the same, delivering him the key. This deranged the appointment of the Conference, which was noticed in the Ensign of Liberty to be held in the Temple. Some rude boys soon, through a window, got possession. The agent, in trying to dislodge them, opened the door, and some of the Mcites took forcible possession, and took off one lock; but for some reason replaced it, when the agent again locked it and secured the windows. The Doctor held his Conference in the A, M. at his own house. But to fulfill all they could not be sold at any price. Many starved to death, and others were slain to get rid of them.

They have been scattered among all nations throughout the entire earth. From Oregon, around and across America, Europe and Asia to China, from Lapland to the Cape of Good Hope, they are found every where. In the great commercial marts, as London, Constantinople and New York, and equally in the most wild and remote regions, as Mackinac, St. Peters and San Diego, they are equally found, and every where a separate and distinct people from those among whom they dwell. They are every where distinguished by faith, by feature and by customs peculiar to themselves. Eighteen hundred years has not sufficed to obliterate them or mix them up with other nations. But they remain to be gathered out from among all other nations. And most fearfully has that saying been fulfilled:—

"And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but the Lord shall give thee a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind: And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt have none assurance of thy life: In the morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even! and at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning! for the fear of thy heart wherewith thou shalt fear, and for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see." Deut. xxviii. 65 66, 67.

There is no land on the earth where the Jews have not in time past been subject to legal disabilities and persecutions, and at this time these disabilities are only removed in a part of the U. S. Over the principal part of the earth their lives hang in doubt continually. They wake up in dread of the day, and lie down in fear of the night, and if they are wronged there is none to avenge them.

As a further example of a prophecy not probable in its facts, and extending over a long period of time, we give the prediction of the overthrow of Babylon, as follows:—

"The burden of Babylon, which Isaiah the son of Amoz did see. They come from a far country, from the end of heaven, even the Lord, and the weapons of his indignation, to destroy the whole land. Howl ye; for the day of the Lord is at hand; it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty. Behold, I will stir up the Medes against them, which shall not regard silver; and as for gold, they shall not delight in it. Their bows also shall dash the young men to pieces; and they shall have no pity on the fruit of the womb; their eye shall not spare children. And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there. But wild beasts of the desert shall lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and owls shall dwell there, and satyrs shall dance there. And the wild beasts of the islands shall cry in their desolate houses, and dragons in their pleasant palaces: and her time is near to come, and her days shall not be prolonged." Isa. xiii. 1, 5, 6, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22.

"That thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon, and say, How hath the oppressor ceased! the golden city ceased! The Lord hath broken the staff of the wicked, and the sceptre of the rulers. He who smote the people in wrath with a continual stroke, he that ruled the nations in anger, is persecuted, and none hindereth. For I will rise up against them, saith the Lord of hosts, and cut off from Babylon the name, and remnant, and son, and nephew, saith the Lord. I will also make it a possession for the bittern, and pools of water: and I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the Lord of hosts." Isa. xiv. 4, 5, 6, 22, 23.

It was not improbable that such a city as Babylon might lose its pre-eminence. Nor was it extremely improbable that, in process of time, it would cease to be a great metropolis of trade and power.—Truly there could have been no real probability that it should cease to be a city. Truly, were any one to appear among us claiming to be a prophet and put forth a prediction that at any time future New York would be utterly destroyed and become a desert uninhabited, we should all think he had put himself to a hard test, and his words were likely to fall to the ground. It would be difficult to realize such an event as in any degree probable. But if he should name the time when it was to be destroyed, and the means by which the destruction should be accomplished, the nation by whose hand it should be done, and the particular circumstances which should befall the place afterward, we should very well understand that there was too much particularity and too little ambiguity to leave the matter in doubt. All must agree that if his words were truly fulfilled in all their parts he must indeed be a prophet, and there was not ambiguity enough to leave room for an accidental and unforeseen fulfilling.

But this is less than Isaiah has done in his prophecy on Babylon. He has told us that it shall be destroyed by the Medes, Isa. xiii. 17, assisted by the Persians, (Elamites,) xxi. 2, naming the beasts of war of both, do 7, and the character of their destroyers. xiii. 18, 19. That its destruction shall be an utter overthrow, complete as that of Sodom and Gomorrah. do 19. Situated as Babylon was, on a rich alluvial plain, how could any one have guessed that it should never more be inhabited? Yet the bricks of which it was built have dissolved to earth, so steril that no plant will grow upon it.—How should he have guessed that, in its desolation and wildness, the Arabian would not pitch his tent there? But they have a tradition that the ghost of Nimrod haunts these grounds and dare not. How could he have guessed that the shepherd should not make his fold on the banks of a river where there was neither inhabitants to be disturbed nor Arabians to rob him of his flocks? But the wild beasts of the desert are there, do 21, and would devour his flocks.

(To be continued.)

Kirtland, Ohio, September 8th, 1848.

Pres. Strang—Dear Brother:—For the instruction and benefit of such as may yet entertain some faint hope that McLellinism may yet survive the storms of persecution that beat upon it from every side, I have thought proper to give a history of its doings at its last Conference then forward to the present time, that all may see that, Samson-like, with the jaw bone of an ass, it cannot only slay the thousands of Philistines, (enemies,) but that, being bound with the strong cords of the law of the land, it breaks them as a thread of tow when it toucheth the fire, also that its strength is not yet known. The following are the circumstances that introduced the action of the drama:—

A writ of ejectment had been prosecuted by the agent of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints against the McLellinite Church of Christ, to dispossess them of the Temple, and judgment obtained against them by default and a writ of ouster issued, and the sheriff, in obedience to its mandate, early in the morning of the memorable 19th of June, the day of Mc.'s Conference, did dispossess the defendants of the Temple, and put the agent in possession of the same, delivering him the key. This deranged the appointment of the Conference, which was noticed in the Ensign of Liberty to be held in the Temple. Some rude boys soon, through a window, got possession. The agent, in trying to dislodge them, opened the door, and some of the Mcites took forcible possession, and took off one lock; but for some reason replaced it, when the agent again locked it and secured the windows. The Doctor held his Conference in the A. M. at his own house. But to [illegible] righteousness, or which the Doctor thinks the same, the prophecy that his Conference should be held in the Temple, one of his most valiant men with an axe made a way, a HIGH way, through a window; and though they climbed up some other way than men generally passed, got into the house, yet they must not be called thieves and robbers. Notwithstanding they say that the Latter Day Devils built the house, and that God has not accepted it, the door was opened and a jack McLellinite made the keeper, who committed assault and battery on the agent, who held the keys of the house, on his attempting to enter it. The Conference ended that afternoon, and adjourned to next May. It might well be compared to the elements in chaos, without form and void, and darkness upon their face.

Since Conference the agent has procured locks and put them on the doors outside. But the power of the Doctor's arm is too mighty for them, with a missile he broke them as a potter's vessel, and still holds possession by violence. Last evening the agent said that today he should proceed to oust them again by a writ of forcible entry and detainer. But as they are working righteousness, and have prophecied that in so doing that the earth and hell cannot prevail against them, we think it very possible that the earth (law) will not be able to keep them out of the Temple till some of them get into another house that they cannot at pleasure get out of. We remain firm in the belief of your appointment being correct, and hope to meet you in Voree. If you publish this please give my name, as the church of Christ think I dare not place my name to my former letter.

AMOS BABCOCK.

Binghampton, N. Y., Sept. 7th, 1848.

HIGHLY ESTEEMED AND RESPECTED BROTHER STRANG:—I inclose $10 for the Temple and two for yourself, and also $5 for brother J. E. Page, that he may secure his bed from the pelting storm, and send me the first volume of his antiquarian history, if he should succeed in the publication. I have nothing to write which would be interesting to you. I greatly rejoiced to learn that the church had traveled into the old apostolic ground, holding a community of property, which brings to the understanding the 29th and 30th verses of the 10th chapter of Mark. The church is now on that foundation that the combined powers of earth and hell will not be able to move. My daily prayer is for the prosperity of Zion. I do not expect ever to see Voree in the flesh, although my mind is daily there. May the Lord bless you and all the honest in heart with every temporal and spiritual blessing. Your brother in the bonds of the everlasting covenant,

WM. ROSE.

☞ But if brother Rose would come he would have a dozen fold of all he leaves behind, and we hope that will soon increase to one hundred fold. [ED.

For the Gospel Herald.

A SECTARIAN GOD,

Who is "without body, parts or passions," consequently without feelings or power to feel, for he has no body nor parts. That is, parts of a body or members to compose a something in a bodily form. An immaterial something. "Well, did you never hear of an immaterial something?" Oh, yes. "What was it?" A vacuum.—"What is a vacuum?" Webster says it is "a space void or empty of matter," or, in other words, it is full of nothing! Consequently an immaterial God must be an immaterial nothing! But this "God is without passions." That is, without feelings of any kind. He has no passion for loving his children. He is devoid of that heavenly principle of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; "for God is love." St. John. But there is something more remarkable yet about him, for his devotees say his centre is every where, and his circumference no where! What a big one he must be, to have his centre every where, and his circumference no where! What an absurdity! He must be as the earth was in the morning of creation, according to king James, "without form and void." But more remarkable still is his location. Although he is "every where" and "no where," yet one of his poets describes his location thus:—

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,
Look forward to that heavenly place,
The saints' secure abode:
On faith's strong eagle pinions rise,
And force your passage to the skies,
And scale the mount of God." 372 Hymn Meth. Collection.

Here he emphatically declares that the saints of this, strange every where and no where God have their secure abode and heavenly place located "beyond the bounds of time and space." My good sense, where is that place? Dear reader, don't let your imaginations carry you so far beyond all space that you will never return to a land of realties! Hear him further:—

"On faith's strong eagle pinions rise,
And force your passage to the skies,
And scale the mount of God."

Here is an injunction to the saints of this heathen philosopher's God to force their passage through the skies, and also to scale the mount of God. What a time they will have taking the mount with their forced passage and scaling operation! H. P. BROWN.

☞ We perceive by the Warsaw Signal that an attempt is being made to drive the few remaining Mormons out of Hancock.—The resolutions say that Mormonism is now on the increase there.

DETERMINATION.—A man can do any thing that he is determined upon and goes at work rightly to accomplish. The Alps will appear little more than mole hills, when he has made up his mind to scale them. The heavens will be as plain as a printed sheet, when he has commenced reading the stars. A fortune will be as easily acquired as a few hundred dollars when wealth is made the business of life. Who can fathom the depth of determination? It is half omnipotent. Few men know their own strength—their own capabilities. Hundreds might have been as brave as Napoleon—as philosophical as Franklin—as wise as Washington—as ingenious as Fulton—as benevolent as Howard, if they had known their own powers. But fearing their own shadows, and turning aside from the mole hills in their path, they lingered in obscurity and died without being either curses or blessings to the world. Than to have been scourges to mankind it was better, but who can estimate the amount that might have been accomplished by millions who have passed off the stage without leaving a single memento behind? Let it be yours, O man, to live for some purpose—to achieve something for those who follow after you—to leave the world in better hands than you found it. Be determined not to die a cipher or a drone—to expire like the bursting of a soap bubble, being nothing for people to look at, admire, and take courage from. Than to pass away thus, we should rather have an existence among the heathen, or prefer that our first breath should have been our last.—Olive Branch.

HOW TO MAKE A HOME HAPPY.—Nature is most industrious in adorning her domains; and man, to whom this bounty is addressed, should obey the lesson. Let him, too, be industrious in adorning his domain—in making his home, the dwelling of his wife and children, not only convenient and comfortable, but pleasant. Let him, as far as circumstances will permit, be industrious in surrounding it with pleasant objects—in decorating it within and without, in things righteousness, or which the Doctor thinks the same, the prophecy that his Conference should be held in the Temple, one of his most valiant men with an axe made a way, a HIGH way, through a window; and though they climbed up some other way than men generally passed, got into the house, yet they must not be called thieves and robbers. Notwithstanding they say that the Latter Day Devils built the house, and that God has not accepted it, the door was opened and a jack McLellinite made the keeper, who committed assault and battery on the agent, who held the keys of the house, on his attempting to enter it. The Conference ended that afternoon, and adjourned to next May. It might well be compared to the elements in chaos, without form and void, and darkness upon their face.

Since Conference the agent has procured locks and put them on the doors outside. But the power of the Doctor's arm is too mighty for them, with a missile he broke them as a potter's vessel, and still holds possession by violence. Last evening the agent said that today he should proceed to oust them again by a writ of forcible entry and detainer. But as they are working righteousness, and have prophecied that in so doing that the earth and hell cannot prevail against them, we think it very possible that the earth (law) will not be able to keep them out of the Temple till some of them get into another house that they cannot at pleasure get out of. We remain firm in the belief of your appointment being correct, and hope to meet you in Voree. If you publish this please give my name, as the church of Christ think I dare not place my name to my former letter.

AMOS BABCOCK.

Binghampton, N. Y., Sept. 7th, 1848.

HIGHLY ESTEEMED AND RESPECTED BROTHER STRANG:—I inclose $10 for the Temple and two for yourself, and also $5 for brother J. E. Page, that he may secure his bed from the pelting storm, and send me the first volume of his antiquarian history, if he should succeed in the publication. I have nothing to write which would be interesting to you. I greatly rejoiced to learn that the church had traveled into the old apostolic ground, holding a community of property, which brings to the understanding the 29th and 30th verses of the 10th chapter of Mark. The church is now on that foundation that the combined powers of earth and hell will not be able to move. My daily prayer is for the prosperity of Zion. I do not expect ever to see Voree in the flesh, although my mind is daily there. May the Lord bless you and all the honest in heart with every temporal and spiritual blessing. Your brother in the bonds of the everlasting covenant,

WM. ROSE.

☞ But if brother Rose would come he would have a dozen fold of all he leaves behind, and we hope that will soon increase to one hundred fold. [ED.

For the Gospel Herald.

A SECTARIAN GOD,

Who is "without body, parts or passions," consequently without feelings or power to feel, for he has no body nor parts. That is, parts of a body or members to compose a something in a bodily form. An immaterial something. "Well, did you never hear of an immaterial something?" Oh, yes. "What was it?" A vacuum.—"What is a vacuum?" Webster says it is "a space void or empty of matter," or, in other words, it is full of nothing! Consequently an immaterial God must be an immaterial nothing! But this "God is without passions." That is, without feelings of any kind. He has no passion for loving his children. He is devoid of that heavenly principle of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; "for God is love." St. John. But there is something more remarkable yet about him, for his devotees say his centre is every where, and his circumference no where! What a big one he must be to have his centre every where, and his circumference no where! What an absurdity! He must be as the earth was in the morning of creation, according to king James, "without form and void." But more remarkable still is his location. Although he is "every where" and "no where," yet one of his poets describes his location thus:—

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,
Look forward to that heavenly place,
The saints' secure abode:
On faith's strong eagle pinions rise,
And force your passage to the skies,
And scale the mount of God." 372 Hymn Meth. Collection.

Here he emphatically declares that the saints of this strange every where and no where God have their secure abode and heavenly place located "beyond the bounds of time and space." My good sense, where is that place? Dear reader, don't let your imaginations carry you so far beyond all space that you will never return to a land of realties! Hear him further:—

"On faith's strong eagle pinions rise,
And force your passage to the skies,
And scale the mount of God."

Here is an injunction to the saints of this heathen philosopher's God to force their passage through the skies, and also to scale the mount of God. What a time they will have taking the mount with their forced passage and scaling operation! H. P. BROWN.

☞ We perceive by the Warsaw Signal that an attempt is being made to drive the few remaining Mormons out of Hancock.—The resolutions say that Mormonism is now on the increase there.

DETERMINATION.—A man can do any thing that he is determined upon and goes at work rightly to accomplish. The Alps will appear little more than mole hills, when he has made up his mind to scale them. The heavens will be as plain as a printed sheet, when he has commenced reading the stars. A fortune will be as easily acquired as a few hundred dollars when wealth is made the business of life. Who can fathom the depth of determination? It is half omnipotent. Few men know their own strength—their own capabilities. Hundreds might have been as brave as Napoleon—as philosophical as Franklin—as wise as Washington—as ingenious as Fulton—as benevolent as Howard, if they had known their own powers. But fearing their own shadows, and turning aside from the mole hills in their path, they lingered in obscurity and died without being either curses or blessings to the world. Than to have been scourges to mankind it was better, but who can estimate the amount that might have been accomplished by millions who have passed off the stage without leaving a single memento behind? Let it be yours, O man, to live for some purpose—to achieve something for those who follow after you—to leave the world in better hands than you found it. Be determined not to die a cipher or a drone—to expire like the bursting of a soap bubble, being nothing for people to look at, admire, and take courage from. Than to pass away thus, we should rather have an existence among the heathen, or prefer that our first breath should have been our last.—Olive Branch.

HOW TO MAKE A HOME HAPPY.—Nature is most industrious in adorning her domains; and man, to whom this bounty is addressed, should obey the lesson. Let him, too, be industrious in adorning his domain—in making his home, the dwelling of his wife and children, not only convenient and comfortable, but pleasant. Let him, as far as circumstances will permit, be industrious in surrounding it with pleasant objects—in decorating it within and without, in things that tend to make it agreeable and attractive. Let industry make home the abode of neatness and order—a place which brings satisfaction to every inmate, and which, in absence, draws back the heart by the fond association of comfort and content. Let this be done, and this sacred spot will become more surely the scene of cheerfulness and peace. Ye parents who would have your children happy, be industrious to bring them up in the midst of a pleasant, a cheerful, and a happy home. Waste not your time in accumulating wealth for them, but plant in their minds and souls, in the way proposed, the seeds of virtue and prosperity.—Ex. paper.

THE SELKIRK SETTLEMENT.—Sir George Simpson has recently returned to Montreal from this extreme British settlement, on the Red River of the North, as it is called. The Montreal Gazette says:—

"He reports favorably of the condition and prospects of the settlers in those northern regions. The agricultural population of the Red River settlement amounts at present, we learn, to more than 5,000 inhabitants, of whom 2,000 are householders, owning 100 acres of land each. Ten thousand acres are under cultivation, yielding the richest crops from a smaller amount of labor, than the same portions of the earth demands in any other part of the world.

"We cannot doubt its becoming, at some future day, the focus of a large and important population. Endless commons, in the nature of prairie land, invite the plough, which, for hundreds of miles, may trace its furrow without encountering an obstacle. Countless herds of buffalo, and game of all kinds, abound. And in addition to all these resources, fish might be taken from the lakes and rivers, for six months' entire subsistence of the settlement annually. The temperature and climate are the same as in these parts. People, we are informed, rarely die in those quarters, and disease is at such a discount that a single medical practitioner to a population of 5,000, has a hard battle to make a living out of his medical calling. In no part of the world is a laboring population, of the same description, in a greater degree of comfort."

The British have a garrison of 400 troops there. The present settlers are descendants of certain Scotch colonies who were there trasported by king George III. nearly one hundred years ago. They are now forming business relations with the Americans at St. Peters, in our new territory of Minnesota.

SILENCE ON THE PRAIRIES.—One of the most striking things is the silence of the prairies. It is absolutely awful. At night when the moon has gone down, and the stars are out, to stand in the centre of one of those mammoth plains and mark the deep unbroken silence that surrounds you is sublimely impressive. I never witnessed an effect like it. Not a solitary sound can be heard—no insect, no bird, no beast, no human voice or step, but all is one space of grand and fearful silence. Such a spot, far from the haunts of congregated multitudes, becomes to the good man like the glorious Bethel where the journeying patriarch slept.—Ex. Paper.

LATE FROM EUROPE.—From every part of Ireland the reports give but poor hopes of saving the great bulk of the potatoe crop; added to which, it is even reported that the grain crop will be below an average. The reports of famine have attracted the attention of the government, and measures have been adopted for ascertaining the real state of the case. The Irish grain crops are much below the average. Lord Russel announces that he will convene Parliament should famine threaten England.—Wisconsin Standard.

FORGIVENESS.—To revenge a wrong is both easy and usual; and, as the world thinks, savors of some nobleness; but religion says the contrary, and tells us it is better to neglect it than revenge it.—If any man shall willingly offer me an injury, he shall know I can see it, but withal, he shall see I scorn it; unless it be such as the bearing is an offense. Why need I do that which his own mind will do for me? If he hath done ill, my revenge is within him; if not, I am to blame in seeking it. If unwillingly he wrongs me, I am as ready to forgive as he to submit; for I know a good mind will be more sorrowful than I shall be offended.—Ex. paper.

THE TRUE LIFE.—The mere lapse of years is not life. To eat, drink and sleep; to be exposed to darkness and light; to pace around the mill of habit and turn the wheel of wealth; to make reason our book keeper, and turn thought into elements of trade—this is not life. In all this, but a poor fraction of consciousness of humanity is awakened, and the sanctions still slumber which make it most worth while to be. Knowledge, love, truth, beauty, goodness, faith, alone can give vitality to existence. The laugh of mirth, which vibrates through the heart; the tears which freshen the dry waters within; the music that brings childhood back; the prayer that calls the future near; the doubt which startles us with mystery; the hardship that forces us to struggle; the anxiety that ends in trust—these are the nourishment of our natural being.—Wisconsin Standard.

☞ Lorenzo Dow defined a death-bed repentance to be the burning out of the candle of life in the service of the devil and blowing the snuff in the Lord's face.

LIE NOT.

Lie not, but let thy heart be true to God;
Thy mouth to it, thy actions to them both;
Cowards tell lies, and those that fear the rod;
The stormy working soul lies in froth.
Dare to be true. Nothing can need a lie.
A fault, which needs it most, grows two thereby.

CONFERENCE.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Voree Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next. By order of the Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13cu.

that tend to make it agreeable and attractive. Let industry make home the abode of neatness and order—a place which brings satisfaction to every inmate, and which, in absence, draws back the heart by the fond association of comfort and content. Let this be done, and this sacred spot will become more surely the scene of cheerfulness and peace. Ye parents who would have your children happy, be industrious to bring them up in the midst of a pleasant, a cheerful, and a happy home. Waste not your time in accumulating wealth for them, but plant in their minds and souls, in the way proposed, the seeds of virtue and prosperity.—Ex. paper.

THE SELKIRK SETTLEMENT.—Sir George Simpson has recently returned to Montreal from this extreme British settlement, on the Red River of the North, as it is called. The Montreal Gazette says:—

"He reports favorably of the condition and prospects of the settlers in those northern regions. The agricultural population of the Red River settlement amounts at present, we learn, to more than 5,000 inhabitants, of whom 2,000 are householders, owning 100 acres of land each. Ten thousand acres are under cultivation, yielding the richest crops from a smaller amount of labor, than the same portions of the earth demands in any other part of the world.

"We cannot doubt its becoming, at some future day, the focus of a large and important population. Endless commons, in the nature of prairie land, invite the plough, which, for hundreds of miles, may trace its furrow without encountering an obstacle. Countless herds of buffalo, and game of all kinds, abound. And in addition to all these resources, fish might be taken from the lakes and rivers, for six months' entire subsistence of the settlement annually. The temperature and climate are the same as in these parts. People, we are informed, rarely die in those quarters, and disease is at such a discount that a single medical practitioner to a population of 5,000, has a hard battle to make a living out of his medical calling. In no part of the world is a laboring population, of the same description, in a greater degree of comfort."

The British have a garrison of 400 troops there. The present settlers are descendants of certain Scotch colonies who were there trasported by king George III. nearly one hundred years ago. They are now forming business relations with the Americans at St. Peters, in our new territory of Minnesota.

SILENCE ON THE PRAIRIES.—One of the most striking things is the silence of the prairies. It is absolutely awful. At night when the moon has gone down, and the stars are out, to stand in the centre of one of those mammoth plains and mark the deep unbroken silence that surrounds you is sublimely impresaive. I never witnessed an effect like it. Not a solitary sound can be heard—no insect, no bird, no beast, no human voice or step, but all is one space of grand and fearful silence. Such a spot, far from the haunts of congregated multitudes, becomes to the good man like the glorious Bethel where the journeying patriarch slept.—Ex. Paper.

LATE FROM EUROPE.—From every part of Ireland the reports give but poor hopes of saving the great bulk of the potatoe crop; added to which, it is even reported that the grain crop will be below an average. The reports of famine have attracted the attention of the government, and measures have been adopted for ascertaining the real state of the case. The Irish grain crops are much below the average. Lord Russel announces that he will convene Parliament should famine threaten England.—Wisconsin Standard.

FORGIVENESS.—To revenge a wrong is both easy and usual; and, as the world thinks, savors of some nobleness; but religion says the contrary, and tells us it is better to neglect it than revenge it.—If any man shall willingly offer me an injury, he shall know I can see it, but withal, he shall see I scorn it; unless it be such as the bearing is an offense. Why need I do that which his own mind will do for me? If he hath done ill, my revenge is within him; if not, I am to blame in seeking it. If unwillingly he wrongs me, I am as ready to forgive as he to submit; for I know a good mind will be more sorrowful than I shall be offended.—Ex. paper.

THE TRUE LIFE.—The mere lapse of years is not life. To eat, drink and sleep; to be exposed to darkness and light; to pace around the mill of habit and turn the wheel of wealth; to make reason our book keeper, and turn thought into elements of trade—this is not life. In all this, but a poor fraction of consciousness of humanity is awakened, and the sanctions still slumber which make it most worth while to be. Knowledge, love, truth, beauty, goodness, faith, alone can give vitality to existence. The laugh of mirth, which vibrates through the heart; the tears which freshen the dry waters within; the music that brings childhood back; the prayer that calls the future near; the doubt which startles us with mystery; the hardship that forces us to struggle; the anxiety that ends in trust—these are the nourishment of our natural being.—Wisconsin Standard.

☞ Lorenzo Dow defined a death-bed repentance to be the burning out of the candle of life in the service of the devil and blowing the snuff in the Lord's face.

LIE NOT.

Lie not, but let thy heart be true to God;
Thy mouth to it, thy actions to them both;
Cowards tell lies, and those that fear the rod;
The stormy working soul lies in froth.
Dare to be true. Nothing can need a lie.
A fault, which needs it most, grows two thereby.

CONFERENCE.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Voree Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next. By order of the Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the principal and interest moneys due upon an indenture of mortgage executed by John W. Crane to Israel Duty, bearing date the 14th day of September, 1847, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Walworth county, Wisconsin, in volume 4 of mortgages on pages 290 and 291, on the 30th day of September, 1847, at 10 o'clock A. M., on which there is claimed to be due, at the date of this notice, the sum of ninety-four dollars and seventy-two cents, notice is hereby given that, by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the Court House in said county of Walworth on the second day of October next, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as will satisfy said principal and interest moneys and costs; which premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to wit: All that certain piece or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Walworth and Territory of Wisconsin in the Milwaukee land district, commencing seventy-two (72) rods west of the south-east corner of the south-east quarter of section No. twenty-five, (25,) in township No. three (3) north of range No. 18 east; thence west along the centre of the road leading from Burlington to Janesville, in said Territory, four rods; thence north ten (10) rods; thence east four (4) rods; thence south ten (10) rods, to the place of beginning.

ISRAEL DUTY, Mortgagee.

Voree, June 14th, 1848. 13c

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 29.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. OCT. 5, 1848. [WHOLE No. 93.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, AND A VOICE TO MANKIND BY AND THROUGH ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, THE POUGHKEEPSIE SEER AND CLAIRVOYANT, NEW YORK, S. S. LYON AND WILLIAM FISHBOUGH, 1847.

(Concluded.)

How should the prophet have guessed that, where the city of Babylon was, the wild beasts of the desert should be? Hundreds of years after the prophecy a heathen prince has made it his hunting ground, and stocked it with wild animals from deserts, mountains and islands, like the royal forests of England. The descendants of these and other wild beasts fill the dens formed by the sewers and covered remains of the city for miles. All these doleful creatures fill their houses below and around, as the owls flit above with the bats in twilight, and the wild goat (satyr) leaps from pile to pile of the ruins of their buildings. Isa. xiii. 21, 22. Beyond all this the prophet has particularized that their city shall become pools of water, filled with water fowl. But it would be hard to tell how he should have guessed that the river Euphrates would invade these ruins, and make ponds and sink holes among them, forming the debris of falling walls to bars and dams and then draw off again for ages, leaving pools and ponds where formerly was a crowded city.

Most certainly the prophecy was one of the most IMPROBABLE of things. Yet its fulfillment as long as time has gone by is perfect. And so far from being ambiguous, we humbly submit that S. S. Lyon and his man Davis cannot make one more definite and determinate. The truth is, their knowledge of scripture, as well as every thing else, is merely superficial. They have never dived down to the elementary fountains of knowledge. They have not moved cautiously step by step, with line and plummet in hand, but have ever taken the rash assertions and popular rhetorical sayings of infidel leaders as real facts, and, of course, have gone astray continually. They are scarcely nearer the truth than sectarian divines.—Certainly they could not be further from it.

Whoever is familiar with the prophets knows that we might continue these examples through many numbers, all equally in point, where the prophecies are not occasional, probable or ambiguous, but were in defiance of the strongest probabilities and exceedingly unambiguous, and yet their minute fulfillment is not only proved but proved by infidel writers.

"To prophecy or fortell truly an event, the person must be in communion with the original design of the Divine Creator, and with the laws which are fulfilling design. The mind, in correctly apprehending these, is enabled to fortell occurrences throughout eternity. There can be no truthful prophecy unless the laws fulfilling design are familiarly comprehended by the person prophecying. It is impossible to foretell an occurrence absolutely by the indications of any external event or circumstance. It is a thing which never has been done, and cannot be done by any being in the Universe. All things that are truly foretold, occur as the result of immutable laws, and not of any mere fleeting and evanescent circumstances." Page 422.

No; it is sufficient to have the revelaion of the thing prophecied of, from him who does comprehend the laws fulfilling design, or who has power to do the act. If the Czar of Russia intends to destroy a Tartar town on a certain day and in a certain manner, and communicates that fact, he to whom it is communicated may predict it in the name of the Czar, and unless the Czar is defeated in his undertaking the prediction will be fulfilled. So God, intending to destroy the city of New York at a certain time and in a particular manner, and by the instrumentality of a particular nation, may, if he will, communicate that fact to me. In his name I may publish it as a prophecy, and as he is not liable to be defeated in his undertaking it will be fulfilled, though I have no knowledge whatever of his original design or his means of fulfilling it. The prophet needs only to know what God has said, and to have faith that he will perform it. After all this loose declamation against the prophets and the possibility of prophecy, Mr. Davis proceeds:—

"I am impressed to briefly appeal to the character of my own prophetical impressions as these are presented to my mind by being in communion with the interior reality and producing causes of all things." Page 422. And again:—"It is upon interior principles alone that a prophecy can be made with an absolute certainty of its accomplishment; and therefore if it were possible for these to foreshadow external and incidental circumstances, then prophecy concerning such might be relied upon." Page 423. And again:—"Before I speak concerning many true prophets and truthful prophecies"—

This interior principle is a kind of ambiguous thing. We cannot succeed in getting our hand on it, and are unable to tell whether it is flesh, fish or fowl. We should be sorry to find the prophecies equally ambiguous. But what does the author mean by "my prophetical impressions?" and by "many true prophets?" when, in the same book, and but one leaf over, page 421, he says:—"The origin of oracles and prophets is, then, plainly understood. They are an effect of ignorance, and uncultivated judgment, and imagination." This can be nothing but that double dealing by which he acknowledges inspiration in one breath, and denies it in the next; both claims to be a prophet and denounces prophecy as imposition, that he may better accomplish his real end—the destruction of all faith in God.

Speaking of the class of prophecies from which we have chosen our examples, the author says:—

"Many of the early prophets did pretend to foretell wars, famines, and pestilences, and would produce simple signs, which they taught corresponded to and foreshadowed the occurrence prophecied.—Others would in the same manner foretell the destruction of cities and downfall of nations, and speak of many things that were to occur in future, and that would conduce to the advancement and emolument of themselves and of those for whom they prophecied. Many of these prophecies are contained in the Primitive History.—

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 29.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, OCT. 5, 1848. [WHOLE No. 93.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE PRINCIPLES OF NATURE, HER DIVINE REVELATIONS, AND A VOICE TO MANKIND BY AND THROUGH ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, THE POUGHKEEPSIE SEER AND CLAIRVOYANT, NEW YORK, S. S. LYON AND WILLIAM FISHBOUGH, 1847.

(Concluded.)

How should the prophet have guessed that, where the city of Babylon was, the wild beasts of the desert should be? Hundreds of years after the prophecy a heathen prince has made it his hunting ground, and stocked it with wild animals from deserts, mountains and islands, like the royal forests of England. The descendants of these and other wild beasts fill the dens formed by the sewers and covered remains of the city for miles. All these doleful creatures fill their houses below and around, as the owls flit above with the bats in twilight, and the wild goat (satyr) leaps from pile to pile of the ruins of their buildings. Isa. xiii. 21, 22. Beyond all this the prophet has particularized that their city shall become pools of water, filled with water fowl. But it would be hard to tell how he should have guessed that the river Euphrates would invade these ruins, and make ponds and sink holes among them, forming the debris of falling walls to bars and dams and then draw off again for ages, leaving pools and ponds where formerly was a crowded city.

Most certainly the prophecy was one of the most IMPROBABLE of things. Yet its fulfillment as long as time has gone by is perfect. And so far from being ambiguous, we humbly submit that S. S. Lyon and his man Davis cannot make one more definite and determinate. The truth is, their knowledge of scripture, as well as every thing else, is merely superficial. They have never dived down to the elementary fountains of knowledge. They have not moved cautiously step by step, with line and plummet in hand, but have ever taken the rash assertions and popular rhetorical sayings of infidel leaders as real facts, and, of course, have gone astray continually. They are scarcely nearer the truth than sectarian divines.—Certainly they could not be further from it.

Whoever is familiar with the prophets knows that we might continue these examples through many numbers, all equally in point, where the prophecies are not occasional, probable or ambiguous, but were in defiance of the strongest probabilities and exceedingly unambiguous, and yet their minute fulfillment is not only proved but proved by infidel writers.

"To prophecy or fortell truly an event, the person must be in communion with the original design of the Divine Creator, and with the laws which are fulfilling design. The mind, in correctly apprehending these, is enabled to fortell occurrences throughout eternity. There can be no truthful prophecy unless the laws fulfilling design are familiarly comprehended by the person prophecying. It is impossible to foretell an occurrence absolutely by the indications of any external event or circumstance. It is a thing which never has been done, and cannot be done by any being in the Universe. All things that are truly foretold, occur as the result of immutable laws, and not of any mere fleeting and evanescent circumstances." Page 422.

No; it is sufficient to have the revelaion of the thing prophecied of, from him who does comprehend the laws fulfilling design, or who has power to do the act. If the Czar of Russia intends to destroy a Tartar town on a certain day and in a certain manner, and communicates that fact, he to whom it is communicated may predict it in the name of the Czar, and unless the Czar is defeated in his undertaking the prediction will be fulfilled. So God, intending to destroy the city of New York at a certain time and in a particular manner, and by the instrumentality of a particular nation, may, if he will, communicate that fact to me. In his name I may publish it as a prophecy, and as he is not liable to be defeated in his undertaking it will be fulfilled, though I have no knowledge whatever of his original design or his means of fulfilling it. The prophet needs only to know what God has said, and to have faith that he will perform it. After all this loose declamation against the prophets and the possibility of prophecy, Mr. Davis proceeds:—

"I am impressed to briefly appeal to the character of my own prophetical impressions as these are presented to my mind by being in communion with the interior reality and producing causes of all things." Page 422. And again:—"It is upon interior principles alone that a prophecy can be made with an absolute certainty of its accomplishment; and therefore if it were possible for these to foreshadow external and incidental circumstances, then prophecy concerning such might be relied upon." Page 423. And again:—"Before I speak concerning many true prophets and truthful prophecies"—

This interior principle is a kind of ambiguous thing. We cannot succeed in getting our hand on it, and are unable to tell whether it is flesh, fish or fowl. We should be sorry to find the prophecies equally ambiguous. But what does the author mean by "my prophetical impressions?" and by "many true prophets?" when, in the same book, and but one leaf over, page 421, he says:—"The origin of oracles and prophets is, then, plainly understood. They are an effect of ignorance, and uncultivated judgment, and imagination." This can be nothing but that double dealing by which he acknowledges inspiration in one breath, and denies it in the next; both claims to be a prophet and denounces prophecy as imposition, that he may better accomplish his real end—the destruction of all faith in God.

Speaking of the class of prophecies from which we have chosen our examples, the author says:—

"Many of the early prophets did pretend to foretell wars, famines, and pestilences, and would produce simple signs, which they taught corresponded to and foreshadowed the occurrence prophecied.—Others would in the same manner foretell the destruction of cities and downfall of nations, and speak of many things that were to occur in future, and that would conduce to the advancement and emolument of themselves and of those for whom they prophecied. Many of these prophecies are contained in the Primitive History."—

Some of them were fulfilled; but this affords no evidence of the divine instruction of their authors: for all external circumstances, which are dependent upon favorable contingencies, are entirely beyond the reach of all prophetical minds or divinely instructed persons, because these things are not destined, but flow from the corrupted and evanescent tendencies of human society and of physical existence. Therefore I am deeply impressed with the truthfulness of the proposition, that it is absolutely impossible for any being, either in this or any higher sphere, to be instructed concerning evanescent contingencies, so as to foretell their occurrence with certainty." Page 425.

Well, indeed, if this be true, what a chapter of accidents must have happened in favor of Moses, of Isaiah, of Ezekiel, Daniel, Jesus Christ, Paul, the Apostle, and John the Revelator! After this bundle of incongruities and absurdities, the author proceeds to assert that some of these prophecies and oracles originating in "ignorance, uncultivated judgment and imagination," are indeed true, in the following words:—

"The object of making these things plain, is to establish the probability of truthful prophecy, and to defend the Primitive History against the many false and imaginative interpretations that have been imposed upon it. The latter gives a very simple and concise account of the prophecies of men who lived antecedent to its compilation, but many of these made no pretensions to prophecy beyond the limits of their own era. Another object in making these things plain, is to establish a division between real and unreal prophecy. For there are prophecies contained in Primitive History that are true, divine, and righteous; and those who prophecied thus were instructed concerning the interior workings and tendencies of Nature, and proclaimed, upon the unchanging principles of cause and effect, many grand and holy truths—occurrences which will transpire—effects that will be accomplished. These men had their internal, thinking principles so expanded that they were able to recognize the interior workings of all divine law, and thus could with certainty proclaim great and glorious truths." Page 425, 426.

Here we close this review, conscious that materials are presented in the book for continuing it indefinitely, but believing we have gone far enough to show the true character of the work. We look upon it as a most absurd attempt to build up truth on falsehood.—Certainly it contains much in favor of association and equality; and much of popular science, but these can never flourish in such company.

NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION AT COLUMBUS.

We copy the following address of the National Reform Convention of Ohio, which met in Columbus on the 4th ult., from the Ohio State Tribune. Read it:—

"The time has come for firmness and energy in the cause of human well-being. The true interests of the mass of mankind have been too long overlooked. Selfishness has too long been the moving spirit of the world. The rights of mankind have not been recognized even in the theories of political economy, that have come to us under the sanction of great names; much less have they been secured in the Constitutions and laws of the nation. All the declarations that have given birth to modern republics, it is true that Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness have been called the inalienable rights of man, but the means by which Life may be perpetuated, Liberty secured, and Happiness promoted, have been but partially discerned, and carried into practice. A few only, even now have discovered the appalling fact, that in the same countries where liberty is the boast of the people, influences are at work, depriving the mass of freedom, and cutting off more than half the years allotted to man.—It has been determined, by committees appointed to inquire into the sanitary condition of the various classes of the people of Manchester and Liverpool, that, while the gentry, and those in comfortable circumstances attain an average period of 38 and 40 years of life, the operatives live only the average period of 17 and 20 years. The report has been published also from Lowel, the maufacturing emporium of this country, showing the same lamentable disproportion in the longevity of the respective classes in that city. Here, then, we see that the influence of our laws and civilization are such as to impose so grievous burdens upon the poor as to diminish their days and deprive them of the enjoyment of life. The right of the mass to liberty is still more seriously infringed; for the pennyless have no other freedom but that of choice in the masters they serve—and this is not enjoyed by many who are compelled to serve him who will consent to direct and govern them. It is reported that in the city of New York, more than 50,000 persons are continually in search, not for freedom, but, for masters to give them employment. Millions in Great Britain, said to be the most civilized nation on the globe, fly under the lash of hunger to their stalls, for the purpose of selling their services for the scantiest morsel that will sustain life. Can such things be and pitying benevolence look with indifference on the scene!

"But what has caused this wholesale deprivation of millions of our fellow creatures of their God-given rights? This can be answered in one word—MONOPOLY—monopoly of the elements furnished to all men equally by the Creator for the most ample supply of their moral and physical wants—and a monopoly of the wealth of the world to gratify perverted passions.

"The wants of men constitute the only value that property possesses. Consequently there is just wealth enough in the world to supply all the wants of the human family—consequently again, where one monopolizes more than is sufficient to supply the real demands of his nature, the wants of others remain unsupplied.—One man's excess in the accumulation of wealth are another man's deficiencies.

"Were all the property of Great Britain divided equally among all the people, each person would have about $450, which, estimating five persons to a family, is equivalent to $2,250 per family, and would be with moderate labor a complete independence. The Commissioner of Patents for the United States has estimated the aggregate wealth of this country at $8,000,000,000, and the population at 20,000,000, in whole numbers; this would give $400 to each person, or $2,000 to each family. Now the effects of monopolies are apparent. Supposing John Jacob Astor to have possessed $20,000,000, it follows that, 9,999 families had wants unsupplied, because he possessed $19,998,000 more than his just proportion.—Supposing N. Longworth of Cincinnati to be worth $2,000,000, it follows that 999 families have wants unsupplied, because he monopolizes what under a system of justice would belong to that number of families. In Britain, were the land equitably distributed, each family would have over 12 acres—but now the Duke of Sutherland possesses a tract 100 miles in length and 70 miles in breadth, being 4,480,000 acres, all that justice would give to 372,333 families, or 1,866,665 persons.

"Here then we see why the mass of mankind, do not and cannot, under the spirit that at present prevails, enjoy either Life, Liberty or the Pursuit of Happiness.

"We would not be understood as intimating even a desire that an arbitrary division of either the personal or real estate of the world should be made equally among all, far from it. We will oppose to the last all arbitrary rule, because our only hope in so elevating the moral sentiments of mankind, as that their voluntary external manifestation will be the security of the fullest happiness to every son and daughter of man. Our only hope is in the educa-

Some of them were fulfilled; but this affords no evidence of the divine instruction of their authors: for all external circumstances, which are dependent upon favorable contingencies, are entirely beyond the reach of all prophetical minds or divinely instructed persons, because these things are not destined, but flow from the corrupted and evanescent tendencies of human society and of physical existence. Therefore I am deeply impressed with the truthfulness of the proposition, that it is absolutely impossible for any being, either in this or any higher sphere, to be instructed concerning evanescent contingencies, so as to foretell their occurrence with certainty." Page 425.

Well, indeed, if this be true, what a chapter of accidents must have happened in favor of Moses, of Isaiah, of Ezekiel, Daniel, Jesus Christ, Paul, the Apostle, and John the Revelator! After this bundle of incongruities and absurdities, the author proceeds to assert that some of these prophecies and oracles originating in "ignorance, uncultivated judgment and imagination," are indeed true, in the following words:—

"The object of making these things plain, is to establish the probability of truthful prophecy, and to defend the Primitive History against the many false and imaginative interpretations that have been imposed upon it. The latter gives a very simple and concise account of the prophecies of men who lived antecedent to its compilation, but many of these made no pretensions to prophecy beyond the limits of their own era. Another object in making these things plain, is to establish a division between real and unreal prophecy. For there are prophecies contained in Primitive History that are true, divine, and righteous; and those who prophecied thus were instructed concerning the interior workings and tendencies of Nature, and proclaimed, upon the unchanging principles of cause and effect, many grand and holy truths—occurrences which will transpire—effects that will be accomplished. These men had their internal, thinking principles so expanded that they were able to recognize the interior workings of all divine law, and thus could with [illegible] great and glorious truths." Page 425, 426.

Here we close this review, conscious that materials are presented in the book for continuing it indefinitely, but believing we have gone far enough to show the true character of the work. We look upon it as a most absurd attempt to build up truth on falsehood.—Certainly it contains much in favor of association and equality; and much of popular science, but these can never flourish in such company.

NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION AT COLUMBUS.

We copy the following address of the National Reform Convention of Ohio, which met in Columbus on the 4th ult., from the Ohio State Tribune. Read it:—

"The time has come for firmness and energy in the cause of human well-being. The true interests of the mass of mankind have been too long overlooked. Selfishness has too long been the moving spirit of the world. The rights of mankind have not been recognized even in the theories of political economy, that have come to us under the sanction of great names; much less have they been secured in the Constitutions and laws of the nation. All the declarations that have given birth to modern republics, it is true that Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness have been called the inalienable rights of man, but the means by which Life may be perpetuated, Liberty secured, and Happiness promoted, have been but partially discerned, and carried into practice. A few only, even now have discovered the appalling fact, that in the same countries where liberty is the boast of the people, influences are at work, depriving the mass of freedom, and cutting off more than half the years allotted to man.—It has been determined, by committees appointed to inquire into the sanitary condition of the various classes of the people of Manchester and Liverpool, that, while the gentry, and those in comfortable circumstances attain an average period of 38 and 40 years of life, the operatives live only the average period of 17 and 20 years. The report has been published also from Lowel, the manufacturing emporium of this country, showing the same lamentable disproportion in the longevity of the respective classes in that city. Here, then, we see that the influence of our laws and civilization are such as to impose so grievous burdens upon the poor as to diminish their days and deprive them of the enjoyment of life. The right of the mass to liberty is still more seriously infringed; for the pennyless have no other freedom but that of choice in the masters they serve—and this is not enjoyed by many who are compelled to serve him who will consent to direct and govern them. It is reported that in the city of New York, more than 50,000 persons are continually in search, not for freedom, but, for masters to give them employment. Millions in Great Britain, said to be the most civilized nation on the globe, fly under the lash of hunger to their stalls, for the purpose of selling their services for the scantiest morsel that will sustain life. Can such things be and pitying benevolence look with indifference on the scene!

"But what has caused this wholesale deprivation of millions of our fellow creatures of their God-given rights? This can be answered in one word—MONOPOLY—monopoly of the elements furnished to all men equally by the Creator for the most ample supply of their moral and physical wants—and a monopoly of the wealth of the world to gratify perverted passions.

"The wants of men constitute the only value that property possesses. Consequently there is just wealth enough in the world to supply all the wants of the human family—consequently again, where one monopolizes more than is sufficient to supply the real demands of his nature, the wants of others remain unsupplied.—One man's excess in the accumulation of wealth are another man's deficiencies.

"Were all the property of Great Britain divided equally among all the people, each person would have about $450, which, estimating five persons to a family, is equivalent to $2,250 per family, and would be with moderate labor a complete independence. The Commissioner of Patents for the United States has estimated the aggregate wealth of this country at $8,000,000,000, and the population at 20,000,000, in whole numbers; this would give $400 to each person, or $2,000 to each family. Now the effects of monopolies are apparent. Supposing John Jacob Astor to have possessed $20,000,000, it follows that, 9,999 families had wants unsupplied, because he possessed $19,998,000 more than his just proportion.—Supposing N. Longworth of Cincinnati to be worth $2,000,000, it follows that 999 families have wants unsupplied, because he monopolizes what under a system of justice would belong to that number of families. In Britain, were the land equitably distributed, each family would have over 12 acres—but now the Duke of Sutherland possesses a tract 100 miles in length and 70 miles in breadth, being 4,480,000 acres, all that justice would give to 372,333 families, or 1,866,665 persons.

"Here then we see why the mass of mankind, do not and cannot, under the spirit that at present prevails, enjoy either Life, Liberty or the Pursuit of Happiness.

"We would not be understood as intimating even a desire that an arbitrary division of either the personal or real estate of the world should be made equally among all, far from it. We will oppose to the last all arbitrary rule, because our only hope in so elevating the moral sentiments of mankind, as that their voluntary external manifestation will be the security of the fullest happiness to every son and daughter of man. Our only hope is in the education of the people. Poverty and woe will recede before increasing intelligence and goodness, as darkness flees before the morning light."

[They have increased thus far,not necessarily, but in fact. Education increases the power of the crafty over the simple. Consequently all these oppressions are felt with redoubled force where education is common. Among the uneducated there is generally a common property, and always a comparative equality in the possession of it. ED.]

"But there are certain statutory regulations in our political system which we would have abolished, inasmuch as they contravene, in our opinion, the sacred rights of man. One of these is that which permits and legalizes the sale of the public domain to any unlimited extent to an individual, whether he be a resident or a non-resident. And it happens that those who monopolize the western soil and speculate upon the poor are never the pioneers to indure the hardships, incident to a wild country. They are able to repose in a land of plenty, while the poor man who can purchase a single lot is the pioneer to prepare comfortable homes for the sons of those who are speculating out of him. The injustice of this is clearly apparent and needs no coloring. To remedy this and provide every one a home on the free soil that God gave to us all without partiality, we would give the western wilderness in limited quantities to actual settlers. And for the support of this reform, we appeal not to benevolence, that divinest faculty of the human mind, and that goldenest link that unites us to heaven, but we appeal to a stern sense of justice which should be found in every breast. Is it not just that every one should have acres enough without price to supply all his wants? How else can he feed and clothe himself, unless he ask his neighbor to be his master to pay him a modicum for his toil? If he be driven to this, it is the right of his neighbor to turn him away at discretion and let him starve. Here the falsehood is unmasked, for it reveals its absurdity. It is just therefore, that all should have land without price—and consequently, the reverse is true, that it is unjust to compel payment for a home where one proposes to make his farm from the untenanted woodland."

STATE OF EUROPE.

The Cholera prevails throughout all the centre and east of Europe, and is more malignant than in its former progress through that country. The potatoe rot is every where prevalent, and in Ireland is so extensive that the stench of the decaying crops renders the roads scarcely passable. The harvest in Great Britain was universally bad and the prospect of famine is eminent. The rebellion is effectually suppressed in Ireland, but the people have only settled down in sullen dissatisfaction; afraid to make war upon a government which they most cordially hate.

Prosecutions are going on against the leaders of the rebellion, most of whom will probably be transported, and possibly some of them hanged. Prosecutions are also going on against the leading Chartists in England. Evidently the crisis is past, but, contrary to former experience, it has left the government weaker than when it came on, and the trouble is likely to be renewed. The British government is really strong enough to put down any rebellion whatever, in any part of the empire. The real difficulty she has to contend with, is the fact that the taxation necessary to keep up the government is more than the people can possibly pay. The annual taxes are starving the poor, and still eating up the wealth of the rich. These expenditures might be greatly retrenched, but that retrenchment would greatly weaken the government by the reduction of patronage. When government makes this retrenchment it may not be able to maintain itself against the new factions that will arise.

In France things seem to be settling down into a military despotism. Republicanism is not half as strong there as it was supposed to be. The late insurrection was in favor of Socialism, rather than Republicanism. Republicans used the words "liberty, equality and fraternity" as a kind of clap trap to boost themselves into power, but had not the least idea of putting any such thing into practice. The great body of the poor are Socialists, and will fight under any leaders who give them promise of that order of things.—But when the trying time comes the bulk of the property holders will join against them in favor of any party that gives real promises of a stable government. France has not gained a step towards enfranchisement.

The old order of things is broken up in Germany. But the present probability is that none of the princes will lose their thrones, and that a new arrangement of the empire being fixed upon kings will set their feet on the necks of the people as heretofore. The prejudices of races has destroyed the rising liberties of all parties.—Prussians, who should have been engaged in establishing free institutions in their own country, have been employed in fighting their brethren in Denmark on the question which country Schleswig and Holstein should belong to. And Germans generally, contending for German freedom, have assisted in fastening chains on Poland, while the Russians, saved from internal warfare by this means, stand now with bristling bayonets on the Polish frontier, ready to do the same work on Germans, if they fail to do it on each other.

The empire of Austria, made up of many races, the chief of which are Germans, Sclavonians and Italians, seemed in one universal flame of liberty and republicanism. But their oppressors by skillfully arraying their national prejudices against each other, have re-established their authority generally, with the best prospect of ultimate success. Charles Albert, king of Sardinia, kindly consented to be the means of detaching some 4,000,000 Italian subjects from the emperor, for the purpose of erecting a great kingdom of Italy, and thus prevented the formation of a new Venetian republic, and as kindly he has suffered them to fall back into the hands of Radetsky, the Austrian general. Thus by a double conquest their means of war are exhausted, their spirits broken, and an excuse obtained by the emperor for plundering his subjects and confiscating extensive estates. Finally, monarchy and tyranny are in the ascendant every where in Europe. The arm of the oppressor has grown stronger, and they that swelled with the hope of a whole continent freed, now shrink away in caverns and forests, and are hunted as wild beasts, execrated by the very rabble for whom they have sacrificed themselves.

POETRY.

We receive an endless amount of poetic communications, very few of which are ever read through the first stanza. It is useless to send us an unfinished poem. We never touch pen to one. And unless such communications come really finished, we can make no use of them. An extra syllable in a line, or a long syllable when it should be short, spoils the whole, and we cannot mend it. Moreover, real poetry requires some other ingredient besides a certain measure or proportion of long and short syllables, a certain jingling of sounds called rhyme. We don't exactly know what this other ingredient is, but we recognize it very readily when we find it.

A Trappast monastery is about to be founded near Bardstown, Ky., where a tract of 1200 acres of land has been bought for the purpose. About eighty of the members of the order are now on their way from Nantes. The community will be organized next spring.—Ex. paper.

tion of the people. Poverty and woe will recede before increasing intelligence and goodness, as darkness flees before the morning light."

[They have increased thus far, not necessarily, but in fact. Education increases the power of the crafty over the simple. Consequently all these oppressions are felt with redoubled force where education is common. Among the uneducated there is generally a common property, and always a comparative equality in the possession of it. ED.]

"But there are certain statutory regulations in our political system which we would have abolished, inasmuch as they contravene, in our opinion, the sacred rights of man. One of these is that which permits and legalizes the sale of the public domain to any unlimited extent to an individual, whether he be a resident or a non-resident. And it happens that those who monopolize the western soil and speculate upon the poor are never the pioneers to indure the hardships, incident to a wild country. They are able to repose in a land of plenty, while the poor man who can purchase a single lot is the pioneer to prepare comfortable homes for the sons of those who are speculating out of him. The injustice of this is clearly apparent and needs no coloring. To remedy this and provide every one a home on the free soil that God gave to us all without partiality, we would give the western wilderness in limited quantities to actual settlers. And for the support of this reform, we appeal not to benevolence, that divinest faculty of the human mind, and that goldenest link that unites us to heaven, but we appeal to a stern sense of justice which should be found in every breast. Is it not just that every one should have acres enough without price to supply all his wants? How else can he feed and clothe himself, unless he ask his neighbor to be his master to pay him a modicum for his toil? If he be driven to this, it is the right of his neighbor to turn him away at discretion and let him starve. Here the falsehood is unmasked, for it reveals its absurdity. It is just therefore, that all should have land without price—and consequently, the reverse is true, that it is unjust to compel payment for a home where one proposes to make his farm from the untenanted woodland."

STATE OF EUROPE.

The Cholera prevails throughout all the centre and east of Europe, and is more malignant than in its former progress through that country. The potatoe rot is every where prevalent, and in Ireland is so extensive that the stench of the decaying crops renders the roads scarcely passable. The harvest in Great Britain was universally bad and the prospect of famine is eminent. The rebellion is effectually suppressed in Ireland, but the people have only settled down in sullen dissatisfaction; afraid to make war upon a government which they most cordially hate.

Prosecutions are going on against the leaders of the rebellion, most of whom will probably be transported, and possibly some of them hanged. Prosecutions are also going on against the leading Chartists in England. Evidently the crisis is past, but, contrary to former experience, it has left the government weaker than when it came on, and the trouble is likely to be renewed. The British government is really strong enough to put down any rebellion whatever, in any part of the empire. The real difficulty she has to contend with, is the fact that the taxation necessary to keep up the government is more than the people can possibly pay. The annual taxes are starving the poor, and still eating up the wealth of the rich. These expenditures might be greatly retrenched, but that retrenchment would greatly weaken the government by the reduction of patronage. When government makes this retrenchment it may not be able to maintain itself against the new factions that will arise.

In France things seem to be settling down into a military despotism. Republicanism is not half as strong there as it was supposed to be. The late insurrection was in favor of Socialism, rather than Republicanism. Republicans used the words "liberty, equality and fraternity" as a kind of clap trap to boost themselves into power, but had not the least idea of putting any such thing into practice. The great body of the poor are Socialists, and will fight under any leaders who give them promise of that order of things.—But when the trying time comes the bulk of the property holders will join against them in favor of any party that gives real promises of a stable government. France has not gained a step towards enfranchisement.

The old order of things is broken up in Germany. But the present probability is that none of the princes will lose their thrones, and that a new arrangement of the empire being fixed upon kings will set their feet on the necks of the people as heretofore. The prejudices of races has destroyed the rising liberties of all parties.—Prussians, who should have been engaged in establishing free institutions in their own country, have been employed in fighting their brethren in Denmark on the question which country Schleswig and Holstein should belong to. And Germans generally, contending for German freedom, have assisted in fastening chains on Poland, while the Russians, saved from internal warfare by this means, stand now with bristling bayonets on the Polish frontier, ready to do the same work on Germans, if they fail to do it on each other.

The empire of Austria, made up of many races, the chief of which are Germans, Sclavonians and Italians, seemed in one universal flame of liberty and republicanism. But their oppressors by skillfully arraying their national prejudices against each other, have re-established their authority generally, with the best prospect of ultimate success. Charles Albert, king of Sardinia, kindly consented to be the means of detaching some 4,000,000 Italian subjects from the emperor, for the purpose of erecting a great kingdom of Italy, and thus prevented the formation of a new Venetian republic, and as kindly he has suffered them to fall back into the hands of Radetsky, the Austrian general. Thus by a double conquest their means of war are exhausted, their spirits broken, and an excuse obtained by the emperor for plundering his subjects and confiscating extensive estates. Finally, monarchy and tyranny are in the ascendant every where in Europe. The arm of the oppressor has grown stronger, and they that swelled with the hope of a whole continent freed, now shrink away in caverns and forests, and are hunted as wild beasts, execrated by the very rabble for whom they have sacrificed themselves.

POETRY.

We receive an endless amount of poetic communications, very few of which are ever read through the first stanza. It is useless to send us an unfinished poem. We never touch pen to one. And unless such communications come really finished, we can make no use of them. An extra syllable in a line, or a long syllable when it should be short, spoils the whole, and we cannot mend it. Moreover, real poetry requires some other ingredient besides a certain measure or proportion of long and short syllables, a certain jingling of sounds called rhyme. We don't exactly know what this other ingredient is, but we recognize it very readily when we find it.

A Trappast monastery is about to be founded near Bardstown, Ky., where a tract of 1200 acres of land has been bought for the purpose. About eighty of the members of the order are now on their way from Nantes. The community will be organized next spring.—Ex. paper.

☞ We find in a Western paper the following account of a new settlement in Iowa:—

In Marion county, Iowa, a settlement has been recently commenced, under peculiarly interesting circumstances. It consists of from 800 to 900 emigrants, from Holland, driven from their native land like the pilgrim fathers of New England, by religious persecution. An interesting account of them was given by one of the members of the Iowa General Congregational Association, at its late meeting, who labors in that vicinity, of which the following is the substance:

They are Protestant dissenters from the established Church of England, and under an old statute forbidding more than twenty persons to assemble for religious worship, except in connection with the Establishment, their meetings were broken up, and they were prevented from enjoying "freedom to worship God." They were also forbidden to give their children a religious education. In consequence of this, they have removed to America, and settled in Iowa.

They have purchased two whole townships of land, each six miles square. Their leader is Domine Shelle, a pious and devoted minister, who is pastor of the church, consisting of about one hundred and fifty members. He suffered severe persecution before he left Holland, and paid at different times 80,000 guilders in fines.—There are also five elders who act as assistants to the minister, laboring in word and doctrine, preparing business for the action of the church. The people are very moral and industrious, and those who are professors of religion are very conscientious in the discharge of duty. The Lord's day is strictly observed among them, and their children are faithfully trained in the ways of godliness.

As an illustration of their habits, it is said that even in the field they never sit down to take refreshment without imploring the blessing of Heaven. In family worship, the children all pray separately first, and then the father commences the social exercises.—To show how they regard the Lord's day, the following was related: A young man of their number was employed to work for a tavern keeper, but finding he did not reverence the Lord's day, and that it would be required of him to do many things which he thought inconsistent with the observance of the day, he refused to remain in his employ.

Boundlessness of the Creation.—About the time of the invention of the telescope, another instrument was formed, which laid a scene no less wonderful, and rewarded the inquisitive spirit of man. This was the microscope. The one led me to see a system in every star; the other leads me to see a world in every atom.—The one taught me that this mighty globe, with the whole burden of its people and its countries, is but a grain on the high field of immensity; the other teaches me that every grain of sand may harbor within it the tribes and families of a busy population. The one told me of the insignificancy of the world I trod upon. The other redeems it from all insignificancy; for it tells me that in the leaves of every forest, and in the flowers of every garden, and in the waters of every rivulet, there are world's teeming with life, and numberless are the glories of the firmament. The one has suggested to me, that beyond and above all that is visible to man, there may be fields of creation which sweep immeasurably along, and carry the impress of the Almighty's hand to the remotest scenes of the universe; the other suggests to me, that within and beyond all that minuteness which the aided eye of man has been able to explore, there may be a region of invisible; and that, could we draw aside the mysterious curtain which shrouds it from our senses, we might see a theatre of as many wonders as astronomers have unfolded, a universe within the compass of a point so small as to chide all the powers of the microscope, but where the wonder-working God finds room for all his attributes, where he can raise another mechanism of the worlds, and fill and animate the evidence of his glory.—Chalmers.

CHARLES B. THOMPSON.

We received the following letter from Charles B. Thompson some time in May last, but did not observe that it was intended for publication, and were so little interested in the few lines we first glanced our eyes upon that it was laid by unread. A few weeks since, in turning over a lot of waste paper, it turned up, and we discovered that it was intended for publication, and that the author was very anxious to see it in print. After some hesitation and reading part of a page we concluded to publish it; though indeed we can hardly imagine any good that can be accomplished by it, save the satisfaction of the author in seeing his name and notions in print, and to show upon what flimsy pretenses men can apostatize and set themselves up as leaders.

From the want of arrangement or order in the body of the letter it is difficult to discuss its points seriatim, without using endless repetitions in referring to it; we have, therefore, put our notes in brackets in the body of the letter and immediately following the several points answered. And because the manuscript is so very imperfect that it is quite uncertain how it should read when translated into good English, we have directed the compositor and proof reader to follow copy, word for word, letter for letter, and point for point, not so much as removing an occasional capital letter from the middle of a word. We hope this will be satisfactory to the author. Certainly he cannot expect us to correct errors in the language of a controversial letter, to which we intend to reply, especially when the errors are such as leave the sense ambiguous. In such a case, however faithfully we might endeavor to carry out the idea of the writer, we might unwittingly make the argument we were to answer. We could not escape the suspicion of garbling the author's work, and therefore pursue the only safe course by publishing it precisely as we received it. Possibly it may be useful as a hint to many of our readers and correspondents of the necessity of a little more accuracy in writing. Any one who wishes to get the unbroken sense of Thompson's letter will read it continuous, omitting the notes in brackets.

[For the Gospel Herald]

St. Louis, Mo. April, 29th 1848.

James J Strang—Dear Sir—I embrace this opportunity to address you, in Answer to a Letter I recived from you while in cincinnati Ohio, in which you requested me to write you the facts, reletive to a statment made to you in a communication from Mr Merewether, conserning my having left the church, and commenced I reaching under a Pretended Lamite Prophet, or Jesus christ, all of which was incorrect, as I had ceased Preaching altogeth and was working at my trade. [We do not recollect of any such correspondence.—But we did hear by some means that Charles B. Thompson had commenced preaching under a colored man calling himself Jesus Christ, and who was restoring the apostolic church by naming men after the various members of it. It was said that in this process either Peter or Paul had been restored to earth in the person of this same Charles, who thereby either got the keys of the kingdom or became the apostle of the Gentiles. It is unfortunate for him if this is not true. We are very certain that such an office would save him many doubts and heart burnings. We also learned by the Cincinnati Commercial that the little company who followed this colored leader abolished marriage and practiced many evils. We wish this might prove an error, but partly believe it true.]

My reasons for doing so ware as follows: I had become convinced by a candid and Prayerfull investigation of the subject, that your claims of Authority to Preside over and lead the church was not founded in truth. [We do not doubt your conviction. We have seen several such persons, and have heard of more. The true sense

☞ We find in a Western paper the following account of a new settlement in Iowa:—

In Marion county, Iowa, a settlement has been recently commenced, under peculiarly intereeting circumstances. It consists of from 800 to 900 emigrants, from Holland, driven from their native land like the pilgrim fathers of New England, by religious persecution. An interesting account of them was given by one of the members of the Iowa General Congregational Association, at its late meeting, who labors in that vicinity, of which the following is the substance:

They are Protestant dissenters from the established Church of England, and under an old statute forbidding more than twenty persons to assemble for religious worship, except in connection with the Establishment, their meetings were broken up, and they were prevented from enjoying "freedom to worship God." They were also forbidden to give their children a religious education. In consequence of this, they have removed to America, and settled in Iowa.

They have purchased two whole townships of land, each six miles square. Their leader is Domine Shelle, a pious and devoted minister, who is pastor of the church, consisting of about one hundred and fifty members. He suffered severe persecution before he left Holland, and paid at different times 80,000 guilders in fines.—There are also five elders who act as assistants to the minister, laboring in word and doctrine, preparing business for the action of the church. The people are very moral and industrious, and those who are professors of religion are very conscientious in the discharge of duty. The Lord's day is strictly observed among them, and their children are faithfully trained in the ways of godliness.

As an illustration of their habits, it is said that even in the field they never sit down to take refreshment without imploring the blessing of Heaven. In family worship, the children all pray separately first, and then the father commences the social exercises.—To show how they regard the Lord's day, the following was related: A young man of their number was employed to work for a tavern keeper, but finding he did not reverence the Lord's day, and that it would be required of him to do many things which he thought inconsistent with the observance of the day, he refused to remain in his employ.

Boundlessness of the Creation.—About the time of the invention of the telescope, another instrument was formed, which laid a scene no less wonderful, and rewarded the inquisitive spirit of man. This was the microscope. The one led me to see a system in every star; the other leads me to see a world in every atom.—The one taught me that this mighty globe, with the whole burden of its people and its countries, is but a grain on the high field of immensity; the other teaches me that every grain of sand may harbor within it the tribes and families of a busy population. The one told me of the insignificancy of the world I trod upon. The other redeems it from all insignificancy; for it tells me that in the leaves of every forest, and in the flowers of every garden, and in the waters of every rivulet, there are world's teeming with life, and numberless are the glories of the firmament. The one has suggested to me, that beyond and above all that is visible to man, there may be fields of creation which sweep immeasurably along, and carry the impress of the Almighty's hand to the remotest scenes of the universe; the other suggests to me, that within and beyond all that minuteness which the aided eye of man has been able to explore, there may be a region of invisible; and that, could we draw aside the mysterious curtain which shrouds it from our senses, we might see a theatre of as many wonders as astronomers have unfolded, a universe within the compass of a point so small as to chide all the powers of the microscope, but where the wonder-working God finds room for all his attributes, where he can raise another mechanism of the worlds, and fill and animate the evidence of his glory.—Chalmers.

CHARLES B. THOMPSON.

We received the following letter from Charles B. Thompson some time in May last, but did not observe that it was intended for publication, and were so little interested in the few lines we first glanced our eyes upon that it was laid by unread. A few weeks since, in turning over a lot of waste paper, it turned up, and we discovered that it was intended for publication, and that the author was very anxious to see it in print. After some hesitation and reading part of a page we concluded to publish it; though indeed we can hardly imagine any good that can be accomplished by it, save the satisfaction of the author in seeing his name and notions in print, and to show upon what flimsy pretenses men can apostatize and set themselves up as leaders.

From the want of arrangement or order in the body of the letter it is difficult to discuss its points seriatim, without using endless repetitions in referring to it; we have, therefore, put our notes in brackets in the body of the letter and immediately following the several points answered. And because the manuscript is so very imperfect that it is quite uncertain how it should read when translated into good English, we have directed the compositor and proof reader to follow copy, word for word, letter for letter, and point for point, not so much as removing an occasional capital letter from the middle of a word. We hope this will be satisfactory to the author. Certainly he cannot expect us to correct errors in the language of a controversial letter, to which we intend to reply, especially when the errors are such as leave the sense ambiguous. In such a case, however faithfully we might endeavor to carry out the idea of the writer, we might unwittingly make the argument we were to answer. We could not escape the suspicion of garbling the author's work, and therefore pursue the only safe course by publishing it precisely as we received it. Possibly it may be useful as a hint to many of our readers and correspondents of the necessity of a little more accuracy in writing. Any one who wishes to get the unbroken sense of Thompson's letter will read it continuous, omitting the notes in brackets.

[For the Gospel Herald]

St. Louis, Mo. April, 29th 1848.

James J Strang—Dear Sir—I embrace this opportunity to address you, in Answer to a Letter I recived from you while in cincinnati Ohio, in which you requested me to write you the facts, reletive to a statment made to you in a communication from Mr Merewether, conserning my having left the church, and commenced Preaching under a Pretended Lamite Prophet, or Jesus christ, all of which was incorrect, as I had ceased Preaching altogeth and was working at my trade. [We do not recollect of any such correspondence.—But we did hear by some means that Charles B. Thompson had commenced preaching under a colored man calling himself Jesus Christ, and who was restoring the apostolic church by naming men after the various members of it. It was said that in this process either Peter or Paul had been restored to earth in the person of this same Charles, who thereby either got the keys of the kingdom or became the apostle of the Gentiles. It is unfortunate for him if this is not true. We are very certain that such an office would save him many doubts and heart burnings. We also learned by the Cincinnati Commercial that the little company who followed this colored leader abolished marriage and practiced many evils. We wish this might prove an error, but partly believe it true.]

My reasons for doing so ware as follows: I had become convinced by a candid and Prayerfull investigation of the subject, that your claims of Authority to Preside over and lead the church was not founded in truth. [We do not doubt your conviction. We have seen several such persons, and have heard of more. The true scan of the matter is, that Mr. Thompson came here and testified that God had revealed to him that prophet Strang was a true prophet and the President and lawful leader of the church; and now Mr. Thompson is convinced that he lied; that God did not reveal any such thing to him.] and that it was a false spirit that witnessed to me the reverse: [Then you said you got your knowledge from God.—Now you say it was from a false spirit. How shall we know when to credit you?] which had come upon me in an ungarded moment; and neglecting the exertation of the beloved Disciple John, to try the spirits, whether they are of God, because many false Prophets have gone out in to the world: I adopted the sentiment without Proper investigation. But now remembering the exertation, I commenced the Trial of the Spirit, by compareing the developements thereof, with the Developments of the spirit of God as formerly manifested through Joseph; as follows. [The beloved disciple John does not give any such test to try the spirits by. His test is, "we (the apostles) are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error." 1 John iv. 6. This was written after the decease of Peter, and after the return of John from Patmos, about the year 98. John succeeded Peter in the keys of the kingdom, and while on Patmos stood as prophet, seer and revelator to the church, exercising authority over all the saints throughout the earth. Standing in this capacity sixty-five years after the death of the Lord Jesus, and being himself the highest authority in the church on earth, he says, "he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us." Us? Who? John, the prophet, seer and revelator, and his councilors and fellow apostles. That is, he that obeys the living priesthood that God has set in the church, and made the keepers, the expounders and the administrators of his law, both written and unwritten, is of God, and he that heareth them not, that is, disobeys this authority, is not of God.

Abraham would have made poor progress in obtaining a good report through faith by your rule. When God said to him, "Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains that I will tell thee of;" had Abraham pursued your course of comparing the developments of that spirit with the developments of the spirit of God as formerly manifested, he would doubtless have said, "surely this is an evil spirit, seeking to defeat the promises of God, for God has promised in my seed to bless all the nations of the earth, and has also said, 'in Isaac shall thy seed be called,' and now if I slay Isaac there can be no seed in his line, and the promised blessing will fail." He might have gone further and said, the Lord spoke to Noah and said, "at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man. Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed."—If I do this thing I subject myself to the penalty of death by the law of God. But God does not require me to do a deed punishable with death; therefore he does not require me to sacrifice my son. We submit that these would have been better reasons for rejecting that revelation than you have given for rejecting the many revelations showing that prophet Strang is the true shepherd of the flock of God.]

First, A revelation given through Joseph, on the 19th of Jan. 1841, contained in the Doctrine and covenants, Page 398. "But I command you, all ye my sanits, to build a house unto me; and I grant you a sufficient time to build a house unto me, † † † † But, behold, at the end of this apointment, if you do not these thing ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord your God." You will Observe that all the saints are included in this command, and the whole church is in cluded in the Penelty.

[The revelation referred to is that given to establish Nauvoo as a place of gathering, and to set the church in order after it was broken up by the Missouri persecutions. It calls on all the saints to COME with ALL their GOLD, SILVER, PRECIOUS STONES, iron, copper, brass, zinc, pine, box, fir and ALL PRECIOUS THINGS of the earth, and build a house unto the name of God, for the Most High to dwell in. It gives a particular reason for doing so, to wit: the baptism for the dead; the restoring something lost. D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 10. Notwithstanding this command to all the saints to come, there was a probability that many might be unavoidably detained behind; and that they might not exempt themselves from the labor, God adds a further mandate: "But I command YOU, ALL YE MY SAINTS, to build a house unto me." Here then is a separate command on those that gather and those that do not, for the building of this house.

The examination of the next paragraph will also show that there is a separate penalty affixed to their neglect. D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 11. The penalty on the church at Nauvoo is in these words: "and if ye do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected AS A CHURCH, with your dead, saith the Lord your God."—But upon those that are scattered abroad the penalty is stated in these words: "and after this time, your BAPTISMS FOR the DEAD, BY THOSE WHO ARE SCATTERED ABROAD, are NOT ACCEPTABLE to me saith the Lord." Now if the church scattered abroad were rejected, the Lord would not pick out a single ordinance and say that it was not acceptable, but would have said in plain terms, "ye shall be rejected," or "none of your administrations shall be acceptable." If the rejection extends to the whole church in all its organization, this saying was but idle words from the Almighty. As well might you prove the rejection of the apostolic church by Christ's message to the Laodiceans: "because thou art luke warm, neither hot nor cold, I will spue thee out of my mouth." To the church at Nauvoo only was it said, ye shall be rejected as a church. To the rest of the churches, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable. D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 11. There can be no such thing as rejecting the entire church as an organization. It would be a rejection of the earth and all the inhabitants thereof; yielding the dominion to Satan forever, and giving him a perfect victory over Christ. It is too often said to need repetition that the kingdom is coming forth for the last time, the priesthood is given for the last time, that this is the dispensation of the last time and the fullness of times. If the church is rejected, farewell to angels visits and priestly authority.]

Again in the same revelation, on Page 400. "I will show unto my servant Joseph all thing Pertaneing to this house, and the Priesthood thereof. Now from this we learn that the acceptance, or rejection of the whole church as an Organization, depended on their building, or not building that house, within the sufficient time—[No; we learn that God would, unconditionally, show unto Joseph all things pertaining to that house, and the priesthood thereof. Immediately after he makes promises, conditionally, to the church. But these things were to be shown to Joseph, whether they laid a single stone in the Temple or not. The promise is without conditions.] for sufficient signifies Just enough, and nothing over. or equal to. And that Joseph (to whom the Pattern, both of the house, and of the Priesthod to be Organized therein, was given,) lived to the end of that sufficient time; is evedent: 1st, by the fact that he lived after this commandmet was given, three years, five months, and 8 Days, truly, a sufficient time, for a church of two hundred thousands members, to build a house, not costing at most over one hundred thousand Dollars; only about fifty cents a peace.

[This is all assumption. It is a mere conjecture that the church contained 200,000 members; and it is quite probable that 50,000 is nearer the fact. We think no rational or careful estimate has been more than this; that 200,000 had received the faith since the open-

of the matter is, that Mr. Thompson came here and testified that God had revealed to him that prophet Strang was a true prophet and the President and lawful leader of the church; and now Mr. Thompson is convinced that he lied; that God did not reveal any such thing to him.] and that it was a false spirit that witnessed to me the reverse: [Then you said you got your knowledge from God.—Now you say it was from a false spirit. How shall we know when to credit you?] which had come upon me in an ungarded moment; and neglecting the exertation of the beloved Disciple John, to try the spirits, whether they are of God, because many false Prophets have gone out in to the world: I adopted the sentiment without Proper investigation. But now remembering the exertation, I commenced the Trial of the Spirit, by compareing the developements thereof, with the Developments of the spirit of God as formerly manefested through Joseph; as follows. [The beloved disciple John does not give any such test to try the spirits by. His test is, "we (the apostles) are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error." 1 John iv. 6. This was written after the decease of Peter, and after the return of John from Patmos, about the year 98. John succeeded Peter in the keys of the kingdom, and while on Patmos stood as prophet, seer and revelator to the church, exercising authority over all the saints throughout the earth. Standing in this capacity sixty-five years after the death of the Lord Jesus, and being himself the highest authority in the church on earth, he says, "he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us." Us? WHO? John, the prophet, seer and revelator, and his councilors and fellow apostles. That is, he that obeys the living priesthood that God has set in the church, and made the keepers, the expounders and the administrators of his law, both written and unwritten, is of God, and he that heareth them not, that is, disobeys this authority, is not of God.

Abraham would have made poor progress in obtaining a good report through faith by your rule. When God said to him, "Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains that I will tell thee of;" had Abraham pursued your course of comparing the developments of that spirit with the developments of the spirit of God as formerly manifested, he would doubtless have said, "surely this is an evil spirit, seeking to defeat the promises of God, for God has promised in my seed to bless all the nations of the earth, and has also said, 'in Isaac shall thy seed be called,' and now if I slay Isaac there can be no seed in his line, and the promised blessing will fail." He might have gone further and said, the Lord spoke to Noah and said, "at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man. Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed."—If I do this thing I subject myself to the penalty of death by the law of God. But God does not require me to do a deed punishable with death; therefore he does not require me to sacrifice my son. We submit that these would have been better reasons for rejecting that revelation than you have given for rejecting the many revelations showing that prophet Strang is the true shepherd of the flock of God.]

First, A revelation given through Joseph, on the 19th of Jan. 1841, contained in the Doctrine and covenants, Page 398. "But I command you, all ye my sanits, to build a house unto me; and I grant you a sufficient time to build a house unto me, † † † † But, behold, at the end of this apointment, if you do not these thing ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord your God." You will Observe that all the saints are included in this command, and the whole church is included in the Penelty.

[The revelation referred to is that given to establish Nauvoo as a place of gathering, and to set the church in order after it was broken up by the Missouri persecutions. It calls on all the saints to COME with ALL their GOLD, SILVER, PRECIOUS STONES, iron, copper, brass, zinc, pine, box, fir and ALL PRECIOUS THINGS of the earth, and build a house unto the name of God, for the Most High to dwell in. It gives a particular reason for doing so, to wit: the baptism for the dead; the restoring something lost. D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 10. Notwithstanding this command to all the saints to come, there was a probability that many might be unavoidably detained behind; and that they might not exempt themselves from the labor, God adds a further mandate: "But I command YOU, ALL YE MY SAINTS, to build a house unto me." Here then is a separate command on those that gather and those that do not, for the building of this house.

The examination of the next paragraph will also show that there is a separate penalty affixed to their neglect. D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 11. The penalty on the church at Nauvoo is in these words: "and if ye do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected AS A CHURCH, with your dead, saith the Lord your God."—But upon those that are scattered abroad the penalty is stated in these words: "and after this time, your BAPTISMS FOR the DEAD, BY THOSE WHO ARE SCATTERED ABROAD, are NOT ACCEPTABLE to me saith the Lord." Now if the church scattered abroad were rejected, the Lord would not pick out a single ordinance and say that it was not acceptable, but would have said in plain terms, "ye shall be rejected;" or "none of your administrations shall be acceptable." If the rejection extends to the whole church in all its organization, this saying was but idle words from the Almighty. As well might you prove the rejection of the apostolic church by Christ's message to the Laodiceans: "because thou art luke warm, neither hot nor cold, I will spue thee out of my mouth." To the church at Nauvoo only was it said, ye shall be rejected as a church. To the rest of the churches, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable. D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 11. There can be no such thing as rejecting the entire church as an organization. It would be a rejection of the earth and all the inhabitants thereof; yielding the dominion to Satan forever, and giving him a perfect victory over Christ. It is too often said to need repetition that the kingdom is coming forth for the last time, the priesthood is given for the last time, that this is the dispensation of the last time and the fullness of times. If the church is rejected, farewell to angels visits and priestly authority.]

Again in the same revelation, on Page 400. "I will show unto my servant Joseph all thing Pertaneing to this house, and the Priesthood thereof. Now from this we learn that the acceptance, or reJeection of the whole church as an Organization, depended on their building, or not building that house, within the sufficient time—[No; we learn that God would, unconditionally, show unto Joseph all things pertaining to that house, and the priesthood thereof. Immediately after he makes promises, conditionally, to the church. But these things were to be shown to Joseph, whether they laid a single stone in the Temple or not. The promise is without conditions.] for sufficient signifies Just enough, and nothing over. or equal to. And that Joseph (to whom the Pattern, both of the house, and of the Priesthod to be Organized therein, was given,) lived to the end of that sufficient time; is evedent: 1st, by the fact that he lived after this commandmet was given, three years, five months, and 8 Days, truly, a sufficient time, for a church of two hundred thousands members, to build a house, not costing at most over one hundred thousand Dollars; only about fifty cents a peace.

[This is all assumption. It is a mere conjecture that the church contained 200,000 members; and it is quite probable that 50,000 is nearer the fact. We think no rational or careful estimate has been more than this; that 200,000 had received the faith since the opening of the dispensation. Of these a very large portion had fallen asleep, and vast numbers have fallen away. Moreover this command came forth several years since, when no person, probably, estimated the church higher than 20,000 or 30,000, and some as low as 10,000 members, and they broken, scattered and impoverished by persecution. The great numbers of the church, whatever that number may be, have been added since this command was given. The cost of the Temple which they were required to build in stead of being at most $100,000, as you have stated, would be at least $1,-600,000. The Temple books show an expenditure of over $700,-000 already, not very well laid out it is true, but still actually expended on the building, and the work not half done. In the main building, the court of the Gentiles, as large an apartment as any in the building, is not touched; has not the first stone laid, and the external walls, with their gates and towers, is not progressed enough to show even its plan. The immense pile that is there requires more than $100,000 yet to finish its apartments.

The highest estimate that can with any kind of propriety be put on the members of the church when this command came forth is 20,000. The lowest estimate of cost for the Temple and other public buildings, (as the Nauvoo house,) which this revelation required them to build, is $2,500,000. As the church consists of families of men, women and children, (for these estimates of members include entire families,) only one fifth the number can be counted as men capable of assisting in these buildings—4,000 men to build 2,500,-000 dollars' worth of buildings, which makes the proportion of each $625, instead of FIFTY CENTS, as you have made it; a very considerable difference, truly. And this to be drawn from men just driven, plundered, destitute, freezing, and starving, from Missouri.—And such of them as were not so scattered and disheartened by persecutions that had laid heavy on the church for many years, spread far and wide over the land. It is true that many additions were made to the church in this time of men well off, but as the time was short, and they generally living in distant places, very little of their means was made available during Joseph's life. Talk about "ONLY FIFTY CENTS APIECE." The entire labor of all the male members in the church at the time this command came forth continued until the death of Joseph, if devoted solely to the Temple at Nauvoo, would not have sufficed to finish it. Let them leave abandoned their families to their fate and lived themselves, as some of them actually did, on boiled potatoe vines, and they would not have done it. We hope indeed God has not bound such burdens on mens' shoulders.]

It is evedent that he lived, to the end of this appointment, secondly, by the Promaces, Prophesys, and revelations concerning him, contained in the Book of mormon, and Doc. & cov. First, in the Book of mormon, 2 Book of Neph, 2. ch is the following Prophesy conserning him, altered by Joseph of old, who was sold into Egypt. He says, "Thus saith the Lord unto me, a choice seer will I raise up out of the fruit of thy loins: And unto him will I give commandment, that he shall do a work for the fruit of thy loins, his Bretheren; which shall be of great worth unto them, Even to the bringing of them to a knoledge of the covenents which I have made with thy fathers. And I will give unto him a commandment, that he shall do none other work, save the work which I shall command him. And I will make him great in mine eyes, for he shall do my work." † † † † [Exactly; he SHALL do my work, saith the Lord; which is to establish the dispensation of the fullness of times, by means of which the seed of Joseph should be brought to a knowledge of the word of the Lord to their fathers, and a place in the true fold. Not he shall attempt it and his people be rejected, but he SHALL DO IT; and he shall do no other work; consequently he did not get rich nor make himself President of the Daughter of Babylon, though he tried hard enough; for the Lord did not command him to do these things.]

And Joseph said, "that seer will the Lord bless, and they that seek to destroy him shall be confounded." [Has this anything to do with the rejection of the church?] And again on Page, 486.—3d. Jesus said of him, "The life of my servant shall be in my hand; therefore, they shall not hurt him, although he shall be marred because of them. Yet I will heal him, for I will shew unto them, that my wisdom is greater, than the cunning of the Devil." [Do you mean to prove by this that Joseph was not hurt? That, though marred, he is not slain, and that Christ will heal him? Or what do you mean by it? Have you the hardihood to say that it is a prophecy of the rejection of the church? It is about as much in point as the good old Puritan's proof of infant sprinkling: "And Balaam arose and saddled his ass." "What could the poor dear creature saddle his ass for unless to carry his sweet little children to the minister to be sprinkled?"] And again, in the Doc. & cov. sec. 85; Par. 2. god says unto him. "Verily I say unto you the keys of this kingdom, shall never be taken from you, while thou art in the world, neither in the world to come." [God had just sealed him up to everlasting life; not because he kept his law perfectly, but because he repented of his sins. But by transgression he had lost the promise of standing on the earth with the keys of mysteries and revelations till the coming of Christ. D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4.—Still God here assures him the keys of the kingdom in the world to come, and that he should confer the oracles (keys of mysteries and revelations) on another.]

Again, in the 104, sec. Par. 6, in a revelation to the Twelve, given July 23d, 1837. The Lord says of him. "My hand shall be over him, and the keys which I have given him, and also to you-ward, shall not be taken from him, till I come." From these quotations we learn first, that Joseph was chosen, prepared and commanded to do a specific work; secondly, he was forbidden to do any other work, save that alone. Therdly, his work, as an effect; was to bring the fruit of the loins of Joseph to a knoledge of the covenents, god made with their fathers. Forthly, that his life was in the hand of god, and should be preserved to finish that work. [No; these promises are not that he shall be preserved till he finishes that work. The most you can make of them is, that while engaged in the work that God called him to he should be preserved. When he shook it off on to others and turned his head to politics, he was immediately cut off. So far from promising to preserve him till he accomplished his work, the Lord spoke in divers places of putting one in his stead to finish his work if he failed in it. D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2. sec. li. p. 2. sec. lxxxv. p. 2. Moreover, according to your own premises, he lived either much too long or not near long enough. If it was his business to bring the seed of Joseph to a knowledge of God's words to their fathers, it is yet to be done, though Joseph has been dead four years. If you claim that, when done, it will be the effect of his work in translating the Book of Mormon and conferring the priesthood, then when the translation was completed his work was done; and every act of his since then is supererogatory and contrary to God's word. He lived 14 years too long. You can choose your own horn of the dilemma.]

Fifthly, the keys of Authority confered upon him, for the accomplishment of that work, should never be taken from him, (through Transgression, or otherwise,) in this world, neither in the world to come. [This promise is merely as to the keys of the kingdom.—The word of God is most express that the keys of the mysteries and revelations would be taken from him for transgression or otherwise. "I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time

ing of the dispensation. Of these a very large portion had fallen asleep, and vast numbers have fallen away. Moreover this command came forth several years since, when no person, probably, estimated the church higher than 20,000 or 30,000, and some as low as 10,000 members, and they broken, scattered and impoverished by persecution. The great numbers of the church, whatever that number may be, have been added since this command was given. The cost of the Temple which they were required to build in stead of being at most $100,000, as you have stated, would be at least $1,600,000. The Temple books show an expenditure of over $700,000 already, not very well laid out it is true, but still actually expended on the building, and the work not half done. In the main building, the court of the Gentiles, as large an apartment as any in the building, is not touched; has not the first stone laid, and the external walls, with their gates and towers, is not progressed enough to show even its plan. The immense pile that is there requires more than $100,000 yet to finish its apartments.

The highest estimate that can with any kind of propriety be put on the members of the church when this command came forth is 20,000. The lowest estimate of cost for the Temple and other public buildings, (as the Nauvoo house,) which this revelation required them to build, is $2,500,000. As the church consists of families of men, women and children, (for these estimates of members include entire families,) only one fifth the number can be counted as men capable of assisting in these buildings—4,000 men to build 2,500,000 dollars' worth of buildings, which makes the proportion of each $625, instead of FIFTY CENTS, as you have made it; a very considerable difference, truly. And this to be drawn from men just driven, plundered, destitute, freezing, and starving, from Missouri.—And such of them as were not so scattered and disheartened by persecutions that had laid heavy on the church for many years, spread far and wide over the land. It is true that many additions were made to the church in this time of men well off, but as the time was short, and they generally living in distant places, very little of their means was made available during Joseph's life. Talk about "ONLY FIFTY CENTS APIECE." The entire labor of all the male members in the church at the time this command came forth continued until the death of Joseph, if devoted solely to the Temple at Nauvoo, would not have sufficed to finish it. Let them leave abandoned their families to their fate and lived themselves, as some of them actually did, on boiled potatoe vines, and they would not have done it. We hope indeed God has not bound such burdens on mens' shoulders.]

It is evedent that he lived, to the end of this appointment, secondly, by the Promaces, Propheesys, and revelations concerning him, contained in the Book of mormon, and Doc. & cov. First, in the Book of mormon, 2 Book of Neph, 2. ch is the following Prophesy conserning him, altered by Joseph of old, who was sold into Egypt. He says, "Thus saith the Lord unto me, a choice seer will I raise up out of the fruit of thy loins: And unto him will I give commandment, that he shall do a work for the fruit of thy loins, his Brethren; which shall be of great worth unto them, Even, to the bring-ng of them to a knoledge of the covenents which I have made with y fathers. And I will give unto him a commandment, that he all do none other work, save the work which I shall command m. And I will make him great in mine eyes, for he shall do my ork." † † † † [Exactly; he SHALL do my work, saith the rd; which is to establish the dispensation of the fullness of times, means of which the seed of Joseph should be brought to a knowl-e of the word of the Lord to their fathers, and a place in the true d. Not he shall attempt it and his people be rejected, but he ALL DO IT; and he shall do no other work; consequently he did t get rich nor make himself President of the Daughter of Babylon, though he tried hard enough; for the Lord did not command him to do these things.]

And Joseph said, "that seer will the Lord bless, and they that seek to destroy him shall be confounded." [Has this anything to do with the rejection of the church?] And again on Page, 486.—3d. Jesus said of him, "The life of my servant shall be in my hand; therefore, they shall not hurt him, although he shall be marred because of them. Yet I will heal him, for I will shew unto them, that my wisdom is greater, than the cunning of the Devil." [Do you mean to prove by this that Joseph was not hurt? That, though marred, he is not slain, and that Christ will heal him! Or what do you mean by it? Have you the hardihood to say that it is a prophecy of the rejection of the church? It is about as much in point as the good old Puritan's proof of infant sprinkling: "And Balaam arose and saddled his ass." "What could the poor dear creature saddle his ass for unless to carry his sweet little children to the minister to be sprinkled?"] And again, in the Doc. & cov. sec. 85; Par. 2. god says unto him. "Verily I say unto you the keys of this kingdom, shall never be taken from you, while thou art in the world, neither in the world to come." [God had just sealed him up to everlasting life; not because he kept his law perfectly, but because he repented of his sins. But by transgression he had lost the promise of standing on the earth with the keys of mysteries and revelations till the coming of Christ. D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4.—Still God here assures him the keys of the kingdom in the world to come, and that he should confer the oracles (keys of mysteries and revelations) on another.]

Again, in the 104, sec. Par. 6, in a revelation to the Twelve, given July 23d, 1837. The Lord says of him. "My hand shall be over him, and the keys which I have given him, and also to you-ward, shall not be taken from him, till I come." From these quotations we learn first, that Joseph was chosen, prepared and commanded to do a specific work; secondly, he was forbidden to do any other work, save that alone. Therdly, his work, as an effect; was to bring the fruit of the loins of Joseph to a knoledge of the covenents, god made with their fathers. Forthly, that his life was in the hand of god, and should be preserved to finish that work. [No; these promises are not that he shall be preserved till he finishes that work. The most you can make of them is, that while engaged in the work that God called him to he should be preserved. When he shook it off on to others and turned his head to politics, he was immediately cut off. So far from promising to preserve him till he accomplished his work, the Lord spoke in divers places of putting one in his stead to finish his work if he failed in it. D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2. sec. li. p. 2. sec. lxxxv. p. 2. Moreover, according to your own premises, he lived either much too long or not near long enough. If it was his business to bring the seed of Joseph to a knowledge of God's words to their fathers, it is yet to be done, though Joseph has been dead four years. If you claim that, when done, it will be the effect of his work in translating the Book of Mormon and conferring the priesthood, then when the translation was completed his work was done; and every act of his since then is supererogatory and contrary to God's word. He lived 14 years too long. You can choose your own horn of the dilemma.]

Fifthly, the keys of Authority confered upon him, for the accomplishment of that work, should never be taken from him, (through Transgression, or otherwise,) in this world, neither in the world to come. [This promise is merely as to the keys of the kingdom.—The word of God is most express that the keys of the mysteries and revelations would be taken from him for transgression or otherwise.

"I have given unto him the keys of the mystery of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he ABIDE in me, and IF NOT another WILL I PLANT in his stead." D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4.

"There is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, IF HE ABIDE in me." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1.

"But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2.

"I have given him the keys of the mysteries, and the revelations, which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead." D. & C. sec. li. p. 2.

Until 1833 (D. & C. sec. lxxxv.) he had no assurances of retaining any keys only by continual obedience. No where are the keys of mysteries and revelations assured to him unconditionally, and as he is dead and buried it would be a curiosity to hear any man tell in what possible sense he is prophet, seer and revelator in this dispensation of the fullness of times.]

And sixly, that the keys of Authority, over the Twelve Apostles of the church, in their official capasity, should not be taken from him, [and his successors in office,] till the Lord comes. (The keys referred to are the keys of the church.) [What do you mean by "keys of the church?"] Now, the work wich he was commanded to do, was first, to Translate the Book of mormon. Secondly, to Organize the church. 3ly, to Preside in council, and sit in order all the affairs of the church, untill the coming of the Lord; [He did not set in order all the affairs of the church till the coming of Christ, but left it to his successor; or if, as you say, there is no church, then it is not to be done at all, and God's promises have fallen to the ground unfulfilled.] for his work was coexistent, with the existance of the church in the favour of God; he holding the keys of revelation, and knoledge to them-ward, until the Lord comes: And if any others recived those keys, they were to act under his council, and dictation, in all their administrations in the church.—See Doc. cov. Page, 407. But again, 3ly, it is evedent that the church was rejected at his death, by the fact that it was disorganized, divided, and scattered as a consequence of his death.

[The church was neither disorganized or scattered at the time of his death, or in consequence of it. So far from being scattered, many thousand saints, variously estimated from 15,000 to 30,000 in number, were at that time and continued nearly two years to inhabit a single county, making the bulk of its population, and they were numerous in all the adjoining counties. The gathering continued with unabated zeal for a long time. And so far from being disorganized by his death, not a single quorum was broken by it.—No quorun except the First Presidency was affected by it in the least, and that only by the change of part of its members. Leaving out of consideration altogether the fact of one being appointed to stand instead of Joseph, and holding the same keys which God had conferred upon him until he should plant another in his stead, D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4. sec. li. p. 2, the First Presidency was not broken up nor the church disorganized even in that quorum. Sidney Rigdon remained in that quorum, having the same keys of the kingdom with Joseph, D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 3, and the same right to preside over the church and over the council. D. & C. sec. v. p. 6. Had no First President appeared to stand in the stead of Joseph and exercising the proper functions of a seer, revelator and translator, still the church were bound to go on and were sufficiently organized to do so in all their various duties and avocations from day to day except the mere and especial duties of the revelator, who teaches the whole church by way of commandment. Sidney Rigdon had just as good a right to preside in Joseph's absence as Joseph had to preside at all. D. & C. sec. v. p. 6. He could, therefore, hold a regular high council, or a general Conference, and could give lawful missions to the Twelve, and exercise all the usual functions of the general executive of the church in the absence of the First President, not as prophet, seer and revelator, guardian or any thing else, except merely as an associate member in the First Presidency.—And it was his duty to do so until prophet Strang appeared in that vocation. As well might you say that the church was broken up some years previous, when about half the Twelve and a majority of the members of the church denied the faith and endeavored to set up a separate church in Kirtland. And far more like truth would it be to say the church was rejected and the keys taken from its priesthood when the entire First Presidency and nearly all the efficient members were taken by their enemies and held in bondage in Missouri. That fact was accompanied with a real scattering of the entire church, as well as the cessation of the functions of the priesthood in nearly all its quorums. The church was at that time really scattered, disorganized and divided. The First Presidency, the Presidency in Zion, and the Twelve, all furnished names in the list of apostates of that day. Those who did not apostatize with very few exceptions were cast into prison, where, for a long time, they were precluded from acting in their ministry, and the few that escaped this, with hundreds if not thousands of others, were exiles and refugees fleeing for their lives at mid winter.

Nothing like this occurred at the martyrdom of Joseph. All the quorums of the church were full or nearly so, and they continued so. The saints were principally gathered together, being the principal inhabitants of a large city and the surrounding country, and they continued so. The gospel was being preached to the nations by some hundreds of elders, and so it continued. It is true that these things are since changed, but they did not change at Joseph's death, and the change was not caused by his death. There is no connection between the two facts. The scattering, breaking up and disorganizing of which you speak took place in 1846, about two years after the death of Joseph, and to an extent sufficient for the foundation of an argument it has not yet occurred. They have been several times more scattered than now, and no one pretends that the church has, therefore, been so often rejected.]

Which Proves, that the keys of the church, and the keys of the kingdom, which he had, being synonymous, (See Doc. cov. sec. 13, Par. 18, last clause,) ware taken away with him; leaving the church in a willderness of Darkness, to be Disorganized, as stated above.

(To be continued.)

☞ It appears that the Mormons near Council Bluffs voted the Whig ticket en mass. Several papers dispute the legality of their votes on some ground to us unknown, and say it will be tested.

☞ Revolution has broken out in Russia.

THE VANITIES OF THE WORLD.

Farewell, ye gilded follies, pleasing troubles;
Farewell, ye honored rags, ye glorious bubbles.
Fame's but a hollow echo; gold pure clay;
Honor, the darling of but one short day;
Beauty, the eye's idol, but a damasked skin;
State, but a golden prison to live in,
And torture free-born minds; embroidered traine,
Merely but pageants for proud swelling veins;
And blood allied to greatness is alone
Inherited, not purchased, not our own.
Fame, honor, beauty, state, traine, blood, and birth,
Are but the fading blossoms of the earth.

SIR HENRY WOTTON.

of my coming, if he ABIDE in me, and IF NOT another WILL I PLANT in his stead." D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4.

"There is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, IF HE ABIDE in me." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1.

"But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2.

"I have given him the keys of the mysteries, and the revelations, which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead." D. & C. sec. li. p. 2.

Until 1833 (D. & C. sec. lxxxv.) he had no assurances of retaining any keys only by continual obedience. No where are the keys of mysteries and revelations assured to him unconditionally, and as he is dead and buried it would be a curiosity to hear any man tell in what possible sense he is prophet, seer and revelator in this dispensation of the fullness of times.]

And sixly, that the keys of Authority, over the Twelve Apostles of the church, in their official capasity, should not be taken from him, [and his successors in office,] till the Lord comes. (The keys referred to are the keys of the church.) [What do you mean by "keys of the church?"] Now, the work wich he was commanded to do, was first, to Translate the Book of mormon. Secondly, to Organize the church. 3ly, to Preside in council, and sit in order all the affairs of the church, untill the coming of the Lord; [He did not set in order all the affairs of the church till the coming of Christ, but left it to his successor; or if, as you say, there is no church, then it is not to be done at all, and God's promises have fallen to the ground unfulfilled.] for his work was coexistent, with the existance of the church in the favour of God; he holding the keys of revelation, and knoledge to them-ward, until the Lord comes: And if any others recived those keys, they were to act under his council, and dictation, in all their administrations in the church.—See Doc. cov. Page, 407. But again, 3ly, it is evedent that the church was rejected at his death, by the fact that it was disorganized, divided, and scattered as a consequence of his death.

[The church was neither disorganized or scattered at the time of his death, or in consequence of it. So far from being scattered, many thousand saints, variously estimated from 15,000 to 30,000 in number, were at that time and continued nearly two years to inhabit a single county, making the bulk of its population, and they were numerous in all the adjoining counties. The gathering continued with unabated zeal for a long time. And so far from being disorganized by his death, not a single quorum was broken by it.—No quorun except the First Presidency was affected by it in the least, and that only by the change of part of its members. Leaving out of consideration altogether the fact of one being appointed to stand instead of Joseph, and holding the same keys which God had conferred upon him until he should plant another in his stead, D. & C. sec. xi. p. 4. sec. li. p. 2, the First Presidency was not broken up nor the church disorganized even in that quorum. Sidney Rigdon remained in that quorum, having the same keys of the kingdom with Joseph, D. & C. sec. lxxxv. p. 3, and the same right to preside over the church and over the council. D. & C. sec. v. p. 6. Had no First President appeared to stand in the stead of Joseph and exercising the proper functions of a seer, revelator and translator, still the church were bound to go on and were sufficiently organized to do so in all their various duties and avocations from day to day except the mere and especial duties of the revelator, who teaches the whole church by way of commandment. Sidney Rigdon had just as good a right to preside in Joseph's absence as Joseph had to preside at all. D. & C. sec. v. p. 6. He could, therefore, hold a regular high council, or a general Conference, and could give lawful missions to the Twelve, and exercise all the usual functions of the general executive of the church in the absence of the First President, not as prophet, seer and revelator, guardian or any thing else, except merely as an associate member in the First Presidency.—And it was his duty to do so until prophet Strang appeared in that vocation. As well might you say that the church was broken up some years previous, when about half the Twelve and a majority of the members of the church denied the faith and endeavored to set up a separate church in Kirtland. And far more like truth would it be to say the church was rejected and the keys taken from its priesthood when the entire First Presidency and nearly all the efficient members were taken by their enemies and held in bondage in Missouri. That fact was accompanied with a real scattering of the entire church, as well as the cessation of the functions of the priesthood in nearly all its quorums. The church was at that time really scattered, disorganized and divided. The First Presidency, the Presidency in Zion, and the Twelve, all furnished names in the list of apostates of that day. Those who did not apostatize with very few exceptions were cast into prison, where, for a long time, they were precluded from acting in their ministry, and the few that escaped this, with hundreds if not thousands of others, were exiles and refugees fleeing for their lives at mid winter.

Nothing like this occurred at the martyrdom of Joseph. All the quorums of the church were full or nearly so, and they continued so. The saints were principally gathered together, being the principal inhabitants of a large city and the surrounding country, and they continued so. The gospel was being preached to the nations by some hundreds of elders, and so it continued. It is true that these things are since changed, but they did not change at Joseph's death, and the change was not caused by his death. There is no connection between the two facts. The scattering, breaking up and disorganizing of which you speak took place in 1846, about two years after the death of Joseph, and to an extent sufficient for the foundation of an argument it has not yet occurred. They have been several times more scattered than now, and no one pretends that the church has, therefore, been so often rejected.]

Which Proves, that the keys of the church, and the keys of the kingdom, which he had, being synonymous, (See Doc. cov. sec. 13, Par. 18, last clause,) ware taken away with him; leaving the church in a willderness of Darkness, to be Disorganized, as stated above.

(To be continued.)

☞ It appears that the Mormons near Council Bluffs voted the Whig ticket en mass. Several papers dispute the legality of their votes on some ground to us unknown, and say it will be tested.

☞ Revolution has broken out in Russia.

THE VANITIES OF THE WORLD.

Farewell, ye gilded follies, pleasing troubles;
Farewell, ye honored rags, ye glorious bubbles.
Fame's but a hollow echo; gold pure clay;
Honor, the darling of but one short day;
Beauty, the eye's idol, but a damasked skin;
State, but a golden prison to live in,
And torture free-born minds; embroidered trains,
Merely but pageants for proud swelling veins;
And blood allied to greatness is alone
Inherited, not purchased, not our own.
Fame, honor, beauty, state, train, blood, and birth,
Are but the fading blossoms of the earth.

SIR HENRY WOTTON.

☞ We are in the weekly receipt of the Walworth Democrat, published by Cooley and (Oliver) Cowdery. It is conducted with ability, and laboring hard in an uphill cause—Cass Democracy.—By the way, what has become of all Dr. McLellin's promises that brother Cowdery was about to join him in building up a new Mormon church? McL. has regularly roared for a year and a half, and finally run out. Had he any promise of assistance from brother Cowdery, or was he lying all this time? His defunct Ensign did contain one letter with Oliver's name to it, saying he "held the keys," &c., but as he takes extraordinary liberties both with facts and documents, we always suspected it was a forgery. Indeed we think Oliver would do worse in joining hands with Dr. McL. in religion than with Mr. Cooley in politics, and even this is the losing hand in the long run.

By the way, not long since Oliver was in nomination for Representative in the State Assembly, and that blackguard, the "Elkhorn Star," opposed him on the ground of his being a witness of the Book of Mormon. Doubtless if John the Revelator was a candidate it would oppose him because he was a witness of the resurrection of Jesus. But the friends of Mr. Cowdery produced testimonials of the leading citizens, both political and religious, without distinction of party or sect, of the northern part of Ohio, of his excellent character while in that region. Just as it should be. Oliver certifies that he knows the Book of Mormon "was translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates. And we declare with words of soberness that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and SAW the PLATES, and the engravings thereon, and the VOICE of the LORD commanded us to bear record of it;" and the leading men of various sects and parties in northern Ohio, where he has spent many years of his life, certify that his character is above reproach. Surely he is entitled to credit. We thank the Gentiles for stirring up this matter.

On the whole, Oliver seems to be in good demand and first rate standing. Even Phineas Young is here, telling that brother Cowdery is going with him to Council Bluffs. We don't doubt he does so with just as much truth as McLellin told that he was going with him. A short time ago all were against him; now all crying him up, and bragging that he will go with them. Don't think they will lift him high enough to make him dizzy. If they should, they would let him fall very hard.

THE BUFFALO HUNT.

Arrangements are now going forward rapidly for dismembering the Republic of Mexico, by means of an armed invasion of the region between the Rio Grande and the Sierra Madre. The material for this invasion consists of military stores given away, or, what is equivalent, sold for prices merely nominal by officers of the U. S., on disbanding the army just returning from Mexico. Most of the force also consists of the disbanded soldiers. The arrangement is to enlist a strong party for a great buffalo hunt, organize them in small parties in all the western States, concentrate in the wild parts of the new Territories of the United States with large military trains, including siege guns and munitions of war, with good military leaders and engineers, to hunt buffaloes (or an empire) in the ancient cities and rich mines of Mexico. The President and principal officers of the United States disclaim all knowledge of these proceedings, but the New Orleans papers are full of it. Should it succeed there will be another annexation preceeding on hand. If it fails the band will merely turn robbers, and live on the plunder of the Mexicans, or any body else that cross their path.

What concern the United States' government really have in this proceeding is unknown. They will doubtless take measures to prevent the invasion of Mexico by an armed force from within the U. S. But we venture to predict that, if the party is strong enough to raise the least hope of success, all measures taken against it will be just one day too late; and, if it succeeds, there will be an early attempt to annex a new territory to this nation. Probably a little care may be used to extend slavery over the region first, and annex it afterwards.

☞ We have just received a copy of the "Wisconsin Standard," a Taylor paper, published at Geneva in this (Walworth) Co., by D. M. Keeler. This paper declares for "free soil, free labor, free speech and FREE MEN," but says, "we place no confidence in Mr. Van Buren's pledge to carry out these measures," and, therefore, we suppose, goes for Taylor, who has given no such pledges, but is pledged in the value of 280 slaves to maintain slave labor and all its etceteras.

CURIOUS FACT.—A degree of latitude is equal to a degree of Fahrenheit, and 400 feet of elevation is the same. The fact, though curious, is of a demonstrative character, and will go far in enabling us to ascertain facts in reference to climate.—Ex. paper.

☞ However oppressed truth may be for a time she will, at least, rise above oppression. False friends may betray her, inconsiderate advocates may weaken her influence or suspend her action for the present; but in due time she will assume her proper seat, and sway her rightful sceptre.—Ex. paper.

☞ The yellow fever has made its appearance at New Orleans: several cases of the same disease have also proved fatal on board of vessels performing quarantine, at Staten Island, New York.—Walworth County Democrat.

☞ Daniel Drayton has been sentenced by the criminal court of Washington to 20 years imprisonment in the penitentiary for aiding in the escape of slaves from the District of Columbia.—Wis. Standard.

☞ To enrich my mind and purify my heart, to keep my tongue still and my arm active, to eat slowly and sleep quietly, this is my philosophy. Be slow in choosing a friend, and slower to change him; courteous to all; intimate with few; slight no man for poverty, nor esteem any one for his wealth.

CONFERENCE.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Voree Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next. By order of the Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

CUT AND POLISHED STONE,

Of superior quality and finish, and of various sorts, constantly on hand and for sale at the Voree quarry. Caps, Sills, Tombstones, Doorsteps, Imposing stones, &c., made to order on short notice.

Voree, April 27th, 1848.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

☞ We are in the weekly receipt of the Walworth Democrat, published by Cooley and (Oliver) Cowdery. It is conducted with ability, and laboring hard in an uphill cause—Cass Democracy.—By the way, what has become of all Dr. McLellin's promises that brother Cowdery was about to join him in building up a new Mormon church? McL. has regularly roared for a year and a half, and finally run out. Had he any promise of assistance from brother Cowdery, or was he lying all this time? His defunct Ensign did contain one letter with Oliver's name to it, saying he "held the keys," &c., but as he takes extraordinary liberties both with facts and documents, we always suspected it was a forgery. Indeed, we think Oliver would do worse in joining hands with Dr. McL. in religion than with Mr. Cooley in politics, and even this is the losing hand in the long run.

By the way, not long since Oliver was in nomination for Representative in the State Assembly, and that blackguard, the "Elkhorn Star," opposed him on the ground of his being a witness of the Book of Mormon. Doubtless if John the Revelator was a candidate it would oppose him because he was a witness of the resurrection of Jesus. But the friends of Mr. Cowdery produced testimonials of the leading citizens, both political and religious, without distinction of party or sect, of the northern part of Ohio, of his excellent character while in that region. Just as it should be. Oliver certifies that he knows the Book of Mormon "was translated by the gift and power of God, for his voice hath declared it unto us; wherefore we know of a surety that the work is true. And we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates. And we declare with words of soberness that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes, that we beheld and SAW the PLATES, and the engravings thereon, and the VOICE of the LORD commanded us to bear record of it;" and the leading men of various sects and parties in northern Ohio, where he has spent many years of his life, certify that his character is above reproach. Surely he is entitled to credit. We thank the Gentiles for stirring up this matter.

On the whole, Oliver seems to be in good demand and first rate standing. Even Phineas Young is here, telling that brother Cowdery is going with him to Council Bluffs. We don't doubt he does so with just as much truth as McLellin told that he was going with him. A short time ago all were against him; now all crying him up, and bragging that he will go with them. Don't think they will lift him high enough to make him dizzy. If they should, they would let him fall very hard.

THE BUFFALO HUNT.

Arrangements are now going forward rapidly for dismembering the Republic of Mexico, by means of an armed invasion of the region between the Rio Grande and the Sierra Madre. The material for this invasion consists of military stores given away, or, what is equivalent, sold for prices merely nominal by officers of the U. S., on disbanding the army just returning from Mexico. Most of the force also consists of the disbanded soldiers. The arrangement is to enlist a strong party for a great buffalo hunt, organize them in small parties in all the western States, concentrate in the wild parts of the new Territories of the United States with large military trains, including siege guns and munitions of war, with good military leaders and engineers, to hunt buffaloes (or an empire) in the ancient cities and rich mines of Mexico. The President and principal officers of the United States disclaim all knowledge of these proceedings, but the New Orleans papers are full of it. Should it succeed there will be another annexation proceeding on hand. If it fails the band will merely turn robbers, and live on the plunder of the Mexicans, or any body else that cross their path.

What concern the United States' government really have in this proceeding is unknown. They will doubtless take measures to prevent the invasion of Mexico by an armed force from within the U. S. But we venture to predict that, if the party is strong enough to raise the least hope of success, all measures taken against it will be just one day too late; and, if it succeeds, there will be an early attempt to annex a new territory to this nation. Probably a little care may be used to extend slavery over the region first, and annex it afterwards.

☞ We have just received a copy of the "Wisconsin Standard," a Taylor paper, published at Geneva in this (Walworth) Co., by D. M. Keeler. This paper declares for "free soil, free labor, free speech and FREE MEN," but says, "we place no confidence in Mr. Van Buren's pledge to carry out these measures," and, therefore, we suppose, goes for Taylor, who has given no such pledges, but is pledged in the value of 280 slaves to maintain slave labor and all its etceteras.

CURIOUS FACT.—A degree of latitude is equal to a degree of Fahrenheit, and 400 feet of elevation is the same. The fact, though curious, is of a demonstrative character, and will go far in enabling us to ascertain facts in reference to climate.—Ex. paper.

☞ However oppressed truth may be for a time she will, at least, rise above oppression. False friends may betray her, inconsiderate advocates may weaken her influence or suspend her action for the present; but in due time she will assume her proper seat, and sway her rightful sceptre.—Ex. paper.

☞ The yellow fever has made its appearance at New Orleans: several cases of the same disease have also proved fatal on board of vessels performing quarantine, at Staten Island, New York.—Walworth County Democrat.

☞ Daniel Drayton has been sentenced by the criminal court of Washington to 20 years imprisonment in the penitentiary for aiding in the escape of slaves from the District of Columbia.—Wis. Standard.

☞ To enrich my mind and purify my heart, to keep my tongue still and my arm active, to eat slowly and sleep quietly, this is my philosophy. Be slow in choosing a friend, and slower to change him; courteous to all; intimate with few; slight no man for poverty, nor esteem any one for his wealth.

CONFERENCE.

The Semi-Annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at Voree Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of October next. By order of the Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

CUT AND POLISHED STONE,

Of superior quality and finish, and of various sorts, constantly on hand and for sale at the Voree quarry. Caps, Sills, Tombstones, Doorsteps, Imposing stones, &c., made to order on short notice.

Voree, April 27th, 1848.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS:

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 30.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, OCT. 12, 1848. [WHOLE No. 94.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

☞ In inserting the following article we take occasion to make an explanation, the want of which may have misled some brethren. That is, that we do not endorse the writings of our correspondents published in the Herald. They are published as the views of their authors, intending that they shall be read and considered, but not in every case subscribed as the infallible exposition of the will of God. Consequently no one need be "stumped" if he should find in any of them sentiments which he deems erroneous. We may add that in matters of doctrine there are more disagreements than differences, and this question of God's foreknowledge we believe to be a case in point. We have just turned back and read the article of R. F. Mills' and recollect well a long conversation we had with him on the subject since that article was written, and on the main question we believe there is no difference of opinion between him and Bro. Post. The differences are mere incidents to the interpretation of certain scriptures.

We understand brother Mills' position to be that God has not a present and continued consciousness in his mind of each and every trifling incident which is, has been, or shall be, throughout the universe and throughout eternity. But nevertheless that he has the power of bringing such a consciousness into exercise, by the action of his own mind on itself. If we were to give an example to help out the idea, it would be this: we distinctly recollect ten thousand events that have occurred in our past life, but that recollection is not continually active. We are not constantly thinking of each and all those events. Yet we can call up any of them that we wish to by the action of the mind on itself. So too we know events that are future, such as the fact and time that the sun will rise tomorrow, and every day in the year. But we have not the conciousness of these facts present continually in our mind, but at pleasure call them up by an effort of the mind. So in a similar but infinitely more perfect manner God can call up to consciousness any act whatever that has ever occurred, or ever will occur in the entire universe. Or he can inquire of his servants or go and see as in the case of Sodom. This is what we understand to be brother Mills' theory, and considering that he is a very young man, and has had no opportunity of education, and scarcely any of conversing with the learned, we give him the credit of philosophising deeply and profoundly upon a very difficult and abstruse subject, though we might not go with him in nearly all his views.

For the Gospel Herald.

FOREKNOWLEDGE.

A brother writing from the State of N. Y. says in regard to a piece with the above caption, "Herald No. 19, signed R. F. Mills, rather stumps me. He shows that God knows a thing when it comes to pass just as we do. If he does not know the end from the beginning, how could he foretell it? I think God can know beforehand what a man will do without infringing at all on man's agency. If this doctrine be true I need more knowledge to make it look consistent." My paper No. 19 missed, so that I was at a loss at first to know what reply to make to my brother. Since then I have seen the No. in the hands of another brother during a recent visit, and heard the piece read, which induces me to direct your attention to said article, and, if you see fit, to insert this in the Herald. I understand "foreknowledge" to be knowledge of a thing or event which has not yet happened. The God of Israel possesses this power; and did he not possess it, what difference could there be between his worship and idol worship? Let us see what he says. Isa. xlviii. 3, 7. & Book of Mormon page 53. I quote from Book of Mormon:—

"Behold, I have declared the former things from the beginning; and they went forth out of my mouth, and I shewed them; I did shew them suddenly. And I did it because I knew that thou art obstinate, and thy neck was an iron sinew, and thy brow brass, and I have, even from the beginning, declared to thee; before it came to pass I shewed them thee; and I shewed them for fear lest thou shouldest say, mine idol hath done them, and my graven image, and my molten image hath commanded them. Thou hast seen and heard all this; and will ye not declare them? And that I have shewed thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them. They are created now, and not from the beginning; even before the day when thou heardst them not, they were declared unto thee, lest thou should say, behold I knew them."

Now if God knows and can declare a thing before it comes to pass, he can prepare beforehand for every contingency that happens to man. Does he know of individual acts? Certainly. He knew that Adam would eat the forbidden fruit, and therefore prepared a remedy to rescue him from the effect of it, from before the foundation of the world. If God did not know a thing before it comes to pass, there could be no such thing as prophecy. God through his word has plentifully declared the acts of nations and of individuals, and at the same time has not decreed their acts in such a way as to affect the agency of man. There is an old stale doctrine in the world and has been for a long time (many call it Calvinistic) which teaches that there is no difference between the decrees of God and the knowledge of God. That they are synonymous. The believer confesses with the mouth that Jesus is the Christ, assents to some outward rituals of the church that he has been brought up in the faith of, and rests in complete carnal security, saying to himself if God knows I shall be saved why I shall be; and if he knows I am to be damned why I can't avert it; what God knows, will be, for he foreordains all that comes to pass.

I think I can see a difference between decrees and foreknowledge, and would explain it in this way: Decrees are unalterable, foreknowledge is alterable, according to the acts of man, acting on his agency, and according to wisdom; and will give a few proofs: "Now the decrees of God are unalterable; therefore the way is prepared, that whosoever will, may walk therein, and be saved."—Alma, Book of Mormon, page 328. I take this for a fact without

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 30.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, OCT. 12, 1848. [WHOLE No. 94.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

☞ In inserting the following article we take occasion to make n explanation, the want of which may have misled some brethren. That is, that we do not endorse the writings of our correspondents ublished in the Herald. They are published as the views of heir authors, intending that they shall be read and considered, but ot in every case subscribed as the infallible exposition of the will f God. Consequently no one need be "stumped" if he should ind in any of them sentiments which he deems erroneous. We may add that in matters of doctrine there are more disagreeents than differences, and this question of God's foreknowledge we believe to be a case in point. We have just turned back and read the rticle of R. F. Mills' and recollect well a long conversation we had ith him on the subject since that article was written, and on the ain question we believe there is no difference of opinion between im and Bro. Post. The differences are mere incidents to the interretation of certain scriptures.

We understand brother Mills' position to be that God has not a resent and continued consciousness in his mind of each and every ifling incident which is, has been, or shall be, throughout the unierse and throughout eternity. But nevertheless that he has the ower of bringing such a consciousness into exercise, by the action f his own mind on itself. If we were to give an example to help ut the idea, it would be this: we distinctly recollect ten thousand vents that have occurred in our past life, but that recollection is ot continually active. We are not constantly thinking of each nd all those events. Yet we can call up any of them that we ish to by the action of the mind on itself. So too we know events at are future, such as the fact and time that the sun will rise toorsow, and every day in the year. But we have not the conciousss of these facts present continually in our mind, but at pleasure ll them up by an effort of the mind. So in a similar but infinitely re perfect manner God can call up to consciousness any act hatever that has ever occurred, or ever will occur in the entire niverse. Or he can inquire of his servants or go and see as in e case of Sodom. This is what we understand to be brother ills' theory, and considering that he is a very young man, and s had no opportunity of education, and scarcely any of conversing ith the learned, we give him the credit of philosophising deeply nd profoundly upon a very difficult and abstruse subject, though e might not go with him in nearly all his views.

For the Gospel Herald.

FOREKNOWLEDGE.

A brother writing from the State of N. Y. says in regard to a ce with the above caption, "Herald No. 19, signed R. F. Mills, ther stumps me. He shows that God knows a thing when it mes to pass just as we do. If he does not know the end from the beginning, how could he foretell [illegible] God can know beforehand what a man will do without infringing at all on man's agency. If this doctrine be true I need more knowledge to make it look consistent." My paper No. 19 missed, so that I was at a loss at first to know what reply to make to my brother. Since then I have seen the No. in the hands of another brother during a recent visit, and heard the piece read, which induces me to direct your attention to said article, and, if you see fit, to insert this in the Herald. I understand "foreknowledge" to be knowledge of a thing or ever[illegible] this power; and did he not possess it, what difference could there be between his worship and idol worship? Let us see what he says. Isa. xlviii. 3, 7. & Book of Mormon page 53. I quote from Book of Mormon:—

"Behold, I have declared the former things from the beginning; and they went forth out of my mouth, and I shewed them; I did shew them suddenly. And I did it because I knew that thou art obstinate, and thy neck was an iron sinew, and thy brow brass, and I have, even from the beginning, declared to thee; before it came to pass I shewed them thee; and I shewed them for fear lest thou shouldest say, mine idol hath done them, and my graven image, and my molten image hath commanded them. Thou hast seen and heard all this; and will ye not declare them? And that I have shewed thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them. They are created now, and not from the beginning; even before the day when thou heardst them not, they were declared unto thee, lest thou should say, behold I knew them."

Now if God knows and can declare a thing before it comes to pass, he can prepare beforehand for every contingency that happens to man. Does he know of individual acts? Certainly. He knew that Adam would eat the forbidden fruit, and therefore prepared a remedy to rescue him from the effect of it, from before the foundation of the world. If God did not know a thing before it comes to pass, there could be no such thing as prophecy. God through his word has plentifully declared the acts of nations and of individuals, and at the same time has not decreed their acts in such a way as to affect the agency of man. There is an old stale doctrine in the world and has been for a long time (many call it Calvinistic) which teaches that there is no difference between the decrees of God and the knowledge of God. That they are synonymous. The believer confesses with the mouth that Jesus is the Christ, assents to some outward rituals of the church that he has been brought up in the faith of, and rests in complete carnal security, saying to himself if God knows I shall be saved why I shall be; and if he knows I am to be damned why I can't avert it; what God knows, will be, for he foreordains all that comes to pass.

I think I can see a difference between decrees and foreknowledge, and would explain it in this way: Decrees are unalterable, foreknowledge is alterable, according to the acts of man, acting on his agency, and according to wisdom; and will give a few proofs; "Now the decrees of God are unalterable; therefore the way is prepared, that whosoever will, may walk therein, and be saved."—Alma, Book of Mormon, page 328. I take this for a fact without comment or referring to the fulfillment of decrees. How is it with foreknowledge of God, or God's foreknowledge? We shall see: "And David knew that Saul secretly practiced mischief against him; and he said to Abiathar the priest, Bring hither the ephod.—then said David, O Lord God of Israel, thy servant hath certainly heard that Saul seeketh to come to Keilah, to destroy the city for my sake. Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand?—Will Saul come down as thy servant hath heard? O Lord God of Israel, I beseech thee, tell thy servant. And the Lord said, He will come down. Then said David, Will the men of Keilah deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? And the Lord said, They will deliver thee up." Now here is foreknowledge, and if there be no difference between foreknowledge and decrees, as decrees are unalterable, Saul came to Keilah, and the men of Keilah delivered David and his men into the hands of Saul; which was not the fact, for "then David and his men, which were about 600, arose and departed out of Keilah, and went whithersoever they could go. And it was told Saul that David was escaped from Keilah; and he forbare to go forth." 1 Sam. xxii. 9 to 13.* Did David frustrate the knowledge of God by leaving Keilah? No; he only availed himself of what God knew would be the result of his tarrying there.—David acted in wisdom; he called for a chosen priest of God for the ephod, (now the ephod contained the Urim and Thummim,) and inquired of the Lord. The Lord answered, and David knew how to act to be saved from his enemy; and we see by his act that he put implicit confidence in the word of God. Who can set limits to the knowledge of God, when even the hairs of our heads are numbered, and not one shall fall to the ground without his notice? When God came to Abraham and spoke concerning the cry of Sodom, he came as a man comes, and he talked with him as one man would talk with another. So he often reasoneth with a man as one would reason with his friend, asking questions, though he knoweth all things, and hath no need that a man tell him any thing. God knows what every man is doing, what he will do, and and what he might do. He knows that mankind as a mass are doing evil earnestly with both hands; and that the reward of evil will be to man a great calamity. Therefore he prepares the remedy, and says:—

"Therefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments; and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world," &c. D. & C. sec. i. p. 4. One of these commandments was to translate the Book of Mormon by Urim and Thummim, which he has accomplished by the gift of God. In the Book of Mormon there is predicted the very words men would say when they would hear of the book; which every traveling elder has heard reiterated again and again. It records doctrines predicted 24 centuries ago by Nephi, as he was inspired of God, which are held by many men in this generation. Our many churches are there predicted, and that many should believe the book, notwithstanding the opposition it would meet in coming forth. In short numerous are the predictions in the Bible and Book of Mormon, which are being fulfilled in this generation, all going to show that God knows a thing before it comes to pass. Now he that hears the strong testimony of the elders of Israel, raised up through the instrumentality of the prophet Joseph, and repents and works righteousness in obedience to the gospel, God knows he will be saved; while he who hears Christ speaking from heaven through his servants of the last days and will not believe and repent will be damned.

STEPHEN POST.

*In this case God's foreknowledge was not changed. God foreknew that Saul would go down to Keilah after David if he staid there. He foreknew that the men of Keilah would deliver him up if they had the opportunity; and he equally foreknew that David would inquire by Urim and Thummim and would not stay there, and that therefore Saul would not go there, for David and the men of Keilah would not deliver him up.

MINUTES OF THE SEMI-ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD AT VOREE ON THE SIXTH, SEVENTH AND EIGHTH OF OCTOBER, 1848.

October 6th—forenoon session.—Opened by reading the lxxi. Psalm by Pres. Strang. Singing. Prayer and consecration of the Conference by Pres. Strang. On motion,

Resolved, That the First President has the right, by precedence, rank and power of priesthood, to preside in all Conferences, wherever he may be.

Preaching by Jehiel Savage, one of the Twelve. Adjourned an hour and a half. Benediction by John E. Page, President of the Twelve.

Afternoon session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by John E. Page. Preaching by John E. Page. Adjourned till evening. Benediction by Jason W. Briggs, High Priest.

Evening session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by Caleb Hall, Elder. Singing. Preaching by Samuel Graham, High Priest, from the words of Christ, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Exhortations by Pres. Strang, John E. Page and Jehiel Savage. Adjourned till tomorrow at 10 o'clock. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Oct. 7th—Forenoon session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by I. Haven, Elder. Singing. Preaching by Pres. Strang on the subject of Mormonism. He showed first what it is not. Second what it is. He said that it was not a belief in the first principles of the gospel alone that makes one a Mormon, but a belief in the church of God—in a living priesthood—in a living prophet, and in living apostles, who are made the keepers, expounders and administrators of the word of God; that the "church is the pillar and ground of the truth." He also said that one great and grand difference between the church of God and all the various sectarian churches is, that she can discover truths, but they cannot; showed that the Protestants, notwithstanding all their pretensions, had made no discoveries in the science of religion; that they knew nothing only what they learned from their mother, the Catholic church; and that the Catholics did not pretend to decide infallibly all matters of doctrine, and referred to the doctrine of baptism for the dead as one instance. John E. Page made some remarks, exhorting the saints to beware of over heated zeal, loud talking, &c., but to be calm and deliberate in all their proceedings. Adjourned an hour and a half. Benediction by John E. Page.

Afternoon session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by John Porter, President of the stake. Singing. Remarks by John E. Page on the subject of salvation for the dead.

The Building Committee of the Temple presented their report.

On motion, the report was accepted. On motion, resolved unanimously, that we adopt and publish the report of the Building Committee of the Temple with the Conference minutes in the Gospel Herald. (Report appended to these minutes.)

Adjourned till evening. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Evening session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by Samuel Graham. Singing. Preaching by James Blakeslee, President of the High Priests quorum. Remarks by Pres. Strang. Adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock. Benediction by Caleb Hall.

Oct. 8th—Forenoon session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by Gilbert Watson, Bishop. Singing. Preaching by Pres. Strang.

comment or referring to the fulfillment of decrees. How is it with foreknowledge of God, or God's foreknowledge? We shall see: "And David knew that Saul secretly practiced mischief against him; and he said to Abiathar the priest, Bring hither the ephod — then said David, O Lord God of Israel, thy servant hath certainly heard that Saul seeketh to come to Keilah, to destroy the city for my sake. Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand? — Will Saul come down as thy servant hath heard? O Lord God of Israel, I beseech thee, tell thy servant. And the Lord said, He will come down. Then said David, Will the men of Keilah deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? And the Lord said, They will deliver thee up." Now here is foreknowledge, and if there be no difference between foreknowledge and decrees, as decrees are unalterable, Saul came to Keilah, and the men of Keilah delivered David and his men into the hands of Saul; which was not the fact, for "then David and his men, which were about 600, arose and departed out of Keilah, and went whithersoever they could go. And it was told Saul that David was escaped from Keilah; and he forbare to go forth." 1 Sam. xxii. 6 to 13.* Did David frustrate the knowledge of God by leaving Keilah? No: he only availed himself of what God knew would be the result of his tarrying there.— David acted in wisdom; he called for a chosen priest of God for the ephod, (now the ephod contained the Urim and Thummim,) and inquired of the Lord. The Lord answered, and David knew how to act to be saved from his enemy; and we see by his act that he put implicit confidence in the word of God. Who can set limits to the knowledge of God, when even the hairs of our heads are numbered, and not one shall fall to the ground without his notice? When God came to Abraham and spoke concerning the cry of Sodom, he came as a man comes, and he talked with him as one man would talk with another. So he often reasoneth with a man as one would reason with his friend, asking questions, though he knoweth all things, and hath no need that a man tell him any thing. God knows what every man is doing, what he will do, and and what he might do. He knows that mankind as a mass are doing evil earnestly with both hands; and that the reward of evil will be to man a great calamity. Therefore he prepares the remedy, and says:—

"Therefore I the Lord, knowing the calamity which should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith, jr., and spake unto him from heaven, and gave him commandments; and also gave commandments to others, that they should proclaim these things unto the world," &c. D. & C. sec. i. p. 4. One of these commandments was to translate the Book of Mormon by Urim and Thummim, which he has accomplished by the gift of God. In the Book of Mormon there is predicted the very words men would say when they would hear of the book; which every traveling elder has heard reiterated again and again. It records doctrines predicted 24 centuries ago by Nephi, as he was inspired of God, which are held by many men in this generation. Our many churches are there predicted, and that many should believe the book, notwithstanding the opposition it would meet in coming forth. In short numerous are the predictions in the Bible and Book of Mormon, which are being fulfilled in this generation, all going to show that God knows a thing before it comes to pass. Now he that hears the strong testimony of the elders of Israel, raised up through the instrumentality of the prophet Joseph, and repents and works righteousness in obedience to the gospel, God knows he will be saved; while he who hears Christ speaking from heaven through his servants of the last days and will not believe and repent will be damned.

STEPHEN POST.

*In this case God's foreknowledge was not changed. God foreknew that Saul would go down to Keilah after David if he staid there. He foreknew that the men of Keilah would deliver him up if they had the opportunity; and he equally foreknew that David would inquire by Urim and Thummim and would not stay there, and that therefore Saul would not go there, for David and the men of Keilah would not deliver him up.

MINUTES OF THE SEMI-ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, HELD AT VOREE ON THE SIXTH, SEVENTH AND EIGHTH OF OCTOBER, 1848.

October 6th—Forenoon session.—Opened by reading the last Psalm by Pres. Strang. Singing. Prayer and consecration of the Conference by Pres. Strang. On motion, Resolved, That the First President has the right, by precedence, rank and power of priesthood, to preside in all Conferences, wherever he may be.

Preaching by Jehiel Savage, one of the Twelve. Adjourned an hour and a half. Benediction by John E. Page, President of the Twelve.

Afternoon session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by John E. Page. Preaching by John E. Page. Adjourned till evening. Benediction by Jason W. Briggs, High Priest.

Evening session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by Caleb Hall, Elder. Singing. Preaching by Samuel Graham, High Priest, from the words of Christ, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Exhortations by Pres. Strang, John E. Page and Jehiel Savage. Adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Oct. 7th—Forenoon session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by I. Haven, Elder. Singing. Preaching by Pres. Strang on the subject of Mormonism. He showed first what it is not. Second what it is. He said that it was not a belief in the first principles of the gospel alone that makes one a Mormon, but a belief in the church of God—in a living priesthood—in a living prophet, and in living apostles, who are made the keepers, expounders and administrators of the word of God; that the "church is the pillar and ground of the truth." He also said that one great and grand difference between the church of God and all the various sectarian churches is that she can discover truths, but they cannot; showed that the Protestants, notwithstanding all their pretensions, had made no discoveries in the science of religion; that they knew nothing only what they learned from their mother, the Catholic church; and that the Catholics did not pretend to decide infallibly all matters of doctrine, and referred to the doctrine of baptism for the dead as one instance. John E. Page made some remarks, exhorting the saints to beware of over heated zeal, loud talking, &c., but to be calm and deliberate in all their proceedings. Adjourned an hour and a half. Benediction by John E. Page.

Afternoon session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by John Carter, President of the stake. Singing. Remarks by John E. Page on the subject of salvation for the dead.

The Building Committee of the Temple presented their report.

On motion, the report was accepted. On motion, resolved unanimously, that we adopt and publish the report of the Building Committee of the Temple with the Conference minutes in the Gospel Herald. (Report appended to these minutes.)

Adjourned till evening. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Evening session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by Samuel Graham. Singing. Preaching by James Blakeslee, President of the High Priests quorum. Remarks by Pres. Strang. Adjourned to-morrow at 10 o'clock. Benediction by Caleb Hall.

Oct. 8th—Forenoon session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by Gilbert Watson, Bishop. Singing. Preaching by Pres. Strang Adjourned an hour and a half. Benediction by Calvin B. Childs, High Priest.

Afternoon session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by Samuel Graham. Singing. John E. Page remarked that it was highly requisite that the vacancies in the quorum of the Twelve be filled, and that they be filled with men possessed of the necessary qualifications for that high and responsible station. He presented Bro. Samuel Graham for that priesthood, and spoke of his qualifications as a sound, prudent man, and of good report. Jehiel Savage followed in similar remarks. Pres. Strang remarked that if the selection rested with him he should commend brother Graham for that office for his good sense and sound faith. But as it rested with God only he would sustain brother Graham for that priesthood, because the Holy Ghost witnessed to many of the brethren, among whom was himself, saying, let him be made an Apostle. Whereupon, on motion, it was resolved unanimously, that we will uphold and sustain brother Samuel Graham with our confidence, faith and prayers. Preaching by John E. Page. Brother Samuel Graham was ordained, consecrated and set apart an Apostle and a special witness of the Lord Jesus Christ to the nations of the earth, under the hands of James J. Strang, President of the church, and John E. Page, Jehiel Savage, and Ira J. Patten, (just arrived here with his family,) Apostles. Adjourned till evening. Benediction by Ira J. Patten.

Evening session.—Opened by singing. Prayer by John Porter. Remarks on the subject of tithing by Gilbert Watson and James Blakeslee. The President called for reports from representatives and traveling Elders, whereupon reports were presented of the state of the churches in all the middle and western States, and a few in more distant parts, which we omit. John E. Page presented brother Isaac Pierce as President of the Elders quorum. Whereupon, on motion, it was resolved unanimously, that we uphold him as such by our faith and prayers. Brother Pierce was accordingly ordained President of the Elders quorum, under the hands of John E. Page and Ira J. Patten.

During this Conference twelve were added to the church by baptism. The preaching of the word was attended with the spirit of God. More were in attendance, and there was more faith, more unity of heart, more oneness of spirit, more confidence in the prosperity of the cause, and a better feeling generally than we have ever before witnessed at any Conference in Voree. Many came here in doubt, all of whom returned in faith, with a firm determination to make this place their home as soon as possible. After an interesting and happy session of three days the Conference adjourned sine die, with the confident faith that the church is the pillar and ground of truth, and that it is our Father's good pleasure to give us the kingdom. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.

Gilbert Watson, Clerk.

Report of the Building Committee, of their receipts and expenditures for the year, from Oct. 6th, 1847, to Oct. 5th, 1848, inclusive, with the names of those who paid the same, and the objects for which the same was expended.

Cash tithing.
Zimri Butterfield	$20,46
Nathaniel Mix	3,00
John S. Comstock	14,00
Caleb Hall	1,50
Mary Demary	1,00
Mary Leatherby	1,00
Ansel Lake	27,00
Moses Chidister	30,00
Samuel P. Bacon	10,00
William Rose	10,00
Tobias McNutt	5,00
J. W. Nichols	7,00
Amount cash	$129,96
Other property.
William Marks one wagon	$75,00
Henry Reynolds one stove	9,00
" " tools and machinery	10,00—19,00
M. M. Aldrich 4 cords stone	8,00
Elisha Palmer 8 bushels garden roots	2,00
" " 23 bushels corn	7,59—9,59
J. Robinson beans	1,00
" 33 lb. pork	1,65
" 8 bushels wheat	4,48—7,23
Wm. Carr 4 bushels wheat	2,24
Amount property	$120,96
Amount on hand at the beginning of the year, being the tithing of R. F. Mills, 8 cords stone	$16,00
Brought forward cash	129,96
" " other property	120,96
Available sum total	$266,92

In addition to this, from twenty to thirty days work have been done as tithing. Some two hundred days tithing of labor are in arrears, which is fully relied on whenever wanted. As much more is necessary to finish the tithing of the saints in Voree and vicinity, which we have no certain assurance will be realized.

Expenditures.
Paid for 19 cords stone to be delivered	$57,00
16 cords stone at quarry	32,00
150 bushels lime at kiln	18,00
30 bushels lime delivered	4,50
Paid for work in grain, &c., much of which is yet to be done, and will nearly haul the 16 cords of stone	27,96
Cash paid for a superior set of books for Temple office	15,00
	$154,46
Leaving a balance in hand	112,46

Of this $10,00 is in tools and machinery for half bushel making, and the balance, $102,46, cash on hand. To this add the tithing in arrears, which is confidently relied on, and we have available means in hand to the amount of at least $300,00. The material yet to be delivered, which is already paid for, amount to about $100,00. Should the autumn and winter be favorable for work these funds and material can be laid out to advantage within the next 6 or 7 months, and thereby furnish profitable employ to the incoming saints who have not business now on hand. The work already done is the simple foundation for the south-east corner tower of the Temple. This foundation is a body of broken stone, a wall in the ground 8 feet thick, and forming a square of 38 feet.—We believe that for all practical purposes this foundation is the best possible, and is perfect; that walls properly built on it can never fail. We have postponed the work the past summer with great reluctance from the necessity of raising food for winter, and are confident that the next spring will not find the work in the arrears as to time.

☞ The yellow fever has existed in New York, but does not seem likely to extend. At the latest news the cholera was making rapid progress towards the west of Europe, where several cases have occurred. It is extremely fatal.

djourned an hour and a half. Benediction by Calvin B. Childs, High Priest.

AFTERNOON SESSION.—Opened by singing. Prayer by Samuel Graham. Singing. John E. Page remarked that it was highly equisite that the vacancies in the quorum of the Twelve be filled, nd that they be filled with men possessed of the necessary qualifiations for that high and responsible station. He presented Bro. amuel Graham for that priesthood, and spoke of his qualifications s a sound, prudent man, and of good report. Jehiel Savage followed in similar remarks. Pres. Strang remarked that if the section rested with him he should commend brother Graham for that ffice for his good sense and sound faith. But as it rested with God only he would sustain brother Graham for that priesthood, because the Holy Ghost witnessed to many of the brethren, among whom was himself, saying, let him be made an Apostle. Whereupon, on motion, it was resolved unanimously, that we will uphold nd sustain brother Samuel Graham with our confidence, faith and prayers. Preaching by John E. Page. Brother Samuel Graham was ordained, consecrated and set apart an Apostle and a special witness of the Lord Jesus Christ to the nations of the earth, under the hands of James J. Strang, President of the church, and John E. Page, Jehiel Savage, and Ira J. Patten, (just arrived here with his family,) Apostles. Adjourned till evening. Benediction by Ira J. Patten.

EVENING SESSION.—Opened by singing. Prayer by John Porter. Remarks on the subject of tithing by Gilbert Watson and James Blakeslee. The President called for reports from representatives nd traveling Elders, whereupon reports were presented of the state f the churches in all the middle and western States, and a few n more distant parts, which we omit. John E. Page presented rother Isaac Pierce as President of the Elders quorum. Whereupon, on motion, it was resolved unanimously, that we uphold him s such by our faith and prayers. Brother Pierce was accordingly rdained President of the Elders quorum, under the hands of John E. Page and Ira J. Patten.

During this Conference twelve were added to the church by baptism. The preaching of the word was attended with the spirit of God. More were in attendance, and there was more faith, more unity of heart, more oneness of spirit, more confidence in the prosperity of the cause, and a better feeling generally than we have ever before witnessed at any Conference in Voree. Many came here n doubt, all of whom returned in faith, with a firm determination o make this place their home as soon as possible. After an interesting and happy session of three days the Conference adjourned ine die, with the confident faith that the church is the pillar and round of truth, and that it is our Father's good pleasure to give us he kingdom. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.

GILBERT WATSON, Clerk.

Report of the Building Committee, of their receipts and expenditures for the year, from Oct. 6th, 1847, to Oct. 5th, 1848, inclusive, with the names of those who paid the same, and the objects for which the same was expended.

Cash tithing.

Zimri Butterfield	$20,46
Nathaniel Mix	3,00
John S. Comstock	14,00
Caleb Hall	1,50
Mary Demary	1,00
Mary Leatherby	1,00
Ansel Lake	27,00
Moses Chidister	30,00
Samuel P. Bacon	10,00
William Rose	10,00
Tobias McNutt	5,00
J. W. Nichols	7,00
Amount cash	$129,96

Other property.

William Marks one wagon	$75,00
Henry Reynolds one stove	9,00
" " tools and machinery	10,00—19,00
M. M. Aldrich 4 cords stone	8,00
Elisha Palmer 8 bushels garden roots	2,00
" " 23 bushels corn	7,59—9,59
J. Robinson beans	1,00
" 33 lb. pork	1,65
" 8 bushels wheat	4,48—7,23
Wm. Carr 4 bushels wheat	2,24
Amount property	$120,96
Amount on hand at the beginning of the year, being the tithing of R. F. Mills, 8 cords stone	$16,00
Brought forward cash	129,96
" " other property	120,96
Available sum total	$266,92

In addition to this, from twenty to thirty days work have been done as tithing. Some two hundred days tithing of labor are in arrears, which is fully relied on whenever wanted. As much more is necessary to finish the tithing of the saints in Voree and vicinity, which we have no certain assurance will be realized.

Expenditures.

Paid for 19 cords stone to be delivered	$57,00
16 cords stone at quarry	32,00
150 bushels lime at kiln	18,00
30 bushels lime delivered	4,50
Paid for work in grain, &c., much of which is yet to be done, and will nearly haul the 16 cords of stone	27,96
Cash paid for a superior set of books for Temple office	15,00
	$154,46
Leaving a balance in hand	112,46

Of this $10,00 is in tools and machinery for half bushel making, and the balance, $102,46, cash on hand. To this add the tithing in arrears, which is confidently relied on, and we have available means in hand to the amount of at least $300,00. The material yet to be delivered, which is already paid for, amount to about $100,00. Should the autumn and winter be favorable for work these funds and material can be laid out to advantage within the next 6 or 7 months, and thereby furnish profitable employ to the incoming saints who have not business now on hand. The work already done is the simple foundation for the south-east corner tower of the Temple. This foundation is a body of broken stone, a wall in the ground 8 feet thick, and forming a square of 38 feet.—We believe that for all practical purposes this foundation is the best possible, and is perfect; that walls properly built on it can never fail. We have postponed the work the past summer with great reluctance from the necessity of raising food for winter, and are confident that the next spring will not find the work in the arrears as to time.

☞ The yellow fever has existed in New York, but does not seem likely to extend. At the latest news the cholera was making rapid progress towards the west of Europe, where several cases have occurred. It is extremely fatal.

CHARLES B. THOMPSON.

(Concluded.)

[We continue the letter of this individual with our remarks included in brackets in the body of the letter. Those who wish to get the continuous and unbroken sense of his letter will do so by reading the letter, skipping the notes in brackets, and then read it with the notes for our answer.]

We now come 2ly, to speak of the develupments, of the spirit, dictating your appointment. That Document is Dated, 8 Days previous to Joseph's Death. but says nothing of the reJections of the church: but on the contrary, it Promaces Her peace, rest, safety prosperety, and salvation, in voree; where the saints are reQuired to go, and build a house of stone, postponeing the work at Nauvoo, until after: where: it intimates, that the house at Nauvoo will be finished, and accepted. [It does not postpone the work on the Temple at Nauvoo. Nor does it indicate that that work is to be postponed. On the other hand, it leaves the command to build that house in full force, and makes the best possible provision for the completion of it. Neither does it require the saints at Voree to build a house. It merely says by way of prediction that he will have a house built, but the command to build it did not come forth till two years afterwards; nor till the rejection of Nauvoo did actually take place, not in consequence of not building a house as required in D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 10, 11, but in consequence of not obeying the voice of God and of the First Presidency, as required by paragraph 13, 14. As for the promise of peace and safety, it is no more than God was bound by his own justice to promise and perform too. Talk of the saints being rejected! What do you mean? That the thousands of saints scattered throughout the earth, who have faithfully paid their tithing and kept the commandments of God in other respects, are not saints? That to them the promises of God are false? and will not be realized? That I have ceased to be a saint, without disobedience to God, because some body else has disobeyed him? And all rejected of God together because some body else has done wrong? We can well conceive that a church organized for a particular purpose at a particular place and neglecting to accomplish that purpose, should be rejected as an organization. But we cannot but see that the entire body of saints on earth, with the true priesthood and authority of God, are the church of God, however scattered and broken; and that it is the prerogative of that priesthood to set in order and govern them; and that God by his own attributes is bound to give a refuge where by obedience they can have peace and safety.

No more perfect system could have been put in operation to save Nauvoo and the entire church than that which Joseph was engaged in at the time of his death, of which the establishment of Voree was a part. And much if not all the system was dictated by revelation. Sidney Rigdon, one of the First Presidency, and strong in the confidence of the people, there was sent to Pittsburgh to detain counsel and instruct the English brethren, who understood nothing but manufacturing and were unable to establish themselves. Lyman Wight was sent to the extreme south-west to make an establishment where men from the southern States could gather in a climate congenial to their constitutions and business. James Emmett was sent to the western part of Iowa, a little beyond the settlements, to make a rendezvous. Col. Dunham had a similar duty to perform a little further west. A party of twenty-five men were appointed to go far into the Indian country and establish a colony. Last of all Voree was appointed as a place of gathering and as the seat of the First Presidency. Suppose this work had been carried out; Voree, in a healthy, pleasant region, in the midst of an intelligent and essentially law abiding population, having convenient, cheap and rapid access to all parts of the world, would have presented unusual advantages as the centre of ecclesiastical power. The poorer class of English brethren, stopping at Pittsburgh, would have had the advantage of the best of instruction, while they recruited their circumstances and prepared to go forward. The southern people, who were then embracing the faith rapidly, would have had a place to gather to, which, it is obvious, Nauvoo was not. The emigration from the eastern and middle States would have turned to Voree, and built up that place sufficiently fast.

On Nauvoo the effect would have been most salutary. By removing the First Presidency from there and sending out the Twelve according to their calling, the most prominent objects of persecution would have been altogether removed. The colony to be established far off in the Indian country would have made a home for all who were involved in difficulty and danger, and two stations between would have made access to it easy. A respectable company of those who were most obnoxious to the people in Hancock, as well as such as were naturally adventursome, sent out every year, would soon have made a strong colony without any of the suffering, exposure and want which attends the removal of an entire people in a body. The fears of the people of Illinois of a Mormon ascendency would have been removed, and the sympathy which turned so strongly in favor of the saints immediately on the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum would have continued. But the corrupting influences were too strong to be stayed. The church was not fully purged of evil men seeking to gratify their own lusts. God had said:

"And if my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place. But if they will not hearken to my voice, nor unto the voice of these men whom I have appointed, they shall not be blest, because they pollute mine holy grounds, and mine holy ordinances, and charters, and my holy words, which I give unto them. And it shall come to pass, that if you build a house unto my name, and do not do the things that I say, I will not perform the oath which I make unto you, neither fulfill the promises which ye expect at my hands, saith the Lord; for instead of blessings, ye, by your own works, bring cursings, wrath, indignations, and judgments, upon your own heads, by your follies, and by all your abominations, which you practice before me, saith the Lord." D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 13, 14.

They would not hearken to the voice of the First Presidency whom HE had appointed to lead them, but voted that they would have the Twelve as their leaders. True, they continued to build the house. But they would not hearken to the voice of the right leaders. God had sworn to them that they should "not be removed out of" that place, and promised to give them an endowment, and had shown all things pertaining thereto to Joseph. But he had also said that IF THEY DID NOT HEARKEN to the leaders that HE appointed, he would neither perform the oath nor fulfill the promise. And as they followed leaders of their own making, and rejected those that God appointed, he was bound by his word that they SHOULD BE DRIVEN out and should NOT HAVE AN ENDOWMENT. They endeavored, by calling all the elders, and abandoning Joseph's measure of gathering the saints at other places, and crowding all into Nauvoo, to get strong enough to stand without the help of the Lord, and were signally defeated. Then taking up what they had learned of Joseph in instructions to qualify them for administering the ordinances of the endowment when the time came, and patching it up with their own inventions they endeavored to satisfy the people with a false endowment, and again failed. And now, notwithstanding their building of the Temple so far, instead of blessings they have, by their own works, brought cursings, wrath, indignation and judgments upon their own heads, by their

CHARLES B. THOMPSON.

(Concluded.)

[We continue the letter of this individual with our remarks included in brackets in the body of the letter. Those who wish to get the continuous and unbroken sense of his letter will do so by reading the letter, skipping the notes in brackets, and then read it with the notes for our answer.]

We now come 2ly, to speak of the develupments, of the spirit, dictating your appointment. That Document is Dated, 8 Days previous to Joseph's Death. but says nothing of the reJections of the church: but on the contrary, it Promaces Her peace, rest, safety prosperety, and salvation, in voree; where the saints are reQuired to go, and build a house of stone, postponeing the work at Nauvoo, until after: where: it intimates, that the house at Nauvoo will be finished, and accepted. [It does not postpone the work on the Temple at Nauvoo. Nor does it indicate that that work is to be postponed. On the other hand, it leaves the command to build that house in full force, and makes the best possible provision for the completion of it. Neither does it require the saints at Voree to build a house. It merely says by way of prediction that he will have a house built, but the command to build it did not come forth till two years afterwards; nor till the rejection of Nauvoo did actually take place, not in consequence of not building a house as required in D. & C. sec. chi. p. 10, 11, but in consequence of not obeying the voice of God and of the First Presidency, as required by paragraph 13, 14. As for the promise of peace and safety, it is no more than God was bound by his own justice to promise and perform too. Talk of the saints being rejected! What do you mean? That the thousands of saints scattered throughout the earth, who have faithfully paid their tithing and kept the commandments of God in other respects, are not saints? That to them the promises of God are false? and will not be realized? That I have ceased to be a saint, without disobedience to God, because some body else has disobeyed him? And all rejected of God together because some body else has done wrong? We can well conceive that a church organized for a particular purpose at a particular place and neglecting to accomplish that purpose, should be rejected as an organization. But we cannot but see that the entire body of saints on earth, with the true priesthood and authority of God, are the church of God, however scattered and broken; and that it is the prerogative of that priesthood to set in order and govern them; and that God by his own attributes is bound to give a refuge where by obedience they can have peace and safety.

No more perfect system could have been put in operation to save Nauvoo and the entire church than that which Joseph was engaged in at the time of his death, of which the establishment of Voree was a part. And much if not all the system was dictated by revelation. Sidney Rigdon, one of the First Presidency, and strong in the confidence of the people, there was sent to Pittsburgh to detain counsel and instruct the English brethren, who understood nothing but manufacturing and were unable to establish themselves. Lyman Wight was sent to the extreme south-west to make an establishment where men from the southern States could gather in a climate congenial to their constitutions and business. James Emmett was sent to the western part of Iowa, a little beyond the settlements, to make a rendezvous. Col. Dunham had a similar duty to perform a little further west. A party of twenty-five men were appointed to go far into the Indian country and establish a colony. Last of all Voree was appointed as a place of gathering and as the seat of the First Presidency. Suppose this work had been carried out; Voree, in a healthy, pleasant region, in the midst of an intelligent and essentially law abiding population, having convenient, cheap and rapid access to all parts of the world, would have presented unusual advantages as the centre of ecclesiastical power. The poorer class of English brethren, stopping at Pittsburgh, would have had the advantage of the best of instruction, while they recruited their circumstances and prepared to go forward. The southern people, who were then embracing the faith rapidly, would have had a place to gather to, which, it is obvious, Nauvoo was not. The emigration from the eastern and middle States would have turned to Voree, and built up that place sufficiently fast.

On Nauvoo the effect would have been most salutary. By removing the First Presidency from there and sending out the Twelve according to their calling, the most prominent objects of persecution would have been altogether removed. The colony to be established far off in the Indian country would have made a home for all who were involved in difficulty and danger, and two stations between would have made access to it easy. A respectable company of those who were most obnoxious to the people in Hancock, as well as such as were naturally adventursome, sent out every year, would soon have made a strong colony without any of the suffering, exposure and want which attends the removal of an entire people in a body. The fears of the people of Illinois of a Mormon ascendency would have been removed, and the sympathy which turned so strongly in favor of the saints immediately on the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum would have continued. But the corrupting influences were too strong to be stayed. The church was not fully purged of evil men seeking to gratify their own lusts. God had said:

"And if my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place. But if they will not hearken to my voice, nor unto the voice of these men whom I have appointed, they shall not be blest, because they pollute mine holy grounds, and mine holy ordinances, and charters, and my holy words, which I give unto them. And it shall come to pass, that if you build a house unto my name, and do not do the things that I say, I will not perform the oath which I make unto you, neither fulfill the promises which ye expect at my hands, saith the Lord; for instead of blessings, ye, by your own works, bring cursings, wrath, indignations, and judgments, upon your own heads, by your follies, and by all your abominations, which you practice before me, saith the Lord." D. & C. sec. chi. p. 13, 14.

They would not hearken to the voice of the First Presidency whom HE had appointed to lead them, but voted that they would have the Twelve as their leaders. True, they continued to build the house. But they would not hearken to the voice of the right leaders. God had sworn to them that they should "not be removed out of" that place, and promised to give them an endowment, and had shown all things pertaining thereto to Joseph. But he had also said that IF THEY DID NOT HEARKEN to the leaders that HE appointed, he would neither perform the oath nor fulfill the promise. And as they followed leaders of their own making, and rejected those that God appointed, he was bound by his word that they SHOULD BE DRIVEN out and should NOT HAVE AN ENDOWMENT. They endeavored, by calling all the elders, and abandoning Joseph's measure of gathering the saints at other places, and crowding all into Nauvoo, to get strong enough to stand without the help of the Lord, and were signally defeated. Then taking up what they had learned of Joseph in instructions to qualify them for administering the ordinances of the endowment when the time came, and patching it up with their own inventions they endeavored to satisfy the people with a false endowment, and again failed. And now, notwithstanding their building of the Temple so far, instead of blessings they have, by their own works, brought cursings, wrath, indignation and judgments upon their own heads, by the follies and by all their abominations, which they practiced before the Lord.]

But now Voree is to be a strong hold of safety, for the church.—Now, If the church was not reJected, at that time: this commandment, if Obeyed by the saints, would effectually secure the reJection of it. Because, by it, they are reQuired to postpone the work, on which their acceptance depended, at the End of a sufficient time, if they should labour with all their mights. Therefore, this command is in opposition, and violation of the one given 19th Jan. 1841. [It would have kept them in a situation to pay tithing and removed all obstacles to their laying out the entire disposable funds on that edifice.]

But Again, if the church was reJected, as I have stated above; the whole church was reJected, as an Organization; and it Only needed to be Disorganized, to Blott it out of existance as a church. Therefore, your appointment was uncalled for, and unnecessary; [But the whole church not being rejected, it was both called for and necessary. Moreover, had it been rejected it would still be called for and necessary, because there is a great work which the church must do before everlasting righteousness can be brought in, the rest of God established, and all curse taken away from the earth.] For, if it had been ackoleged by the church, it could have served no othar purpose, than to perpetuate the existance of a reJected church, to whome god would not condecend to speak, or give a revelation. Hence your appointment could not be of god. [Do you mean that because some men have sinned, and God has rejected them and the organization to which they belong, therefore he will not reveal himself to the rest of the saints who are not found in the sin? That a man shall be cut off from all communication with God for the sins of others?]

But again, the appointment of voree, as a place of getharing for the saints, is in violation, and contradiction, to a revelations given Dec. 1833. contained in the Doc. cov. sec. 98, Par 4, which says. "Behold there is none other place appointed, than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed, than that which I have appointed, for the work of the gathering of my Saints; until the Day cometh, when there is found no more room for them: and then I have other places, which I will appoint unto them. and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion. (For the Place appointed, as refered to in the above quotation, see Doc. cov. 27 Sec. 1 Par.) [This place of gathering is at Independence in Missouri, and in the region adjoining. Is there room found for the saints there? Has not the time come years gone by that there was no room for them there? Have they not been driven from there by violence, robbed of their possessions, treated with indignity and personal violence and many of them slain? There is scarcely room found for their burial. The one who should attempt to settle there at any time for a dozen years past, is more likely to be devoured by swine above ground than to find a winding sheet and six feet of ground for a grave; and yet Charles B. Thompson will found an argument in the assumption that there is plenty of room for them yet.]

